

sociological abstracts

table of contents

volume 36

number 1

apr
(Abstracts)

1988
(Page)

0100 methodology & research technology

0103 methodology (conceptual & epistemological)	88T1071	3
0104 research technology	T1103	6
0105 statistical methods	T1125	9
0161 models: mathematical & other	T1148	12

0200 sociology: history & theory

0202 of professional interest (teaching sociology)	T1162	15
0206 history & present state of sociology	T1184	17
0207 theories, ideas and systems	T1260	26
0267 macrosociology analyses of whole societies	T1325	33

0300 social psychology

0309 interaction within (small) groups	T1341	37
0312 personality & culture	T1358	39
0322 leadership	T1457	50
0364 deviance	T1461	50
0373 social interaction/everyday life	T1467	51

0400 group interactions

0410 interaction between (large) groups (race relations, ethnicity, & group relations, etc.)	T1473	53
----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------	-------	----

0500 culture and social structure

0508 social organization	T1530	61
0513 culture	T1537	62
0514 social anthropology (& ethnology)	T1554	64

0600 complex organizations

0621 sociology of work	T1565	67
0623 military sociology	T1657	76
0624 bureaucratic structure/organizational sociology	T1665	77
0665 social network analysis	T1702	81
0674 voluntary associations	T1711	82

0700 social change & economic development

0715 social change & economic development	T1713	83
0749 market structures & consumer behavior	T1759	87
0770 capitalism/socialism - world systems	T1777	89

0800 mass phenomena

0826 social movements	T1796	93
0827 public opinion	T1823	96
0828 communication	T1834	97
0829 collective behavior	---	---
0842 sociology of leisure/tourism	T1863	100
0850 mass culture	T1867	103
0869 sociology of sports	T1875	105

0900 political interactions

0911 interaction between societies, nations & states	T1890	107
0925 political sociology	T1905	109

1000 social differentiation

1019 social stratification/mobility	T1995	121
1020 sociology of occupations & professions	T2041	126

1100 rural sociology & agriculture

1116 rural sociology (village, agriculture)	T2124	137
---------------------------------------------	-------	-----

1200 urban sociology

1218 urban sociology	T2153	141
----------------------	-------	-----

1300 sociology of language & the arts

1330 sociology of language/sociolinguistics	T2211	149
1331 sociology of art (creative & performing)	T2253	154
1375 sociology of literature	T2267	156

1400 sociology of education

1432 sociology of education	T2271	157
-----------------------------	-------	-----

1500 sociology of religion

1535 sociology of religion	T2350	167
----------------------------	-------	-----

Sociological abstracts

sponsored by the international sociological association

EDITOR: Leo P. Chall

MANAGING EDITOR: Miriam Chall

ADVERTISING: Laurie Sapiente

OFFICE OF PUBLICATION: 6002 Beaumont Ave., La Jolla, CA 92037

SUBSCRIPTION OFFICE: P.O. Box 22206, San Diego, CA 92122-0206 Telephone 619-565-6603

EDITORIAL STAFF: Michael Blair Jill Ireland Sandra Stanton

COMPUTER OFFICE: Lynette Hunter

PUBLICATIONS MANAGER: Sandra Stanton

LIBRARY/PROCUREMENT: Britt Sieger

INDEXING DEPARTMENT: Michael Blair

USER EDUCATION: Michelle Blackman

Margaret Crowdes

board of directors

Leo P. Chall, Sociological Abstracts, Inc.
Miriam Chall, Sociological Abstracts, Inc.
Robert L. Leslie, The Composing Room, Inc.
Jerome Brickman

Alfred McClung Lee, City University of New York
†Albert L. Solodur, Wechsler & Solodur
Kurt H. Wolff, Brandeis University
Eleanor A. Brown, Esq.

advisory board—1987-1988

Martin Albrow
University College
PO Box 78
Cardiff CF1 1XL UK
(0222) 874789

Joseph Gusfield
University of California—San Diego
La Jolla CA 92093
(619) 452-4629

John D. Kasarda
University of North Carolina
Hamilton Hall 070A
Chapel Hill NC 27514
(919) 933-1007

Edward A. Tiryakian
Duke University
Durham NC 27706
(919) 684-2918

John Useem
227 Chesterfield Parkway
East Lansing MI 48823
(517) 351-2424

Charles V. Willie
Harvard University
Monroe C. Gutman Library 240
Appian Way
Cambridge MA 02138
(617) 495-4678

CAS is published by Sociological Abstracts, Inc., a non-profit shed in April, June, August, October, December. Subscript issues are $50. A cumulative index issue will be published ic. Index issues are $45.00. Supplement issues $5. to libraries ake remittances payable by cheque to Sociological Abstracts.
O Book Coupons please add 10% for Bank charges. When y Order, please include library order number or SA invoice stage per subscription.

La Jolla, CA, and at additional mailing offices.

NOTICE: Claims for missing issues must reach the editorial office within 60 days o of publication for FOREIGN subscribers, within 90 days. Notify us, as well as the U.S.
Office, of change of address as early as possible. The U.S. Post Office does not for journals. It destroys them, unless specifically instructed not to do so. Issues missing as r of failure to inform us in time of a change of address will not be replaced free of charge.
POSTMASTER: Send address changes to Sociological Abstracts, P.O. Box 22206
San Diego, CA 92122-0206.

Copyright 1988 by Sociological Abstracts, Inc.

sociological abstracts

table of contents

volume 36

number 1

apr
(Abstracts)

1988
(Page)

0100 methodology & research technology

0103 methodology (conceptual & epistemological)	88T1071	3
0104 research technology	T1103	6
0105 statistical methods	T1125	9
0161 models: mathematical & other	T1148	12

0200 sociology: history & theory

0202 of professional interest (teaching sociology)	T1162	15
0206 history & present state of sociology	T1184	17
0207 theories, ideas and systems	T1260	26
0267 macrosociology: analyses of whole societies	T1325	33

0300 social psychology

0309 interaction within (small) groups	T1341	37
0312 personality & culture	T1358	39
0322 leadership	T1457	50
0364 deviance	T1461	50
0373 social interaction/everyday life	T1467	51

0400 group interactions

0410 interaction between (large) groups (race relations, ethnicity, & group relations, etc.)	T1473	53
----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------	-------	----

0500 culture and social structure

0508 social organization	T1530	61
0513 culture	T1537	62
0514 social anthropology (& ethnology)	T1554	64

0600 complex organizations

0621 sociology of work	T1565	67
0623 military sociology	T1657	76
0624 bureaucratic structure/organizational sociology	T1665	77
0665 social network analysis	T1702	81
0674 voluntary associations	T1711	82

0700 social change & economic development

0715 social change & economic development	T1713	83
0749 market structures & consumer behavior	T1759	87
0770 capitalism/socialism—world systems	T1777	89

0800 mass phenomena

0826 social movements	T1796	93
0827 public opinion	T1823	96
0828 communication	T1834	97
0829 collective behavior	---	---
0842 sociology of leisure/tourism	T1863	100
0850 mass culture	T1867	103
0869 sociology of sports	T1875	105

0900 political interactions

0911 interaction between societies, nations & states	T1890	107
0925 political sociology	T1905	109

1000 social differentiation

1019 social stratification/mobility	T1995	121
1020 sociology of occupations & professions	T2041	126

1100 rural sociology & agriculture

1116 rural sociology (village, agriculture)	T2124	137
---------------------------------------------	-------	-----

1200 urban sociology

1218 urban sociology	T2153	141
----------------------	-------	-----

1300 sociology of language & the arts

1330 sociology of language/sociolinguistics	T2211	149
1331 sociology of art (creative & performing)	T2253	154
1375 sociology of literature	T2267	156

1400 sociology of education

1432 sociology of education	T2271	157
-----------------------------	-------	-----

1500 sociology of religion

1535 sociology of religion	T2350	167
----------------------------	-------	-----

Copyright 1988 by Sociological Abstracts, Inc.

All rights reserved. No part of this book may be reproduced, transmitted or stored in any form or by any means, electronic or mechanical, including photocopying, recording, xeroxing, or by any information storage and retrieval system without permission in writing from Sociological Abstracts, Inc.

0100 methodology and research technology

03 methodology (conceptual & epistemological)

88T1071

Archer, Margaret S. (Dept Sociology U Warwick, Coventry CV4 7AL England). Reclaiming the Revival of Relativism, International Sociology, 1987, 2, 3, Sept, 235-250.

1 An examination of a new radical relativism, epitomized in David Bloor's "strong program" (eg, see "The Strengths of the Strong Programme," Philosophy of the Social Sciences, 1981, 11, 2, 199-213), which asserts the social character & social causation of all knowledge. It thus stakes an explanatory claim for the sociology of knowledge to the entire cultural domain. Traditionally, resistance to relativism has rested on asserting (1) the universality of logical principles, (2) the unity of human nature, & (3) the necessity of translatability for ascribing beliefs to others & making them intelligible. These points are reaffirmed as essential to the social sciences. Specifically, it is argued that radical relativism cannot dislodge the invariance of logic, nor dispose of the possibility & necessity of translation. 29 References. HA

88T1072

Bogdanović, Marija (U Belgrade, 110016 Yugoslavia). Teorijska osnova kvalitativnog pristupa (A Theoretical Basis of the Qualitative Approach), Revija za Sociologiju, 1984, 14, 3-4, July-Dec, 201-213. (SCR)

1 The necessary connection between the quantitative & qualitative approaches in sociological research is investigated by analyzing the works of Karl Marx, Max Weber, & more contemporary sociologists. C. Wright Mills's "IBM plus Reality plus Humanism-Sociology" in Power, Politics, and People. The Collected Essays of C. Wright Mills (Horowitz, Irving Louis (Ed), New York: Ballantine, 1962 (see SA 13:6-7/65B7510)) & Pitirim A. Sorokin's Fads and Foibles in Modern Sociology and Related Sciences (Chicago: Henry Regnery, 1956 (see SA 6 1/583880)) are cited for their criticism against the overuse of quantitative methods. The advantages of humanistic sociology for sociological research are stressed. Modified HA

88T1073

Cavanaugh, Michael (Dept Sociology Los Angeles Mission Coll, San Fernando CA 91340). Provocation on Belief: Part 5, Social Epistemology, 1987, 1, 2, Apr-June, 187-193.

1 An exploration of the empirical & methodological merits of David Gorman's suggestion in "Provocation on Belief: Part 1" (see SA 35:3/87R6690 for abstracts of Parts 1-4) that the term "information state" displace "belief." In particular, information state is more parsimonious, more generalizable, & (unlike belief) raises rather than begs some major questions about the way knowledge mediates between individual actors & social structure. However, information states are not entirely primitive because they depend on prior sociocultural frames, which thus improves the general application of the concept. Implications are explored for a Durkheimian SoFK compatible with a correspondence theory of truth, a Popperian world of objective knowledge, & scientific realism. 23 References. Modified AA

88T1074

Davidson, Ronald H., Transference and Countertransference Phenomena: The Problem of the Observer in the Behavioral Sciences, The Journal of Psychoanalytic Anthropology, 1986, 9, 3, summer, 269-283.

1 A psychoanalytic perspective is offered of certain cultural & individual intrapsychic systems of symbolism & defense, & related to an examination of certain methodological obstacles characteristic of social science inquiry, particularly the phenomena of transference & countertransference, as both data sources & data problems for the social science observer. After summarizing theoretical issues surrounding these phenomena (with particular reference to the contributions of psychoanalytic anthropologist Weston La Barre), their anthropological relevance is assessed. A case study of a Filipina woman is presented to illustrate these methodological issues & their implications for social science fieldwork. 38 References. K Hyatt

88T1075

Di Bernardo, Giuliano (U Trento, I-38100 Italy). La prospettiva logico-ermeneutica nelle scienze sociali/Die logisch-hermeneutische Perspektive in den Sozialwissenschaften (The Logico-Hermeneutic Perspective in the Social Sciences), Annali di Sociologia/Soziologisches Jahrbuch, 1986, 2(11), 175-187, 188-201. (MUL)

Translated by Melke Behrmann.

1 In the social sciences, the points of view by which social reality is divided fall into two categories: the positivist & the hermeneutic. Here, the general lines of a "logico-hermeneutic foundation," are presented. The task of the social sciences is to analyze the intersubjectivity of the sense conferred on actions that are experienced subjectively. It is possible to study the sense of the subjective actions scientifically by examining the notion of sense & that of context of sense. The formal instruments used here are those of practical inference & the so-called philosophical logics—the deontic, modal, epistemic. The notion of rationality in science & in social sciences is analyzed, & it is affirmed that in the social & human sciences there are different levels of rationality. Modified AA

88T1076

Grafstein, Robert (U Georgia, Athens 30602). Rational Choice and Social Theory, UM Social Science Quarterly, 1987, 68, 2, June, 358-363.

Comment, 364-366.

1 A discussion of Sagiv A. Hadari's critique of rational choice models (see abstract in this section). Hadari uses a multilevel approach that covers the debate from the broad area of philosophy of social science to the level of specific rational choice models. Here, the levels of Hadari's critique are traced, starting with the philosophy of social science, moving to the concept of rationality assumption, & finally examining the research application of the assumption. In Rational Choice in Social Theory, Sagiv A. Hadari (Wake Forest U, Winston-Salem, NC) agrees with Grafstein's comments on the usefulness of rational choice models, but challenges Grafstein's assumption of a disjunction between positive theory & hermeneutics & reconsiders the limits to the application of rational choice models, using an example from analytical Marxist theory. 18 References. Modified HA

88T1077

Greskovits, Béla. Ellentmondások értékek és értékes ellentmondások Polányi Károly elméleti rendszerében (Contradictory Values and Valuable Contradictions in Karl Polanyi's Work), Szociológia, 1982, 2, 201-214. (HUN)

1 A critical analysis of the theories of Karl Polanyi. It is suggested that his substantive system of concepts is too general to attain its own purposes. Polanyi's humanistic critique of capitalism has contradictions owing to a too narrow view of the social character of human beings; Polanyi makes the state the embodiment of that social character & the opponent of the economy, ignoring the role of the state in capitalist development. The limits & scope of a description of society based on Polanyi's concepts are traced, & it is argued that by interpreting stability & change as absolute rather than relative opposites, he generates a system that cannot grasp the anatomy of historical change. Modified HA

88T1078

Hadari, Sagiv A. (Wake Forest U, Winston-Salem NC 27109). What Are Preference Explanations? The Interpretive Core of Economic Modeling, UM Social Science Quarterly, 1987, 68, 2, June, 340-357.

1 To the extent that a dominant paradigm can be identified in current political science, the rational actor approach is it. At bottom, it represents an extension of economic modeling, with all its scientific claims & reductionary consequences, to a human science. Regarding this situation as interdisciplinary imperialism, it is argued that economics itself is a human interpretive science, on the basis that its fundamental explanatory scheme—preference explanation—is a hermeneutic (rather than logical or causal) analysis of intentionality. 1 Table, 50 References. HA

1600 social control
1636 sociology of law	T2405	175
1653 police, penology & correctional problems	T2440	179
1700 sociology of science
1734 sociology of science	T2473	185
1772 sociology of technology	T2501	188
1800 demography & human biology
1837 demography (population study)	T2518	191
1844 human biology/sociobiology	T2597	199
1900 the family & socialization
1938 sociology of the child	T2599	201
1939 adolescence & youth	T2620	203
1940 sociology of sexual behavior	T2648	206
1941 sociology of the family	T2661	207
1976 socialization	T2762	218
1977 birth control (abortion, contraception, fertility, & childbearing)	T2765	219
1978 sociology of death & dying	T2774	220
2000 sociology of health & medicine
2045 sociology of medicine (public health)	T2777	221
2046 social psychiatry (mental health)	T2862	230
2079 substance use/abuse & compulsive behaviors (drug abuse, addiction, alcoholism, gambling, eating disorders, etc.)	T2885	232
2100 social problems & social welfare
2143 social gerontology	T2925	239
2147 sociology of crime & victimology	T2969	243
2148 applied sociology	T2986	245
2151 juvenile delinquency	T2997	246
2200 sociology of knowledge
2233 sociology of knowledge	T3006	249
2252 history of ideas	T3019	250
2300 community development
2317 sociology of communities & regions	T3027	253
2400 policy, planning, forecasting
2454 planning & forecasting	T3039	255
2460 social indicators	T3048	256
2462 policy sciences	T3049	256
2500 radical sociology
2555 radical sociology	T3055	259
2580 critical sociology	T3056	259
2600 environmental interactions
2656 environmental interactions	T3057	261
2681 disaster studies	T3070	262
2682 social geography	T3072	263
2700 studies in poverty
2757 studies in poverty	T3076	265
2800 studies in violence
2858 studies in violence	T3090	267
2884 terrorism	T3108	269
2900 feminist/gender studies
2959 feminist studies	T3112	271
2983 sociology of gender & gender relations	T3162	276
3000 marxist sociology
3063 marxist sociology	T3171	279
3100 clinical sociology
3166 clinical sociology	T3188	281
3200 sociology of business
3268 sociology of business	T3204	283
3300 visual sociology
3371 visual sociology	T3209	285
NCSA Supplement 1495-20058-20142
Reproduction Service		35, 65, 166
IRPS No. 41		3-93
author index		287
source index		307
subject index		329
list of abbreviations		cover III

for the failure of sociology & philosophy to come to grips with the problems of stagnation. The importance of philosophy in the creation of the new person & in the struggle against bourgeois ideology is discussed. J. Anderson

88T1088

Pickin, Hanna Fenichel (Dept Political Science U California, Berkeley 94720), Rethinking Reification, Theory and Society, 1987, 16, 2, Mar, 263-293.

1 Three sources on reification are compared via textual & conceptual analysis: Georg Lukács in Marxist thought, Peter L. Berger's & Thomas Luckmann's The Social Construction of Reality: A Treatise in the Sociology of Knowledge (Garden City, NY: Doubleday Anchor, 1967 (see SA 16:6/68D3781)), & the dictionary. They prove both mutually inconsistent & internally confusing & probably confused. Together, they generate a catalog of more than twenty purported meanings, leaving reification a poor intellectual tool. Nevertheless, work must continue on the grave & urgent contemporary political problem that sociologists & Marxists meant this concept to address: the continuing pursuit of activities whose collective outcomes threaten to be disastrous, & the self-fulfilling sense that it cannot be done otherwise. AA

88T1089

Portia, E. B. (Texas A&M U, College Station 77843), Theoretical Authority in Social Science, The Social Science Journal, 1986, 23, 4, Oct, 397-410.

1 Theoretical authority is the evaluation of scientific work by its compatibility with what is accepted as confirmed theoretical knowledge, & is manifested as the application of the criteria of significance & coherence. It is argued that the logical legitimacy of theoretical authority depends on one's philosophy of social science. The purpose here is not to discern which philosophy of social science is correct, but to demonstrate that efforts to do so have important implications for the organizational norms appropriate for social science. Disputes within the philosophy of social science are ipso facto disputes over the constitutional principles of social scientific disciplines. HA

88T1090

Puel, Hugues (U Lyon II, 69365 Cedex 07 France), L'Economie humaine, défi aux sciences de la société (Human Economics, a Challenge to the Social Sciences), ♦ Cahiers de Sociologie Economique et Culturelle, Ethnopsychologie, 1987, 7, June, 77-85. (FRE)

1 A discussion of the concept of human economics, which was originated in the 1930s by Louis-Joseph Lebret, a Dominican monk (see, eg, Economie et Humanisme, 1986, special issue, Oct). Human economics comes within the sphere of social Catholicism, but brings to it a rigorous conception of economics & a knowledge of the forces of production & human relationships in society. The richness of this approach was proved in the development of town & country planning in France in the 1950s, & in the solidarity movements of the 1960s. Human economics challenges the social sciences & the nature of their scientific reality from an epistemological viewpoint. Modified HA

88T1091

Rhomský, Alejz (Instit Philosophy & Sociology Slovak Academy Sciences, Obrancov Mieru 49 81438 Bratislava Czechoslovakia), O filozofickom rozmere matematiky (On the Philosophic Dimension of Mathematics), Filozofia, 1983, 38, 1, 33-45. (CZE)

1 In Marxism, even mathematics is regarded as having historical aspects & as undergoing development in accord with historical laws. Shown is how development occurs from a simple mathematical abstraction to multilevel specific idealizations to mathematical formalisms & then through semantic & empirical interpretations that reduce the complex logical genesis of mathematics to a relatively simple form. Theories of concrete sciences become the source for new impulses for mathematics when certain antithetical relations between objects of mathematical theory produce new mathematical objects. This conception leads to an exploration of the relation between mathematics & dialectic materialism. 13 References. Modified HA

88T1092

Roy, Christian (Centre recherches sociologiques U Toulouse II, F-31056 Cedex France), Social conceptual et social figure: une "Imagerie sociologique" possible (Conceptual and Figurative Social Facts: A Possible "Sociological Imagery"), Cahiers Internationaux de Sociologie, 1987, 34, 82, Jan-June, 115-124. (FRE)

1 The role of images & language in sociology is discussed. The observation of social phenomena can never be independent of the necessity of naming the objects of study. This necessity means that researchers construct the world in a certain way. Several methodologies that attempt to deal with this problem are described: (1) choice by pairs; (2) sectorial analysis of corresponding factors; & (3) methods based on the computer-assisted creation of images, which gives the image thus produced a concrete appearance. 2 Figures. Modified HA

88T1093

Rychtařík, Karel (Ústav výzkum veřejného mínění FSU, Prague Czechoslovakia), Rozpornosti abstrakce (Contradictions of Abstraction), Sociologický Časopis, 1987, 23, 4, 321-337. (CZE)

1 The distinctive trait of human thought is abstraction, which enables human beings to distance themselves from what is immediate & to disregard certain aspects of the objects of cognition. This process is not only the most exacting but also the most contradictory methodologically. Abstraction attains a more fundamental but also impoverished truth that may exhibit tendencies to inertia. Its characteristics are illustrated with results from research into the worldviews of Czechoslovakian youth. Abstraction must be made into a tool for social action based on scientific knowledge. 27 References. Modified HA

88T1094

Sayers, Brian (Dept Philosophy Queen's U, Kingston Ontario K7L 3N6), Wittgenstein, Relativism, and the Strong Thesis in Sociology, ♦ UM Philosophy of the Social Sciences, 1987, 17, 2, June, 133-145

1 Ludwig Wittgenstein's analysis of how beliefs are properly evaluated effectively breaks the impasse between the proponents & the critics of what has come to be called "the Strong Thesis (ST)" in sociology—ie, when beliefs are understood in the context of what Wittgenstein calls a "language game" or "form of life"—we are led to the inference that, as in the ST, there is no single, correct standard of rationality. Other factors in Wittgenstein's position, however, seem to reject the relativist implications of the ST. It is contended that Wittgenstein is successful in his "skeptical response" to relativism. Modified AA

88T1095

Segre, Sandro (Commerciale Luigi U Bocconi, I-20136 Milan Italy), Una discussione epistemologica a proposito dell'opera di Wolfgang Schluchter, "Lo sviluppo del razionalismo occidentale"/Zu Wolfgang Schluchters Buch "Die Entwicklung des okzidentalen Rationalismus" (An epistemological discussion on Wolfgang Schluchter's work "The Development of Western Rationalism"), Annali di Sociologia/Soziologisches Jahrbuch, 1986, 2(II), 223-228, 229-234. (MUL)

Translated by Joachim Landkammer.

1 A review of Wolfgang Schluchter's work The Development of Western Rationalism (Tubingen: Mohr, 1979 (see listing in IRPS No. 41)) including a summary & a critical evaluation, & questioning the epistemological tenability of Schluchter's evolutionary functional theory. Social & cultural change are conceived of as the result of imperfect adaptation of the elements that constitute social structure, in keeping with a functionalist perspective, while evolution, on the other hand, is produced—according to Schluchter—by the succession of different "structural principles." Each of these principles should define a specific evolutionary stage. However, imperfect adaptation does not necessarily bring about new "structural principles," & therefore, Schluchter's explanation of social & cultural change is incompatible with his own conception of evolution, & makes his theory of the evolutionary development of Western rationalism untenable. Finally, Schluchter's explanation of the origin & development of Western rationalism makes use of a classical conception of causality, which makes no sense from the viewpoint of functionalist analysis. Modified AA

88T1096

Signore, Mario (U Lecce, I-73100 Italy), La teoria sociale tra Wertphilosophie, fenomenologia ed ermeneutica/Die Sozialtheorie zwischen Wertphilosophie, Phänomenologie und Hermeneutik (Social Theory among Philosophy of Values, Phenomenology, and Hermeneutics), Annali di Sociologia/Soziologisches Jahrbuch, 1986, 2(II), 71-82, 83-96. (MUL)

Translated by Stefan G. Böckler.

1 In order to understand the importance of historicism for the development of the historical & social sciences, the main points in a theoretical

T1079

Jackson, Norman & Willmott, Hugh (c/o Willmott-Management Centre Aston U, Birmingham B4 7ET England). Beyond Epistemology and Reflective Conversation: Towards Human Relations, Human Relations, 1987, 40, 6, June, 361-379.

In recent years, objectivistic conceptions of social science have partially given way to pluralistic, relativistic, & subjective conceptions. The non-objectivist conception of social science as an activity basically like other human activities (see Beyond Method. Strategies for Social Research, Morgan, G. (Ed), Beverly Hills, Calif. Sage, 1983) leads to identification of science with participation in a reflective conversation based on mutual self-awareness. This concept has attractions, but is wedded by its assumption of the neutrality of language & by the assumption that nonepistemological factors can be excluded from reflexive conception itself. A praxis-based approach to the nature of social science provides a third alternative to absolutist objectivism & reflective conversation, which specifically considers practical & moral dimensions of scientific activity. 1 Figure, 54 References. W H Stoddard

T1080

Korolchenko, I. D. (Soviet Academy Sciences, Leninsky Prospekt 14 Moscow V-71), Mezdu istorii i sisteme obshchestvennykh nauk (History among other Social Sciences), Voprosy istorii, 1987, 62, 7, July, 3-18. (RUS)

An attempt is made to distinguish history from historical materialism in terms of its subject matter, the object of its research, its social function, & the specificity of historical research. History should study human activity as an internally conditioned natural-historical advance, subject to objective laws in each specific historical & geographical setting. There is a need to emphasize to develop the theoretical-methodological & scientific-methodological foundations & the source base of historical science. Modified HA

T1081

Kraka, Sonia (Dept Political Science New School Social Research, New York NY 10003), Marcel and Merleau-Ponty: Incarnation, Situation and the Problem of History, Human Studies, 1987, 10, 2, 125-245.

An exploration of similarities & divergences in the work of the two French existentialist thinkers, Gabriel Marcel & Maurice Merleau-Ponty. Although Marcel's work has been said to be a major influence on Merleau-Ponty, it is concluded that Merleau-Ponty's work is significantly different, especially with regard to the treatment of social relations & history. There, against Marcel, Merleau-Ponty emphasizes the problem of conflict & violence. The different approaches to history of the two thinkers are shown to have their origins in their divergent use of the apparently similar concepts of incarnation & situation to explain individual existence. 24 References. AA

T1082

Jørgensen, P. (Charlottenburger Str 19, 34 Göttingen Federal Republic Germany), Social Technology and Statistics, Synthese, 1987, 71, 1, May, 156-172.

An investigation of the role of statistics in ethico-political sciences, especially as regards the reform of present norm systems. It is argued that present institutionalized sciences—i.e., the empirical social or historical sciences—are useful for addressing sociotechnological problems, but cannot be used to reconstruct ethico-political sciences due to their expressed need to refrain from value judgements. However, empirical sociological research can serve as a theoretical support for sociotechnological practice where the chief concern is to determine the prospective effects of a change in a norm through analyzing the statistical distribution of "mindfulness" among those involved, e.g., a state's citizens. Such an assessment is necessarily situation dependent, & is demonstrated mathematically. A philosophical examination of statistics in general is provided to show what role stochastics (the theory of probabilities) plays in the ethico-political sciences, particularly the empirical social sciences. K. Hyatt

T1083

Loe, R. Duncan & Narens, Louis (Harvard U, Cambridge MA 02138), Measurement Scales on the Continuum, Ul Science, 1987, 236, 108, 19 June, 1527-1532.

A seminal article published in Science (1946, 103, 677, title not given). S. Stevens noted that the numerical measures then in common use fitted three admissible groups of transformations: similarity, affine, monotonic. Until recently, it was unclear what other scale types are possible. For situations on the continuum that are homogeneous (i.e., objects are not distinguishable by their properties), the possibilities are essentially these three plus another type lying between the first two. These types lead to clearly described classes of structures that can, in principle, be incorporated into the classical structure of physical units. Such results, along with characterizations of important special cases, are potentially useful in the behavioral & social sciences. 9 Figures. HA

88T1084

Maflaez, Michel (32 rue des Archives, F-75004 Paris France), Sociality as Legitimation of Sociological Method, Current Sociology/La Sociologie Contemporaine, 1987, 35, 2, summer, 69-87.

Translated by Miles Kerkham.

1 It is argued that sociology places too much emphasis on conceptual elements (e.g., society, rationality, economics) rather than on "sociality," defined as a communalized empathy. The value of empiricism is no greater than that of intuition, sensualism, or naturalism. One way of comprehending the present is through one's experience as part of social existence. It is noted that this stance is not a defense of irrationalism, but an approach which accepts that the "structural incompleteness of sociality is an incitement to intellectual open-endedness." AA Tr & Modified by D. Graves

88T1085

Muustschajew, Rauf (Karl-Marx-U, DDR-7010 Leipzig German Democratic Republic), Die zentrale Bedeutung der philosophischen Methode und Methodologie im Erkenntnisprozess der Gesellschaftswissenschaften (The Central Role of Philosophical Method and Methodology in the Cognitive Process of the Social Sciences). ♦ Wissenschaftliche Zeitschrift der Karl Marx Universität Leipzig. Gesellschaftswissenschaftliche Reihe, 1986, 35, 3, 256-271. (GER)

1 The different methods employed in the social sciences are categorized as philosophical, general scientific, & discipline-specific; each in turn comprises empirical & theoretical methods. Dialectical & historical materialism constitute philosophical methodology, which is the theory of construction & application of scientific methods. The degrees of effectiveness of philosophical method & methodology in different branches of science are found to be greater in branches of science where laws of society are determinate. The practical influence of Marxist-Leninist philosophy as worldview on the cognitive process of social science is discussed. Possible negative consequences of applying philosophical generalizations in practice without having sufficiently worked them out are noted, & recommendations for making philosophical principles precise are given. J. Anderson

88T1086

Muncack, Paul G. (Dept Philosophy State U New York Coll, Glens Falls 12801), Is The View from Nowhere Going Anywhere?, Human Studies, 1987, 10, 3-4, Oct, 391-398.

1 A review essay on T. Nagel's The View from Nowhere (New York: Oxford U Press, 1986 [see listing in IRPS No. 41]). The View from Nowhere is an ambitious attempt to put forth a new concept of objectivity: one that would make room for what is meant by having a point of view, & that would recognize the subjectivity of consciousness as an irreducible feature of reality. Although Nagel is quite right in his belief that physical facts & subpersonal levels of explanation cannot completely represent the inner side of life, it is argued that Nagel's case for subjectivity is so loosely knit that it in no way presents a serious threat to physicalist dogma or to reducing the status of the subject. 8 References. Modified AA

88T1087

Osierman, Teodor I. (Instt Philosophie Akademie Wissenschaften USSR, Wolchontka 14/121019 Moscow), Aktuelle Probleme der philosophischen und soziologischen Forschung in der Sowjetunion (Relevant Problems of Philosophical and Sociological Research in the Soviet Union), Deutsche Zeitschrift für Philosophie, 1987, 35, 1, 1-11. (GER)

1 Reports on documents of the Twenty-Seventh Party Congress of the Communist Party of the USSR. Subjective as well as objective factors preventing the further scientific-technical progress of socialist society & the means to overcome them are noted in reference to addresses by Mikhail S. Gorbachev. The increasing importance of the human factor in social evaluation, the ways in which it can be activated, & the role of social scientists in its activation are stressed. The lack of research into the dialectical processes & contradictions of socialist society is blamed

References. HA

88T1105

Cerradi, Consuelo (Dept Sociology U Rome, 00100 Italy). Rena-cattura: il contributo di Kurt H. Wolff all'epistemologia dell'analisi qualitativa (Surrender-and-Catch: Kurt H. Wolff's Contribution to the Epistemology of Qualitative Analysis), Studi di Sociologia, 1986, 24, 2, Apr-June, 215-228. (ITA)

† The thought of Kurt H. Wolff is examined, especially the two-fold concept of "surrender-&catch" formulated in his theory of knowledge (Surrender and Catch. Experience and Inquiry Today, Dordrecht & Boston: Reidel, 1976). "Surrender" indicates the phenomenological attitude of openness to knowledge; "catch" is the result of such unconditional cognitive exposure. In Wolff's writings, surrender-&catch applies to human experience of many kinds (existential, aesthetic, scientific, etc). From the viewpoint of qualitative analysis in sociology, it is particularly useful to illuminate the experience of the researcher in the field; the postulates & criteria of surrender-&catch can help in tackling the methodological problems of the life-history approach. Modified HA

88T1106

Flinch, Janet (Dept Social Administration Fylde Coll U Lancaster, LA1 4YF England). Research Note: The Vignette Technique in Survey Research, ♦ Sociology, 1987, 21, 1, Feb, 105-114.

† The use of vignettes in a current survey of beliefs about family obligations is described, & the potential of the technique for eliciting survey data of a normative kind is discussed. Comparisons are made between different ways of using vignettes in British & US surveys concerned with beliefs & norms 1 Figure, 12 References. HA

88T1107

Gebmacher, Ernst (Vienna Technical U, A-1040 Austria). Was misst die Inglehart-Skala für Postmaterialismus (What Is Measured by the Inglehart Scale for Postmaterialism), Österreichische Zeitschrift für Soziologie, 1987, 12, 1, 74-79. (GER)

† Ronald Inglehart's theory of value change (eg, "Wertwandel in den westlichen Industriegesellschaften: Politische Konsequenzen von materialistischen und postmaterialistischen Prioritäten" [Value Change in Western Industrial Societies: The Political Consequences of Materialism and Postmaterialism] in Klages, H., & Kmiecik, P. (Eds), Wertwandel und gesellschaftlicher Wandel [Value Change and Social Change], Frankfurt/Main, 1979) is critiqued drawing on data from various empirical studies. It is argued that the Inglehart scale measures a pattern of goals & awareness that is relatively stable but not lifelong. A 1985 survey of value change & postmaterialism, in which 6,000 Austrians were interviewed & an adapted Inglehart scale was used, is discussed. The results are used to expand Inglehart's socialization hypothesis to take into account the effects of political education. It is suggested that the one-dimensional hypothesis of "value change" should be replaced by a model of two distinct & competing value systems, which would not be a zero-sum equation, because both sides could gain simultaneously. 3 Tables, 1 Figure, 16 References. AA Tr & Modified by C. Waters

88T1108

Gennaro, Giuseppe (U Rome, I-00100 Italy). Il questionario: problemi, criteri, struttura (The Questionnaire: Problems, Criteria, Structure), ♦ Studi Emigrazione/Études Migrations, 1986, 23, 82-83, June-Sept, 322-342. (ITA)

† The basic role of the questionnaire in field research is examined. The methodological approach of an interuniversity research group investigating the connections between foreign immigration & the functioning of the labor market in Italy in 1984 is discussed. The problems that surfaced & the criteria that were followed during the drafting of the questionnaire for this project are highlighted. The final version of the questionnaire is reproduced. 1 Appendix. Modified HA

88T1109

Goodman, Leo A. (Dept Sociology U Chicago, IL 60637). New Methods for Analyzing the Intrinsic Character of Qualitative Variables Using Cross-Classified Data, U American Journal of Sociology, 1987, 93, 3, Nov, 529-583.

† New methods are described for analyzing the intrinsic character of qualitative variables (variables pertaining to nominal attributes &/or to ordinal categorical classifications), using the observed cross-classification table pertaining to these variables. The new methods can be applied to determine whether the particular variables of interest can be expressed in intrinsic metric terms, using the pattern of the observed joint distribution of variables in a cross-classification table as evidence pertaining to the possible intrinsic metric character of the variables. These methods are related to, but different from, methods developed (1) earlier in connection with L. Guttman's approach to scale analysis, (2) earlier in connection with P. F. Lazarsfeld's approach to latent-class analysis, & (3) more recently in connection with the loglinear approach. These three approaches appear, at first, to be very different from one another, but with the introduction of the new methods described here, it will be shown how they are related to one another, & how they improve on those obtained with each of the three earlier approaches. 7 Tables, 9 Figures, 55 References. HA

88T1110

Gordon, David F. (Dept Sociology State U New York, Geneseo 14454). Getting Close by Staying Distant: Fieldwork with Proselytizing Groups, U Qualitative Sociology, 1987, 10, 3, fall, 267-287.

† Methods are discussed for dealing with the problems encountered with proselytizing groups by field researchers, in the context of a study of two Jesus People groups. It is concluded that open & honest disagreement with the groups' beliefs, as well as a visible role as a researcher, result in increased rapport & acceptance by the groups & reduced psychological stress on the researcher. The processes of role taking & role playing in the relation between the researcher & groups members suggest that distancing strategies are useful when proselytizing groups are studied by nonbelievers. 26 References. HA

88T1111

Höllinger, Franz (Institut Soziologie U Graz, A-8020 Austria). Postalische Umfragen auf der Basis von Telefonatichproben: Ergebnisse einer Pilot-Studie (Mail Surveys Based on Telephone Samples: Results of a Pilot Study), Österreichische Zeitschrift für Soziologie, 1987, 12, 1, 80-84. (GER)

† A mailed questionnaire examining attitudes toward the role of government, which was sent to persons randomly selected from Austrian telephone directories, resulted in a comparably high return rate ($N = 48$ or 44%), but in considerable contortion of the return sample; ie, higher educational & occupational groups were overrepresented. The difficulty of questions & disinterest in the topic were concluded to be the main reasons for refusal. It is assumed that the topic of the questionnaire was of selective interest for higher SS groups. Additional contortion of the sample is based on the sampling method: since almost all households of higher occupational groups have telephones, as compared to only 66% of Lc households, random selection of telephone owners results in contorted samples. 3 Tables, 6 References. Modified AA

88T1112

Klov Dahl, Alden S. (Dept Sociology Australian National U, Canberra ACT 2601). VIEW+NET: A New Tool for Network Analysis, Social Networks, 1986, 8, 4, Dec, 313-342.

† Evidence from a variety of sources suggests that visual representations can facilitate the analysis of complex relational data, stimulate theoretical insights, & help to convey the results of research to relevant audiences. Advances in computer graphics technology in the last decade have made it possible to create & manipulate complex visual images in real time & these advances provide the basis for developing new tools for network analysis. The present state-of-the-art of interactive computer graphics is described, & a graphics package for interactive visually-assisted network analysis-VIEW+NET-is discussed & illustrated. 10 Figures, 23 References. HA

88T1113

Milavsky, J. Ronald (Room 1640 30 Rockefeller Plaza, New York NY 10112). Improving the Public's Opinion of Public Opinion, ♦ The Public Opinion Quarterly, 1987, 51, 3, fall, 436-447.

† Researchers need to pay attention to the image of survey research that is communicated at three critical exchange points between researchers & public: (1) between interviewer & R; (2) between news media poll reports & readers; & (3) between research findings & policymakers. It is crucial that both the public & policymakers have a respectful view of the value of survey research, so that the public remains motivated to answer survey inquiries & so that policymakers actually use survey data in the formulation of policy. Three problems in particular are identified: (A) A review of research on interview refusals points to the need to convey to the R in the first 30 seconds of contact that the interview is important debate revolving around the ideas of Wilhelm Dilthey, Max Weber, George Simmel, & H. Rickert are traced. On one side, this has led to the elaboration of a concept of history that can use, in a constructive & productive way, the findings of the social sciences & sociological research; & on the other, to deep internal reflection within the social sciences, which has gradually freed them from the theoretical barrenness of positivism & traditional Marxism & opened them to positive confrontation with the elaborations of contemporary philosophy, especially phenomenology & hermeneutics. In investigating these underlying theoretical configurations, it is found that Dilthey had the primary role in dismantling the absolute form of historicism, which in Germany found its most total & definitive expression in the Hegelian system. Dilthey opened the way for the autonomous development of the historical sciences, which had positive repercussions for the social sciences. AA Tr & Modified by C. Waters

88T1097

Spencer, Martin E. (State U New York Coll, Oneonta 13820). The Imperfect Empiricism of the Social Sciences, Sociological Forum, 1987, 2, 2, spring, 331-372

I The social sciences suffer from a methodological false consciousness that calls into question their progressive nature as cumulative, knowledge-building enterprises. While the practitioners of social science believe that they accumulate knowledge through a classical scientific dialectic of hypothesis & evidence (scientific empiricism), they in fact assume their hypotheses to be true images of the nature of the social world, & they resist evidence that gainsays these images (imperfect empiricism). The idea that the social sciences progress, in a linear or dialectical fashion, is itself derived from the perspective of scientific empiricism. In reality the progress of the social sciences is problematic, if the movement of these sciences is viewed in terms of their actual practice of imperfect empiricism. Seen from the latter perspective, the social sciences are—at any given moment—an aggregate of conceptual communities that communicate only imperfectly with each other & that assert the correctness of their point of view while disdaining that of others. Since the progressive advance of knowledge is uncertain in these circumstances, the question is raised as to why the natural sciences that—according to Thomas S. Kuhn—are also practitioners of imperfect empiricism work, while the social sciences apparently do not. 41 References. HA

88T1098

Stephenson, William (U Missouri, Columbia 65211), William James, Niels Bohr, and Complementarity: I-Concepts, in The Psychological Record, 1986, 36, 4, fall, 519-527

I The concept of complementarity was introduced by William James in 1891 (The Principles of Psychology, Vols 1-2, London, Macmillan) & by physicist Niels Bohr in 1927 (e.g. see Atomic Theory and the Description of Nature, Cambridge University Press, 1934), the latter probably without knowledge of the former. The phenomena were experienced as "gaps" in thought, & by the experiential observation that thought is divisible into transitive & substantivative parts, providing evidence of complementarity. The most obvious phenomenon of psychology, that of thought, therefore requires quantum-theoretical exploration. Bohr was fascinated by the principle of complementarity & of the possibility of a new epistemology based on it. 12 References. HA

88T1099

Stephenson, William (U Missouri, Columbia 65211), William James, Niels Bohr, and Complementarity: II-Pragmatics of a Thought, in The Psychological Record, 1986, 36, 4, fall, 529-543.

I (See abstract of Part I in this section.) Q-factor theory has close correspondences with quantum-theoretical concepts in physics. The observation by William James (The Principles of Psychology, Vols 1-2, London: Macmillan, 1891), separating transitive & substantivative parts of thought, & identified by him as complementarity, calls for a quantum-theoretical basis for so-called "mind." Following the methodology suggested by James, the thought "Columbus discovered America in 1492" is subjected to Q-methodology, resulting in operant factors that are complementary to each other. The law of transformation of experience into operant factors is proof of quantization of so-called "mind." Since "mind" is replaced by communicability, the law applies to the latter. Complementarity applies to transitive thought, whence its significance in quantum theory, where observer & observed are conjoined in some self-referential form. Neil Bohr's expectance (Atomic Theory and the Description of Nature, Cambridge University Press, 1934) for a new epistemology based on the complementarity principle finds full support in Q-methodology, applicable to all subjectivity. Similarly, there can be unity in science, provided objective & subjective parts are granted, each rooted in quantum theoretical concepts. HA

88T1100

Švítánek, Ján (Instit Philosophy & Sociology Slovak Academy Sciences, Obráncov Mieru 49 81438 Bratislava Czechoslovakia). Positivism ako redukcionistická metodológia vedeckého poznania (Positivism as Reductionist Methodology of Scientific Cognition), Filozofia, 1979, 34, 5, 532-536 (CZE)

I An analysis of the positivist conception of scientific cognition, in which three principles are emphasized: verifiability, reduction, & physicalism. Contrasts are described with the contemporary Marxist theory of science. 3 References. Modified HA

88T1101

——, A faktoranalízis alapjairól. II Rész (On the Basis of Factor Analysis. Part 2), Szociológia, 1982, 3, 459-473 (HUN)
Edited by László Bertalan.

I (See citation of Part I in this issue also.) A review essay on Raymond Boudon's L'Analyse mathématique des faits sociaux ([The Mathematical Analysis of Social Facts], Paris, 1967 [see listing in IRPS No 41]). Abstract not currently available.

88T1102

——, A taxonómia alapjairól (On the Concept of Taxonomy), Szociológia, 1982, 1, 135-147. (HUN)
Edited by László Bertalan.

I A review essay on C. G. Hempel's Aspects of Scientific Explanation (New York & London, 1965 [see listing in IRPS No 41]). Abstract not currently available.

04 research methods

88T1103

Bradburn, Norman M., Rips, Lance J. & Shevell, Steven K. (U Chicago, IL 60637). Answering Autobiographical Questions: The Impact of Memory and Inference on Surveys, in Science, 1987, 236, 4798, 10 Apr, 157-161.

I Survey questions often probe Rs for quantitative facts about events in their past: "During the last 2 weeks, on days when you drank liquor, about how many drinks did you have?" "During the past 12 months, how many visits did you make to a dentist?" "When did you last work at a full-time job?" are all examples from national surveys. Although questions like these make an implicit demand to remember & enumerate specific autobiographical episodes, Rs frequently have trouble complying because of limits on their ability to recall. In these situations, Rs resort to inferences that use partial information from memory to construct a numeric answer. Results from cognitive psychology studies are used to illuminate these phenomena. In particular, cognitive research can help identify situations that inhibit or facilitate recall & can reveal inferences that affect the accuracy of Rs' answers. 4 Figures. HA

88T1104

Burt, Ronald S. & Guillarte, Miguel G. (Dept Sociology Columbia U, New York NY 10027). A Note on Scaling the General Social Survey Network Item Response Categories, Social Networks, 1986, 8, 4, Dec, 387-396.

I The idea of structural balance is used to suggest quantitative intervals between relationship strength response categories in the 1985 General Social Survey network data (N = 1,531). In contrast to an assumption of equal intervals between the categories of relationship strength, the intervals appear quite unequal. Relations with discussion partners less close to their R than other cited discussion partners are about 0.17 the strength of relations with especially close discussion partners. The middle category of relations between the partners appear to be little more than acquaintance relations, ie, about 0.2 of the distance from people who are total strangers to people who are especially close. 3 Tables, 1 Figure. 7

al. The General Inquirer: A Computer Approach to Content Analysis. Cambridge, MA: MIT Press, 1966). Reliability was high over time, both within & between sessions, & there were few differences observed between contexts. Results are discussed in terms of their implications for the use of content analysis in personality research. 2 Tables, 25 References. HA

88T1123

Sijkel, Dirk. Computergestuurde gegevensverzameling (Computer Assisted Data Collection), W Mens en Maatschappij, 1987, 62, 3, Aug, 289-301. (DUT)

† A description of the ways that computers can enhance the possibilities for data collection & lead to increased efficiency in the data processing stage. New developments have made it possible for computers to generate almost automatic data & questionnaire documentation. Some ways to take maximal advantage of the more complex questionnaire designs that are possible in a computer-assisted environment are suggested. 1 Table, 1 Figure, 32 References. Modified HA

88T1124

Taylor, Steven J. (Center Human Policy Syracuse U, NY 13244), Observing Abuse: Professional Ethics and Personal Morality in Field Research, W Qualitative Sociology, 1987, 10, 3, fall, 288-302.

† Based on participant observation in 1972 in a state institution for the mentally retarded, the moral & ethical dilemmas that occur in research at settings characterized by routine human abuse are examined. After a discussion of the choices posed by these dilemmas, preferred solutions are presented. The importance of anticipating potential moral & ethical dilemmas prior to entering the field, & delineating the relation between professional ethics & personal morality are discussed as implications of this problem 44 References HA

05 statistical methods

88T1125

Alba, Richard D. (State U New York, Albany 12203), Interpreting the Parameters of Log-Linear Models, W Sociological Methods and Research, 1987, 16, 1, Aug, 45-77.

† A straightforward approach to the interpretation of the parameters in loglinear models is developed through a detailed consideration of examples from research on changes in indicators of ethnicity. The focus is on models involving dependent variables, & the conventions of regression analysis are used to represent variables in models for the logit, or logarithm of the odds of the dependent variable. By simple manipulations, the parameters in logit models are related to such quantities as odds & odds ratios. The magnitudes of the effects conveyed by the parameters are also described in terms of typical % differences. The examples considered include models with complex interaction structures & for polytomous dependent variables. The mechanics of developing parameter estimates from the output of widely available computer programs are shown. 9 Tables, 13 References. HA

88T1126

Argunova, K. D. (Instit Sociological Research, ul Krzhizhanovskogo 24/35 korpus 5 117259 Moscow USSR), Vzaimodeystvie priznakov v regressiionnykh modelyakh (The Interconnection of Predictors in Regression Models), Sotsiologicheskie Issledovaniya, 1987, 14, 2, Mar-Apr, 102-112. (RUS)

† An investigation of the conditions under which results of regression analysis can validly be interpreted causally. Joint solution of two problems— r & interaction of predictors in the case of violation of assumptions of normal r among variables—is substantiated on the basis of the notion of structure of jointly encountered predictor categories. The problem of r is absorbed by the problem of interaction once it is realized that only jointly encountered properties need to be taken into account. A method of orthogonalization of dummy variables is proposed that represents categorical properties in a dichotomic space of these properties, resulting in identification of the complex properties that strongly determine dependent variables. Resolution of the initially formulated goal is more successful as analyzed data are better structured. Modified AA

88T1127

Bentler, P. M. & Chou, Chih-ping (Dept Psychology U California, Los Angeles 90024-1563), Practical Issues in Structural Modeling, W Sociological Methods and Research, 1987, 16, 1, Aug, 78-117.

† Practical problems frequently encountered in applications of covariance structure analysis are discussed, & solutions are suggested. Conceptual, statistical, & practical requirements for structural modeling are reviewed to indicate how basic assumptions might be violated. Problems associated with estimation, results, & model fit are also mentioned. Various issues in each area are raised, & possible solutions are provided to encourage more appropriate & successful applications of structural modeling. 105 References. HA

88T1128

Bernard, H. Russell, Shelley, Gene Ann & Killworth, Peter (Dept Anthropology U Florida, Gainesville 32601), How Much of a Network Does the GSS and RSW Dredge Up?, Social Networks, 1987, 9, 1, Mar, 49-61.

† Two methods of generating the names of persons in an informant's network are compared: the General Social Survey (GSS) network component & the Reverse Small Word (RSW) technique (see SA 28:2/80K5352). Six informants completed both the GSS & RSW surveys & their networks were compared on many different criteria to assess the degree to which they overlap, & to measure the extent of the overlap. Results indicate that the 2 network generators are tapping different cognitive sets of alters, with small but significant amounts of overlap. 1 Table, 15 References. Modified HA

88T1129

Burt, Ronald S. (Dept Sociology Center Social Sciences Columbia U, New York NY 10027), A Note on Missing Network Data in the General Social Survey, Social Networks, 1987, 9, 1, Mar, 63-73.

† Data from 1,534 Rs to the 1985 General Social Survey (GSS) are analyzed to assess: (1) the magnitude of the missing network data problem, (2) the kinds of networks in which data are likely to be missing, & (3) the kinds of people likely to provide incomplete network data. Results indicate that there is very little data missing on Rs to the 1985 GSS. It is suggested that the small amount of missing data can be replaced with quantitative data indicating a weak relation. 3 Tables, 1 Figure, 4 References. Modified HA

88T1130

Burt, Ronald S. (Dept Sociology Center Social Sciences Columbia U, New York NY 10027), A Note on the General Social Survey's Ersatz Network Density Item, Social Networks, 1987, 9, 1, Mar, 75-85.

† A comparison of data obtained via the 1985 General Social Survey (GSS) sociometric items & less costly ersatz network density items. Reliability was found to be the critical weakness of the ersatz density item, which can have dramatic implications for empirical research because network density is most often used as an independent variable. There is no evidence from the GSS experiment to encourage the use of ersatz network items as a surrogate for sociometric name-generator & name-interpreter items 2 Tables, 1 Figure, 1 Reference. Modified HA

88T1131

Chan, W. S. & Tong, H. (Dept Statistics Temple U, Philadelphia PA 19122), On Tests for Non-Linearity in Time Series Analysis, W Journal of Forecasting, 1986, 5, 4, Oct-Dec, 217-228.

† A new test developed for nonlinearity in time-series data in discrete time is compared to several different approaches using both simulated & real data. The implications for forecasting are briefly discussed. 8 Tables, 22 References. Modified HA

88T1132

Clogg, Clifford C. & Eliason, Scott R. (Pennsylvania State U, University Park 16802), Some Common Problems in Log-Linear Analysis, W Sociological Methods and Research, 1987, 16, 1, Aug, 8-44.

† Several problems often encountered in research using loglinear models for categorical response variables are discussed. The issues covered are: (1) determining the degrees of freedom for a model, (2) analyzing sparse data, (3) analyzing weighted data, (4) modeling rates, & (5) interpreting results. 12 Tables, 40 References. HA

& the interviewer is worth spending time with (B) A review of news articles in major newspapers suggests both a positive & a negative impact on the public's image of research. Studies appearing in the press cover a wide variety of interesting subjects, report useful information about subgroups & trends, & add to the historical record, however, they are heavy on data, light on interpretation, often do not have a clear story line, sometimes present contradictory data, & stress immediate specific news value rather than general knowledge about social process. The overall result may be reader confusion & a consequent undervaluing of surveys (C) The little systematic research conducted on the exchange between research & policymaker suggests that policymakers find survey research more useful in planning strategy for gaining or remaining in office than for conducting the business of the office. This, too, may lead to undervaluing the social utility of survey research by the public & by policymakers. Suggestions are made for correcting these problems. 4 References. Modified AA

88T1114

Murray, Glenn F. & Erickson, Patricia G. (Prevention Studies Dept Addiction Research Foundation, 33 Russell St Toronto Ontario M5S 2S1). Cross-Sectional versus Longitudinal Research: An Empirical Comparison of Projected and Subsequent Criminality. Social Science Research, 1987, 16, 2, June, 107-118.

† The debate over using cross-sectional or longitudinal designs for testing criminological theories' assumptions about causal processes is summarized, using examples from the juvenile justice & deterrence literature. Past attempts to use panel designs to establish causal order have produced results that conflicted with those of cross-sectional studies where the dependent variable was a measure of past behavior. A panel study is described in which a prospective measure was used within a longitudinal design in order to assess whether projected deviance is an adequate proxy for actual (subsequent) behavior. Interviews were conducted with 120 persons sentenced for marijuana possession in Ontario during 1981, & follow-up telephone interviews conducted with 50% of the sample 6 months later. Results support the thesis that a prospective measure can estimate subsequent behavior, & demonstrate that both cross-sectional & longitudinal data will result in the same conclusion. Suggestions for further research using other forms of criminality & different samples are provided. 4 Tables, 42 References. K. Hyatt

88T1115

Nugent, William R. (U Maryland, Baltimore 21201). Information Gain through Integrated Research Approaches. U The Social Service Review, 1987, 61, 2, June, 317-364.

† Data from a recent experimental test of the tension-reduction theory of alcohol abuse (Thyer, B. & Curtis, G., "The Effects of Ethanol Intoxication on Phobic Anxiety," Behaviour Therapy & Research 1984, 22, 6, 599-610) are reanalyzed employing a methodological approach using both single-case-design & group-comparison methods. The results of this reanalysis severely contradict the results of the original study, which was a well-designed & -executed experiment. This finding suggests that treatment evaluations that use only group comparison or single-subject approaches may lead to erroneous conclusions. 6 Tables, 6 Figures. HA

88T1116

Poland, Fiona. Coming Up with the Goods: Working with Recall Tapes in an Elderly People's Home. ♦ Studies in Sexual Politics, 1987, 16, 48-78.

† Described is a project involving the use of "recall tapes" to enhance the memories & social interactions of residents in an Elderly People's Home (EPH) in Manchester, England. A detailed discussion of individual & situational factors that shaped the project is provided, along with a transcript of the slidetape & reasons for including each thematic area. Excerpts from patient-staff conversations & their experiences with the recall tape are examined (for further detail, see Claire Bacha's & Fiona Poland's "Recall Tapes and Groups: Report of the Use of Recall Tapes in a Manchester Aged Persons' Home," Social Services Research, 1986, 3, 85-100). Implications & future directions for feminist research are discussed. 2 Diagrams, 5 References. K. Hyatt

88T1117

Remete, László. A szociológiai kutatás könyvtári és információellátásáról (On the Library and Information Supply of Sociological Research). Szociológia, 1982, 4, 597-609. (HUN)

† Abstract not currently available

88T1118

Reuband, Karl-Heinz (Zentralarchiv empirische Sozialforschung U Köln, D-5000 41 Federal Republic Germany). Unwanted Third Person in Interview Situations. Zeitschrift für Soziologie, 1987, 16, 4, Aug, 303-308. (GER)

† The role played by third persons in interview situations & the possible consequences of their presence are examined. Data from a nation-wide survey in West Germany (N = 1,993) show that the presence of a third person is often at the request of the R, & that in such cases deviant response patterns seem to be promoted. It is speculated that this tendency may be accounted for by selection processes, or by their combination with the presence of the third party. The necessity of differentiating among third persons according to their relationships with Rs is emphasized. 3 Tables, 9 References. Modified HA

88T1119

Róbert, Péter. Az élettörténeti módszer-Szakkiradalmi áttekintés, alkalmazási lehetőségek (The Method of Life History: A Review of Literature and Spheres of Application). Szociológia, 1982, 2, 233-247. (HUN)

† Recent sociologists have been increasingly concerned with creating a synthesis of the historical & the sociological approaches. The history of this combined approach is reviewed, & the views of major practitioners are outlined, including William Thomas & Florian Znaniecki, Gordon Allport, Louis Gottschalk, H. S. Becker, R. C. Angell, & J. Szczepanski. Methodological implications of their comments are traced, & the use of such methods in Hungarian social research is briefly reviewed. Modified HA

88T1120

Rosenblum, Karen E. (George Mason U, Fairfax VA 22030). The In-Depth Interview: Between Science and Sociability. Sociological Forum, 1987, 2, 2, spring, 388-400.

† The social science interview is a temporally circumscribed, explicitly instrumental exchange conducted by relative strangers that demands (1) intimacy yet impersonality, & (2) professionalism amidst sociability. This paradoxical structure is reflected in what is said, as well as in what is not said. Requirements for intimacy & impersonality can be accomplished respectively through "fresh" & scripted utterances, & demands for professionalism & sociability are met through question-answer sequences & conversation. The types of discourse peculiar to this setting may shape utterances in ways antithetical to the social science goals that prompted the choice of this method. 13 References. HA

88T1121

Scherl, Lea M. & Smithson, Michael (Behavioral Sciences Dept James Cook U, Queensland 4811 Australia). A New Dimension to Content Analysis: Exploring Relationships among Thematic Categories, Quality and Quantity. 1987, 21, 2, 199-208.

† Conventional content analysis uses "hard-edged" categories for coding qualitative data (eg. content themes), a practice that not only loses valuable information but also restricts the ways in which such data may be analyzed. A procedure is presented based on fuzzy set theory (see Zadeh, L. A. "Fuzzy Sets," Information and Control, 1965, 8, 338-353), which extends content analysis by permitting the researcher to use fuzzy, or "blurred" categories for coding. These categories are allowed to overlap one another, thereby enabling the researcher to investigate overlap & inclusion relationships among thematic categories. The technique is briefly explained, & its use in an applied research context demonstrated. Some extensions of this technique & its application in exploratory data analysis are discussed. 2 Tables, 2 Appendixes, 13 References. Modified HA

88T1122

Schnurr, Paula P., Rosenberg, Stanley D., Oxman, Thomas E. & Tucker, Gary J. (Dept Psychiatry Dartmouth Medical School, Hanover NH 03756). A Methodological Note on Content Analysis: Estimates of Reliability. U Journal of Personality Assessment, 1986, 50, 4, winter, 601-609.

† The reliability of measurements obtained from a dictionary-based form of content analysis was investigated in an experiment that involved tape-recording 30 medical students as they spoke about a predetermined topic in 2 separate sessions 1 week apart. Ss were randomly assigned to speak in one of two contexts. The content of transcripts of these sessions was analyzed using adaptations of the Harvard III Psychosociological Dictionary & the General Inquirer content analysis program (Stone, P. J., et schaffliche Erkenntnis. Gesichtspunkte für eine Kritik und Neubestimmung (Statistical Inference and Scientific Cognition. Viewpoints toward a New Critique and Reconceptualization). Zeitschrift für Sozial Psychologie, 1986, 17, 3, 146-159. (GER)

Comments, 177-199, Response, 200-205.

† The application of statistical theories to problems of induction in the social sciences is examined. The theories of J. Neyman & E. S. Pearson, R. A. Fisher, & T. Bayes are criticized for, among other things, failing to properly distinguish between deductive & inductive reasoning & between subjectivity & objectivity (see respectively: On the Problem of the Most Efficient Tests of Statistical Hypotheses, Philosophical Transactions of the Royal Society of London, Series A.231, 1933; Statistical Methods and Scientific Inference, New York: Hafner Press, 1973; & Lindley, D. V., Introduction to Probability and Statistics from a Bayesian Viewpoint, Cambridge: Cambridge U Press, 1969/70). Gambling is claimed to be the only context in which hitherto developed statistical thinking about induction can be profitably applied. Some suggestions are given for combining some aspects of statistical induction to obtain a measure of certainty. In Statistisches Schliessen und wissenschaftliche Erkenntnis. Überschätzung statistischer Konzepte durch ihre Begründer oder Frustration mancher Anwender nach Erkenntnis der Tücke des Objekts (Statistical Induction and Scientific Cognition. Overestimation of Statistical Concepts by Their Founders or Frustration of Some Users after Recognition of the Treachery of the Object), Roland Dillmann & Gerhard Arminger (Bergische U. Wuppertal, Federal Republic of Germany) criticize Leiser for, among other things, confusing the original intent of the theorists with the applications sometimes made of their theories & for inflating the ability of social science to produce scientific certainty. In Wissenschaftliche Erkenntnis und die Funktion der Inferenzstatistik. Anmerkungen zu E. Leiser (Scientific Cognition and the Function of Inferential Statistics. Remarks to E. Leiser), Gerd Gigerenzer (U of Konstanz, Federal Republic Germany) disputes Leiser's claim that inferential statistics has only an auxiliary function in psychology. Both historical & theoretical grounds are given for the propriety of this method. In Zur Verwendbarkeit statistischer Entscheidungsverfahren in der Psychologie: Ein Kommentar zu Leiser (On the Applicability of Decision Procedures in Psychology: A Comment on Leiser), Joachim Krauth (U of Dusseldorf, Federal Republic of Germany), while acknowledging problems in interpreting the results of statistical decision procedures, criticizes Leiser for both misrepresenting the theorists he criticizes & failing to clearly state the fundamental assumptions of his own theoretical development. In Ein "letztes Wort" zum statistischen Schliessen. Abschliessende Stellungnahme zu den Beiträgen von Dillmann/Armingen, Gigerenzer und Krauth (A "Last Word" on Statistical Inference. Concluding Comment on the Contributions of Dillmann/Armingen, Gigerenzer and Krauth), Leiser claims that Krauth wrongly takes mathematics, instead of cognition, to be the main theme of the original article, a mistake attributed to perceptual defense. Gigerenzer mistakenly perceives an assumed independence of method & object in the original article. The intended criticism, contrary to Dillman & Arminger, is not of specific authors, but of the entire practice of using statistical inference in science. 3 Figures, 94 References. J. Anderson

88T1142

Magnello, M. Eileen, Probability and Uncertainty, U Journal of the History of the Behavioral Sciences, 1987, 23, 4, Oct, 376-380.

† A review essay on Stephen M. Stigler's The History of Statistics: The Measurement of Uncertainty before 1900 (Cambridge: Harvard U Press, 1986 (see listing in IRPS No. 41)). Stigler's account of the history of statistics focuses on the use of combinations of observations in scientific fields & on the following growth of inferential probability models. He is able because of this concern to show why least squares methods emerged eighty years before the development of regression equations. He also shows how modern statistical theory emerged from quantitative studies of inheritance conducted in England. Stigler has made a major contribution to the history of statistics. W. H. Stoddard

88T1143

McNitt, Andrew D. (Dept Political Science Eastern Illinois U, Charleston 61920), Measuring Human Rights: Problems and Possibilities, U The Policy Studies Journal, 1986, 15, 1, Sept, 71-83.

† Although there are many conceptual & empirical difficulties, it is now possible to systematically analyze human rights abuses on a worldwide basis. Amnesty International (since 1974), Freedom House (since 1973), & the US Dept of State (since 1979) have prepared annual reports on the status of human rights for most of the world's countries. Concentrating on the descriptive portions of these reports, & treating respect for human rights, at least initially, as a multidimensional phenomenon, a data set is created that can be used to test comparative theories of human rights. Eventually a time series data set will also be developed that can be used to study cyclic changes in the degree to which nation states are willing to violate human rights. 27 References. Modified AA

88T1144

Nasatir, M. & Nasatir, D. (Online Computer Library Center, Dublin OH 43017), The Impact of Information Technology on Public Access to Social Science Databases, U Social Science Information Studies, 1982, 2, 4, Oct, 187-193.

† An examination of four trends in US society & their impact on public libraries, librarians, & public access to information, of focusing on the use of social science databases. The trends examined include: the rapid increase in the availability of microcomputers; the existence of a telecommunications network; the tendency for more information to appear in machine-readable form; & an increase in the number of individuals familiar with & inclined to utilize machine-readable data files. 2 References. HA

88T1145

Yadov, Vladimir Aleksandrovich (Soviet Academy Sciences, Leninsky Prospekt 14 Moscow V-71), Kvantifikatsiya sotsial'nykh yavleniy (The Quantification of Social Phenomena), Sotsiologicheskie Issledovaniya, 1987, 14, 2, Mar-Apr, 92-101. (RUS)

† The inaccurate handling of statistics on social phenomena can lead to serious mistakes in social policy, precisely because the authorities have come to accept mathematically phrased research results as practically inerrant. Although the reliability of statistical processing of data can be verified once the study is complete, the data themselves cannot be reverified. Moreover, only professional statisticians normally have the expertise to criticize the statistical method employed. In this light, four primary factors restricting the quantification of primary social characteristics are discussed: (1) commensurability of quantitative indices; (2) concept of the norm; (3) limitations of the open scale response; & (4) limitations of the closed scale response. Thirty-one items of practical advice are given. 2 Tables, 1 Figure, 1 Photograph, 12 References. G. Prostavov

88T1146

----, A faktorelemzés alapjai I (On the Foundations of Factor Analysis I), Szociológia, 1982, 2, 283-300. (HUN)

† Abstract not currently available.

88T1147

----, Az út-elemzésről. I. rész (On Path Analysis. Part I), Szociológia, 1982, 4, 611-635. (HUN)

Edited by László Bertalan.

† A review essay on Hubert M. Blalock, Jr.'s Causal Inferences in Nonexperimental Research (Chapel Hill, 1964 (see abstract of book in SA 16:4/68D1313; see listing in IRPS No. 41)). Abstract not currently available.

88T1133

Cowger, Charles D. (U Illinois, Urbana 61801). Correcting Misuse Is the Best Defense of Statistical Tests of Significance, Am The Social Service Review, 1987, 61, 1 Mar, 107-172 Response, 172-174.

1 A reply is offered to Charles Glisson's critique ("In Defense of Statistical Tests of Significance," Social Service Review, 1985, 59, Sept, 377-386) of Charles D. Cowger's paper "Statistical Significance Tests: Scientific Ritualism or Scientific Method?" (see SOPODA 7:1/85W4716) that identified misrepresentation & misuse of significance tests as a serious problem in social work research. Contrary to Glisson's reading, the original paper did not argue that significance tests should be abandoned, but that they should be restricted to a more limited function properly reflective of the randomness assumption that underlies their use. In Author's Reply, Charles Glisson (U of Tennessee, Knoxville) responds to several of Cowger's points, emphasizing that despite the benefits of random sampling to designing studies, significance tests do not presuppose such random sampling. Cowger's arguments would require the rejection of 80% of the significance tests performed in social work research, yet would provide no alternative procedure to replace them in eliminating type I errors. W H Stoddard

88T1114

Doignon, Jean-Paul, Ducamp, Andre & Falmagne, Jean-Claude (U Libre Bruxelles, B-1050 Belgium). On the Separation of Two Relations by a Biorder or a Semiorder, Mathematical Social Sciences, 1987, 13, 1, Feb, 1-18

1 Semiorders & interval orders generalize simple orders & formalize the concept of a threshold, while the partial order is consistent with a concept of multidimensionality. Both concepts are combined here in an expansion of the scope of the results of Roy & M. Roubens & P. Vincke ("A Definition of Partial Interval Orders" in Trends in Mathematical Psychology Degreef, F & Van Buggenhaut, J. (Eds), Amsterdam: North-Holland, 1984, 309-315) on partial semiorders & interval orders. Various notions of dimensions are introduced for appropriately defined partial structures, thus describing threshold counterparts of the dimensions of a partial order. Using & extending some results from a previous work enables avoidance of a finiteness assumption. 2 Figures, 19 References. Modified HA

88T1135

Doreian, Patrick (Dept Sociology U Pittsburgh, PA 15260). Measuring Regular Equivalence in Symmetric Structures, Social Networks, 1987, 9, 2, June, 89-107

1 A method is proposed for computing the extent to which all pairs of points in a symmetric graph are regularly equivalent. By considering the relative centralities of points connected by an edge, the symmetric graph is decomposed into two asymmetric graphs. These asymmetric graphs provide the input for the regular equivalence algorithm-REGE-of Douglas R. White & Karl P. Reitz (see SA 33:1/85O4724). 4 Tables, 8 Figures, 12 References. AA

88T1136

Doron, Rina (Center Technological Education, 52 Golomb St POB 305 Holon Israel). How to Examine Construct Validity of Item Banks, Quality and Quantity, 1987, 21, 2, 139-151

1 An approach for assuring the content validity of item banks & for examining their construct validity is suggested & empirically tested. The method is an application of L. Guttman's concept of using mapping sentences for theory construction in the domain of "simple fractions" (see S. Shye's (Ed) "Achievement-Motivation: A Faceted Definition and Structural Analysis," Multivariate Behavioral Research, 1978). The construct validity of the theory used for the creation of the item bank was tested by selecting two samples of items that are referenced in the same structuple (criterion). The Yule weak monotonicity coefficients of the items' connections were calculated & represented in two different matrices & in two different space diagrams. The results clearly show a similarity in both the structure of the space diagrams of any two parallel samples & in the partition of the points into regions, ie, regions according to the classification of the items represented by them on the basis of the facets defined by the mapping sentences. Consequently, it may be concluded that the results support the construct validity of the theory on the basis of which the bank has been created. 2 Tables, 3 Figures, 15 References. HA

88T1137

Friedman, Linda Weiner (Baruch Coll, New York NY 10010). Design and Analysis of Multivariate Response Simulations: The State of the Art, Am Behavioral Science, 1987, 32, 2, Apr, 138-148.

1 The multivariate response simulation model is defined & some historical solutions from the literature are discussed. Recent research into the use of multivariate statistical methods in simulation analysis is reviewed, including the statistical rationale for the use of these techniques, the advantage of using these methods in simulation analysis, & a comprehensive survey of the simulation literature that has applied these procedures to date. The concept of a multivariate response simulation metamodel is also presented. 2 Figures, 66 References. Modified AA

88T1138

Kemery, Edward R. & Dunlap, William P. (Dept Psychology Tulane U, New Orleans LA 70118). Partialling Factor Scores Does Not Control Method Variance: A Reply to Podsakoff and Todor, Am Journal of Management, 1986, 12, 4, winter, 525-544.

1 P. M. Podsakoff & W. D. Todor ("Relationships between Leader Reward and Punishment Behavior and Group Processes and Productivity," Journal of Management, 1985, 11, 55-73) proposed partialling the first principal component from observed correlations as a procedure for controlling method variance. Using mathematical derivations & Monte Carlo simulation, it is found that this procedure is biased. Partialling out the first principal component introduces a negative bias into the resulting correlations that seriously compromises subsequent analysis. Moreover, the extent of bias is not reduced by increasing sample size; however, it is inversely proportional to the number of variables. Therefore, partialling the first principal component is not recommended. Researchers are encouraged to collect data with multiple methods whenever feasible. 1 Table, 14 References. HA

88T1139

Krauth, J. (Psychologisches Institut IV U Dusseldorf, D-4000 Federal Republic Germany). Principles of Configurational Frequency Analysis, Zeitschrift fur Psychologie mit Zeitschrift fur angewandte Psychologie, 1985, 193, 4, 363-375

1 The fundamental principles are described for configural frequency analysis (CFA), a multivariate method for identifying types in a population & for analyzing the interaction structure among observed attributes. The definition of a type in CFA is said to derive from an intuitive notion of a type, & is carried out by residual analyses in multidimensional contingency tables using simultaneous conditional binomial tests. Four ways of reducing the original table are described. Interpretation of defined types is made possible by interaction tests in reduced tables. Various modifications of CFA (prediction, multisample, conditional, longitudinal) are shown to be residual analyses in reduced contingency tables. Applications for psychology, medicine, pedagogy, & social science are reviewed. 48 References. Modified HA

88T1140

Krippendorff, Klaus (Annenberg School Communications U Pennsylvania, Philadelphia 19104). Association, Agreement, and Equity, Quality and Quantity, 1987, 21, 2, 109-123

1 Three broad families of statistical indices—association, agreement, & what may be called equity—are distinguished. The need for this distinction arises in social research, eg, where reliability (accuracy, reproducibility, & stability) is assessed by measures of association rather than agreement, & the assumptions built into an association measure conflict with the reality that gives rise to reliability data. This distinction is also necessary because: (1) association measures tend to express change as the product of two potentially very different f distributions, agreement as the product of two identical distributions, & equity ignores such distributions altogether; & (2) the probability distribution of such measures does not depend on whether they are linear or nonlinear, symmetrical or asymmetrical, or whether they express predictability or the extremality of a f distribution, but on their family membership. Since notions of association, agreement, & equity have inherently nothing to do with the ordering in data, the 2 × 2 case is chosen as the basis of the proposed distinction. All statistical indices ought to be applicable to this most reduced case of two variables, making one distinction in each; nothing more complex is needed. 1 Table, 2 Figures, 14 References. Modified HA

88T1141

Leiser, Eckart (Psychologisches Institut WE 3 Freie U Berlin, D-1000 33 Federal Republic Germany). Statistisches Schliessen und wissen- industry behavior, key strategic dimensions & relationships among & across performance measures, groups of firms, & industries can be identified. The methodology is illustrated by using published data to perform a comparative ordinal time series analysis of the largest firms in the transportation industry over the last quarter century. 15 Figures, 17 References. HA

88T1157

Skidas, Christos H. (London 4, 106 81 Athens Greece), Innovation Diffusion Models Expressing Asymmetry and/or Positively or Negatively Influencing Forces, Technological Forecasting and Social Change, 1986, 30, 4, Dec, 313-330.

† Two characteristics of the innovation diffusion process—the asymmetry & the appearance of positively or negatively influencing forces—are analyzed. Related diffusion models in use are presented & new generalized models are formulated. A five-parameter model is proposed to cover the different characteristics of innovation diffusion. The properties of this model & other related diffusion models are examined, & the appropriate iterative nonlinear regression analysis technique is developed. Five comparative applications follow, & predictions are made, as are comparisons between two generalized models—the Generalized Rational Model (Skidas, Christos H., "Two Generalized Rational Models for Forecasting Innovation Diffusion," Technological Forecasting & Social Change, 1985, 27, 39-61) & the Generalized Logistic Model (Sahal, D. "A Generalized Logistic Model for Technological Forecasting," Technological Forecasting & Social Change, 1975, 7, 81-97)—that express asymmetric diffusion behavior. 8 Tables, 3 Figures, 41 References. HA

88T1158

Sobel, Michael E. (U Arizona, Tucson 85721), Direct and Indirect Effects in Linear Structural Equation Models, Sociological Methods and Research, 1987, 16, 1, Aug, 155-176.

† Total indirect effects in linear structural equation models are defined, & methods for computing & interpreting them discussed. It is shown how the delta method may be used to obtain the standard errors of the sample estimates of these effects, & hypotheses are tested about the magnitudes of indirect effects, with focus on a particularly simple linear structural equation system. Several computer programs that can implement these calculations are described. 2 Tables, 1 Figure, 2 Appendixes, 18 References. Modified HA

88T1159

Welch, James S., Jr. (Ketrion Management Science Inc, 1700 North

Moore St Arlington VA 22209), PAM—A Practitioner's Approach to Modeling, Management Science, 1987, 33, 5, May, 610-625.

† The Practitioner's Approach to Modeling (PAM) is a nonprocedural modeling language in which the practitioner describes a linear programming (LP) matrix with a set of two-dimensional tables: a table representing the block schematic of the matrix & supporting data tables. A computer program processes these tables to produce a LP matrix ready for optimization. The blockwise model formulation is described, relationships of the data to the model are discussed, an overview of PAM's matrix generation language is presented, & some experiences with a prototype system are given. 15 Figures, 16 References. HA

88T1160

Wheaton, Blair (McGill U, Montreal Quebec H3A 2T5), Assessment of Fit in Overidentified Models with Latent Variables, Sociological Methods and Research, 1987, 16, 1, Aug, 118-154.

† In recent years a number of measures have been suggested for the assessment of fit of overidentified models with latent variables (ie, covariance structure models). The logic of the fit problem is discussed & the analytical intentions of six of these measures are reviewed, with emphasis on their dependence on sample size. The operational behaviors of these measures are compared in three model situations: in a confirmatory factor model based on small N , & in two covariance structure models, one based on a slightly larger N & the other based on a large N . Given that these models & data are "typical," results suggest that certain measures are both more stable across sample sizes & more sensitive to important variation in fit across substantively plausible models. A three-component approach to fitting is suggested: use of multiple measures, strategic overfitting, & comparison of parameter estimates in borderline vs more clearly sufficient models in terms of fit. 4 Tables, 1 Figure, 19 References. HA

88T1161

Zapletal, Ivo (Instil Philosophy & Sociology Czechoslovak Academy Sciences, Jilská 1 CS-110 00 Prague 1), K obtížím matematického modelování (Difficulties of Mathematical Modeling), Filozofia, 1983, 38, 1, 21-26. (CZE)

† An analysis of five problems that arise in the creation of mathematical models for use in scientific cognition: (1) mathematicians' lack of knowledge of scientific fields & scientific specialists' lack of knowledge of mathematics; (2) use of mathematical symbols without actual mathematical content, (3) insufficient elaboration of substantive theory; (4) temporary lack of mathematics adequate to model complex processes; & (5) the number & variety of models able to describe a definite substantive theory. 1 Figure. Modified HA

61 models: mathematical & other

BT1148

Dubnicka, Jan (Instit Philosophy & Sociology Slovak Academy Sciences, Obrancov Mieru 49 81438 Bratislava Czechoslovakia). Materialistická dialektika a teória modelov (Materialist Dialectics and the Theory of Models). Filozofia 1983, 38, 1, 9-20 (CZE)

An exploration of the concepts of model & modeling & of their relationship to scientific cognition. The links between these concepts & some related concepts eg, reflection, abstract & concrete, the ideal, truth, theory, experiment, analogy, & information are discussed. Within the framework of materialist dialectics & gnoseology, the dialectics of modeling are analyzed from the point of view of relations among object, subject, & model within which a number of contradictions & negations characteristic of this method of scientific cognition appear. 18 References. Modified HA

BT1149

Geoffrion, Arthur M. (Graduate School Management U California, Los Angeles 90024). An Introduction to Structured Modeling. Management Science 1987, 33, 5, May, 547-588

An introduction & status report on a long term project, based largely on examples. The discipline of modeling has advanced only slowly compared to disciplines concerned with analyzing & solving models once they are brought into being. Structured modeling is an attempt to redress this imbalance, & seeks to provide a formal mathematical framework & computer-based environment for conceiving, representing, & manipulating a wide variety of models. The framework uses a hierarchically organized, partitioned, & attributed acyclic graph to represent the semantic, as well as mathematical, structure of a model. The computer-based environment is evolving via experimental prototypes that provide for ad hoc query, immediate expression, evaluation, solving simultaneous systems, optimization. Structured modeling will enable model-based work to be done with greater productivity & acceptance by nonspecialists, will exploit important developments in small computers, & will cross-fertilize management science/operations research, artificial intelligence, database management, programming language design, & software engineering. 23 Figures, 1 Appendix, 58 References. HA

BT1150

Hall, S. G. (National Instit Economic & Social Research, 2 Dean Frensh St Smith Sq London SW1P 3HE England). The Importance of Non-Linearities in Large Forecasting Models with Stochastic Error Processes. Journal of Forecasting 1986, 5, 4, Oct-Dec, 205-215

The consequences of the stochastic error process in large nonlinear forecasting models is considered. As such models are nonlinear, the deterministic forecast is neither the mean nor the mode of the density function of the endogenous variables. Under a specific assumption as to the form of the nonlinearity, it is shown that the deterministic forecast is actually the vector of marginal medians of the density function. Stochastic simulation techniques are used to test whether one large forecasting model actually lies within this class. 2 Tables, 2 Figures, 22 References. A

T1151

Kutyłowski, A. (U Hamburg, D-2000 13 Federal Republic Germany). Linear Modelling of Dichotomous Response Relations with Sociological Applications. Dissertation Abstracts International / European Abstracts 1987, 48, 2, summer, 288

Unavailable from UMI; contact the degree-granting university.

T1152

Mahajan, Vijay & Sharma, Subhash (Edwin L. Cox School Business Southern Methodist U, Dallas TX 75275). A Simple Algebraic Estimation Procedure for Innovation Diffusion Models of New Product Acceptance. Technological Forecasting and Social Change 1986, 30, 4, Dec, 331-345

A simple algebraic procedure to estimate the parameters of diffusion models of new product acceptance is presented. The procedure requires knowledge of the occurrence of the point of inflection (based on actual sales, analogous products, or management judgments). It is conceptually easy to use & can be implemented by using a hand calculator. Since the procedure does not employ period-by-period time-series diffusion data, it is not expected to provide the best fit to the data as compared to the maximum likelihood & nonlinear least squares estimation procedures but can provide very reasonable parameter relative magnitude & estimates can be used to generate starting values for the maximum likelihood & nonlinear least squares estimation procedures. Data from four diverse innovations are used to illustrate the procedure. 5 Tables, 1 Figure, 21 References. Modified HA

88T1153

Mastekaasa, Arne. Modellbruk, indekser og konsistenskrakterier (Models, Indices, and Consistency Criteria). Tidsskrift for samfunnsforskning 1987, 28, 2, 167-188 (NOR)

§ The relationships between theoretical concepts & empirical indicators should be explicitly stated in terms of measurement models, particularly in distinguishing between formative & reflective models. An internal consistency or interindicator criterion can be deduced from a reflective model but is irrelevant in a formative model, the criterion of external consistency, dealing with the relationships between indicators & other theoretical concepts, however, is applicable under both models. LISREL-type modeling is discussed, & it is shown that lack of clarity about model choice & the accompanying consistency criteria can have disastrous consequences. 4 Tables, 6 Figures, 29 References. Modified HA

88T1154

Norstrom, Thor (Swedish Instit Social Research U Stockholm, S-106 91). Lagged Response or Omitted Predictor: The Case of Government Popularity. Social Science Research 1987, 16, 2, June, 119-137

§ A simulation experiment is used to investigate what happens to time series model estimates when a dynamic model is specified though the true model is static (with no lagged response). Using standard methods, it is demonstrated that the omission of a slow-changing predictor generally leads to a false inference of a lagged response, & that this misspecification remains undetected by common diagnostic tests. To illustrate how these problems manifest themselves in an empirical modeling of aggregate change, a case study of the lagged effects of unemployment & inflation on government popularity (as reported in PO polls) in Sweden is reported (see L. Jonung's & E. Wadensjö's "The Effect of Unemployment, Inflation and Real Income Growth on Government Popularity in Sweden," Scandinavian Journal of Economics, 1979, 81, 344-353). Some alternative diagnostic tests & estimation procedures are suggested to overcome these methodological problems of time series analysis & Koyck models. 4 Tables, 5 Figures, 24 References. K Hyatt

88T1155

Raffalovich, Lawrence E. & Bohrnstedt, George W. (U Texas, Austin 78712). High Tech in Social Research: Reply to Zeller. Sociological Methods and Research 1987, 16, 1, Aug, 177-179

§ A reply to comments by Richard Zeller on L. Raffalovich's & G. Bohrnstedt's article "Common, Specific, and Error Variance Components for Factor Models: Estimation with Longitudinal Data" (see SA 35 4/87R6898). While the assertion that factor analyses of longitudinal data can be accomplished without computers is correct, the use of labor-saving technology in performing tedious arithmetic is defended. It is agreed that theoretical models cannot be obtained mechanically, but computer technology is necessary for the empirical application of these models in social research. F. Rasmussen

88T1156

Ruefli, Timothy W. & Wilson, Chester L. (U Texas, Austin 78705-3594). Ordinal Time Series Methodology for Industry and Competitive Analysis. Management Science 1987, 33, 5, May, 640-661

§ Ordinal time series analysis is a new methodology that is especially appropriate for industry & competitive analysis along multiple dimensions of performance over periods of time. The methodology, by using ordinal data, eliminates the requirements encountered in cardinal analysis for further assumptions & calculations concerning model specifications, appropriate discount rates, & rescaling of data to facilitate presentation. Using longitudinal data, ordinal time series analysis allows the strategy analyst to develop empirical measures of the position, volatility, direction of movement, & relative uncertainty associated with an industry or with groups of firms within that industry. Using these statistical patterns of

0200 sociology: history and theory

02 of professional interest (teaching sociology)

88T1162

Anderson, Bob & Payne, Geoff (Dept Social Science Manchester Polytechnic, M15 6BH England). Teaching Sociology in the Beginning: GCSE Social Science. ♦ Sociology. 1987, 21, 1, Feb, 115-117.

† A brief review of the recommendations of the GCSE Social Science Grade Criteria Working Party for a secondary school social science curriculum in GB. Two basic domains were recommended: understanding & analysis, concerned with knowledge, concepts, terminology, & the explanation of social phenomena; & enquiry & evaluation, concerned with methods & assessment of methods & results. Criteria were proposed for grades at several levels. W. H. Stoddard

88T1163

Bakanic, Von, McPhail, Clark & Simon, Rita J. (Dept Sociology & Anthropology U Southern Mississippi Southern Station, Hattiesburg 39406). The Manuscript Review and Decision-Making Process. AM American Sociological Review. 1987, 52, 5, Oct, 631-642.

† Peer review & editorial decision-making processes were examined for 2,337 manuscripts submitted to the American Sociological Review between 1977 & 1981. Authors' professional characteristics, manuscript characteristics, review procedures, & expert peer referees' recommendations accounted for 58+% of the variance in the editors' final decisions. However, results of a multistage path analysis reveal that authors' professional characteristics & manuscript characteristics had little overall effect in comparison with peer recommendations. Manuscripts reporting qualitative data analysis were less likely than those with quantitative methodologies to receive favorable recommendations. Averaged recommendations of peer referees & the number of revisions accounted for the most variance in the editors' final decisions, & reveal how important the manuscript review, revision, & resubmission processes are to publication in the social science literature. 1 Table, 1 Figure, 41 References. Modified HA

88T1164

Berkman, Barbara & Rutchick, Irene (School Social Work Simmons Coll, Boston MA 02215). Improving the Sensitivity of Health Professionals to the Needs of Patients and Families: An Experiment. UM Small Group Behavior. 1987, 18, 2, May, 239-253

† A comparison of two approaches to increasing sensitivity among students in the health professions—humanistic didactic coursework, & a multimodal experiential group method. Questionnaire data gathered in 1983/84 from graduate students ($N = 138$) enrolled in an interdisciplinary health professions school in Boston, Mass, were analyzed to compare levels of sensitivity between students who experienced the two different sensitivity training methods. A significant difference was found; the eclectic, multimodal training method proved to be the most effective in raising levels of sensitivity. 1 Table, 26 References. Modified HA

88T1165

Brent, Edward, Scott, James & Spencer, John (Dept Sociology U Missouri, Columbia 65211). The Use of Computers by Qualitative Researchers. UM Qualitative Sociology. 1987, 10, 3, fall, 309-313.

† A report on findings of a cross-sectional mail survey of 197 qualitative researchers active in publishing in the US, who were questioned regarding the use of computers in their work. The results suggest that widespread use of computers in qualitative research is an accomplished reality, although there is no consensus on what software to use. Almost 80% of Rs reported using computers in their research, & about 50% use computers for more than one application. Fewer than 10% of Rs feel that computers are inappropriate for their work. Qualitative researchers who report using computers generally believe that computers have been beneficial in improving the speed, quality, & ease of their work. A great majority of qualitative sociologists using computers believe computers have made them more productive. The results reflect a major transition in qualitative research as new programs & hardware make computers more useful for research tasks. 1 Table. AA

88T1166

Butler, John Sibley (Dept Sociology U Texas, Austin 78712). Social Research and Scholarly Interpretation. ♦ UM Society. 1987, 24, 2(166), Jan-Feb, 13-18

† The National Black Research Council (NBRC), formed by a group of Afro-American scholars, has called for a halt to the work of the Committee on the Status of Black Americans. Three major problems are raised by the NBRC's objections: the relationship between group membership & the production of knowledge; the validity of noncomparative research; & the structure of data interpretation for Afro-Americans as opposed to Euro-Americans. Despite valid concerns, though, the NBRC has not invalidated the idea of cooperative research by white & black scholars on the status of black Americans, indeed, white Americans have unique contributions to make, though substantial input from black scholars is needed to reduce the chances of bias (See SA 36.1 for abstracts of other articles on this subject appearing in this issue of Society.) 5 References. W. H. Stoddard

88T1167

Conyers, James E. (Dept Sociology & Social Work Indiana State U, Terre Haute 47809). Black American Doctorates in Sociology: A Follow-Up Study of Their Social and Educational Origins. Phylon. 1986, 47, 4, Dec, 303-317

† A revised version of SA 32.5/S16651/NCSA/1984/1105.

88T1168

Genov, Nikolai (Institut Sociology Bulgarian Academy Sciences, 13 ul Moskovska 1000 Sofia). Soziales Handeln und soziale Systeme (Social Action and Social Systems). ♦ Wissenschaftliche Zeitschrift der Karl Marx Universität Leipzig, Gesellschaftswissenschaftliche Reihe. 1985, 34, 1, 68-71. (GER)

† A report on the international conference held 22-24 Sept 1983 in Varna, Bulgaria, on "Social Action and Social Systems," organized by the International Varna Sociological School & dedicated to Karl Marx. Papers presented by sociologists from Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, Canada, the German Democratic Republic, the Federal Republic of Germany, Sweden, the USSR, the US, & the UK on the following topics are examined: the characteristics of social action; the determinants of social action & their relative importance; the types of social action & social systems effective at different levels of social reality under specific historical conditions, & the mechanisms of emergence of new forms of social action & social systems. It is stressed that the different concepts of social action & social systems should be considered in terms of sociological descriptions, explanations, & prognostications. The utilization of empirical research is also discussed. Modified AA

88T1169

Gorbachev, Mikhail S., Rech' tovarishcha M. S. Gorbacheva na Vsesoyuznom soveshchani zaveduyushchikh kafedrami obshchestvennykh nauk (A Speech by M. Gorbachev at the All-Union Conference of the Heads of Social Sciences Departments on 1 October 1986). Filosofskie Nauki. 1987, 30, 1, 3-7. (RUS)

† USSR U social science department chairpersons are encouraged to work toward the goals of the current economic restructuring program. Reform efforts cannot succeed without activating the ideological & theoretical contributions of the social sciences. In order to achieve qualitative improvements in all areas of life, & to meet the demands of the quickly approaching twenty-first century, social scientists must provide accurate analyses of social problems. Special attention must be given to ways to educate youth to think independently & creatively. G. Prostakov

88T1170

Hernádi, Miklós. Kandidátusi értekezésének vitája (Viva Voce for a Candidate's Degree). Szociológia. 1982, 2, 301-303. (HUN)

† Abstract not currently available.

88T1171

Kulcsár, Kálmán. Társadalom, tudomány, politika (Report on the World Congress of Sociology: A Summary Review). Szociológia. 1982, 4, 493-502. (HUN)

NEW ZEALAND SOCIOLOGY

NOVEMBER 1987

Volume 2. No. 2

Contributing Editors:

Charles Crothers, Rosemary Novitz, David Pearson, Pat Day

CONTENTS

Articles

- Nash, R. Who Gets a Choice? Some Problems with the Cultural Studies Imported from Birmingham
Taylor, I. Retrieval and Reconstruction: A Sense of Purpose for the Social Sciences in the 1980's
Hill, M. The Cult of Humanity and the Secret Religion of the Educated Classes
Openshaw, R. 'Saving the Windows' Reactions to the Queen Street Riot, 1984

Review Essays

- David Pearson, Questions of Mobility.
Paul Green, Positivism and Enlightenment as Projects

Reviews

- Corson, D. The Lexical Bar. Reviewed by Roy Nash.
Reply by David Corson
Robson, J.L. Sacred Cows and Rogue Elephants. Reviewed by Greg Newbold Spoonley, P. The Politics of Nostalgia. Reviewed by John Pratt.
Shuker, R. The One Best System. Reviewed by David McKenzie

Rates (NZ$) $12.00 for individuals
 $20.00 for institutions
 (add $5.00 postage for destinations outside NZ).

Send subscriptions with your mailing address to:

NZ Sociology (subs)
Department of Sociology
Massey University
Palmerston North
New Zealand.

Subscribe now to Volume 3 (1988)

88T1181

Tarullo, Glenn Martin (New York U, NY 10003). Evaluating an Innovative Method of Teaching Sociology and the Social Supports or Obstacles Affecting Its Adoption. * Dissertation Abstracts International, A: The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 47, 12(1), June, 4514-A.

Available from UMI, Ann Arbor MI. Order No. DA8706789.

88T1182

—, Ferge Zsuzsa magy doktori értekezésének vitájáról (Zsuzsa Ferge's Discussion on the Degree of Academician). Szociológia, 1982, 3, 475-477 (HUN)

† Abstract not currently available.

88T1183

—, Vere Stein Erlich: biografijska i bibliografska (Vera Stein Erlich. Biography and Bibliography). Revija za Sociologiju, 1984, 14, 3-4, July-Dec, 339-342. (SCR)

† A bibliography & short biographical sketch are given for the Yugoslav sociologist Vera Stein Erlich (1897-1980), who did undergraduate work at the U of Belgrade (Yugoslavia) & the U of Berlin (Germany); Erlich obtained a doctorate from the U of California, Berkeley, in 1952. Fifty-seven titles are given in English, German, Italian, & Serbo-Croatian. M Meeks

06 history & present state of sociology

88T1184

Abrams, Philip (U Durham, DH1 3HP England). History, Sociology, Historical Sociology, Past and Present, 1980, 87, May, 3-16

† A convergence of the narrative & sociology in the presentation of history is discussed. A general consensus has been reached by scholars in both fields regarding how to explain the human social world in terms of the processes of social structuring. The problem of human agency is also addressed in sociology, this has resulted in the coexistence of a sociology of action & of system, whereas in history, it has produced a polarization of science & narrative as images of sound historical method. Recently, both sociologists & historians have begun to reconstitute the problem of agency in new & somewhat less polarized terms. The realization that the analysis of structuring demands a dialogue between theory & narrative has contributed to the development of a common rhetoric. The development of a new historical sociology is suggested. K. Hyatt

88T1185

Afrić, Vjekoslav. Teorijske osnove hermeneutike (A Theoretical Grounds of Hermeneutics). Revija za Sociologiju, 1984, 14, 3-4, July-Dec, 191-200 (SCR)

† The classical problem of how to define the subject & methods of sociology is discussed from the points of view of Max Adler, Wilhelm Dilthey, Georg Simmel, Max Weber, & others. Consideration of Jürgen Habermas's Zur Logik der Wissenschaften (The Logic of the Social Sciences, 1970) shows that his judgment of instrumental & hermeneutical use of mind explains why hermeneutics is being increasingly used in modern sociology. Modified HA

88T1186

Apter, David E. (Yale U, New Haven CT 06520). Review Essay: Parsons's Politics. American Journal of Sociology, 1987, 93, 2, Sept, 451-456

† A review essay on William Buxton's Talcott Parsons and the Capitalist Nation-State (Toronto: U of Toronto Press, 1985 [see listing in IRPS No. 41]). Buxton suggests that the current revival of interest in Parsons is a result of his successful conversion of historical sociology's pedigree into a reasoned argument for liberal pluralism. In fact, Parsons's appeal is more complex than that, & derives from the multiple aspects of functionalism & structuralism, among which Buxton fails to distinguish clearly. Buxton provides an excellent treatment of Parsons's relationship to other theorists, but does not distinguish between the diverse ideas of power found in his early & late writings. Finally, Buxton does not account for Parsons's appeal to the contemporary Left, which can best be explained in terms of his concern with communicative & symbolic levels of politics. W. H. Stoddard

88T1187

Armer, J. Michael (Dept Sociology Florida State U, Tallahassee 32306). Provincialism and Internationalism in Contemporary American Sociology. International Sociology, 1987, 2, 3, Sept, 315-324.

† The relative degree of culture-boundedness in mainline US sociological research in 1985 is compared with that in British research at the same time & in US research two decades earlier, based on an examination of all substantive publications in the 1985 & 1965 volumes of American Sociological Review & American Journal of Sociology & the 1985 volumes of Sociology & The British Journal of Sociology. Culture-boundedness is defined in terms of two dimensions: (1) the extent to which data are included from societies other than the local society (non-localism), & (2) the extent to which the possibilities of international influence & of variations in other societies are acknowledged (conditionalism). Cross-classification of dichotomies of these dimensions yields four types of research: provincialist (local, unconditional), contextualist (local conditional), generalist (nonlocal, unconditional) & internationalist (nonlocal, conditional). Results indicate almost twice as much provincialist research in the US as in the UK, & little reduction in US sociology provincialism since 1965. The implications of these findings & the importance of incorporating international data & perspectives in sociological research are discussed. 2 Tables, 1 Diagram, 15 References. Modified HA

88T1188

Bauman, Zygmunt (Dept Sociology U Leeds, LS2 9JT England). The Philosopher in the Age of Noise: A Reading of Richard J. Bernstein's Philosophical Profiles. ♦ Theory, Culture & Society, 1987, 4, 1, Feb, 157-165

† Richard Bernstein's Philosophical Profiles: Essays in a Pragmatic Mode (Cambridge: Polity Press, 1985) focuses on the fundamental revision or rejection of Cartesian-Lockean-Kantian canon in philosophy by contemporary philosophers, especially Jürgen Habermas, Hans-Georg Gadamer, & Rorty. The text can be read, sociologically, as an articulation of the passage from modernity to postmodernity, i.e. the dissipation of certainties that underlay the first, & reconciliation to an irreducible pluralism of discourses that characterizes the second. That passage, in its turn, can be understood in the context of the collapse, or restructuring, of the inter- & innersocietal hierarchies of power, & consequently of the hegemonic, proselytizing hopes & ambitions of superior cultures & their intellectual formulators & carriers. 2 References. AA

88T1189

Bazzanella, Andrea (U Padua, I-35100 Italy). Roberto Michels e il fascismo/Robert Michels und der Faschismus (Roberto Michels and Fascism). Annali di Sociologia/Soziologisches Jahrbuch, 1986, 2(1), 212-216, 217-222. (MUL)

Translated by Silvano Montel & Adriana Ammassari.

† A review of Roberto Michels's L'imperialismo italiano (Italian Imperialism) [publication details not given]—a collection of articles written at the time of Italy's war in Libya—traces Michels's increasing acceptance of Italian nationalism. This helps elucidate how a former leftist & supporter of the radical workers' movement could eventually become a propagandist for the Mussolini regime. Max Weber was the most important early influence on Michels's thinking. However, when Michels moved to Switzerland to escape the turmoil of the war years, he lost touch with Weber & associated more closely with Vilfredo Pareto, who influenced his development of a "new theory of the elite." In Michels's ideology, a concern for national unity came to predominate over the idea of SC solidarity; he hoped for a new organization of production & a "third way" between liberalism & socialism. He also reacted to Mussolini's charisma as a leader. C. Waters

88T1190

Bergmann, Werner (Zentrum Antisemitismusforschung Technische U Berlin, D-1000 12 Federal Republic Germany). Zu viel Welt, zu wenig Zeit (Too Much World, Too Little Time). Soziologische Revue, 1987, 10, 2, Apr, 143-148. (GER)

† An essay on Hans Blumenberg's Lebenszeit und Weltzeit (Time of Life and Time of the World), Frankfurt: Suhrkamp, 1986) (see listing in

Abstract not currently available

1871172

Lamanna, Mary Ann, Miller, Baila & Moore, Helen (Dept Sociology & Anthropology U. Nebraska, Omaha 68182). Women Sociologists in the Midwest: A Status Update. In The Sociological Quarterly. 1987, 28, 3, Sept, 423-435

An earlier study (see SA 29.5/811.7954) of the status of academic women sociologists in the Midwest is extended to 1984/85. Type of appointment, rank, & chairpersons, as well as position in a PhD rather than a MA program, were used as indicators of employment status. Midwest Sociological Society (MSS) leadership positions & participation in the annual MSS meeting served as indicators of professional participation. Data obtained from the American Sociological Assoc. Guide to Graduate Departments, Directory of Departments, & from MSS annual meeting programs show that gains in employment status for women slowed in the 1980s. Employment of women in sociology department positions, especially in full-time positions & higher ranks, continued to lag behind the proportion of women PhDs in the field. Women were overrepresented in the secondary labor market of part-time employment. However, women are now almost as likely to be employed in PhD as well as MA programs. While gains in employment status generally slowed, professional participation has accelerated in recent years. Possible explanations for the differential penetrability of the two realms are offered. The appropriateness of statistical parity as a standard for evaluating equality in academic employment also is discussed. It is proposed that structural barriers to employment equity for women may not be more significant than direct discrimination. 6 Tables, 38 References. HA

1871173

Lewis, J. (Open U, Milton Keynes MK7 6AA England). Flexibility in Graduate Careers: An Exploratory Study. The Work Careers of a Sample of 1970 Graduates. * Dissertation Abstracts International (European Abstracts). 1987, 48, 1, spring, 60
Unavailable from UMI; contact the degree-granting university.

1871174

Lotz, Manfred (Institut Marxistisch-leninistische Soziologie Akademie Gesellschaftswissenschaften, Johannes-Dieckmann-Str. 19-23 1086 Berlin Federal Republic Germany). XI. Weltkongress für Soziologie (Eleventh World Congress for Sociology). Deutsche Zeitschrift für Philosophie. 1987, 35, 2, 155-159 (GER)
A report on the Eleventh World Congress of the International Sociological Assoc (ISA) in Aug 1986 in New Delhi, India. Some aspects not include: (1) the treatment of peace & militarization as a central issue, (2) the appropriateness of the site for a discussion of underdevelopment, (3) differences of opinion between scientists from socialist & capitalist countries on the issue of science & technology, & (4) an increase in theoretical contributions & in the theoretical eclecticism of non-Marxist sociologists. Some remarks are made on the reception of Marxist sociology this & other World Congresses. J. Anderson

1871175

Volkenkopf, Heidrun, Mannheimer Soziologen, Jahrgang 1980/81 bis 1985: Beruflicher Werdegang und Erfahrungen (Mannheim Sociologists, Class of 1980/81 through 1985 Occupational Development and Experience). Soziologie. 1987, 2, Oct, 185-199 (GER)
Students graduating in sociology from the U of Mannheim (Federal Republic of Germany) during 1981-1985 were surveyed by means of questionnaires (N = 106) with regard to their postgraduate career history. Data were analyzed to determine the influence of minor subject, grades, & gender on employment prospects immediately after graduation & at the time of the survey. Practical experience & personal conditions acquired during U study were decisive in determining the type of employment. The most important factor in acquiring a position commensurate with one's degree was gender, which increased in importance as the final grade was lower. Results probably overestimate job-finding success of graduates, because of selection of respondents. J. Anderson

1871176

Wasserman, O. (Inforsk Dept Sociology Umeå U, S-901 87 Sweden). Scandinavian Social Science in International Journals. ♦ Social Science Information Studies. 1985, 5, 4, Oct, 185-190.
A publication of articles by Scandinavian social scientists is analyzed in the Social Science Citation Index (SSCI). An online search in SSCI revealed a stagnation of article production from the Scandinavian countries during the late 1970s, which may be due to an increase of applied research, financed by nontraditional research councils. The field of economics produced the largest number of articles in non-Scandinavian journals. A tendency is also noted that Scandinavian journals, even when they are in English, are mainly cited by other Nordic periodicals. It is concluded that measures should be taken to stimulate basic research & international diffusion of Scandinavian social science research. 2 Tables, 1 Figure, 6 References. Modified HA

1871177

Savelyev, V. N. & Shcherbinin, V. A., Vsesoyuznoe soveshchanie zaveduyushchikh kafedrami obshchestvennykh nauk (The All-Union Conference of University Social Science Department Chairpersons). Filosofskie Nauki. 1987, 30, 2, 3-13 (RUS)

† The All-Union Conference of Social Science Department Chairpersons was held 1-6 Oct 1986 in Moscow. Current efforts to accelerate & restructure the USSR economy are dependent on the theoretical contributions of social scientists. The opening speech was given by M. S. Gorbachev (see abstract in this section). Contributions were made by G. A. Yagodin, P. N. Fedoseev, S. T. Melyukhin, R. G. Ter-Vartanov, D. K. Kshibekov, V. S. Semenov, V. I. Zorin, V. I. Mishin, V. P. Tyshchenko, V. E. Davidovich, U. F. Suna, B. N. Korolev, V. G. Marakhov, N. I. Lapin, K. N. Lyubutin, I. F. Nadol'nyy, V. M. Figurovskaya, V. T. Efimov, B. F. Lomov, M. T. Iovchuk, O. S. Ternovoy, M. P. Novikov, A. D. Kosichev, B. I. Lutidze, V. S. Gott, G. G. Kvasov, V. I. Zubarev, & M. V. Zimyanin. G. Prostakov

1871178

Skipper, James K., Jr., deWolf, Peggy L. & Dudley, Charles J. (Dept Sociology U North Carolina, Greensboro 27412). Sex Differences in Sociology Specializations, 1975-1985: Women's Liberation to Ghetto Specialization. In Sociological Focus. 1987, 20, 3, Aug, 185-194

† An investigation of how the increased activities of the women's movement within US sociology have contributed to the achievement of parity between M & F sociologists regarding their representation in various subspecializations. Gender differences in first-cited specialty areas were examined using data for all women & a 1/5 random sample of men (2N = 2,184) from the American Sociology Assoc's Guide to Graduate Departments for 1975, 1980, & 1985. Comparison of 19 categories of specialty area reveal the existence of a DoFL by gender that appears to be increasing. Gender studies has become a nearly exclusively F subspeciality, coupled with the steadily weakening r between specialty areas for Ms & Fs & the decline of Fs in the core areas of methods & theory, this suggests an increasing ghettoization of F sociologists. Implications for the future of the discipline are discussed & suggestions are offered for further research. 2 Tables, 25 References. Modified HA

1871179

Stepin, V. S. (Byelorussian V. I. Lenin State U, Minsk USSR). Problemy podgotovki obshchestvenno-nauchnykh kadrov (Problems of the Training of Specialists in the Social Sciences). Filosofskie Nauki. 1987, 30, 2, 21-24. (RUS)

† The poor quality of teaching in many USSR U social science departments is leading to negative social consequences on both ideological & moral levels. Poorly prepared teachers do little to encourage quality work in their students. Retraining & continuing education for teachers is essential to maintain high standards. Specifically, more attention must be given to improving the quality of research projects. G. Prostakov

1871180

Stigler, Stephen M. (Dept Statistics U Chicago, IL 60637). Precise Measurement in the Face of Error: A Comment on MacRoberts and MacRoberts. Social Studies of Science. 1987, 17, 2, May, 332-334.

Reply, 334-336

† A comment on a recent article discussing the use of citations as a measure of influence, by M. H. MacRoberts & B. R. MacRoberts (see SA 35.2/87R4545). It is argued that the study errs in two important respects: (1) in implying that in the presence of error it is impossible to measure precisely, & (2) in implicitly taking as the goal of citation studies the measurement of an absolute rather than a relative level of influence. In Measurement in the Face of Universal Uncertainty: A Reply to Stigler, M. H. MacRoberts & B. R. MacRoberts find Stigler's comments irrelevant to the situation they addressed, that of universal uncertainty. F. Rasmussen

88T1200

Demarchi, Franco. Rievocando con Roberto Michels le vicende della sociologia di cinquant'anni or sono: 1936/Rückblick auf die Soziologie vor fünfzig Jahren im Gedenken an Robert Michels (1936) (Roberto Michels and the Sociology of Fifty Years Ago (1936)). Annali di Sociologia/Sociologisches Jahrbuch, 1986, 2(1), 15-37, 38-63.

Translated by Günter Diegans.

† On the fiftieth anniversary of the death of Roberto Michels, (1876-1936), a retrospective review of his work examines his role in sociological thought & in the history of European society in the years between WWI & WWII. His contribution to Italian sociology is emphasized: Michels was the only Italian sociologist of stature during the fascist period. The most important early influence on Michels's work was that of Max Weber. Michels's main achievements were in the study of political parties & of the nature of democracy. While Michels's own political affiliation shifted, in the later part of his life, from socialism to fascism, he continued to try to understand the relationships between democracy, oligarchy, & charismatic leadership. C. Waters

88T1201

Destrieri, Luigi Del Grosso (U. Trento, I-38100 Italy). Patriottismo e canzoni nazionali in Michels/Patriotismus und Nationallieder bei Michels (Patriotism and National Songs in Michels's Work). Annali di Sociologia/Sociologisches Jahrbuch, 1986, 2(1), 230-233, 234-237. (MUL)

Translated by Ralph Raschen.

† An examination of Roberto Michels's "La sociologia delle canzoni nazionali" (The Sociology of National Songs), which is the fourth & final part of his book Prolegomena sul patriottismo (Prologue on Patriotism) (Florence: La Nuova Italia, 1933). Michels worked on this book from 1915 to 1928. The theme of this chapter is the role of national songs in this sentiment of patriotism. It demonstrates wide research & heterogeneous sources. However, Michels's concept of "purely musical effect" is not defined. The distinctions between linguistic & musical elements & between popular music & other forms of music (eg. opera) are blurred. The main problem of the sociology of music remains unanswered: that of the relationship between subject content & purely musical aspects. C. Waters

88T1202

Dykema, Eugene R. (Calvin Coll, Grand Rapids MI 49506). No View without a Viewpoint: Gunnar Myrdal, in World Development, 1986, 14, 2, Feb., 147-163.

† Gunnar Myrdal's approach to development economics is the result of a lifetime of wrestling with the role of values in social theory; he went from a wertfrei (value-free) to a value permeation view of proper theory. His methodological position, which would now be called that of theory- & value-ladenness, appears to have predated a good deal of the philosophy of science's consideration of these issues. In addition, his search for a theory of adequate scope to do justice to real development problems led to a holistic model that crosses disciplinary boundaries. As an institutionalist, he views society from the postulate of circular causation of a system of conditions, likely to lead to cumulative effects. 1 Figure, 26 References. HA

88T1203

Eisenstadt, S. N. (Hebrew U. Jerusalem, Mount Scopus Israel). Il contributo di Martin Buber all'analisi sociologica (Martin Buber's Contribution to Sociological Analysis). Studi di Sociologia, 1986, 24, 2, Apr.-June, 229-238. (ITA)

Translated by Lucia Boccaccia.

† The aspects of Martin Buber's sociological thinking strictly connected with the main issues of modern, social, theoretical, & empirical philosophy are chiefly concerned with understanding the phenomena typical of social & cultural innovation, creativity, & renewal. An investigation of these aspects defines the typical conservative culture of society. In this framework, Buber's concept of culture appears fundamental, ie. culture is understood as a style of living, not as an ideological system. Modified HA

88T1204

Fedoseyev, Petr Nikolaevich (Soviet Academy Sciences, Leninsky Prospekt 14 Moscow V-71). O perestroyke raboty v oblasti obshchestvennykh nauk (On the Restructuring of Labor in the Sphere of Social Sciences). Voprosy filosofii, 1987, 41, 5, May, 3-25. (RUS)

† Current USSR economic reform efforts are dependant on changes in PO on a variety of social & economic issues. Outmoded forms of economic management & lifestyles, along with old dogmas & stereotypes, must be replaced by fresh outlooks more in tune with new plans for development. The historical fate of the nation & the prestige of socialism abroad depend on the USSR's ability to utilize new scientific knowledge & improve the efficiency & quality of all spheres of economic production. Levels of education, culture, & national welfare must improve. To achieve these goals, improvements in social science education are necessary; narrow, doctrinaire formulas for social development should be avoided. G. Prostakov

88T1205

Fresco, Louise O. (Vakgroep Tropische Plantenteelt Landbouw-U, NL-6700 HB Wageningen Netherlands). Hoe viricentristisch is de klassieke antropologie eigenlijk? (Is Classical Anthropology "Viricentric"?). ♦ Sociologische Gids, 1987, 34, 4, July-Aug., 271-278. (DUT)

† Feminists claim that classical anthropology is fundamentally viricentric—focused on M thought & behavior, tending to overlook women or misrepresent them as passive & dependent—and indeed, that women have only been visible in the literature since the 1970s. This claim is assessed through a review of well-known studies in classical anthropology between 1939 & 1956. Several authors not only examine women's domestic roles in detail but emphasize their productive & political contributions & provide quantitative assessments of their labor inputs. Further, they do not suggest in any way that culture is a M product or limit themselves to M Rs. Although M examples of viricism can be found in the colonial literature, it cannot be claimed that classical anthropology as a whole is viricentric. 9 References. Modified HA

88T1206

Freund, Wolfgang S., Zur Berg- und Talfahrt der Sozialwissenschaften in Deutschland (On the Ups and Downs of the Social Sciences in Germany). Soziologie, 1987, 2, Oct., 134-167. (GER)

† Reflections on the history & current state of West German sociology. Its poor public image is traced to emigration & collaboration in the Nazi period. The exclusion of sociologists from planning during the 1950s "economic miracle" has resulted in serious problems in Ur structures & quality of life, as has the government's exclusive focus on statistical research. The contributions of Arnold Bergstraesser & René König to German sociology are recounted at length. Growth & decline in sociology are linked to government movement to the Left or Right, respectively. A reversal in its fortunes since the 1970s is indicated in the declining job prospects of students & the increasing distance of professionals from relevant research. Current social problems give sociologists plenty to do, but their unwillingness to do any more about them than was done before 1933 is considered alarming. 16 References. J. Anderson

88T1207

Gareau, Frederick H. (Florida State U., Tallahassee 32306). The Third World Revolt against First World Social Sciences: An Explication Suggested by the Revolutionary Pedagogy of Paulo Freire. International Journal of Comparative Sociology, 1986, 27, 3-4, Sept.-Dec., 172-189.

† An examination of the process whereby the Third World indigenizes the social sciences, rejecting paradigms from the First World & formulating its own "authentic" ones. An analogy is drawn between the form & content of this process & that of Brazilian educator Paulo Freire's revolutionary/liberation pedagogy (Educação Como Prática da Liberdade (Education as the Practice of Liberty), São Paulo, Brazil: Paz e terra, 1985). In the Third World, indigenization is seen as part & parcel of the struggle for decolonization, from both colonial & neocolonial structures. First World scientists & educators must be made aware that the paradigms which they view as international reference models, valued for their intrinsic scientific worth, are seen by the Third World as part of the neocolonialist postwar extension of the US & rejected in favor of "authentic" indigenous models (eg. Latin America's formulation of dependency theory). This development bodes ill for the naturalist's dream of an emerging consensual, mature social science paralleling natural science. 26 References. Modified HA

88T1208

Hare, A. Paul (Ben-Gurion U. Negev, Beersheva 84120 Israel). Moreno's Contribution to Social Psychology. Journal of Group Psychotherapy, Psychodrama and Sociometry, 1986, 39, 3, fall, 85-128.

† An examination of Jacob Levy Moreno's contributions to social psy-

IRPS No. 41). Blumenberg is concerned with the concept of Lebenswelt (the world of daily life). Phenomenologically, history is viewed as 'suffering from time', i.e. history separates expectation & experience, & creates an awareness in the individual that time is limited. Blumenberg's book discusses the world of daily life, the awareness of time, & its origins. Although this work may be criticized for its polyhistoricism, the book stimulates by placing the contemporary & the self-evident into a broader perspective, forcing the reader to see new angles in the familiar. M. Maxfield

88T1191

Benoard, Philippe (CNRS GEMAS, 54 Blvd Raspail F-75006 Paris France), Lettres de Emile Durkheim a Henri Hubert (Letters from Emile Durkheim to Henri Hubert), Revue française de Sociologie, 1987, 28, 3, July-Sept., 483-534. (FRE)

A series of 62 letters or extracts of letters written by Emile Durkheim to Henri Hubert in 1897-1917 are reproduced. These form the core of a collection of 89 letters recently rediscovered by Hubert's sons. Hubert was a collaborator of Marcel Mauss, Durkheim's nephew. Many of the letters discuss L'Année sociologique, the journal of the Durkheimian group. An introduction briefly outlines the main topics of interest in the letters. C. Waters

88T1192

Bosozzi, Elena (Dept Sociology Catholic U Sacred Heart, I-20123 Milan Italy), La circolarità teoria e ricerca empirica: il contributo di R. K. Merton (The Circularity between Theory and Empirical Research: The Contribution of R. K. Merton), Studi di Sociologia, 1986, 24, 3-4, July-Dec., 442-464. (ITA)

The relationship between social theory & empirical research is examined in light of Robert K. Merton's work. Using Merton's theory of reference groups as an example, the close link & mutual influence between theory & empirical research is described. It is hypothesized that the easier this link is, the easier it is to solve the micro-macro dichotomy. Modified HA

88T1193

Blate, Marlon (Dept Sociology Frindale Coll U Toronto, Mississauga Ontario L5L 1C6), Biologists on Sociocultural Evolution: A Critical Analysis, Sociological Theory, 1987, 5, 2, fall, 185-193

An examination of four theoretical monographs, written by biologists the wake of the sociobiology debate, that treat (or purport to treat) the pic of socioculture evolution, biological theory of sociocultural evolution. (1) Robert Boyd's & Peter J. Richerson's Culture & the Evolutionary Process (Chicago: U of Chicago Press, 1985), (2) L. L. Cavalli-Sforza's & M. W. Feldman's Cultural Transmission and Evolution: A tentative Approach (Princeton, NJ: Princeton U Press, 1981), (3) Charles J. Lumsden's & E. O. Wilson's Genes, Mind and Culture: The evolutionary Process (Cambridge, Mass: Harvard U Press, 1981); & (4) Robert Trivers's Social Evolution (Menlo Park, Calif: The Benjamin/Cummings Publishing Co, Inc, 1985). Boyd's & Richerson's dual inheritance model emphasizes the biological evolution of the capacity for culture rather than a genuine gene/culture coevolution. Cavalli-Sforza's Feldman's work represents a major advance in theorizing mathematically about social change. Trivers offers a comprehensive textbook of sociology that describes the biological evolution of social behavior & organization, primarily among nonhuman species, but lacks coverage of social evolution. Lumsden & Wilson offer a definition of coevolution that differs from the one traditionally used by biologists, characterized by symmetry between the role of genes & of culture, due to the lack of a sociocultural analogue to the evolutionary concept of fitness/selection: relationship between contemporary evolutionary & nonevolutionary theories of social change—which these works do not address—is briefly summarized. 21 References. Modified HA

88T1194

Boss, Andreas (U Sainte-Anne, Church Pointe Nova Scotia B0W 1M0), Introductory Comments on Max Weber's Essays on India and China, International Sociology, 1987, 2, 3, Sept., 271-276

Max Weber's essays on India & China are considered in relation to his work on the relation between Protestantism & capitalism & as control for the Weber thesis regarding the formation of the Protestant Ethic. Certain similar notions in these essays are explored, including: (1) differentiation between a system & its spirit (Geist), & (2) the difference between ethical theories & the creation of psychological sanctions (smia) within religious & institutional contexts. The ethnocentrism of Weber's approach is considered, along with the value of his comparative approach to Asian scholars. 10 References. K. Hyatt

88T1195

Čaldarević, Ognjen (U Zagreb, 41000 Yugoslavia), Kvalitativna metodologija etičke sociološke škole (Qualitative Methodology of the Chicago School of Sociology), Revija za Sociologiju, 1984, 14, 3-4, July-Dec., 215-224. (SCR)

† The Chicago school of sociology is known for its methodology & Ur orientation. The school's main epistemological emphasis on qualitative methodology is demonstrated in an analysis of W. I. Thomas's & Florian Znaniecki's The Polish Peasant in Europe and America: Monograph of an Immigrant (Boston: Richard G. Baldy, 1938 [see SA 8:1/606904]) & Robert S. Lynd's & Helen M. Lynd's Middletown in Transition: A Study in Cultural Conflict (New York: Harcourt, Brace, & Co, 1937). The necessary unity of both quantitative & qualitative approaches in sociological research is stressed. 13 References. Modified HA

88T1196

Calhoun, Craig (U North Carolina, Chapel Hill 27514), History and Sociology in Britain, Comparative Studies in Society and History, 1987, 29, 3, July, 615-625

† A review essay on Practice and Progress: British Sociology, 1950-1980 (Abrams, Philip, Deem, Rosemary, Finch, Janet, & Rock, Paul [Eds], London: George Allen & Unwin, 1981), & Philip Abrams's Historical Sociology (Ithaca, NY: Cornell U Press, 1982 [see listings in IRPS No. 41]). In GB, in contrast to the US, most practitioners of historical sociology call themselves historians. British sociology has been strongly influenced by British social anthropology, continental social theory, & US empirical sociology, theoretical work has predominated over research. These two books demonstrate this problem, while also suggesting some directions that might be taken in efforts to resolve it. W. H. Stoddard

88T1197

Cesareo, Vincenzo (Dept Sociology Catholic U Sacred Heart, I-20123 Milan Italy), Alcuni problemi di contenuto e di metodo nella polarità micro-macro (Some Issues Concerning Content and Methodology in Micro-Macro Polarity), Studi di Sociologia, 1986, 24, 3-4, July-Dec., 404-415. (ITA)

† The polarity between micro- & macrosociology leads to different interpretations of some basic sociological concepts, eg. "role" & "social order." Macro theories tend to define role as a normative imposition, while micro theories consider it the product of negotiation among individual actors. Social order represents an objectively central element in macro theories, but a subjectively marginal one according to micro theories. In concrete phenomena, macro & micro dimensions are often interwoven, & such conceptual contrapositions can produce complementarity. Sociological analysis must make every effort to identify not only the differences but also the problematic links between micro- & macrosociology. Modified HA

88T1198

Chapoulie, Jean-Michel (Centre recherches socio-historiques education U Paris VIII, 93526 Saint Denis Cedex 02 France), Everett C. Hughes and the Development of Fieldwork in Sociology, Urban Life, 1986-87, 15, 3-4, Oct-Jan., 259-298.

† An adaptation of an article that originally appeared in French in the Revue Française de Sociologie (1984, 25, 4, 582-608, see SA 33:3/8507689).

88T1199

Cortellazzi, Silvia & Piccoli, Italo (Dept Sociology Catholic U Sacred Heart, I-20123 Milan Italy), Nella prospettiva micro: la proposta etnometodologica (The Micro Perspective: The Ethnomethodological Approach), Studi di Sociologia, 1986, 24, 3-4, July-Dec., 374-403. (ITA)

† Among the various trends in contemporary sociology, ethnomethodology represents a meaningful & important approach, particularly for its epistemological implications. The objective of ethnomethodology is to explore & analyze the meaning of daily actions, as they are experienced & interpreted by all members of society, using the methods & practices of so-called microsociology. The epistemological implications & cultural & philosophical references of ethnomethodology are examined. The basic concepts, research techniques, & main achievements of this discipline are critically described. Modified HA

88T1217

MacCannell, Dean (Dept Community Studies U California, Davis 95616), Semiotics and Sociology, Semiotica, 1986, 61, 3-4, 193-200.

† Current upheavals in society & in academics have brought about the imminent loss by sociology of much of its former influence. Domains such as SC, social relations, & communication are now largely covered by those in English, ethnics studies, & other fields. The isolation of sociology derives at least in part from a reluctance to be involved with interdisciplinary approaches. It is argued that semiotics provides a logical basis for rebuilding the foundation of modern sociology, since both focus on human communication & relationships. Issues that might be addressed by a revitalized sociology/semiotics include research on the relationship between social values & linguistic value; model construction; semiotic properties of social rituals; & development of new research methods. B. Annesser Murray

88T1218

Mertens, Lothar, Die personelle Enthauptung der deutschen Soziologie. Ein Nachtrag zur soziologischen Emigration nach 1933 (The Personal Decapitation of German Sociology. A Postscript to Sociological Emigration after 1933), Soziologie, 1987, 2, Oct, 120-133. (GER)

† Some collective characteristics of 66 German sociologists who emigrated between 1933 & 1945 are reviewed. Aspects discussed include religion, family background, place of birth, school from which doctorate received, position attained before emigration, year of emigration, destination, & time of reimmigration. Those who returned to West Germany are found to have been generally older than those who remained abroad. 7 Tables. J. Anderson

88T1219

Mongardini, Carlo (Faculty Political Science U Rome, I-00100 Italy), L'opera di Roberto Michels e la sociologia italiana/Das Werk von Roberto Michels und die italienische Soziologie (The Work of Roberto Michels and Italian Sociology), Annali di Sociologia/Sociologisches Jahrbuch, 1986, 2(1), 73-84, 85-98. (MUL)

Translated by Meike Behrmann.

† The sociological work of Roberto Michels was quite crushed by his most famous book on political parties & his formula of the "iron law of oligarchy." The interpretation of political scientists neglected the sociological basis of Michels's thoughts on political parties, which were intended to be only an example of the application of the central problematic of Michels's sociology: the processes of organization (or structuration) of collective life. A global reexamination of Michels's sociology is recommended. Modified AA

88T1220

Morel, Julius (Innsbruck U, A-6020 Austria), Die Aufgaben der Kultursoziologie-oder Kultur, Aufgabe der Soziologie/I compiti della sociologia della cultura-oppure cultura, compito della sociologia (The Tasks of the Sociology of Culture-or Culture, the Task of Sociology), Annali di Sociologia/Sociologisches Jahrbuch, 1986, 2(1), 97-107, 108-118. (MUL)

Translated by Silvano Montel.

† It is necessary to be able to define the specific contribution of sociology in the interdisciplinary elucidation of social phenomena. The proper task of sociology is the study not only of social structures but also of culture, understood as a typical, identifiable, total system of values & norms in a society. Culture, thus defined, is absolutely essential—either directly or as an intervening variable—in explaining complex social phenomena. If culture is taken as the central perspective of sociology, it also makes possible a meaningful systematization of the basic concepts, theories, & methods of sociology. A science that is so structured should be able to solve two problems: (1) The social as a normative system raises the question of freedom. (2) The study of temporally & laterally typically different systems of values & norms in the interest of capacity for action should not lead to totally relativized consciousness. AA Tr by C. Waters

88T1221

Morra, Gianfranco (U Bologna, I-40126 Italy), Scheler e Troeltsch sociologi per rassegnazione/Scheler und Troeltsch als Resignationssoziologen (Scheler and Troeltsch as Sociologists of Resignation), Annali di Sociologia/Sociologisches Jahrbuch, 1986, 2(1), 49-58, 59-69. (MUL)

Translated by Claudia Manica.

† The intellectual dialogue between Max Scheler & Ernst Troeltsch, which lasted from 1910 until the deaths of both in the 1920s, is traced in their works. Scheler, in his attempt to refute Friedrich Nietzsche's theory of the genealogy of morals, drew on the works of W. Sombart, Max Weber, & especially Troeltsch. From Troeltsch's work, Scheler gained insights into the nature of Christianity. In turn, Troeltsch made use of Scheler's original ideas on Sympathie (liking) & Formalismus (formalism in ethics). Both thinkers made a moral appeal against Nietzsche's idea of the "growing desert," which the horrors of WWI seemed to substantiate, but both failed to avoid the anthropocentrism that is linked with the development of nihilism. C. Waters

88T1222

Morrison, Rodney J. (Wellesley Coll, MA 02181), Henry C. Carey and American Economic Development, Transactions of the American Philosophical Society, 1986, 76, 3, 1-91.

† Henry Charles Carey (1793-1879) is a significant figure in the history of economic thought in the US as one of the major critics of classical political economy & especially of its doctrine of comparative advantage. Carey was the leading figure in the nationalist school of economics, which favored protectionist over free trade &, in consequence, was criticized by virtually all academic economists. Carey's approach to economics was normative rather than positive, & founded on inductive rather than deductive reasoning. For much of his early life, he advocated a policy of laissez faire, but his protectionism led him to change this view, although he maintained his conviction of the natural harmony of interests between capital & labor. Ultimately, his work was conceptually flawed by its excessive reliance on the classical doctrines it claimed to repudiate, & his thought remained incomplete, though it was a major influence on the evolution of US protectionism. 1 Figure, 186 References. W. H. Stoddard

88T1223

Muhlfeld, Claus & Goetze, Dieter, Diskussion (Discussion), Kolner Zeitschrift für Soziologie und Sozialpsychologie, 1987, 39, 2, June, 400-402. (GER)

† A reply to Friedrich Valjavec's review (see SA 35 3/87a49033) of Dieter Goetze's & Claus Muhlfeld's Ethnosociologie: Studienskripten zur Soziologie ([Ethnosociology: Research Notes on Sociology], Scheuch, Erwin, & Sahner, Heinz (Eds), Stuttgart: B. G. Teubner, 1984 [see listing in IRPS No. 41]). It is charged that the reviewer misrepresented & distorted the contents of the book & was totally unfamiliar with the relevant literature. M. Maxfield

88T1224

Neuendorff, Hartmut (Abteilung Wirtschafts- und Sozialwissenschaften U Dortmund, D-4600 Federal Republic Germany), Antisozilogischer Liberalismus gegen soziologischen Determinismus—die falschen Alternativen eines politisch denkenden Rechts-Soziologen? (Antisociological Liberalism against Sociological Determinism—The False Alternatives of a Politically Thinking Sociologist of Law?), Soziologische Revue, 1987, 10, 3, July, 254-257. (GER)

† A collection of essays on Helmut Schelsky—Helmut Schelsky als Soziologe und politischer Denker ([Helmut Schelsky as Sociologist and Political Thinker], Weinberger, Ota, & Krawietz, Werner (Eds), Stuttgart: Franz Steiner Verlag, 1985)—is discussed & compared with two other books: (1) Helmut Schelsky—ein Soziologe in der Bundesrepublik. Eine Gedächtnisschrift von Freunden, Kollegen und Schülern ([Helmut Schelsky—A Sociologist in Germany. A Memorial Volume by Friends, Colleagues and Students], Baier, Horst (Ed), Stuttgart: Enke, 1986); & (2) Recht und Institution. Helmut Schelsky—Gedächtnissymposium Munster 1985 ([Law and Institution. Helmut Schelsky—Memorial Symposium Munster 1985], Rechtswissenschaftliche Fakultät der Universität Munster [Ed], Berlin: Duncker & Humblot, 1985 [see listings in IRPS No. 41]). Weinberger & Krawietz's book emphasizes Schelsky's role as a political thinker. The theoretical core of Schelsky's sociology was his ideas on institutions & the relationship between law & society. Schelsky followed Gehlen's teaching for his anthropological basis, but differed from him with his concept of the relationship of tension between subjectivity & institution. The essays in Baier's book provide a good, brief overview of the main themes in Schelsky's work, the contribution by K. D. Bock is especially interesting. C. Waters

88T1225

Nota, John H. (Dept Philosophy Brock U, Saint Catharines Ontario L2S 3A1), Misunderstanding and Insight about Edith Stein's Philosophy, Human Studies, 1987, 10, 2, 205-212.

chological theory & research with emphasis on his introduction of sociometry as a method of meaning & describing interpersonal choice behavior, his development of psychodrama as a group therapeutic method, & his promotion of organizations for group therapists. His key concepts are summarized & their current & future uses explored. A complete 108-item bibliography listing all works published by Moreno as sole, senior, or contributing author is presented. It is cross referenced, & arranged by year of publication (1908-1976). 10 References. K. Hyatt.

88T1209

Helle, Horst Jürgen (Dept. Sociology U. Munich, D-8000 22 Federal Republic Germany). Soziologie als Ethik? Das Problem des Sollens in den Sozialwissenschaften der Gegenwart/Sociologia come etica? Il problema del dovere nelle scienze sociali del nostro tempo (Sociology as Ethics? The Problem of Duty in Contemporary Social Science), Annali di Sociologia/Sociologisches Jahrbuch, 1986, 2(1), 11-29, 30-48. (MFL)

Translated by Gino Ischia.

Immanuel Kant in his Grundlegung zur Metaphysik der Sitten ([The Foundation for the Metaphysics of Moral Philosophy], Riga, 1785) considers the tripartite realm of knowledge still applicable that ancient Greek philosophy used to work with: physics, ethics, & logic. Physics looks for laws according to which things do happen, ethics work with laws according to which things ought to happen, but sometimes do not. The social sciences continue in this tradition. Yet, positivism tried to be a physics of the social. & Max Weber reached a dead end by stating that here can be no empirical access to the meaning of historical & social reality. Georg Simmel avoids these impasses by pointing to the importance of evolution. However, an evolutionary approach to sociology is bound to end up as a new type of ethics. Modified AA.

88T1210

Horowitz, Irving Louis (Dept. Sociology Rutgers U., New Brunswick, NJ 08903). Disenchanting Sociology. ♦ UM Society, 1987, 24, 2(166), Jan-Feb, 48-55.

A survey of the emergence of new ideological currents within sociology that start from the partisan premise that truth is a function of political beliefs, or at least certain types of beliefs. Major fields within sociology surveyed include: deviant behavior, social welfare, elite theory, & world systems theory. A strong gestalt effect is found to exist, i.e., linkages are identified between (1) a critique of traditional schools of criminology, (2) assertions of the decadence of capitalism & imperialism, & (3) repudiation of liberalism in politics, experimentalism in science, & value neutrality as a goal of social research. It is concluded that the new ideologues, far from carrying forth the tradition of the new sociologists of the Millman School, subvert that earlier intellectual synthesis by an excessive call for politicization, & one-sided assaults on democratic liberalism. In this, the new radicals come full circle & repeat & replicate earlier assaults on sociology & social research made from & by conservative antisociologists. Modified AA.

88T1211

Kobout, Jaroslav (School Economics, Nam Ant Zapotockeho 4 CS-130 67 Prague 3 Czechoslovakia). Soudobna bulharska sociologie (Contemporary Bulgarian Sociology), Sociologický časopis, 1987, 23, 4, 358-368. (CZ)

Bulgarian sociology has developed parallel to the WC movement since the efforts of Dimitar Blagoev, founder of the Communist Party of Bulgaria, to analyze the main strata & groups of the society of his time. Later major contributions were made by George Dimitrov's analysis of fascism by Todor Pavlov's & Jivko Ochavkov's work in general sociology. In addition, varied concrete research has been carried on in numerous fields. Bulgaria organized the Seventh World Congress of Sociology in 1970, & Bulgarian sociologists prepared the publication Society and Social Change (Sofia, BAV, 1986) for the Eleventh World Congress of Sociology conducted 1986 in New Delhi, India. Some conclusions from that publication are presented here. 2 Tables. Modified HA.

T1212

Kononowicz, Grażyna, Goździnskiej, Halina & Wojciechowski, Grzegorz. Bibliografia Zawartości Przeglądu Socjologicznego 1930-1980 (A Bibliography of Articles in Przegląd Socjologiczny 1930-1980), Przegląd Socjologiczny, 1986, 34, 2, 1-87. (POL)

A bibliography of 1,435 Polish articles published from 1930 to 1980 in Przegląd Socjologiczny is presented in four parts: (1) articles, reports, polemics, (2) book reviews; (3) chronicles of scientific life, & (4) necrology. An index of titles is included. M. Meeks.

88T1213

Korte, Hermann (Fakultät Sozialwissenschaft U. Bochum, D-4630 Federal Republic Germany). Das Naturliche... ist die anerkannte Sitte (The Natural... Is the Acknowledged Custom), Soziologische Revue, 1987, 10, 3, July, 249-253. (GER)

* A discussion of the work of Helmut Schelsky & of two recent collections of essays on Schelsky: (1) Helmut Schelsky: ein Soziologe in der Bundesrepublik. Eine Gedächtnisschrift von Freunden, Kollegen und Schülern ([Helmut Schelsky: A Sociologist in Germany: A Memorial Volume by Friends, Colleagues, and Students], Baier, Horst [Ed], Stuttgart: Enke, 1986), & (2) Recht und Institution: Helmut Schelsky: Gedächtnissymposium Münster 1985 ([Law and Institution: Helmut Schelsky: Memorial Symposium Münster 1985], Rechtswissenschaftliche Fakultät der Universität Münster [Ed], Berlin: Duncker & Humblot, 1985 [see listings in IRPS No. 41]) from the perspective of one who worked as Schelsky's assistant during 1966-1971. The book edited by Baier frequently captures aspects of Schelsky's personality as well as of his work. Schelsky focused on the tensions between subjective freedom & the pressures of social circumstances, his work emphasized the importance of the individual. In Die Arbeit tun die anderen ([The Others Do the Work], no publication information given), Schelsky denounced sociology for its tendency to reduce the individual to a collection of characteristics & relationships. Though this has generally been regarded as marking an abrupt break with his earlier work, a continuity of intellectual development is here pointed out, the germ of these ideas can be found in Soziologie der Sexualität ([Sociology of Sexuality], no publication information given) in which Schelsky examined norms of sexual behavior. C. Waters.

88T1214

Kozyr-Kowalski, Stanisław. Max Weber's Theories of Social Estates, ♦ The Polish Sociological Bulletin, 1983, 1-4(61-64), 85-102.

* A discussion of Max Weber's theory of social estates focusing on the use of the Weberian term Stände (social estates). It is argued that Stände cannot be treated as the theoretical & methodological equivalent of the conception of social strata as defined by prestige, & that in the scientific heritage of Weber there are at least four different theories of social estates, two of which do not treat social esteem & its division in any given society as characteristic of estate position. These theories, termed nonreverential theories of estate, are contrasted with theories appearing in Weber's more popular texts where esteem is ascribed a role of the characteristic constitutional for all estate situations. Implications of these differing viewpoints for sociological research are discussed. F. Rasmussen.

88T1215

Kwasniewicz, Władysław. The Need to Reevaluate the Historical Approach in Sociological Research, ♦ The Polish Sociological Bulletin, 1983, 1-4(61-64), 27-44.

* A discussion of the advantages of a historical approach in sociological research & the methods of such research using recent events in Poland as an example. The basic concepts of the historical approach are reviewed & differentiated from historicism. The role of the presentist orientation of modern sociology is delineated, & advantages & disadvantages are weighed. Methods for restoring a historical approach in sociological research are outlined. The research perspectives of modern sociology are limited by ahistorical thinking, & restoration of the historical approach offers an important alternative for broader sociological & historical synthesis. F. Rasmussen.

88T1216

Lashina, M. V., O nekotorykh aspektakh issledovaniya osnovnogo sotsiologicheskogo zakona (On Several Aspects of Research on Fundamental Sociological Laws), Filosofskie Nauki, 1986, 29, 6, 124-130. (RUS)

* Social determinism is the foremost law of sociology for Marxists: the mode of economic production determines the basic structure of society. Sociologists should seek to discover in what ways a reverse effect is exerted by the social structure on the means of production, in accordance with Marxist dialectical theory. Implications for current efforts to restructure the USSR economy are reviewed. G. Prostavov.

nial work, which in turn results from his abandonment of historical materialism & his replacement of dialectics by mechanism. In replacing the contradictory unity of forces of production & relations of production with the simple technological DoFL, he is led to accept the theory of de-proletarianization & its false conclusion that technological change takes political leadership away from both bourgeoisie & proletariat & gives it instead to intelligentsia. 7 References Modified HA

88T1234

Rovati, Giancarlo (Dept Sociology Catholic U Sacred Heart, I-20123 Milan Italy), La "survey": un possibile passaggio dal micro al macro (The Survey. A Possible Transfer from Micro to Macro), Studi di Sociologia, 1986, 24, 3-4, July-Dec, 416-441 (ITA)

† Since its origins, the tradition of social survey has referred to the epistemological & methodological paradigm of the natural sciences, which is based on the circular relation among the formulation of hypotheses, their empirical verification, & the definition of general propositions in the form of theories & laws. The survey has therefore been the particular target of the debate about comprehension & explanation in sociology, & of the criticism of the phenomenological, linguistic, & hermeneutic approaches. It is suggested that such criticism improves the process of the survey rather than denying its validity. The survey can eliminate positivistic objectivism & arbitrary subjectivism, & therefore represents a valid, though limited, way of acquiring general knowledge about macro aspects of human social actions. 1 Figure. Modified HA

88T1235

Rutigliano, Enzo (U Trento, I-38100 Italy), L'interesse di Roberto Michels per l'Eugenica/Das Interesse Roberto Michels' an der Eugenik (Roberto Michels's Interest in Eugenics), Annali di Sociologia/Soziologisches Jahrbuch, 1986, 2(1), 223-225, 226-229 (MUL)

Translated by Claudia Manica.

† A secondary but illuminating aspect of Roberto Michels's work is examined: his interest in the sociological discipline of eugenics, & its central preoccupation, genetic programming. Focus is on Michels's article "Intorno al problema dell'Eugenica" ([Concerning the Problem of Eugenics] in Problemi di sociologia applicata (Problems of Applied Sociology), Turin, Fratelli Bocca, 1919). This article was written between 1914 & 1917, but the problem continued to occupy Michels until his death in 1936. The article is interesting for three reasons. (1) it is very representative of Michels's other writings, (2) it reveals an interest of Michels that has generally been ignored by critics, who have concentrated on his political sociology, & (3) it demonstrates a greater awareness of the problems & implications of the subject for political ethics than is found in the writings of many who concentrated on this topic. AA Tr & Modified by C. Waters

88T1236

Sakuta, Keichi, Title in Japanese (Social Philosophy of Bergson), Shakaigaku Hyoron/Japanese Sociological Review, 1987, 38, 1(149), June, 2-9 (JPN)

† Abstract not currently available

88T1237

Scaff, Lawrence A. (Dept Political Science U Arizona, Tucson 85721), Weber, Simmel und die Kulturosoziologie (Weber, Simmel, and the Sociology of Culture), Kolner Zeitschrift für Soziologie und Sozialpsychologie, 1987, 39, 2, June, 255-277. (GER)

Translated by Harald Bender.

† A discussion of the work of Max Weber & Georg Simmel & of the intellectual relationship between them. Their association began in the 1890s, they were drawn together by a shared interest in problems of modern culture. Historical evidence shows that this interest developed around an assessment of Friedrich Nietzsche's significance & a critique of "psychologism." The German Sociological Society, which both helped establish in 1909, marked a notable episode in the attempt to clarify the tasks of sociology as a "science of culture." Their & Marianne Weber's roles in the debate over a unique F culture illustrate a neglected aspect of the cultural problem. Despite their differing sociologies, Weber & Simmel raised similar questions about the fate of human culture, which remain relevant today. 61 References. Modified HA

88T1238

Scaglia, Antonio (U Trento, I-38100 Italy), La dimensione europea di Roberto Michels/Die europäische Dimension Robert Michels' (The European Dimension of Roberto Michels), Annali di Sociologia/

Soziologisches Jahrbuch, 1986, 2(1), 185-190, 191-197. (MUL)

Translated by Ralph Raschen.

† The intellectual development of Roberto Michels (1876-1936) is traced through the biographical factors & cultural experiences that helped shape his thinking. Educated in Germany, France, & Italy, his youthful outlook was essentially international, ie, European. He was a member of the socialist party & participated in the radical trade unionist movement. Later in life, he turned toward Italian nationalism, which led him even to justify fascism, which he regarded as a new form of revolutionary reality. Various leading thinkers who influenced Michels's ideas are briefly discussed. C. Waters

88T1239

Schwalbe, Michael L. (Dept Sociology & Anthropology North Carolina State U, Raleigh 27695), Mead among the Cognitivists: Roles as Performance Imagery, ♦ Journal for the Theory of Social Behaviour, 1987, 17, 2, June, 113-133

† An attempt to develop a more adequate account of the foundations of social behavior by rejecting role-theoretic accounts in favor of an alternative analysis based on George Herbert Mead's philosophy of the act (The Philosophy of the Act, Morris, C. W. [Ed], Chicago: U of Chicago Press, 1938). The emergence of patterned social behavior out of impulses, acts, habit, role taking, & shared imagery is explained. Mead's ideas about the function of imagery in conduct are used to account for shared perceptions of simple acts as configured into the meaningful chunks of behavior thought of as roles. Roles are then reconceptualized in terms of shared performance imagery. Work in the area of social cognition is argued to hold promise for addressing sociological issues raised by this Meadian-cognitivist analysis. 54 References. Modified AA

88T1240

Sekulić, Duško (U Zagreb, 41000 Yugoslavia), Kvantitativni aspekti kvalitativne metodologije-tipologije u društvenim znanostima (The Quantitative Aspects of Qualitative Methodology Typologies in the Social Sciences), Revija za Sociologiju, 1984, 14, 3-4, July-Dec, 249-258. (SCR)

† The prerequisite of any scientific work is a cataloguing & systematizing of the features to be investigated, in order to provide a preliminary sketch of the problem. However, any logical typology must maintain a sound connection to the characteristics of the real world; as such, the division between the logical & empirical typologies is an arbitrary one. Difficulties encountered in the construction of a typology for an empirical study on the housing situation in Yugoslavia are explored, using examples from other works, including: Robert Merton's "Social Structure and Anomie" in Social Theory and Social Structure (Glencoe, 1957 [see SA 7-3/596037]), M. Durkheim's "Devijantno ponašanje i društvena struktura" ([Deviant Behavior and Social Structure], Sociologija, 1961, 3-4), & J. Obradović's "Faktorska struktura participacije" ([The Factorial Structure of Participation], Sociologija, 1975, 4). Modified HA

88T1241

Semmes, Clovia E. (10124 South Prairie, Chicago IL 60628), The Sociological Tradition of E. Franklin Frazier: Implications for Black Studies, The Journal of Negro Education, 1986, 55, 4, fall, 484-494.

† Through an analysis of the major works of E. Franklin Frazier, it is concluded that Frazier's conceptual approach examines whether or not assimilation (ie, the extinction of black cultural/institutional forms & the identification with an external ethnic/racial group) would be the end result of the black experience in the US. The major theoretical focus underlying Frazier's work involves an examination of the relationship between social organization & culture. Frazier's conceptual, theoretical, & empirical orientation extends & highlights a central theme in black American intellectual thought that consistently points to the problem of cultural hegemony as a dominant issue underlying the oppression of African Americans. As a consequence, Frazier's corpus of work contributes significantly to analyzing the dynamics of cultural hegemony as a critical issue shaping the parameters of Afrocentric (African American Studies) intellectual & sociological inquiry. Modified AA

88T1242

Shuker, Roy & Wilkes, Chris (Massey U, Palmerston North New Zealand), History from the High Wire: The Relationship between Sociology and History in New Zealand, New Zealand Sociology, 1987, 2, 1, May, 1-24.

† A dominant theme in recent British historiography has been a marked-

An attempt to free the reader from a possible misunderstanding of the philosophy of Edith Stein, the first assistant of the "father" of phenomenology, Edmund Husserl, & to give some insight into the importance of her own personal philosophy. Roman Ingarden (Edith Stein on Her Activity as an Assistant of Edmund Husserl PPR XXIII, 1962) & Herbert Spiegelberg (The Phenomenological Movement, The Hague: Nijhoff, 1982) believe that Edith Stein after 1922 cannot be considered a phenomenologist because she was handicapped by the prejudice of her faith. This goes against the facts of her publications: her faith meant only a widening of her experience. Husserl & Max Scheler both appreciated her philosophy very much. She combined a radical attitude with a deep faithful listening to the phenomena & a rare capacity to express her experience. She owed this to her Judaism, & also to her femininity. Examples of her approach are found in her intelligent criticism of Martin Heidegger, & in her final book on St. John of the Cross, born from her mystical experience. Bibliography: 6 References. Modified AA.

88T1226

Pieterse, H. J. (Postbus 4125 Bloemfontein 9300) Republic South Africa. Die verband tussen en navorsing: basiese benaderinge tot kennisontwikkeling in die sosiologie (The Relationship between Theory and Research: Basic Approaches to Knowledge Development in Sociology). ♦ Aud Afrikaanse Tydskrif vir Sosiologie/The South African Journal of Sociology, 1987, 18, 4, Nov., 144-149. (AIR)

The nature & meaning of two fundamental approaches to sociological theory & research: induction & deduction are addressed in order to indicate, in accordance with epistemological realism, the importance of a more balanced perspective. This implies a duality, but simultaneously a cyclical & mutual complementarity, of the relationship between theory & research. Contrary to the existing hypothesis-testing (deductive-hilbertian) nature of scientific practice, it is suggested that both deductive & inductive processes are always reflected in sociological research & theory, & should be treated as equal partners. Some theoretical & methodological criticisms of each approach are summarized, & their implications for knowledge in sociology are discussed. 2 Tables, 26 References. Modified HA.

88T1227

Ple, Bernhard (Lehrstuhl Allgemeine Soziologie U Bayreuth, D-8580 Federal Republic Germany). Michels' Stellung in der soziologischen Lehre seiner Zeit/Collocazione di R. Michels nel pensiero sociologico del suo tempo (The Relation between R. Michels and the Sociology of His Time). Annali di Sociologia/Sociologisches Jahrbuch, 1986, 2(1): 179-181, 182-184. (MUI)

Translated by Bernhard Ple.

Examining the relation between James Bryce (The American Commonwealth [no publication information provided]), Max Weber, & Robert Michels, three aspects are analyzed: the common awareness of the machine's predominance & its leaders with regard to the aspirations of the people, the importance of science, especially of the social sciences, as a means to make the people less dependent on the machine & democracy as ideal & as a matter of fact. AA.

88T1228

Popovski, Vesna (Institut društvena istraživanja, Zagreb Yugoslavia). Monografije čikaške škole (Monographs of the Chicago School). Revija za Sociologiju, 1984, 14, 3-4, July-Dec., 225-233. (SCR)

The main monographic studies of the Chicago school are analyzed, concentrating on the methodology used in W. I. Thomas's The Unadjusted Girl (New York: Harper & Row, 1967), the anthology The Professional Thief by a Professional Thief (Sutherland, Edwin H. [Ed], Chicago: U of Chicago Press, 1965), & William Foote Whyte's Street Corner Society (Chicago: U of Chicago Press, 1943 [see SA 1/572916]). More contemporary trends in qualitative methodology are illustrated by H. S. Becker's Outsiders (The Free Press, 1963). Modified A.

T1229

Powers, Charles H. (Santa Clara U, CA 95053). In Search of Sociological Laws: A Response to Stephan Fuchs, Sociological Theory, 1987, 5, 2, fall, 203-205.

Reply, 205-206.

A reply to Stephan Fuch's "The Social Organization of Scientific Knowledge" (see SA 35.3/87R6308). Fuch's argument that scientists of a disprove untested metatheoretical positions as fact is criticized for perpetuating interdisciplinary theoretical fragmentation. It is argued that there is still the possibility of developing a general theory to correspond to objective social reality. Six statements of general tendency in sociological theory are identified, which should allow a reconciliation of theory with empirical inquiry & the discovery of real social laws. In Toward a Sociology of Truth: A Reply to Charles Powers, Fuchs (U of California, Riverside) questions why sociologists should continue to search for the foundations of reason rather than treating science as another form of social organization. It is argued that the value of knowledge does not lie solely in the accuracy of objective representations. Power's call for the development of a natural science of society is supported; however, the superiority of such a science on the grounds that it corresponds to reality is questioned, since what is real is largely determined by who controls the scientific research organization. K. Hyatt.

88T1230

Rawls, Anne Warfield (U Wisconsin, Madison 53706). The Interaction Order Sui Generis: Goffman's Contribution to Social Theory, Sociological Theory, 1987, 5, 2, fall, 136-149.

¶ Erving Goffman is credited with enriching our understanding of the details of interaction, but not with challenging our theoretical understanding of social organization. While Goffman's position is not consistent, the outlines for a theory of an interaction order sui generis may be found in his work. It is not theoretically adequate to understand Goffman as an interactionist within the dichotomy between agency & social structure. Goffman offers a way of resolving this dichotomy via the idea of an interaction order that is constitutive of self &, at the same time, places demands on social structure. Implications for our understanding of social organization in general are discussed. 44 References. HA.

88T1231

Robinson, R. J. (Dept Psychology Victoria U, Manchester, M13 9PL, England). The Civilizing Process: Some Remarks on Elias's Social History. ♦ Sociology, 1987, 21, 1, Feb., 1-17.

¶ Norbert Elias's theory of the civilizing process (The Civilizing Process, Vol. 1: The History of Manners [see IRPS No. 16/83c00199] & State Formation and Civilization, Oxford: Basil Blackwell, 1978 & 1982, respectively) claims to be based on a detailed empirical history. An analysis is made of Elias's interpretations of warrior society as a near-chaos in which knights had almost no contact with monetary relations, & of the absolutist state as one where courts were founded on the monarch's manipulation of contests between the bourgeoisie & an aristocracy still insulated from monetary relations. A review of the actual historical evidence completely fails to support these claims. An alternative theory of the period as part of the transition from feudalism to capitalism is outlined. 20 References. Modified HA.

88T1232

Rochberg-Halton, Eugene (U Notre Dame, IN 46556). Why Pragmatism Now?, Sociological Theory, 1987, 5, 2, fall, 194-200.

¶ A body of thought that had been reduced largely to the influence of George Herbert Mead, philosophical pragmatism has reemerged with significance for semiotics, philosophy, literary criticism, & continental thought in general. New interest in the thought of Charles Peirce, William James, John Dewey, & a revised Mead can be explained by the theory of meaning proposed by the pragmatists, a theory that can include more phenomena within the realm of significance & thus contribute to ongoing attempts to refashion social theory. The contemporary "pragmatic attitude" & mindset - Weltanschauung are described. Contrary to the belief that a renewed Americanism has been behind the pragmatist revival, it is argued that pragmatism has resurfaced in spite of, & as an antidote to, such Americanism. Modified HA.

88T1233

Roško, Róbert (Ústav filozofie a sociológie Sekcia sociológie Slovenská Akadémia Vied, Obráncov Mieru 49 81438 Bratislava Czechoslovakia). Inteligencia v sociologických interpretáciách Eugena Löbla (Intelligentsia in Eugen Löbl's Sociological Interpretations). Filozofia, 1979, 34, 6, 619-633. (CZE)

¶ A critique of the assumptions that form the basis of Eugen Löbl's analysis of the changing position of the intelligentsia in capitalist & socialist class systems under the influence of the scientific-technological revolution (Úvahy o duševnej práci a bohatstve národa [Considerations of Intellectual Work and of the Wealth of a Nation], Bratislava: SAV, 1967). Löbl presents an elitist conception of the intelligentsia's role that exaggerates its historical influence & denies the class differentiation of me-available & perhaps is not even sought. This is illustrated by a review of contributions to a conference concerning recent research on & criticism of Max Weber, held in June 1986 in Kassel, West Germany. AA Tr & Modified by C. Waters

88T1252

Wengle, John L. (Dept Anthropology Douglass Coll Rutgers U, New Brunswick NJ 08903). On Death and Immortality: Reflections on Malinowski's Fieldwork. ♦ The Psychoanalytic Review, 1986, 73, 2, summer, 145-164

† A case study of Bronislaw Malinowski, based on analysis of the diaries he kept during his fieldwork, reveals some of the major psychological issues that confronted him & that characterize fieldwork in general. A theoretical model of fieldwork is elaborated based on the conception of a rite of passage, especially as a symbolic death. Malinowski's life history reveals hypersensitivity to slights & other narcissistic tendencies. While in the field, Malinowski often faced the experience of loss of identity, & feared it. This is reflected in his dreams, in his concerns for women in his native country, in his sexual feelings & his practice of celibacy, & in his choice of narcissistic objects. Fieldwork was a shattering experience that he survived ultimately through identification with his work as a source of self-immortalization. 46 References. W. H. Stoddard

88T1253

Wolthuis, Jan (Vakgroep Algemene Pedagogiek Rijks U Groningen, NL-9718 CW Netherlands). De sociologie van Margaret Archer (The Sociology of Margaret Archer). ♦ Mens en Maatschappij, 1987, 62, 3, Aug, 270-288 (DUT)

† An examination of the sociology of Margaret Archer, who has been president of the International Sociological Assoc since Aug 1986. She advocates a neo-Weberian sociology, favoring a historical-comparative approach that combines a structure & an actor/action view in a unique way using concepts from Peter Blau's exchange theory (see SA 13 2/ 65B4829) & applying them to social interest groups. Using complex systems as the unit of analysis, she uses a morphogenetic analytical cycle, following Walter Buckley's systems theory (see SA 16 1/68C8842). Such an approach appears very useful for the study of structure & changes within complex institutions. 33 References. Modified HA

88T1254

Yakovlev, Aleksandr Nikolaevich. Dostizhenie kachestvenno novogo sostoyaniya sovetskogo obshchestva i obshchestvennye nauki (Social Sciences and the Attainment of a Qualitatively New State of Soviet Society). Kommunist, 1987, 8, May, 3-22 (RUS)

† Since Mar 1985 the USSR Communist Party has undertaken reforms unforeseen in terms of their complexity, scale, & level of innovation. A net platform for the acceleration of SE growth & achievement of a qualitatively different type of society was created. This concern with quality addresses both the material & intellectual potential of socialist society. The acceleration process is a complex SE maneuver, requiring a transition to highly objective, scientific thought processes. In order to liberate the full creative potential of the social sciences, artificial theoretical constructs must be abandoned in favor of analytical schemes in line with the social realities of the USSR. G. Prostavov

88T1255

Županov, Josip & Šporer, Željka. Sociologija na raskriću (Sociology at the Crossroad). Revija za Sociologiju, 1985, 15, 1-2, Jan-June, 53-65. (SCR)

† The position of sociology in Yugoslavia as an academic & an applied discipline is discussed. Historically, theoretical sociology has predated its social application. Changes are needed in the professional education of sociologists to produce both applied & conventional sociologists. Yugoslavia needs more sociological expertise. The general concept of sociology as a "common knowledge" discipline is examined, & difficulties in promotion of the field are reviewed. 17 References. Modified HA

88T1256

———. Interjú Immanuel Wallersteinnel (Interview with Immanuel Wallerstein). Szociológia, 1982, 3, 389-397. (HUN)

† An interview with Immanuel Wallerstein conducted by Ferenc Mészáros. Abstract not currently available

88T1257

———. XI World Congress of Sociology, New Delhi, August 1986. ♦ Sociological Bulletin, 1986, 35, 2, Sept, 1-31.

† In Welcome Address, the text of Victor D'Souza's opening address to the Eleventh World Congress of Sociology held in New Delhi, India, 18-22 Aug 1986 is presented. The theme of the Congress—Social Changes: Problems & Perspectives—is elaborated in terms of the new challenges it presents for sociologists. In Inaugural Speech, M. N. Srinivas (chairman of the Indian National Committee) reviews a few aspects of sociological & social anthropological practice in India, emphasizing their similar areas of interest. Investigations of cooperatives, inequality, & women's studies are of particular note, & new challenges lie in the area of nation building. The bulk of research has been empirical & theoretically eclectic, & the Marxist approach has recently attained prominence, offering many critiques of structural-functionalist research. In F. H. Cardoso's Presidential Address speech, the challenges posed by continued economic & social inequalities & cultural diversity to sociologists seeking to create a united world are addressed. In Vote of Thanks, T. K. Oommen highlights the significance of the fact that this is the first Congress to take place in Asia, with representatives from over 60 countries. The International Sociological Assoc is praised for taking this step toward an authentic internationalization of the discipline. K. Hyatt

88T1258

———. In Memoriam F. van Heek (In Memory of F. van Heek). ♦ Mens en Maatschappij, 1987, 62, 2, May, 114-130 (DUT)

† A tribute to the late F. van Heek reviews his life & the importance of his work for contemporary sociologists. In Herinnering (Memories), J. K. M. Gevers reflects on his personal memories of the later life of van Heek. In Van Heek als Socioloog (Van Heek as Sociologist), I. Gadourek discusses the professional career of van Heek, from student to renowned sociologist. In De kansen, risico's en resultaten van een onderzoeksprogramma: Van Heeks meerledige vraagstelling over mobiliteit (Chances, Risks, and Results of a Research Program: Van Heek's Plural Problematics on Mobility), W. C. Ultee examines van Heek's theories on mobility & stratification. 1 Photograph, 11 References. M. Barker

88T1259

———. Two Reports on the Eleventh World Congress of Sociology, New Delhi, August 1986: Sessions of the Research Committee on the Sociology of Urban and Regional Development. International Journal of Urban and Regional Research, 1987, 11, 2, June, 270-276.

† In Eastern Engagement and Western Ambivalence, Niels Albertsen & Jens Tonboe (School of Architecture, U of Aarhus, Denmark) focus on Western contributions to the Research Committee on the Sociology of Urban & Regional Development, but in a more global perspective. The common element in the various contributions is provided not by shared concepts or theories or topics, but by a Marxist-leftist political attitude & a shared general perspective on society & a shared methodology. Western contributors tended to be ambivalent or disillusioned & Second World contributors to be dogmatic or narrowly empirical; however, Third World contributors revealed political commitment & active engagement in their research, providing an example to Western sociologists. In An Indian View, Narendra Panjwani reviews the proceedings from an Indian perspective, noting major papers presented & reviewing the discussions they generated. A major element in the experience was the encounter with a global perspective as yet little developed in Indian sociology. 2 References. W. H. Stoddard ly self-conscious reflexivity about the nature of historical practice in general, & the relationship between sociology & history in particular. More specifically, the debates such reflexivity has engendered have clustered around a number of interrelated themes: class analysis, the development of the modern state, culture, ideology, & feminist history. It is argued that such reflexivity & the debates associated with it have had little impact on the writing of New Zealand history. This assertion is based on an analysis of The Oxford History of New Zealand (Oliver, W. H., & Williams, B. R. [Eds], Wellington, 1981), & a survey of ten years of contributions to the New Zealand Journal of History (1975-1984). Finally, the important question of why this body of writing has generally neglected the British debate is discussed. Modified AA

88T1243

Singh, H. N. (Centre Study Social Systems Jawaharlal Nehru U., New Delhi 110067 India), Eleventh World Congress of Sociology: Some Observations, ♦ Sociological Bulletin, 1986, 35, 2, Sept., 127-133

A review of some of the most important aspects of the Eleventh World Congress of Sociology held in New Delhi, India, 18-22 Aug 1986. Focus is on the roles of the International Sociological Assoc. (ISA) & Indian Sociological Society, major highlights of the opening session, & a detailed profile of the over 400 Indian delegates & their participation. Data derived from the ISA Handbook & other materials distributed at the congress, newspaper accounts, & personal observations. K. Hyatt

88T1244

Siskin, Edgar F., The Life and Times of Edward Sapir, Jewish Social Studies, 1986, 48, 3-4, summer fall, 283-292

A biographical sketch of linguist & anthropologist Edward Sapir (1884-1939), with focus on his involvement with Jewish concerns during period of anti-Semitism in US academic circles & society. His extensive work on Semitic linguistics has remained an unpublished collection of notes & texts, their inclusion in the proposed publication of his collected works is urged. K. Hyatt

88T1245

Smith, J. H. (U. Southampton, SO9 5NH England), Elton Mayo and the English Dream, ♦ The Sociological Review, 1987, 35, 3, Aug., 602-621

A reexamination of the principal myths surrounding Elton Mayo (eg. The Social Problems of an Industrial Civilisation, London: Routledge & Keegan Paul, 1949), who remains a controversial but elusive figure in the development of applied social science. New evidence is offered from family letters that illustrates the importance of England to him both personally & professionally, clarifying his lack of integration to US academic life & the nature of his influence in GB. Modified HA

88T1246

Straussoldo, Raimondo (U. Trieste, I-34127 Italy), Micro-macro: aspetti ecologici (Micro-Macro: Ecological Aspects), Studi di Sociologia, 1986, 24, 3-4, July-Dec., 465-495 (ITA)

Dichotomies in general are criticized, & the problem of "levels" or "scales" of social reality is discussed with reference to disciplines other than sociology. The micro/macro polarity is distinguished from the subjective/objective one, the former is considered less important & less useful than the latter. The connections between three distinctions: micro/macro, research/action, & theory/practice are examined. Concrete examples are drawn from fieldwork experiences in environmental sociology or social ecology in the Friuli-Venezia Giulia region of Italy. In this relatively small area, the relations between sociologists & politicians & administrators make possible a fairly direct link between research & intervention. Modified HA

88T1247

Thomas, J. J. R. (Bristol Polytechnic, BN2 4AT England), Peasants, Junkers and War, ♦ Sociology, 1987, 21, 1, Feb., 119-127

review of two volumes of the Max Weber Gesamtausgabe (The Collected Works of Max Weber). Bd 1/3: Die Lage der Landarbeiter im ostelbischen Deutschland 1892 ([Vol. 3: The Situation of Agricultural Workers in Germany East of the River Elbe, 1892], Riesebrodt, Martin J., Tübingen: J. C. B. Mohr, 1984), Bd 1/15: Zur Politik im Weltkrieg, 1914-1918 ([On Politics in World War: Writings, Speeches, 1914-1918], Mommsen, Wolfgang J., & Huebinger, Gerd [Eds], Tübingen: J. C. B. Mohr, 1984 [see listings in IRPS No. 41]). Publication of these volumes reflects an extraordinary renewal of interest in the ideals of Max Weber. The first of these volumes explores issues relating to the German lands east of the river Elbe, the main home of the Junkers & of the Wilhelmine state. The second volume collects Weber's writings during WWI, which, if nothing else, reveal the depth of his patriotism &, at the same time, his opposition to many policies of the Prussian state. Both thus reflect his critical attitude to Junkers, while leaving key questions about his political values unanswered. 5 References. W. H. Stoddard

88T1248

Tsai, Yung-Mei & Chiang, Chi-Fang (Texas Tech U., Lubbock 79409), Title appears in Chinese (Toward a Sociology of Sex and Sex Classification with a Critique on "the Professionals of the Third Sexual Category"), Kuo Li Tai-wan Ta Hsueh She Hui Hsueh K'an/National Taiwan University Journal of Sociology, 1986, 18, Nov., 221-228 (CHI)

Rejoinder, 229-230

¶ A historical comparative account of the establishment of the sociology of sex as a field of research in the US & Taiwan. Sex classification at three different levels: biological (sex), psychological (gender), & sociological (sex role) is distinguished. This system of categories is used to clarify the sexual classification of pondans, a transvestite M group in Singapore. In Rejoinder, Mak Lau Fong explores several questions about the sexual classification of pondans, as described in an earlier article (see SA 35 5/87R9835). While pondans are analytically distinguishable from transvestites, it appears that the distinction is likely to blur in the future. 7 References. Modified HA

88T1249

Vukadinović, Rajka, Kvalitativna metodologija u djelu Ervinga Goffmana (Qualitative Methodology in the Works of E. Goffman), Revija za Sociologiju, 1984, 14, 3-4, July-Dec., 235-239. (SCR)

¶ An analysis of the main epistemological & methodological approaches in the works of Erving Goffman. In The Presentation of Self in Everyday Life (Pelican, 1980), Goffman provides examples of dramaturgical analysis; in Asylums, Essays on the Social Situation of Mental Patients and Other Inmates (Pelican, 1980), he demonstrates how to analyze social behavior under specific circumstances. Encounters, Two Studies in the Sociology of Interaction (Bobbs-Merrill, 1963 [see SA 13 5/65B6723]) reveals how horizons of sociology can be broadened by the use of atypical topics & qualitative methodology. Modified HA

88T1250

Warren, Mark (Dept. Political Science Northwestern U., Evanston IL 60201), The Marx-Darwin Question: Implications for the Critical Aspects of Marx's Social Theory, International Sociology, 1987, 2, 3, Sept., 251-269

¶ An examination of the implications of recently revived analogies between Karl Marx & Charles Darwin for the critical aspects of Marx's thought. Good prima facie reasons exist to be suspicious of such analogies, since they seem to ignore the distinction between sciences of natural objects & Marx's critical theory—an approach that relates explanations of social processes to the intentional & reflexive qualities of human practices. It is argued, however, that the analogy between Marx & Darwin presents no threat to the critical elements of Marx's thought. More specifically, it is claimed that (1) consequence explanations of the Darwinian kind are both useful & formally compatible with Marx's, (2) this formal compatibility highlights both the nature & limits of Marx's explanatory claims, & (3) the critical elements of Marx's thought stem from the fact that he relates a form of explanation similar to Darwin's to a human subject. 40 References. HA

88T1251

Weiss, Johannes (Goßmathochschule Kassel, D-3500 Federal Republic Germany), Die Gegenwärtigkeit Max Webers. Anmerkungen zu einer Tagung/L'attualità di Max Weber. Riflessioni su un convegno (The Relevance of Max Weber Today: Reflections on a Conference), Annali di Sociologia/Sociologisches Jahrbuch, 1986, 2(1), 203-212, 213-221 (MUL)

Translated by Annalisa Franchi.

¶ A discussion of the reasons for sociology's continued debate with its own classic thinkers, & for today's strong & growing preference for the work of Max Weber. It is suggested that the work of the classic thinkers in general, & of Weber in particular, function as a medium & guarantee for demanding & structuring communication in the scientific community, especially at times when an all-embracing theoretical synthesis is not

88T1268

Bovone, Laura (Dept Sociology Catholic U Sacred Heart, I-20123 Milan Italy). Micro-macro: una dialettica congenita della sociologia (Micro-Macro A Congenital Controversy for Sociology). Studi di Sociologia, 1986, 24, 3-4, July-Dec, 285-315. (ITA)

† Some stages in the development of sociological theory are reviewed, tracing the source of the micro-macro dilemma in the origins of sociology itself. The solutions of the major classical theorists—Emile Durkheim, Max Weber, & Talcott Parsons—& ways in which they succeeded in uniting both aspects are examined. The three cornerstones of classical sociology are identified as: sociology as an empirical & generalizing science, the capacity of sociological knowledge to grasp the intentional meaning of action, & the rational & moral order of existence. However, contemporary sociology has drawn away from this basis & tends to polarize micro & macro elements. It is argued that the methodological progress of the discipline is possible only when the two approaches are treated as complementary. 1 Figure. Modified HA

88T1269

Buhl, Walter L. (Institut Soziologie U Munchen, 8000 40 Federal Republic Germany). Grenzen der Autopoiesis (Limits of Autopoiesis). Kolner Zeitschrift für Soziologie und Sozialpsychologie, 1987, 39, 2, June, 225-254. (GER)

† The concept of "autopoiesis" is discussed. H. R. Maturana's "technical" definition of the concept, as used in biology, is examined ("Autopoiesis: Reproduction, Heredity and Evolution" in Autopoiesis, Dissipative Structures and Spontaneous Social Orders, Zeleny, Milan (Ed), Boulder, Colo, 1980). According to this, an autopoietic system is a dynamic system that is defined as a unity by a network of components, which recursively regenerate the network they have produced through their interactions & specify the limits of the network in the space in which they exist. Overgeneralization of the concept & its elevation to a new metaphysical paradigm in sociology, especially by Niklas Luhmann (eg, "The Autopoiesis of Social Systems" in Sociocybernetic Paradoxes, Greyer, Felix, & Van der Louwen, Johannes (Eds), London, 1986), is criticized. The impact & function of autopoietical processes in relation to social change are discussed. Autopoiesis should not be equated with fluctuation or evolution, it merely refers to a general theoretical perspective, which embraces a large variety of different mechanisms of change. The concept is only meaningful for the social sciences if it leads to the deduction of the axioms for a new theory of social control. 103 References. Modified HA

88T1270

Canavan, Michael A. (Dept Sociology/Anthropology/Criminal Justice Rutgers U New Brunswick NJ 08903). One-Eyed Social Movements: Rethinking Issues in Rationality and Society. ♦ WM Philosophy of the Social Sciences, 1987, 17, 2, June, 147-172.

† A reexamination of classic sociological thinking about rationality & society from the perspective of recent thinking in the philosophy of science. It is suggested that "one-eyed social movements" such as scientific creationism, which take advantage of social rationality without being reasonable, cast doubt on the idea that society is inherently irrational, which is assumed, for example, in the classical theory of collective behavior. Indeed, the very category of collective behavior is called into question, as is the tendency to explain behavior included in that category as irrational or pathological. Research on the idea of moral economy & on social movements suggests an alternative view. The dimensions of the concept of rationality—in knowledge-based societies, at once a description & an evaluation—are explored, & rationality is contrasted with reasonableness, for which there are stronger requirements. 93 References. W. H. Stoddard

88T1271

Chang, Briankle G. (Dept Speech Communication U Illinois, Urbana 61801). World and/or Sign: Toward a Semiotic Phenomenology of the Modern Life-World. Human Studies, 1987, 10, 3-4, Oct, 311-331.

† An exploration of the possibility of integrating phenomenology & semiotics to form a new perspective for describing social reality. The limits of both semiotic & phenomenological approaches are identified & attention is drawn to the emerging postmodern social formation. A semiotization of phenomenology (& a phenomenologicalization of semiotics) are called for.

88T1272

Cipriani, Roberto (via della Chimica 8, I-00144 Rome Italy). The Sociology of Legitimation: An Introduction, Current Sociology/La Sociologie Contemporaine, 1987, 35, 2, summer, 1-20

† The concept of legitimation is defined, distinguishing between assent & consent & between the assignment of validity & justification. The first is more active, more militant in favor of an ideological perspective, the second is based on a reflective choice awaiting a better occasion of dissent. However, the assent favors legitimation; it is the mainstream of many kinds of legitimated power. Cynicism is a constant of the legitimation process. The legitimation problem is not just a relationship between majority & minority, but also concerns socialization; thus, it is a sociological problem. The problem of legitimation is very far from being resolved having changed from a juridically relevant issue to a sociology of knowledge topic. Modified AA

88T1273

Connolly, Elizabeth Anne (New York U, NY 10003). Social Cohesion and the Value of Human Life: An Extension of Durkheim's Theory. ♦ Dissertation Abstracts International, A The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 47, 12(1), June, 4518-A-4519-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor MI. Order No. DA8706726.

88T1274

Dashtamirov, S. A., Kordon, S. I. & Penkov, E. M. Sotsial'nye normy: sistematika i funktsii (Social Norms, Systematization and Functions). Filosofskie Nauki, 1987, 30, 3, 25-34. (RUS)

† Current efforts to accelerate the SF development of USSR society emphasize the role of the human factor as the key to enhanced productivity. In this light, the need to establish acceptable economic & social norms cannot be underestimated. Analysis of existing political, legal, moral, & aesthetic norms must be conducted before any changes in norms can be advocated. The content, transmission, strengthening, & spread of social norms are discussed. It is noted that whenever any norm is weakened, a ripple effect is found throughout the entire norm system. G. Prostakov

88T1275

Eisenstadt, S. N. (Hebrew U Jerusalem, Mount Scopus 91905 Israel). Macrosociology and Sociological Theory: Some New Directions. WM Contemporary Sociology, 1987, 16, 5, Sept, 602-609

† Intellectual interest in world history & comparative macrosociological analysis has revived in recent years, after a period when each society's uniqueness was emphasized. Recent work reflecting this interest is not naively evolutionist, nor does it regard societies as closed systems. Two major subgroups within this development are described & major themes in their work are noted. The first group's stress on the uniqueness of the West's attainment of modernity & capitalism needs to be corrected by the second group's innovative views on the relation between culture & social structure. W. H. Stoddard

88T1276

Flaherty, Michael G. (Dept Sociology Eckerd Coll, Box 12560 Saint Petersburg FL 33733). Multiple Realities and the Experience of Duration. WM The Sociological Quarterly, 1987, 28, 3, Sept, 313-326

† A revised version of SA 33-5/S17240/ASA/1985/3859

88T1277

Goldstone, Jack A. (Northwestern U, Evanston IL 60201). Cultural Orthodoxy, Risk, and Innovation: The Divergence of East and West in the Early Modern World. Sociological Theory, 1987, 5, 2, fall, 119-135.

† Based on a review of the works of economic historians, the key element in the "rise of the West" is identified as a tendency to seek innovation in a wide variety of economic activities. This tendency required a tolerance of ideological innovation & individual freedom of conscience to flourish. These conditions were produced by certain of the revolutions of the sixteenth & seventeenth centuries in Europe. However, in China & the Ottoman Empire, political crises in the seventeenth century produced regimes that were strongly conformist & intolerant of ideological heterodoxy, which discouraged innovation. It is concluded that differences between East & West in regard to innovation derived from their differing responses to seventeenth-century political crises. 89 References. Modified AA

88T1278

Haferkamp, Hans. Beyond the Iron Cage of Modernity? Achievement, Negotiation and Changes in the Power Structure. ♦ Theory, Culture

07 theories, ideas, & systems

88T1260

Appleyard, Roger Michael (School Education, 21 University Rd Leicester LE1 7RF England). Events and Acts: The Structures of Their Effects. U Behavioral Science 1987, 32, 2, Apr, 92-105.

A framework is presented, using a simple system of modal logic with five axioms, to define what is meant by an effect of an event or act. It is proposed that, in empirical studies, the significant types of act & event should be characterized by listing their effects in the notation provided. Applications of the framework to human acts are described, & a diagrammatic method to represent the effects of these acts is given. It is shown that there are eleven fundamentally different possible relationships between acts & their effects. For each of the eleven basic kinds of effect, an approximate formula is given to relate the expected f of that effect to the overall characteristics of a state of affairs within a system. Figures, 8 References. Modified AA.

88T1261

Asad, Talal (U Hull HU6 7RX England). Are There Histories of Peoples without Europe?. U Comparative Studies in Society and History 1987, 29, 3, July, 594-607.

A review essay on Eric Wolf's Europe and the People without History (Berkeley, Los Angeles, & London: U of California Press, 1982; see listing in IRPS No. 41). Wolf presents an account of the history of non-European peoples over the past five centuries as having histories shaped by global economic & political forces, central among which is Wolf's Marxian interpretation is capitalism. He sees political & legal force as crucial to the evolution of capitalist institutions. He recognizes three basic modes of production operating in the capitalist world economy: capitalist, tributary, & kinship-ordered. His account is flawed by its ready acceptance of ideology as a superstructure of material interest &, in consequence, history is treated as more deterministic than it actually is, but this remains a thought provoking book. W. H. Stoddard.

88T1262

Avanzini, Bianca Barbero (Dept Sociology Catholic U Sacred Heart, I-20123 Milan Italy). Nella prospettiva micro: l'interazionismo simbolico (The Micro Perspective: Symbolic Interactionism). Studi di Sociologia 1986, 24, 3-4, July-Dec, 345-373 (ITA).

The main authors who contributed to the construction of symbolic interactionism are examined. George Herbert Mead's thought, in the 1900s, offered the conceptual basis for interactionism. The works of A. L. Blumer & Manfred H. Kuhn (eg, see SA 12 6/64B1563) produced theoretical developments between the 1930s & 1950s. Erving Goffman's dramaturgic theory recalls the interactionist thought of the 1960s. Labeling theory, which applies its principles to deviance, & the phenomenological sociology of Alfred Schutz (The Phenomenology of the Social World, published in Italian: Bologna: Il Mulino, 1970), & of P. L. Berger & T. Luckman (The Social Construction of Reality, published in Italian, Bologna: Il Mulino, 1969) also contributed to theory development. The main critical approaches to interactionism are explored, together with the concept of identity that emerges from them. The contributions of Talcott Parsons, Niklas Luhmann, Jurgen Habermas, & others to this theme are also examined. Modified HA.

88T1263

Barrow, Clyde W. (Texas A&M U, College Station 77843). Intellectuals in Contemporary Social Theory: A Radical Critique. U Sociological Inquiry 1987, 57, 4, fall, 415-430.

Contemporary social theorists have been remarkably consistent in advocating an analytically defined ideal type of the modern intellectual as politically autonomous critic pursuing knowledge for its own sake. It is argued that this concept rests on the presupposition of specific empirical & historical conditions concerning the social organizations of intellectuals. To the degree that these presuppositions are "falsifiable" by a historically grounded framework of intellectual action, one may challenge the epistemological claims of modern intellectuals with a class consciousness. Soft. 96 References. HA.

88T1264

Baudrillard, Jean (U Paris X, F-92001 Nanterre Cedex France). Au-delà du vrai et du faux, ou le malin génie de l'image (Beyond True and False, or the Evil Genius of the Image). Cahiers Internationaux de

Sociologie, 1987, 34, 82, Jan-June, 139-145. (FRE)

¶ A discussion of the role of the image in modern society. It is argued that, in the relation between reality & image, it is the image that is dominant. Images impose their own logic, which is immanent, ephemeral, & immoral. It is a logic of extermination of the object of reference, implosion of sense, & disappearance of the message from the medium. The image does not convey meaning: it negates the way in which we naively think it is used. Various examples are discussed, eg, the way in which, in human sexuality, images have become the actual objects of desire. It is concluded that images are replacing reality. Modified HA.

88T1265

Bernard, Paul (Dept sociologie U Montréal, Québec H3C 3J7). Démologie et sociographie (Demology and Sociography). U Sociologie et Sociétés, 1987, 19, 1, Apr, 170-175 (FRE).

¶ It is suggested that demography has tended to focus on the measurement of phenomena, leaving their interpretation to sociology. A proposal is made for "demology," which would go beyond description to analyze the logic underlying social processes. This approach is compared with that of sociography, eg, in the study of life histories. Three problems that confront research on social mobility are discussed: the need to take into account precise numbers, the definition of major social divisions & of their relations, & the use of causality models in a longitudinal approach. C. Waters.

88T1266

Bogard, William (Whitman Coll, Walla Walla WA 99362). Reply to Denzin: Postmodern Social Theory. Sociological Theory, 1987, 5, 2, fall, 206-209.

Reply, 209-211.

¶ Norman K. Denzin's classification of postmodernist writers & interpretation of their works (see SA 35 3/87R5462) are criticized on the basis that postmodernist social theory is highly diverse, & its multiplicity of styles, critiques, & methodologies resists classification. In addition, it is argued that much of postmodernism is neither relevant to nor compatible with sociological inquiry, thus, its value to contemporary US sociology is doubtful. In Reply to Bogard: Postmodern Social Theory, Denzin (U of Illinois, Urbana) counters the claim that he has misinterpreted major postmodern theorists, & reiterates his analyses of Jean Baudrillard, Michel Foucault, Jurgen Habermas, & Jacques Derrida. It is argued that modern social theory & US academic sociology are out of touch with society, itself, & with what is occurring in neighboring fields where a critical, interpretive postmodernist project has taken hold. 11 References. K. Hyatt.

88T1267

Bossy, John (U York, Heslington YO1 5DD England). The Mass as a Social Institution 1200-1700, Past and Present, 1983, 100, Aug, 29-61.

¶ Max Weber's conception of the Judeo-Christian tradition as evolving toward a universalized ethic is applied to a specific historical issue: the significance of the Mass in the Christianity of medieval & Reformation Europe. The Mass throughout this period had an invariant sequence of events: an introductory psalm, a confession of sin, an announcement of redemption, a series of declarations of faith, the preparation for the sacrifice, the offering & sharing of the bread & wine, & a concluding phase including the blessing of the congregation. The Mass was thought of as commemorating the establishment of peace between God & man, between angels & man, & between man & man; & as unifying into one community the living & the dead. Paradoxically, part of the Mass devoted to prayer for the dead was often used as a vehicle for magical attacks on living enemies whose names were inserted into it in the hope that God would kill them. The Mass was a composite in character, derived from public worship & from private cults, the eucharist was in origin domestic & was not incorporated into the Mass until the Carolingian period. The kiss of peace formed an element of the Mass throughout the Middle Ages. The Reformation excluded the kiss of peace, though reluctantly, because it seemed to define Christianity as a relationship among human beings & not between the solitary soul & God. Yet their efforts created no sacred symbol as powerful as the Host, whose use they also condemned. W. H. Stoddard.

88T1287

Huonot, Patrick. Conseil de prud'hommes: un exemple de prise de décision dans un contexte institutionnel (Conciliation Board: An Example of Decision Making in an Institutional Context). Revue française de Sociologie, 1987, 28, 3, July-Sept., 453-481. (FRE)

¶ An investigation of the institution of conseil de prud'hommes (conciliation boards) in France & of the role of these boards in the area where the legal system & industrial relations overlap. The structure of the boards & changes made by the laws of 1979, 1982, & 1986 are examined. A board is a fully qualified court of law dealing with individual rights cases, & is formed of elected judges, employers, & employees, whose attitudes, beliefs, & representations are likely to be heterogeneous & even antagonistic. Interviews conducted with 200 board members in the Paris area, as well as 15 lawyers, 6 appeals judges, & 13 other officials, are used to examine the processes of institutional homogenization. The mechanisms of this process of attitude change & institutional socialization are analyzed in terms of social role theory. 2 Tables, 2 Figures. Modified HA

88T1288

Kaminski, Antoni Z., Monopoly and Competition: Power as a State and Power as a Process. ♦ The Polish Sociological Bulletin, 1983, 1-4(61-64), 5-26.

¶ An analysis of power in society as expressed in various institutional forms of monopoly & competition utilizing the theory of Max Weber. The concepts of monopoly & competition are defined & discussed, & problems of monopoly & competition are related to problems of power in society. Three examples are elaborated: (1) exclusive access to social positions, (2) exclusivity in producing &/or providing specific goods & services, & (3) exclusive control of the ways a group performs its social function. Additional examples of mixed cases are discussed, & relevant theories of Max Weber are applied. Two dominant political systems: state bureaucracy & democratic institutions in modern society are analyzed in these terms, & their political doctrines are seen as incompatible & producing two different forms of monopoly & competition. F. Rasmussen

88T1289

Katovich, Michael A. (Dept. Sociology Texas Christian U., Fort Worth 76129). Durkheim's Macrofoundations of Time: An Assessment and Critique. WM The Sociological Quarterly, 1987, 28, 3, Sept., 367-385.

¶ Toile Durkheim's theory of time is assessed in reference to his theory of transactions (organic solidarity). Specifically, Durkheim associated time with a metaphorical conception of the transaction that separated: (1) macrofoundations from microstates, & (2) external constraints from subjective states. This separation led to a conception of time as dominated by linear, rigid sequential, & categorical images. Counterposed to this metaphor are more dynamic, interpersonal, & cybernetic conceptions of temporality & transactions, which can be integrated with Durkheim's scheme to suggest another way of bridging the micro-macro distinction through the use of time & temporality. This integration is discussed in relation to five conceptions of time that are used to evaluate & critique Durkheim's macrofoundations: (1) the evolutionary-transformational, (2) the categorical, (3) the iterative, (4) the rigid sequential, & (5) the negotiated sequential. It is suggested that Durkheim's emphasis on the rigid sequential conception can inform & be informed by modern-day emphases on iterative & negotiated sequential conceptions. 116 References. HA

88T1290

Kemper, Theodore D. (Dept. Sociology Saint Johns U., Jamaica NY 11439). How Many Emotions Are There? Wedding the Social and the Autonomic Components. WM American Journal of Sociology, 1987, 93, 2, Sept., 263-289.

It is argued that the number of possible emotions is limitless. As long as society differentiates new social situations, labels them, & socializes individuals to experience them, new emotions will continue to emerge. His view, however, must be qualified by an understanding of the autonomic constraints that limit variability in the experience of emotions. Our physiologically grounded primary emotions—fear, anger, depression, & satisfaction—are identified that are evolutionarily important, cross-culturally universal, ontogenetically early to emerge, & link empirically with important outcomes of social relations. Secondary notions—eg, guilt, shame, pride, gratitude, love, nostalgia, ennui, etc.—are acquired through socializing agents who define & label such emotions, while the individual is experiencing the autonomic reactions of one of the primary emotions. Hence, it is argued, guilt is a socialized response to arousal of the physiological conditions of fear, shame to those of anger, pride to those of satisfaction, etc. This integration of primary with secondary emotions incorporates the contributions of both positivist & social constructionist positions in the sociology of emotions. 1 Figure, 119 References. HA

88T1291

Kiezková, Zuzana (Prievokské 15/A, 80100 Bratislava Czechoslovakia). Vzájomný vzťah sociálnej a biologickej dedičnosti (Mutual Relation of Social and Biological Heredity). Filozofia, 1978, 33, 6, 649-653. (CZF)

¶ The relationship of the social & biological sciences is explored through a development of the concept of social heredity. This concept refers to the transmission of material & intellectual culture from one generation to another, which results in the formation of another human nature. The biological evolutionary process that produced the human species gave its individual members the ability to accept the social program. Social heredity has become dominant over biological heredity in the course of human evolution, representing a dialectical negation of the biological. The result is incomparably faster dynamic development. Individual acceptance of social heredity forms the necessary precondition of further creative activity. 2 References. Modified AA

88T1292

Krackhardt, David (Cornell U., Ithaca NY 14853). Cognitive Social Structures. Social Networks, 1987, 9, 2, June, 109-134.

¶ There are problems within the area of network analysis that can be fruitfully explored with cognitive social structures (CSS); such structures can be modeled as three-dimensional network structures. A definition of such structures is presented, along with a review of some of the problems CSS might address. Three types of aggregations of CSS slices, locally aggregated structures, & consensus structures are proposed to reduce CSS to a tractable two dimensions for analysis. As an illustration, the CSS of a management team of a small manufacturing firm is analyzed comparing all three types of aggregations. 4 Tables, 3 Figures, 1 Appendix, 40 References. HA

88T1293

Kunzler, Jan (Institut Soziologie Lehrstuhl Soziologie II U. Wurzburg, D-8700 Federal Republic Germany). Grundlagenprobleme der Theorie symbolisch generalisierter Kommunikationsmedien bei Niklas Luhmann (Basic Problems of Niklas Luhmann's Theory of Generalized Media of Communication). Zeitschrift für Soziologie, 1987, 16, 5, Oct., 317-333. (GER)

¶ Niklas Luhmann's theory of generalized media of communication (eg, "Generalized Media and the Problem of Contingency" in Explorations in General Theory in Social Science: Essays in Honour of Talcott Parsons, Loubser, J. J., et al. (Eds.), New York: The Free Press, 1976) is compared with Talcott Parsons's original theory (eg, Zur Theorie der sozialen Interaktionsmedien (On the Theory of Social Media of Interaction), Opladen: Westdeutscher Verlag, 1980). Fundamental differences that motivated Luhmann's radical revisions are identified. The inconsistencies between the two theories are seen to be generated by the precarious relation between media & language: the concept of a code is inherently ambiguous, the intimate relations among truth, logic, & science as a social system neglect the logicity of language; & the supposed communicative function of language contradicts its own evolution. Luhmann's attempt to assign to language a merely marginal role renders questionable the conclusiveness of his theory. 2 Tables, 48 References. Modified HA

88T1294

Ledrut, Raymond (U. Toulouse II, F-31058 Cedex France). Société réelle et société imaginaire (Real Society and Imaginary Society). Cahiers Internationaux de Sociologie, 1987, 34, 82, Jan-June, 41-56. (FRE)

¶ A discussion of the role of social fiction, & of the relationship between the real & the fictional. Social fiction is both static & dynamic. In its dynamic aspect, it offers a way of testing out the images & fictions arising from discoveries in the social field, & thus enables real societies to change. Fiction is a moving force at the core of the real society. Modified HA

& Society, 1987, 4, 1, Feb, 31-54

1 Max Weber's statement of a close connection between formal rationalization, bureaucratization & expansion of hierarchy is scrutinized, along with his prognosis for the modern man to be led through this development in an "iron cage." While the increase of bureaucratization proves consistent with real development, it is doubted whether Weber was correct in his prognosis of increasing formal rationality. postmaterialist values can be taken as deviations from the path of rationalization, & empirical research on organizations constantly highlights bureaucratic organizations that are seemingly irrational or even anarchic. Moreover, the prognosis of expanding hierarchies proves generally wrong: in the majority of social spheres of action, the trend toward a dismantling of hierarchical structure seems to be dominant. It is argued that the technical change unleashed by the processes of rationalization has led to an increase in performance that is supported by varying strata of authority. This development has entailed a change in the power structure, which has been strengthened by the trend toward individualization. P. Boy & A. Schade

88T1279

Haines, Valerie A. (Dept Sociology U Calgary, Alberta T2N 1N4), Biology and Social Theory: Parson's Evolutionary Theme, ♦ Sociology, 1987, 21, 1, Feb, 19-39

The evolutionary theme of the sociology of Talcott Parsons Societies: Evolutionary and Comparative Perspectives, Englewood Cliffs, NJ: Prentice Hall, 1966) relates his theory of sociocultural evolution to the theory of organic evolution & the general theory of action systems. Parson's assumptions about the nature of change & the nature of what is changing follow from his use of A. F. Emerson's theory of group election ("Homeostasis and Comparison of Systems" in Grinker, R. [ed], Toward a Unified Theory of Human Behavior, New York: Basic Books, 1956, 147-163) as a source analogy. Parsonian evolutionism's fit to the general theory of action & Parson's exclusion of action from his evolutionary theory both follow from his holistic conception of the part-whole relationship. An improved theory of sociological evolution can be achieved by adopting individual selection as a source metaphor. 1 Table, 1 Reference. Modified HA

88T1280

Hajek, Karol (Instit Philosophy & Sociology Slovak Academy Sciences, Obrancov Mieru 49 81438 Bratislava (Czechoslovakia)), K otazkam funkčnej integrácie komponentov spoločnosti (Questions of Functional Integration of Social Components), Filozofia, 1983, 38, 6, 717-727 (CZF)

Regularities in the process of social change cannot be regarded as social laws in themselves, but only as products of the operation of other laws, not only social but biological & geological. A proper approach to social change requires penetration to regularities in social structure. Functional integration of components of social structures leads to the concept of the basic relations of the organization of social laws. 5 References. Modified HA

11T1281

Hedge, Sasheej (Dept Sociology Bangalore U, 560056 Karnataka State India), 'Law' in the Sociology of Durkheim, ♦ Guru Nanak Journal of Sociology, 1986, 7, 2, Oct, 1-11

Although Emile Durkheim did not produce a detailed sociological study of law, his writings on law are of considerable extent & provide a major reference point for sociological theorizing about law. An attempt is made here to synthesize these writings into an intelligible design & to interpret the views on society & law that are developed in Durkheim's various writings. Durkheim's view made a central distinction between positive relations which arose from the Dofl, & were cooperative in character & negative relations such as were governed by property law, the law of personal rights. Durkheim saw law, like morality & religion, as a manifestation of collective action & as a source of social order. Modified HA

T1282

Helmes-Hayes, Richard C. (New Coll U Toronto, Ontario M5S 1A1), "A Dualistic Vision": Robert Ezra Park and the Classical Ecological Theory of Social Inequality, in The Sociological Quarterly, 1987, 28, 3, Sept, 387-409

Although struggle, domination, competition, & hierarchy were central concerns of Robert Park & the human ecologists during the 1920s & 30s, they did not specifically set out to articulate a comprehensive theory of social inequality in their work. Indeed, the period of Chicago school dominance has been portrayed by some analysts as one during which sociologists for the most part ignored the study of social inequality. It is suggested here, by contrast, that social inequality was a central focus of the human ecological perspective & the basic assumptions, intellectual origins, components, structure, & logic of the classical ecological account of inequality are outlined. 62 References. HA

88T1283

Héran, François (Institut national études démographiques, 27 rue du Commandeur F-75014 Paris France), La Seconde Nature de l'habitus. Tradition philosophique et sens commun dans le langage sociologique (The Second Nature of Habitus: Philosophical Tradition and Common Sense in Sociological Language), Revue française de Sociologie, 1987, 28, 3, July-Sept, 385-416 (FRE)

1 An analysis of Pierre Bourdieu's use of the notions of "habitus," "scheme," "ethos," & "reactivation" reveals some unsuspected links between sociological theory & established philosophical traditions: (1) Aristotelianism, which retranslates linguistic structures, the effects of which persist in ordinary speech, & which are revealed by etymological studies, & (2) phenomenology, which uses the notions of habitus & scheme in the context of a theory of perception & judgment. This sociological reactivation of the philosophical habitus leads to problems of interpretation, which can most appropriately be elucidated by habitus theory. 40 References. Modified HA

88T1284

Hirsch, Paul, Michael, Stuart & Friedman, Ray (Graduate School Business U Chicago, IL 60637), "Dirty Hands" versus "Clean Models": Is Sociology in Danger of Being Seduced by Economics?, Theory and Society, 1987, 16, 3, May, 317-336

1 During the past decade, economics & sociology have increasingly focused their attention on the same topics, but without a similar convergence of assumptions or methods or policy implications. The two disciplines are systematically contrasted. Most basically, economics assumes that human beings act as individuals in a rationally self-interested manner, while sociologists regard all these assumptions as questionable. Economics offers clean theoretical models, while sociology offers empirical data that fit such models poorly. A debate between James Scott (The Moral Economy of the Peasant, New Haven: Yale U Press, 1976) & Samuel Popkin (The Rational Peasant, Berkeley: U of California Press, 1979) over the behavior of peasant farmers illustrates these differences. Though economics gains theoretical power from its basic assumptions, it also suffers a lack of diversity in methods of analysis & a lack of empirical data. Sociology, though relatively chaotic, cannot benefit from imitating economics. 2 Tables. W. H. Stoddard

88T1285

Holzinger, Wolfgang (Institut Soziologie U Klagenfurt, A-9020 Austria), Die Entstehung der menschlichen Gesellschaft als ethnogenetischer Prozess: Ein Beitrag zur evolutionären Ethnosoziologie (The Formation of Human Society as an Ethnogenetic Process. A Contribution to Evolutionary Ethnosoziologie), Österreichische Zeitschrift für Soziologie, 1987, 12, 1, 3-22 (GER)

1 Some reflections on recent research on ethnosociology & ethnic minorities are presented. An attempt is made to develop a general theory of ethnicity within the framework of a Marxist theory of capitalist society. It is found that the concept of ethnicity is too complex to be explained by social theory. Some suggestions are made for new vocabulary terms to designate early types of social structure, in order to break away from conventional concepts concerning the development of human society. 1 Schema, 71 References, C. Waters

88T1286

Hsu, Tsung-kuo (Dept Sociology National Chung Hsin U, Taichung Republic China), Title appears in Chinese (Generating Grounded Theory from Fieldwork Data), Kuo Li Tai-wan Ta Hsueh She Hui Hsueh K'an/National Taiwan University Journal of Sociology, 1986, 18, Nov, 51-62. (CHI)

1 An introduction to the grounded theory approach & the use of field methods in collecting qualitative data with which to develop hypotheses empirically. Illustrations on how to use the principles of grounded theory & the procedures of fieldwork are drawn from personal experiences in research on the quality of worklife among Chinese white-collar workers in Houston, Tex. 8 References. Modified HA not conceived of as a feature of his work, formal analysis is not incompatible with a temporal approach to the study of social life. Issues of temporality as they appeared in the work of Georg Simmel are discussed by first presenting some general comments about his work & its status within the discipline, as well as some problems present in his writings that contribute to confusion regarding his views on temporality as well as formal sociology itself. His views on temporality as they relate to his dualistic perspective are discussed, along with his evolutionary epistemology. The ways in which Simmel's view of temporality could enhance current sociological inquiry are discussed. 23 References. HA

88T1304

Mumroe, Robert L. & Mumroe, Ruth H. (Dept Anthropology Pitzer Coll, Claremont CA 91711), Weber's Protestant Ethic Revisited: An African Case, The Journal of Psychology, 1986, 120, 5, Sept., 447-455.

† An investigation of whether introduction of a Protestant ideology into a non-Western society is associated with an orientation toward achievement, based on 1971 data gathered in Kenya from Quaker Abaluyia & non-Quaker Abaluyia ($N = 172$ & 270 , respectively) using a battery of tests & questionnaires. The findings indicate that Quakers emphasize education, hold realistic beliefs about the behaviors bound up with success in their sociocultural system, exhibit health patterns similar to those of educated individuals in developing countries, & have been exposed in childhood to socialization practices that downplay physical punishment. 30 References. Modified HA

88T1305

Pardi, Francesco (Faculty Political Science U Pisa, 56100 Italy), Dall'autoregolazione all'autoreferenza: il ruolo dei media comunicativi nelle nuove teorie sistemiche (From Self-Regulation to Self-Reference: The Role of Communication Media in Recent Systemic Theories), Studi di Sociologia, 1986, 24, 2, Apr-June, 201-214 (ITA)

† The concept of autopoietic or self-referential systems in sociology is examined. Generalized media for change are investigated as a cybernetic hierarchy, which operates not only by selected indications (as in the theory of Talcott Parsons), but also by the production & identification of social actors who constitute the social system. Circularity & self-production are analyzed from the viewpoint of the classic problem of the relationship between observer & observed in the observation of a system. Modified HA

88T1306

Park, Han S. & Mason, T. David (U Georgia, Athens 30602), The Developmental Parameters of Relative Deprivation Theory, UM Studies in Comparative International Development, 1986, 21, 3, fall, 85-117

† Relative deprivation (RD) theory postulates that when sharp reversals in objective conditions are combined with continually rising expectations, the resulting frustration felt by individuals can, under certain conditions, evolve into a revolutionary state of mind. Here, the question of why people's expectations continue to rise in the face of such a sharp decline in their actual ability to satisfy needs is addressed by locating the dynamics of relative deprivation in the context of a broader paradigm of the links between hierarchically ordered human needs & corresponding stages of political development. A four-stage model of the political development process is presented, with each stage corresponding to the regime's efforts to institutionalize the satisfaction of one of four hierarchically ordered levels of individual needs. In this context, it is argued that expectations will adjust downward with respect to the currently dominant level of needs in society, but that when the decline in capabilities threatens the ability of people to satisfy lower levels of needs, needs whose satisfaction has already been institutionalized, they will not adjust their expectations downward, resulting in civil violence. This refinement of RD theory is illustrated by applying it to the Russian Revolution & to the question of why a revolution did not occur in the US during the Great Depression. 5 Figures, 59 References. Modified AA

88T1307

Pletnikov, Yuriy Konstantinovich (Soviet Academy Sciences, Leninsky Prospekt 14 Moscow V-71), Na puti perestroiki: dialektika proizvoditel'nykh sil i proizvodstvennykh otnosheniy (Along the Road of Restructuring: Dialectics of Productive Forces and Production Relations), Voprosy filosofii, 1987, 41, 5, May, 26-41. (RUS)
The USSR economy is now at a pivotal stage of its development. Plans call for an expansion of the economy over the next fifteen years equal to the total expansion of the economy from 1917 to the present. Although technological innovation will be a key element in this expansion, recognition of the important human factor in production will enhance overall quantity & quality of production considerably. More attention must be given to workers' responsibilities in using public property, be it cooperative or state-owned. The introduction of new accounting techniques & market mechanisms should contribute considerably to economic expansion. G. Prostavov

88T1308

Pokol, Béla, A pozitivitás dicserete. Niklas Luhmann "generalizált" jogaszociológiája (The Praise of Positivity: The "Generalized" Sociology of Law of Niklas Luhmann), Szociológia, 1982, 4, 589-596. (HUN)

† Abstract not currently available

88T1309

Reiger, Kerreen (Dept Sociology Phillip Instit Technology, Plenty Rd Bundoora Victoria 3083 Australia), All but the Kitchen Sink: On the Significance of Domestic Science and the Science of Social Theory, Theory and Society, 1987, 16, 4, July, 497-526.

† Australia, like other Western countries, experienced in the early twentieth century a movement for "scientific" reorganization of domestic living patterns & family relationships. The new Mc, especially the human service professions, played a major role in this movement. Historical evidence indicates that after the establishment of a federal government in 1901, Australia pursued a more interventionist policy toward economic & social relations than the US. Between the 1880s & WWI, women's traditional work became redefined as nationally important & as scientifically based. The domestic science movement sought to give women the necessary skills through formal education. Child care was also transformed through professional supervision. An ideology of rationality, science, & hygiene shaped this movement. At the same time, some tensions developed between domestic science experts & advocates of the traditional bourgeois family. Despite the problems of instrumental reason as a basis for human relations, the new movement undermined the traditional patriarchal family, & in some ways prefigured liberal, if not radical, feminism. W. H. Stoddard

88T1310

Romagnoli, Guido (U Trento, I-38100 Italy), Ipotesi per una superamento della "legge ferrea delle oligarchie"/Ein theoretischer Vorschlag zur Überwindung des "ehernen Gesetzes der Oligarchien" (A Hypothesis for Overcoming the "Iron Law of Oligarchy"), Annali di Sociologia/Sociologisches Jahrbuch, 1986, 2(1), 159-167, 168-177. (MUL)

Translated by Ralph Raschen.

† Roberto Michels's elitist theory & its "law" of the inevitability of oligarchy are examined. It is shown that Michels's thematization is heuristically weak. An alternative, general hypothesis is proposed, which remains within the logic of organizational analysis. In particular, reference is made to the field of industrial relations. A dialectic of organizational interests is outlined, which leaves greater freedom to both historical dynamics & individual protagonists. C. Waters

88T1311

Rossetti, Carlo (Istit Cesare Alfieri U Firenze, I-50121 Italy), Marxism and Sectarianism, UM The British Journal of Sociology, 1987, 38, 3, Sept, 414-417.

Reply, 418-420.

† Nicos Mouzelis's critique of epistemology as a resolution to the crisis of Marxist political theory (see SA 32-3/8400579) is criticized for failing to grasp the proper dynamics of political systems & fully evaluate Marxist theory according to a critical research program containing different traditions of scholarship, ie, non-Marxism. It is argued that Marxist theory is in fact not a theory but an ideological label or classification with specific imperialistic assumptions. In A Reply to Carlo Rossetti, Nicos Mouzelis (London School of Economics & Political Science, Aldwych, England) denies that he endorses a sectarian strategy of strictly separating Marxist & non-Marxist political theory, & accuses Rossetti of anti-Marxist hysteria. K. Hyatt

88T1312

Saltman, Michael (Dept Sociology & Anthropology Haifa U, Mount Carmel 31999 Israel), Feudal Relationships and the Law: A Comparison

88T1295

Livolsi, Marino (Insti Sociologia I U Trento, I-38100 Italy). Razionalità individuale e nuove forme d'integrazione sociale/ Individuelle Rationalität und neue Formen der sozialen Integration (Individual Rationality and New Forms of Social Integration). Annali di Sociologia/Sociologisches Jahrbuch, 1986, 2(1), 157-164, 165-173 (MJJL)

Translated by Melke Behrmann.

1 A discussion of the macrosociological systems theory approach in sociology & alternatives to it. An article on this subject by Achille Ardigò is reviewed (see SA 353/87R9268) which discusses the debate begun by Niklas Luhmann & Jürgen Habermas in the early 1970s. It is argued that the systems theory approach is not necessarily the most appropriate for explaining types & forms of social integration in modern society. Sociology's current problem is to understand the constitution of meaning on the level of the actions of individuals or small groups, as well as the development of a moral orientation with plausible values as a collective reference point. The idea of K. Knorr-Cetina & Aaron V. Cicourel in Advances in Social Theory and Methodology: Toward an Integration of Micro and Macro Sociologies (see SA IRPS No. 22/84C00315) that research must shift "from a normative notion of social order to that of a cognitive order" is explored. In an attempt to elucidate the role of the social actor & various aspects of social participation & the private sphere, dimensions of the social & of norms are depicted in graphic form in a Cartesian system of coordinates. It is suggested that social representations substitute for other forms of social organization in times of crisis of the normative order, such as at present. C. Waters

88T1296

Luhmann, Niklas (Sozialwissenschaftliche Fakultät Fachgruppe Soziologie U Konstanz, D-7750 1 Federal Republic Germany). Comments on Legitimation. Current Sociology/La Sociologie Contemporaine, 1987, 35, 2, summer, 109-117

1 Legitimation refers to a process by which something that is, is made to appear as something that should be. The roots of these processes branching out ideologically in large social systems can be found in the justifications of everyday actions on the level of intersubjectivity. In social interaction, one should distinguish between those who "produce" a rhetoric for justifying some particular dimension or arrangement of power, & those who consume such rhetoric. Formal models of legitimation may start from the (hypothetical) identity of producer & consumer to highly differentiated Döhl with respect to production, distribution, & consumption of legitimation constructs. Legitimation may range from ideologies & other symbolic universes referring to whole societies to the level of everyday life intersubjective justifications of actions. Of particular importance seems the intermediate level of "regional" legitimations, as "grand" legitimations become adapted to the needs of everyday life & are applied in nonexpert justificatory processes. The intermediate level provides for legitimations in the most diverse social settings in which the individual is confronted with parts (institutional subsystems, regional variations) of the overall general order. To some extent, modern societies manage without overall legitimations & inclusive symbolic universes & intermediate formerly institutional legitimations have come to suffice. Modified AA

88T1297

Luhmann, Niklas (Marianne Weber Str 13, D-4811 Oerlinghausen Federal Republic Germany). The Representation of Society within Society. Current Sociology/La Sociologie Contemporaine, 1987, 35, 2, summer, 101-108.

In the later eighteenth century, prior to the French Revolution, a basic change occurred in European political concepts. Legitimacy ceased to be a juridical concept & became an attribute of the state as such, though the state's authority was regarded as ecologically limited by social interests. The nature of the new concept of legitimacy is explored through a reading of the eighteenth-century authors Le Mercier & Simon Linguet. The source of legitimacy was the ability to represent the society as a whole within the society, but the old principle of hierarchy has given way to the new principle of functional differentiation, transforming the basis of representation & legitimacy. It is now necessary for the functional system to be endowed with the power of self-legitimation, no system of actions can legitimate any other. W. H. Stoddard

88T1298

Lutt, Jürgen (Sudasiens-Institut U Heidelberg, D-6900 1 Federal Republic Germany). Max Weber and the Vallabacharis, International Sociology, 1987, 2, 3, Sept, 277-287.

1 The Vallabacharis are a Vishnuite sect of Hinduism & form the largest number of the most important Hindu business people up to the present. Max Weber, in his book on Hinduism & Buddhism, devotes about two pages to them, denying a relationship between doctrine & economic performance. Here it is shown that he had to rely on distorted reports about the sect & that there are intriguing similarities between it & later Calvinism. 15 References. HA

88T1299

Magarey, Susan (U Adelaide, South Australia 5001). That Henry Old Chestnut, Free Will and Determinism: Culture vs. Structure, or History vs. Theory in Britain. Comparative Studies in Society and History, 1987, 29, 3, July, 626-639

1 A review essay on E. P. Thompson's The Poverty of Theory and Other Essays (New York & London: Monthly Review Press, 1978); Perry Anderson's Arguments within English Marxism (London: New Left Books & Verso Editions, 1980); Gregor McLennan's Marxism and the Methodologies of History (London: Verso Editions & New Left Books, 1981); & People's History and Socialist Theory (Samuel, Raphael (Ed), London: Routledge & Kegan Paul, 1981 (see listings in IRPS No. 41)). These four books provide the basis for a clearer understanding of recent debates in British Marxist thought between culturalism & structuralism. They address some of the oldest issues in Western thought & reveal the centrality of political engagement to intellectual effort. W. H. Stoddard

88T1300

Malmes, David R. (Dept Sociology Pennsylvania State U, University Park 16802). The Significance of Temporality for the Development of Sociological Theory. The Sociological Quarterly, 1987, 28, 3, Sept, 303-311

1 An introduction to a special issue of The Sociological Quarterly that focuses on temporality & sociological inquiry. Consequences of sociological neglect of temporality & an increasing univocality in sociological work are discussed. It is argued that the incorporation of up-to-date conceptions of temporality into sociological work will contribute to improved theory & better understanding of human social life. 43 References. Modified HA

88T1301

Meadwell, Hudson. Exchange Relations between Lords and Peasants. Archives Europeennes de Sociologie, 1987, 28, 1, 3-49

1 A theoretical discussion of the relationship between lords & peasants develops a model of social exchange. Three aspects of the exchange are defined: what is exchanged, the activities involved, & the significance of the exchange relationship for its participants. This theoretical framework is used to review various studies of peasant revolts in eighteenth-century France. Aspects discussed include the extent of peasant autonomy & exploitation. 2 Tables. C. Waters

88T1302

Miley, James D. (Kansas State U, Manhattan 66506). False Reciprocity and the Theory of Exchange. Free Inquiry in Creative Sociology, 1987, 15, 2, Nov, 157-162

1 Following various scholars, it is argued that the norm of reciprocity is a universal cultural norm. However, in contemporary society the norm appears in a distorted form. It is used to legitimate exploitation by promoting the illusion that, for example, the exchange between capital & labor is an equal one. It is argued that the doctrine of reciprocity or exchange equality lies at the basis of our ideology. G. C. Homans's exchange theory (Human Behavior: Its Elementary Forms, NY: Harcourt, Brace & World, 1961) is critiqued by showing that it reproduces this ideological justification of capitalist relations in a theoretical form. Homans's principle of distributive justice is a version of the norm of reciprocity that converts it from an expectation of rough equivalence in exchange into an expectation of profit, which reflects the distortion of the norm in modern society at the same time as it implies that the profit-maximizing behavior is an aspect of "human nature" & not a product of capitalist social relations. 14 References. AA

88T1303

Molseed, Mari J. (Dept Sociology Pennsylvania State U, University Park 16801). The Problem of Temporality in the Work of Georg Simmel. The Sociological Quarterly, 1987, 28, 3, Sept, 357-366.

1 While Georg Simmel's work is predominantly recognized as contributing to the formal analysis of social interaction, & temporality is an issue lished in Italian, Milan: Ed. di Comunità, 1965), which is considered the highest expression of sociological theory in the previous period, & Niklas Luhmann's work, which represents the most organic polarization in the macrosociological field in contemporary theory. Their approaches are antithetical: Parsons's is based on the concept of institution, & Luhmann's on that of organization. The theory of Michel Crozier is examined: it analyzes the macrosociological level from the viewpoint of the social actor, & is considered complementary to Luhmann's theory. Various theories of social communication are also investigated, it is suggested that they mitigate the radicality of the micro-macro dualism. Modified HA

88T1322

Vaughan, Michaela (U Lancaster, Bailrigg LA1 4YW England). Historical Leaps and Sociological Regularities. In The British Journal of Sociology. 1987, 38, 3, Sept, 421-433

¶ A review of Michael Mann's The Sources of Social Power, Vol. 1: A History of Power from the Beginning to A.D. 1760. (CUP, 1986 [see listing in IRPS No. 41]). Power relations are analyzed from the earliest human societies to the end of traditional agrarian ones, with focus on the times & places in which major ideological, economic, political, & military events determined the sources & flow of power. The widely accepted definition of societies as unitary social systems is rejected in favor of one of "multiple overlapping & intersecting power networks," & conventional assumptions underlying classical sociological & evolutionary theories are challenged. It is argued that civilization was an "abnormal phenomenon," since it involved the state & social stratification, both of which humans had traditionally avoided; its emergence was the result of a backward or cyclical movement rather than a progressive, evolutionary sequence, & its development was often uneven & discontinuous. The work's seeming incompleteness renders many of its arguments unconvincing, however, judgment is suspended until the publication of its two successive volumes, which will trace the developments of industrialized nation states & modern class societies & draw some theoretical conclusions. 1 Reference. K. Hyatt

88T1323

Yoshino, Kosaku (Sophia U, Tokyo 102 Japan). Title appears in Japanese (Developments in and Problems Concerning Theories of Ethnicity: In the Face of "The Ethnic Revival"), Shakaigaku Hyoron/ Japanese Sociological Review, 1987, 37, 4(148), Mar, 392-407. (JPN)

¶ Recent theoretical debate concerning the underlying causes of the revival of ethnic feelings & nationalism in the modern world is summarized, & analyzed in terms of three antagonistic, though associated, perspectives: (1) primordialism-boundary, (2) expressivism-instrumentalism, & (3) perennialism-modernism. It is suggested that much of this theoretical antagonism can be reduced to conflicts between approaches regarding the dimensions of time & space as related to ethnicity. The complementary features of the primordial & boundary approaches are demonstrated by applying the perspective of the "invention of tradition," thereby enabling a more comprehensive explanation of why ethnicity has emerged as such a durable tie in modern society. Modified HA

88T1324

Zerubavel, Eviatar (Dept Sociology State U New York, Stony Brook 11794). The Language of Time: Toward a Semiotics of Temporality. In The Sociological Quarterly. 1987, 28, 3, Sept, 343-356.

¶ Temporality is examined from a semiotic perspective, as a quasi-linguistic system of signification, shedding light on the rudimentary elements of the "language" of time & the way both individuals & societies use them in their speech. It first explores how people manipulate various dimensions of temporality (eg, duration, speed, frequency, timing) as virtual semiotic codes through which they manage to convey various social messages (eg, about priority, importance, commitment, respect, intimacy, informality) without having to articulate them verbally. It then proceeds to show that this schema of symbolic relations between the temporal & the social seems to operate not only at the microsocial level of interpersonal relations but also at the macrosocial level of societal politics. Using the Jewish Sabbath, the Christian Lord's Day, & the French Republican calendar as case studies, the way temporal contrasts are used to substantiate & accentuate social (conceptual, cultural, & political) contrasts is examined. The notion of the "semiotic quadrangle"—which enables the student of symbolic communication to view meaning as a function of an entire system of symbolic associations at both semantic & syntactic levels—is introduced. 1 Figure, 49 References. HA

67 macrosociology: analyses of whole societies

88T1325

Alexander, Jeffrey C. (U California, Los Angeles 90024). The Social Requisites for Altruism and Voluntarism: Some Notes on What Makes a Sector Independent. Sociological Theory. 1987, 5, 2, fall, 165-171

¶ Various social theorists & critics have argued for the possibility of promoting voluntarism & altruism through encouraging production that is neither profit-making nor subject to government control. This "independent sector" has already become widely institutionalized in the US. Two sets of propositions implied by the concept of the independent sector are examined: (1) directly remunerative activity within an organization that sustains itself through profit-making is egotistical rather than altruistic, & (2) state activity will be coercive, while that not organized by the state will be voluntaristic. Focusing on relatively large & institutionalized groups within the independent sector, an attempt is made to demonstrate that these assumptions do not hold; rather, they reflect distorted ideas about the egotistical nature of capitalist markets & misunderstandings about political control. The internal environments of such organizations & factors that influence employee motivation & allow groups to achieve self-regulation are investigated. Three factors are found to be of primary importance: (A) the relationship between the central state, legal system, & citizens; (B) the kind of knowledge involved in organizational decision making, & (C) the general cultural codes that regulate organizational authority. 3 Tables, 14 References. K. Hyatt

88T1326

Brustein, William (U Utah, Salt Lake City 84112). Review Essay: From 17th Century Tax Rebellions to 20th Century Student Protests: The Evolution of Popular Contention in France. In Journal of Political and Military Sociology. 1987, 15, 1, spring, 119-123.
A review essay on Charles Tilly's The Contentious French: Four Centuries of Popular Struggle (Cambridge, Mass: Belknap Press of Harvard U Press, 1986 [see abstract of book in IRPS No. 32/86c00632; see listing in IRPS No. 41]). A morphology of French collective action that traces the evolution of both revolutionary & nonrevolutionary protests from the seventeenth century through 1984. It is argued that the changing history of contention in France can be attributed to the development of capitalism & the concentration of power in the national state, which shaped the interests, opportunities, & organizations of the people & influenced their forms of collective action. 12 References. Modified HA

88T1327

Butenko, Anatoliy Pavlovich (Soviet Academy Sciences, Leninsky Prospekt 14 Moscow V-71). Teoreticheskie problemy sovreshnovaniya novogo stroya: o sotsial'noekonomicheskoy prirode cheloveka (Theoretical Problems of Perfecting a New Social Structure. On the Social and Economic Nature of Socialism). Voprosy filosofii. 1987, 41, 2, Feb, 17-29. (RUS)

¶ The Twenty-Seventh Congress of the USSR Communist Party paid considerable attention to theoretical & practical problems of perfecting the socialist system. A review of the dialectics of socialist development in the USSR reveals a continuous interplay of forces shaping government policy. In this light, special attention is given to expected trends in USSR social sciences over the next twenty years, the treatment of the nature of socialism during this period, & recent attempts to liberate the social sciences from the narrow dogmatism & prejudices that retard the development of new perspectives more in tune with current social realities. G. Prostavov

88T1328

Cassen, Robert Harvey (Harvard U, Cambridge MA 02138). India: Population, Economy, Society. * Dissertation Abstracts International, A. The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 47, 12(1), June, 4524-A.
Available from UMI, Ann Arbor MI. Order No. DA8704395.

the Enquiry. ♦ UW Comparative Studies in Society and History, 1987, 29, 3, July, 514-532

† It is argued that historic rights that were once meaningful in a given social context are transformed by the courts, over time, into abstract & formal legal propositions. This is seen as a function of increasingly centralized political sovereignty. The argument assumes that similar structural contexts will give rise to similar legal issues & to a correspondingly similar legal logic in the resolution of these issues. The process is demonstrated by comparing the development of land law in England during the twelfth & thirteenth centuries with the emergence of land law among the East African Busoga tribe during the 1930s. The findings indicate that similarities in the structural dimensions of the two situations, linked with a historical process of ever-increasing political centralization, have elicited a similar logical response in patterns of legal thinking. The data are based on bibliographical sources, ethnographies & both primary & secondary historical sources. 25 References. AA

88T1313

Schwartz, Martin D. (Dept Sociology & Anthropology Ohio U, Athens 45701). Censorship of Sexual Violence: Is the Problem Sex or Violence?. ♦ Humanity and Society, 1987, 11, 2, May, 212-243

† Although the mass media & many academics portray the feminist position on pornography as a unified whole, in fact a bitter debate within feminist theory has been taking place. Here, an effort is made to separate out the various issues underlying these debates, including, whether it is sex or violence being objected to, the perceived role of pornography in various feminist theories, pornography vs erotica, the problems of performing experimental lab studies, & the role of censorship. It is argued that the effect of violent media on behavior can be examined apart from questions on sexual images, & that efforts to restrict media representations are better directed against violence than sexual violence. Women & men concerned about violence have much to learn from interest groups that have made it unacceptable for mass media to glorify animal torture or violence against blacks or Jews, in a campaign to reduce the glorification of violence against all humans. 109 References. Modified AA

88T1314

Siracky, Andrej (Slovenská Akadémia Vied, ul Obrancov Mieru 41 (S-81438 Bratislava Czechoslovakia), K otázke spoločenského a myšlienkového pokroku (On the Question of Social and Ideological Progress), Filozofia, 1980, 35, 6, 575-600 (CZE)

† Criteria are sought for the evaluation of social & ideological progress. Vague concepts of "change" are rejected in favor of specifically enumerated criteria. In the historical-social process, the social & theoretical "reality" penetrate each other dialectically. In the objective process, an increasingly active, conscious, programmatic activity of classes & masses asserts itself. Problems of social & ideological situations under socialism are considered in detail. Criticism & self-criticism are found to be important factors of social & ideological progress in terms of the general model of progress. Modified HA

88T1315

Smith, Ruth L. (Dept Humanities Worcester Polytechnic Instit, MA 01609). Morality and Perceptions of Society: The Limits of Self-Interest. ♦ UW Journal for the Scientific Study of Religion, 1987, 26, 3, Sept, 279-293

The constructs of self-interest & self-sacrifice are analyzed. It is argued that the "self"-perspective is tied to certain historical assumptions in liberalism that bias our views on human nature, institutions, & social relations. The perspective of mutuality is proposed as one way to conceptualize our understanding of social & moral relations & thus move beyond the incongruity between individualism & morality. 44 References. Modified HA

8T1316

Sola, Giorgio (U Genoa, I-16126 Italy). Leadership e oligarchia nel pensiero di R. Michels/Führertum und Oligarchie in der Lehre Michels' (Leadership and Oligarchy in the Thought of R. Michels), Annali di Sociologia/Soziologisches Jahrbuch, 1986, 2(1), 127-141, 142-157. (MUL)

Translated by Claudia Manica.

Roberto Michels's sociology of leadership is discussed. Recent criticism has identified as the central theme of Michels's work the analysis of the factors & tendencies that favor the rise of oligarchy within the political system. Here, Michels's analysis is traced, focusing on the various aspects of leadership: in general, in political leadership, in party leadership, & in oligarchy of the party. Three types of factors involved are identified: organizational factors, factors of individual psychology, & those of mass psychology. However, it is noted that Michels does not provide a thorough analysis of the process of cooptation. C. Waters

88T1317

Swedberg, Richard, Himmelstrand, Ulf & Brulin, Göran (U Stockholm, S-106 91 Sweden). The Paradigm of Economic Sociology: Premises and Promises, Theory and Society, 1987, 16, 2, Mar, 169-213

† An attempt is made to revive & revitalize economic sociology as a specific subfield of sociology. The major principles or premises of economic sociology are contrasted with those of neoclassical economics drawing on the works of, eg, Max Weber, Karl Marx, Joseph Schumpeter, Talcott Parsons, & Mark Granovetter. It is argued that these two perspectives differ as to (1) concept of the actor, (2) arena of action, (3) types of economic action, (4) result of economic actions, (5) view of the analyst, (6) concept of time, & (7) general scientific method. Two case studies are presented that illustrate the usefulness of economic sociology: one is devoted to the "new managerial philosophies," & the other to various theories of economic democracy. 5 Figures. Modified AA

88T1318

Swistak, Piotr Thomasz (U Chicago, IL 60637). Theory of Models and the Social Sciences. ♦ Dissertation Abstracts International, A The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 1, July, 231-A. Unavailable from UMI; contact the degree-granting university.

88T1319

Turčan, Ladovít (Instit Philosophy & Sociology Slovak Academy Sciences, Obrancov Mieru 49 81438 Bratislava Czechoslovakia), Spoločnosť a ideológia (Society and Ideology), Filozofia, 1980, 35, 6, 647-658 (CZE)

† The writings of Czechoslovakian A. Siracky (eg, see Problémy a perspektivy socializmu (Problems and Perspectives of Socialism), Bratislava, 1972) discuss three main aspects of ideology: (1) as a component of social consciousness, (2) as an element in propaganda & ideological-educational work; & (3) as an element in contemporary bourgeois theories & conceptions. Emphasized here are the first two aspects in an attempt to define the concept of ideology in terms of Marxist-Leninist philosophy. It is the fundamental characteristic of ideology that it works as a specific reflection of social reality in the spiritual life of society. 12 References. Modified HA

88T1320

Turner, Stephen P. (U South Florida, Saint Petersburg 33701). Underdetermination and the Promise of Statistical Sociology, Sociological Theory, 1987, 5, 2, fall, 172-184

† The lack of "progress" in theory is often contrasted to progress in statistical methodology. The relation between the two bodies of thinking is itself problematic, however, for the particular advances in method that have occurred in quantitative sociology reflect a trade-off in which the results are characterized by the radical underdetermination of models by data & a high level of slack between measures & theoretical concepts. Both of these problems are usually understood as matters of "error," & thus as potentially eliminable, but this claim is highly questionable, on grounds evident from Karl Pearson's philosophy of science (The Grammar of Science, 3rd edition, London, Adam & Charles Black, 1911). The implications of large ineliminable error for the project of theory construction, particularly the "formal theory" of Peter M. Blau (Inequality and Heterogeneity: A Primitive Theory of Social Structure, New York, Free Press, 1971), & the Calif Positivists, are discussed. The ease of producing statistical results is an achievement, but one that leads away from theory rather than toward it; because the fact of underdetermination prevents these results from establishing clear cognitive superiority over the results of other "approaches," theoretical diversity is, in a sense, a consequence of the properties of the dominant statistical tradition in sociology. 37 References. HA

88T1321

Vaccarini, Italo (Dept Sociology Catholic U Sacred Heart, I-20123 Milan Italy). Profil macrosociologici nella teoria sociologica contemporanea (Macrosociological Profiles in the Contemporary Sociological Theory), Studi di Sociologia, 1986, 24, 3-4, July-Dec, 316-344. (ITA)

† A comparison between Talcott Parsons's The Social System (pub-sue is taken with Murray's narrow use of national statistics & failure to consider the effects of social factors other than federal policy on moral decline. His belief that ending social welfare programs would provide a negative incentive for the poor is questioned, particularly with respect to his prescription for increased discipline in the schools. He rejects the motivating potential of positive incentives to behave morally, rendering his work "narrowly ideological & inhumane." 7 References K. Hyatt

88T1339

Vidich, Arthur J. & Lyman, Stanford M. (New School Social Research, New York NY 10011), Socijalni pokreti i građansko društvo: teorija socijalnog procesa u američkoj zajednici (Social Movements and Civil Society: A Theory of Social Process in the American Commonwealth), Revija za Sociologiju, 1984, 14, 3-4, July-Dec, 343-351 (SCR)

Translated by Ognjen Caldarić.

1 It is argued that US sociology developed as a substitute for Christian religions, especially Protestantism. This thesis is supported by examination of the works of such sociologists as Paul T. Lazarsfeld (eg. see Main Trends in Sociology (New York: Harper & Row, 1973). Special emphasis is given to contemporary currents of neo-Marxism & to conditions for the formations of autonomous social movements. Modified HA

88T1340

Zunz, Oliver (U Virginia, Charlottesville 22903), Genèse du pluralisme américain (Origins of American Pluralism), Annales, 1987, 42, 2, Mar-Apr, 429-444. (FRE)

1 Two distinct conceptions underlie pluralism: one is inherently political & economic, & is often expressed in the form of interest group politics; the other, inherently cultural & social, is often expressed as a commitment to community life. The origins of both conceptions are traced in US history. The various formulations of pluralistic ideology are related to the decline of de facto pluralism that characterized nineteenth-century US society. Minority groups' search for identity is contrasted with mainstream thinkers' recognition of pluralism as an integral part of US ideology. Modified HA

SAVE FOR FUTURE REFERENCE.

Document Delivery Service

The costs of reproduction are: US $0.25 per reproduced page. Orders must be PREPAID (unprepaid orders cannot be acknowledged or returned) and sent to SOCIOLOGICAL ABSTRACTS, INC. (P.O. Box 22206, San Diego, CA 92122, USA) together with the SA accession number and the complete citation of the document to be reproduced. To calculate price per document, multiply the number of pages as indicated in the citation of the abstract by US $0.25 and add a US $1.50 search fee per document. POSTAGE is EXTRA. Below is a table for postage fees that vary by weight/size of paper.

No. of Pages	US & Canada Postage Fee	All Other Countries
		Postage Fee	Air Mail Surface
1- 5	$0.39	US $1.40	US $1.00
6-10	$0.73	$2.24	$1.90
11-15	$1.07	$2.78	$2.30
16-20	$1.41	$3.32	$2.75
21 +	Additional multiples as above

CONFERENCE papers are available ONLY when the following notation precedes the text of the abstract; ● "Complete paper available from SA Reproduction Service prepaid at $0.25 per page plus $1.50 search and postage. Length: pp." For copies of paper without this notation, write directly to the author, whose address is listed in the citation.

88T1329

Chandler, Charles, Sigelman, Lee & Tsai, Yung-Mei (Texas Tech U., Lubbock 79409). The Division of Labor and Social Disorder: A Cross-National Test of a Durkheimian Interpretation. International Journal of Comparative Sociology 1986, 27, 3-4, Sept-Dec, 161-171

† Emile Durkheim's interpretation of the impact of DoI on social order is reformulated in a manner that takes account of his emphasis on the interactive effect of the DoI & population growth, & then tested in 65 countries using data from the UN Demographic Yearbooks for 1962, 1963, & 1964. Multiple regression analysis reveals that countries with a high degree of social disorder as measured by D. A. Hibbs, Jr.'s internal war index (Mass Political Violence: A Cross-National Causal Analysis, New York: Wiley, 1971) are those with relatively rapid rates of population growth, while disorder is not as common in countries in which there is less population pressure. Furthermore, the DoI does not completely offset the effects of population pressure, indeed, increasing the DoI as a result of industrialization may contribute to the very disorder that it helps alleviate as it interacts with population growth. These results are seen as supporting the reformulation of Durkheim's views, but further testing is needed. 1 Table. 22 References. Modified HA

88T1330

Corradi, Juan E. (Dept Sociology New York U., NY 10003), Argentina Today: The Cultural Mood. ♦ WM Dissent 1987, 34, 1, winter, 21-26

† A series of observations collected during a field trip to Argentina in 1985. It is submitted that there has been a gap between political democratization & cultural development in Argentina since the restoration of civilian rule in 1983. The presence of "cultural deflation" is demonstrated, & several causes for it are suggested. The weak public presence of the younger generation, the strong cultural impact of the Catholic Church, & the redefinition of the intellectual field are presented as the main factors contributing to a moderate & pragmatic culture of civic discourse. In conclusion, the changing role of intellectuals in terms of their new institutional insertion, past experiences, & the interweaving of national & international ideological trends is described. AA

88T1331

Dhnanagare, D. N. (Dept Sociology U. Poona, Ganeshkhind Pune 411007 India), D. D. Konambi, Dialectical Materialism and the Structure and Dynamics of Indian Society. ♦ Sociological Bulletin 1986, 35, 2, Sept, 33-54

† A revised version of a SA 34 3/517816/ISA/1986/4397

88T1332

dos Santos, Wanderley Guilherme (Instit U. Pesquisas Rio de Janeiro, Rua da Matriz 82 Botafogo 22260 Brazil), O estado social da nação (The Social State of the Nation). Dados 1986, 29, 3, 365-391 (POR)

The state of Brazilian society is assessed using a variety of universally accepted indicators. Income distribution & educational levels are examined, focusing on SC, Ur Ru, gender, & regional differences. Results reveal that in Brazil, the vast majority of the people are destitute rather than merely poor. The solution to the income distribution problem does not lie solely in breaking up the concentration at the top of the pyramid, but more fundamentally in rescuing the needy & wretched majority of the nation. 31 Tables, 1 Appendix. Modified HA

88T1333

Fischer-Kowalski, Marina (Postfach 114, A-1037 Vienna Austria), Editorial (Editorial), Osterreichische Zeitschrift für Soziologie 1986, 11, 4, 3-6 (GER)

A journal issue devoted to the theme "Body & Music" is introduced with an explanation of the ideas behind its conceptions. A study of ranges in how society affects the body is seen as a response to the need for a materialist subjectivism, certain trends in the ecology & feminist movement are claimed also to respond to such a need. Changes in the social conception of the body are briefly considered from three aspects: (1) the body as instrument of labor, (2) the body as a suffering/pleasure machine, & (3) the body as medium of the social. 6 References. J. Anderson

IT1334

Lochan, Rajiv (Jawaharlal Nehru U., New Delhi 110067 India), A Medley for Subalterns, Contributions to Indian Sociology, New Series, 1987, 21, 1, Jan-June, 225-237

A review essay on Subaltern Studies IV: Writing on South Asian His- tory and Society (Guha, Ranajit [Ed], Delhi: Oxford U. Press, 1985); Rosalind O'Hanlon's Caste, Conflict, and Ideology: Mahatma Jotirao Phule and Low Caste Protest in Nineteenth-Century Western India (Cambridge: Cambridge U. Press, & Bombay: Orient Longman, 1985); R. S. Khare's The Untouchable as Himself: Ideology, Identity, and Pragmatism among the Lucknow Chamars (Cambridge: Cambridge U. Press, 1984); & Chains of Servitude: Bondage and Slavery in India (Patnaik, Utsa, & Dingwaney, Manjari [Eds], Madras: Sangam, 1985 [see listings in IRPS No. 41]). These works reflect a recurring concern in the social sciences with people in positions of subordination, applied to various groups in Indian society. The approaches presented in these works offer a number of contributions, but also several informative but ultimately unsatisfactory & unimaginative analyses. 37 References. W. H. Stoddard

88T1335

Marshall, Gordon, Vogler, Carolyn, Rose, David & Newby, Howard (Dept Sociology U. Essex, Wivenhoe Park Colchester CO4 3SQ England), Distributional Struggle and Moral Order in a Market Society. ♦ Sociology 1987, 21, 1, Feb, 55-73

† The view that novel & fundamental changes in the structure of social hierarchy have altered the basis of distributional conflict in modern GB is challenged. Reference to nineteenth-century developments shows that sectionalism, egoism, & privatism are not peculiar to the present economic recession. It is argued that commentators on the Left & Right alike have oversimplified the relationship between the distributional order of societies on the one hand, & the specific forms taken by distributional conflicts on the other. This means that implications of the lack of a capitalist Sittlichkeit (morality or moral order) for social integration may be quite different from those commonly drawn in recent studies. 1 Table, 66 References. HA

88T1336

Okuyama, Toshio (Tokyo U., Bunkyo-ku Japan), Title in Japanese (An Institutional Study of Organization: A Critical Development of Luhmann's Theory of Organization), Shakaigaku Hyoron/Japanese Sociological Review 1987, 38, 1(149), June, 60-76 (JPN)

† A theoretical perspective is presented of the practical actions of organizations, focusing on the selection of action options available to the organization. An institutional model is developed that illuminates the selection of action options within organizational contexts. Niklas Luhmann's concepts of institution & formal organization are examined, & a series of procedures based on formalization of option selections are analyzed. Modified HA

88T1337

Roebroek, Joop M. (Subfaculteit Sociale Zekerheidswetenschap Katholiek U. Brabant, NL-5000 LE Tilburg Netherlands), De dynamiek van na-oorlogse welvaartsstaten. Enige theoretische aanzetten tot een vergelijkende analyse van sociale politiek (The Dynamics of Post-War Welfare States: Some Theoretical Points toward a Comparative Analysis of Social Politics), Tijdschrift voor Sociologie 1987, 8, 1, 3-25 (DUT)

† It is conventionally held that Western welfare states developed convergently between 1955 & 1975, & that the economic crisis emphasizes this convergent trend. It is argued here that since the mid 1970s, welfare states have diverged into two groups: strong welfare states such as Sweden & soft welfare states such as the Netherlands. A comparison of these two states suggests that the major causes of this divergence can be found in welfare politics, & emerge from a long historical process of the development of power relations that is rooted in the early 1930s. 2 Tables, 4 Figures, 16 References. Modified HA

88T1338

Rury, John L. (Coll. Education Ohio State U., Columbus 43210), The New Moral Darwinism. ♦ Urban Education 1986, 21, 3, Oct, 316-324

† A review essay on Charles Murray's Losing Ground: American Social Policy, 1950-1980 (New York: Basic Books, 1984 [see listing in IRPS No. 41]). Murray's argument that the growth of federal social welfare programs in the US during the 1960s actually demeaned rather than helped the poor, sapping their moral fiber, is refuted. Parallels are drawn to early Social Darwinist beliefs. Murray's "moral Darwinism" holds that the poor are fundamentally immoral, & by rewarding people for remaining poor, federal policies promote irresponsibility, immoral behavior, unemployment, unfettered fertility, educational decline, & crime. Is-

0300 social psychology

09 interaction within (small) groups

88T1341

Aspin, Larry T. (Dept Political Science Bradley U, Peoria IL 61625). Modeling Behavior with Attribute Disparity: Implicit Relationships between Attribute Magnitudes and Aggregated Behavior, Quality and Quantity. 1987, 21, 2, 177-197

† Two measures of disparity—relative & absolute distance—are used to show that operationalizations of attribute disparity are logically linked to attribute magnitudes & monadic behavior. This existing integration of both explanatory devices & cases for analysis that have been incorrectly portrayed as competitors has a number of implications. Discussed consequences include the use of monadic patterns as empirical screening devices for dyadic models & the need for new uses of attributes in the dyad so that the dyadic model has appropriate inherent monadic assumptions. 3 Figures, 15 References HA

88T1342

Babad, Elsha Y. & Kuriloff, Peter J. (Dept Education Hebrew U Jerusalem, Mount Scopus Israel). Learning from Trainer Interventions in Small Groups: A Function of Participant and Observer Roles. Small Group Behavior, 1986, 17, 4, Nov, 427-443

† Graduate students (N = 28) in a group processes course participated in 2 unstructured small groups, serving either as participants or observers in each group & producing scale ratings of 200 interventions by the trainer for contribution to their learning. Interventions were then grouped into conceptual dimensions & clusters according to a model developed by P. J. Kuriloff, E. Y. Babad, M. Samuel-Singer, & K. Sutton-Smith ("Teaching and Learning in Small Groups: A Conceptual Analysis of Trainer Interventions," Small Group Behavior, 1984, 15, 187-203). Participants & observers had a similar learning profile, stressing the significance of the trainer as a teacher connecting conceptually ongoing group events to larger social & cultural phenomena. Differences between the learning of participants & observers were found for clusters of interventions emphasizing trainer's authority, members' responsibility, & members' abstract (existential) vs concrete anxiety (about personal inadequacy & interpersonal intimacy). 2 Tables, 3 References HA

88T1343

Beattie, Martha Cook (Boston U, MA 02215). Practices of Blaming and Explaining: An Ethnomethodological Approach. * Dissertation Abstracts International, A: The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 47, 11, May, 4193-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor MI. Order No. DA8704795.

88T1344

Blodgett, Billy Paul (North Texas State U, Denton 76203). The Change of Individual Opinions through Gender-Related Group Influence: An Empirical Study of College Students. * Dissertation Abstracts International, A: The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 47, 11, May, 4193-A-4194-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor MI. Order No. DA8705175.

88T1345

Brown, Rupert & Wade, Gillian (Social Psychology Research Unit Beverley Farm U Canterbury, Kent Christchurch 1 New Zealand). Superordinate Goals and Intergroup Behaviour: The Effect of Role Ambiguity and Status on Intergroup Attitudes and Task Performance. ♦ European Journal of Social Psychology, 1987, 17, 2, Apr-June, 131-142.

† In an examination of the effects of role ambiguity & relative group status in an intergroup situation where a superordinate goal was salient, 156 English Coll students, in groups of 3, undertook a cooperative task under conditions where the groups' roles were clearly different, similar, or not allocated, & the groups' perceived competence at the task was either equally high, equally low, or unequal. Financial rewards were contingent on successful completion of the joint task. Results indicated that friendliness toward the outgroup decreased with increasing role ambiguity, & that mutual evaluations tended to reflect the consensually agreed status differences: least bias was shown toward high status outgroups, most by high status ingroups. In addition, judges' ratings of the group products were found to be more favorable as role ambiguity increased, in contrast to the friendliness data. Implications of these findings for social identity theory, the contact hypothesis, & theories of group performance are discussed. 3 Tables, 30 References HA

88T1346

DeSanctis, Gerardine & Gallupe, R. Brent (Management Sciences Dept U Minnesota, Minneapolis 55455). A Foundation for the Study of Group Decision Support Systems. ♦ Management Science, 1987, 33, 5, May, 589-609

† A presentation of a conceptual overview of group decision support systems (GDSS) a combination of communication, computing, & decision support technologies that facilitate formulation & resolution of unstructured problems by groups based on an information-exchange perspective of decision making. Three levels of systems are described, representing varying degrees of intervention into the decision process. A multidimensional taxonomy of systems is proposed as an organizing framework for research in the area. Three environmental contingencies are identified as critical to GDSS design: group size, member proximity, & the task confronting the group. Potential impacts of GDSS on group processes & outcomes are discussed, & important constructs in need of study are identified. 4 Tables, 2 Figures, 90 References Modified HA

88T1347

Ettn, Mark F., Within the Group's View: Clarifying Dynamics through Metaphoric and Symbolic Imagery. Small Group Behavior, 1986, 17, 4, Nov, 407-426

† The use of metaphoric & symbolic imagery to clarify & work through group dynamics is explored. With an eye toward tying imagery interventions to a therapeutic rationale, various levels of group intervention (individual, interpersonal, & group-as-a-whole) are discussed, & therapeutic goals at each level are specified. Clinical vignettes serve to explicate how imagery work might enhance these therapeutic goals, while being naturally worked into the ongoing flow of the group's process. 42 References. HA

88T1348

Glisson, Charles (School Social Work U Hawaii, Honolulu 96822). The Group versus the Individual as the Unit of Analysis in Small Group Research. Social Work with Groups, 1986, 9, 3, fall, 15-30.

† It is common for social work researchers to use the individual as the unit of analysis in small group research. The discrepancies that may exist between analyses that incorporate the individual & those that incorporate the group as the unit of analysis are examined. An example is presented with data collected from 331 members of 53 workgroups in 22 different human service organizations (neither methodology nor population defined). Researchers are cautioned against drawing conclusions about groups from data based on the individual as the unit of analysis. 3 Tables, 3 Figures, 9 References HA

88T1349

Gurdin, J. Barry, The Therapy of Friendship. Small Group Behavior, 1986, 17, 4, Nov, 444-457

† In rediscovering clinical sociology, the therapeutic aspects of some former investigations of friendship become evident. Moreover, sociologists & other scholars have long noted that the relationship of friendship contributes to mental health. Consequently, they have developed various interventions to promote friendship, from describing & quantifying it to designing programs to help the friendless. 2 Tables, 44 References HA

88T1350

Jackson, Eugene (Dept Sociology & Anthropology Purdue U, West Lafayette IN 47907). Behavior in Groups as a Predictor of Internal Empathy and Communicated Empathy. Social Work with Groups, 1987, 10, spring, 3-16

† Group behavior—measured by retrospective ratings of the Bales SYMLOG (Bales, R. F., & Cohen, S. P., SYMLOG: A System for the Mul-

EUROPEAN JOURNAL OF SOCIAL PSYCHOLOGY

1987 17-2

EUROPEAN JOURNAL OF SOCIAL PSYCHOLOGY

WILEY

Editorial Board

CHIEF EDITOR

Professor John Rijman,
Department of Psychology, Tilburg University, The Netherlands

ASSISTANT EDITOR

Joop van der Pligt,
Free University of Amsterdam,
The Netherlands

Mansur Laljee

Oxford University
Anne-Nelly Perret-Clermont
Université de Neuchâtel

Peter Petzold

Friedrich Schiller Universität, Jena

Aims and Scope

The European Journal of Social Psychology, which first appeared in 1971, was founded and is sponsored by the European Association of Experimental Social Psychology. In line with one of the major aims of the Association, it was created mainly to promote communication between social psychological researchers of different nationalities in Europe, and to provide a bridge between European and other research traditions. In the course of its history, the journal has kept that promise and developed a truly international forum with contributions from many different countries, within and outside of Europe, especially the U S A.

The articles published are typically of a fundamental nature, both in the theoretical and empirical domain. However, probably more than any other journal in this field, the European Journal takes a flexible attitude toward the possible diversity in methodological and theoretical approaches. Its multitude of approaches is considered a dynamic factor in the progress toward a better understanding of the phenomena under discussion.

Editorial Policy

The journal publishes reports on substantial empirical research, theoretical papers and integrative reviews of existing research. Papers relying on a substantial and coherent body of evidence and expressing an integrative mode of thinking are favoured. The journal also publishes book reviews and short research notes. Publication is in English but each article is accompanied by summaries in French and German. (To be extended in the near future to include Russian and Spanish summaries)

Subscription Details

Volume 17	1987	Four Issues
UK: £68.00	Elsewhere:	US$130.00
Volume 18	1988	Six Issues
UK: £95.00	Elsewhere:	US$175.00

 WILEY

Use the coupon to enter your subscription or send for a free specimen copy.

SUBSCRIPTION ORDER FORM

 WILEY

Send your order to either address

John Skinner,
John Wiley & Sons Ltd,
Baffins Lane, Chichester,
West Sussex PO19 1UD,
UK

Subscription Department 'C',
John Wiley & Sons Inc,
605 Third Avenue,
New York, NY 10158,
USA

- ☐ Please send me a sample copy
- ☐ Please enter my subscription to the European Journal of Social Psychology
- Volume 17 (1987): ☐ UK £68.00 ☐ Elsewhere US$130.00
- Volume 18 (1988): ☐ UK £95.00 ☐ Elsewhere US$175.00

Methods of Payment:

- ☐ Cheque/Money order enclosed (payable to John Wiley & Sons Ltd.)
- ☐ Purchase order enclosed ☐ Please invoice
- ☐ Please charge to my credit card:
- ☐ American Express ☐ Diners Club
- ☐ Barclaycard/Visa ☐ Mastercard/Access

Card

Number: _____

Name: (Please print) _____

Address: _____

12 personality & culture

88T1358

Agar, Michael (U Maryland, College Park 20742), Institutional Discourse. ♦ Text, 1985, 5, 3, 147-168.

† Several studies of institutional discourse are reviewed—discourse where one person who represents an institution encounters another person seeking its services. Focusing particularly on studies in the courtroom & the clinic, a framework is developed that divides the discourse into diagnoses, directives, & reports. The framework not only organizes the different studies, but also provides links to discursively based social theories such as those of Michel Foucault & Jürgen Habermas. 35 References. HA

88T1359

Ajdutović, Dean & Kljajić, Slavko (Dept Psychology U Zagreb, YU-41 000 Yugoslavia), Personal Attributes, Self-Esteem, and Attitude towards Women—Some Cross-Cultural Comparisons, Studia Psychologica, 1984, 26, 3, 193-198.

† The hypothesis that clusters of masculine & feminine attributes are not mutually exclusive but separate aspects of a personality that may vary independently, & the cross-cultural validity of that hypothesis, were tested with 1982/83 psychometric data on students in Yugoslavia & the US ($N = 236$ & 216, respectively). Results support the hypothesis, & no significant difference was found between the two cultures. 2 Tables. Modified HA

88T1360

Aldridge, D. (Open U, Milton Keynes MK7 6AA England), Suicidal Behaviour: An Ecosystemic Approach. * Dissertation Abstracts International. C: European Abstracts, 1987, 48, 1, spring, 61.

Unavailable from UMI; contact the degree-granting university.

88T1361

Araki, Shunichi & Murata, Katsuyuki (Medical Coll Oita, Japan), Suicide in Japan: Socioeconomic Effects on Its Secular and Seasonal Trends. ♦ U Suicide and Life-Threatening Behavior, 1987, 17, 1, spring, 64-71.

† Changes in M & F suicide death rates for 33 years following the end of WWII in Japan are analyzed using official statistics. Results show that the death rates for Ms & Fs decreased during periods of economic prosperity & increased during the years preceding economic depression, that for Ms also increased after economic depression. Profile analysis reveals that the seasonal variation was slightly but significantly different in the four time periods examined (1950-1955, 1955-1967, 1967-1974, & 1974-1982) in both sexes, except between the last two periods. It is suggested that death by suicide & its seasonal variation in Japan were affected by changes in SE conditions. 3 Figures, 13 References. HA

88T1362

Babcock, Charlotte G. & Gehrie, Mark J. (c/o Gehrie-230 North Michigan Ave Suite 3500, Chicago IL 60601), The Japanese American Experience: An Approach through Psychoanalysis and Follow-Up. ♦ The Journal of Psychoanalytic Anthropology, 1986, 9, 3, summer, 373-390.

† An examination of how the experience of second generation Japanese Americans (Nisei) who were imprisoned in US camps during WWII shaped their cultural & personal worldviews & subsequently affected acculturation of later generations. The psychological & social adaptation problems experienced by these Nisei following the closure of the camps in 1949 & their resettlement in other cities are discussed using data from psychoanalytic therapy sessions conducted in Chicago, Ill, as part of the Japanese American Project, & a follow-up study twenty-five years later. A psychoanalytic anthropological perspective is used to examine how the high value placed on dependency (amae) in traditional Japanese culture & family relations was internalized by the Nisei & dramatically affected their subsequent psychological development & adaptation to the US culture. A case study of 1 Nisei F is presented to illustrate some of the resulting conflicts regarding dependency & change issues, & their therapeutic resolution. 15 References. K. Hyatt

88T1363

Bakcsi, Ildikó, Vonzások és választások. (Az elmúlt 35 év eseményei egy vezető életút tükrében) (Attraction and Decision). Szociológia, 1982, 3, 373-388. (HUN)

† Abstract not currently available

88T1364

Barlosius, Eva (U Hannover, 3000 91 Federal Republic Germany), Riechen und Schmecken—Riechendes und Schmeckendes. Ernährungssoziologische Anmerkungen zum Wandel der sinnlichen Wahrnehmung beim Essen, dargestellt an den Beispielen der grande cuisine Frankreichs und der modernen Aromenherstellung (Smell and Taste—Substances That Smell and Taste. Notes on the Sociology of Food and Changing Sense Perceptions in Eating. The Examples of French Grande Cuisine and Modern Flavor Manufacturing), Kolner Zeitschrift für Soziologie und Sozialpsychologie, 1987, 39, 2, June, 367-375. (GER)

† A discussion of the senses of smell & taste, & attitudes toward them. Writings on French grande cuisine (gourmet cooking) from the eighteenth century onward are reviewed. A refined, appetite-oriented arrangement of food offering sensuous pleasure was the social basis of grande cuisine. In contrast, the modern food manufacturing industry produces chemically synthesized flavors by highly developed & standardized technology. This demonstrates the social pattern of potentialities. Sensory psychological research shows that the natural abilities for manifold sensations of smell & taste are not inferior to those of hearing or sight. The success of today's food industry depends on the neglect of these senses among consumers. 23 References. Modified HA

88T1365

Barnewolt, Debra Denise (Loyola U, Chicago IL 60611), Social Role Importance: The Interplay of Experience and Expectation in the Lives of Chicago Area Women. * Dissertation Abstracts International. A: The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 47, 11, May, 4198-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor MI. Order No. DA8704832.

88T1366

Boróš, Július (Dept Psychology Philosophical Faculty Comenius U, 1800 00 Bratislava Czechoslovakia), On Some Problems of Social Interactions in Soviet Psychology, Studia Psychologica, 1985, 27, 3, 219-224.

† An examination of some theoretical, methodological, & experimental problems concerning the study of social interaction in Soviet psychology. Focus is on the works of V. N. Myasishchev, G. B. Ananiev, & A. A. Bodalev. Increased attention to these problems has occurred in genetic, educational, & social psychology, as well as in the psychology of management & that dealing with individual differences. An understanding of the impact of social interaction on the formation of the psychic makeup of an individual & his conscience can help to bring the formation of individual personalities closer to the social ideal of man required by an advanced socialist society. 11 References. Modified HA

88T1367

Bouchard, Gérard & de Pourbaix, Isabelle (U Québec, Chicoutimi G7H 2B1), Individual and Family Life Courses in the Saguenay Region, Quebec, 1842-1911, U Journal of Family History, 1987, 12, 1-3, Jan-July, 225-242.

† Because it embraces such a long period & a wide area, the computerized reconstruction of families, based on a regional population register, opens up new perspectives for research into social reproduction, as well as geographic & social mobility. The Saguenay, Quebec, population register is used to study individual & family life courses over two generations, focusing on the demographic & occupational factors that determine social conditions & reproduction of families. Discussion & findings center on: theoretical & methodological issues raised by the study of social reproduction & family inheritance systems, a description of individual & family histories from a demographic & occupational standpoint; & an account of the strategies that families adopt to establish children as farmers in a predominantly Ru society. 5 Tables, 3 Figures, 1 Map, 19 References. HA

88T1368

Bracht, U. (Gesamthochschule Kassel, D-3500 Federal Republic Germany), Gestörte psychosoziale Verhältnisse im Spiegel von Schulbank-Graffiti. Erstellung eines exemplarischen Bildinventars. Ein Beitrag zur psychoanalytischen Schultheorie und Gruppendynamik

Level Observation of Groups, New York: The Free Press, 1979) dimensions of dominance vs submissiveness, friendliness vs unfriendliness, & instrumental control vs emotional expressiveness was used to predict communicated empathy & internal empathy among 54 1st social work students. Previous research has suggested that dominance, friendliness, & instrumental control should identify empathic communicators, while submissiveness, friendliness, & emotional expressiveness should identify internal empathizers; here, it was hypothesized that friendliness would be related to both forms of empathy. The scale data & results of communicated empathy ratings from an audiotaped role play show strong support for the characteristics associated with communicated empathy, but not entirely for those associated with internal empathy. The commonality of friendliness is strongly supported. 3 Tables, 27 References. Modified HA

88T1351

Kimberly, James C. (U. Nebraska, Lincoln 68508), Instrumental and Expressive Structures in Small Groups: The Stabilization of Injustice in Groups in Organizational Settings, in Small Group Behavior, 1986, 17, 4, Nov., 395-406.

1 R. T. Bales's early view of relations between instrumental & expressive structure (dual leadership) & the work on legitimacy of instrumental structure to which it led ("Adaptive and Integrative Changes as Sources of Strain in Social Systems," Hare, A. P. et al (Eds.), Small Groups, New York: Knopf, 1965: 127-131) is reviewed. Legitimacy of instrumental structure is conceptualized in terms of a theory of integration of distribution of members' skills & instrumental structure, showing that this integration creates distributive justice. P. M. Blau's conception of primary & secondary differentiation & inequality structures is critiqued, showing that Blau's conception applies at an interpersonal rather than a group level. Finally, a conception of the expressive structure is presented that illustrates how this structure can compensate for illegitimacy (injustice) of the instrumental structure. 29 References. HA

88T1352

Lloyd, John (Dept. Sociology, North Staffordshire Polytechnic, Stoke on Trent, England), From Differentiation to Individuation: A Look at the Encounter Process, in The British Journal of Sociology, 1987, 38, 3, Sept., 351-372.

An examination of the encounter group movement & process using data obtained through participant observation & interviews with other participants (8 not provided) at an encounter group & 3 spiritualist groups held in Stoke on Trent, Staffordshire (England) between 1980 & 1982. A typical encounter group consists of 5-12 people who meet at regular intervals or for one marathon period, interacting intensively with each other on the premise that interpersonal understanding leads to self-understanding, growth, & change. The group process is based on the concept of individuation, i.e., the "variation of persons independently of others" which is argued to be a distinguishing feature of modern society. By contrast, spiritualist groups, which attempt to communicate with the spirits of dead relatives, are grounded in the principles of commonality, solidarity, & a "fusion of persons & roles" that are more typical of primitive or traditional societies. Individuation in encounter groups is examined in relation to the concepts of "solidarity" & "differentiation," & illustrated via an examination of typical group activities. Modified HA

88T1353

Malhotra, Valerie Ann (Texas Women's U, Denton 76204), Habermas' Sociological Theory as a Basis for Clinical Practice with Small Groups, Clinical Sociology Review, 1987, 5, 181-192.

Jurgen Habermas's sociological analysis of power-distorted communication & of instrumental action vs symbolic interaction, & his theory of universal pragmatics, involving an analysis of the ideal speech situation & communicative competency, were used as a basis for clinical practice with 531 Coll students enrolled in 5 small sections of a course entitled Social Psychology of Women. Habermas's theory provided the basis for assessment of the need for clinical intervention, as well as the model for restructuring the group communication processes to alleviate the effects of the distorted communication characteristic of life in postcapitalist society. The students were involved as participants in a self-reflective process involving group discussions, they also submitted autobiographies, kept 4-week-long time schedules & daily diaries, wrote narratives describing their experience of time, tape-recorded & transcribed family interaction, & submitted to several standardized scales. Habermas's communicative competency, as exhibited in the groups & in the 5s at-home conversations, is analyzed on the basis of field observations of the researcher & qualitative & quantitative data provided by the 5s. 23 References. Modified HA

88T1354

Rubin, Herbert J. (Northern Illinois U, DeKalb 60115), Rule Making, Exceptioning, and County Land Use Decisions, in Urban Life, 1986-87, 15, 3-4, Oct-Jan., 299-330.

1 Ethnographic research is used to examine the decision-making process of a US county-level zoning & planning committee, as its members sought to assure compliance with zoning regulations. Committee members sought to resolve contradictions arising from the relevance of different decision rules, rules deriving from both the particular content of current cases & the specific social & political constraints under which decisions had to be made. These contradictions were regularly resolved through some form of exceptioning. 38 References. HA

88T1355

Suzuki, Yuriko (Faculty Education Azabu U, Sagami-hara Kanagawa 229 Japan), Title in Japanese (A Study in Seat-Taking in Meeting Situations: Territorial Maintenance and Status in Group), Kyoiku Shinrigaku Kenkyu/The Japanese Journal of Psychology, 1986, 57, 2, June, 83-86 (JPN).

1 Participant observation data collected during 15 meetings of Coll faculty members in Japan, chaired by the same person in the same meeting room, are analyzed to assess the maintenance of territory in seat taking in a small group. During the observation period, 6 new faculty members, 2 of whom were low status, were added to the group. Results verify the working hypotheses regarding territorial maintenance by high status members: senior members occupied more desirable areas & exhibited more territorial stability. 3 Tables, 1 Figure. Modified HA

88T1356

Trujillo, Nick (Center Communication Arts Southern Methodist U, Dallas TX 75275), Toward a Taxonomy of Small Group Interaction-Coding Systems, in Small Group Behavior, 1986, 17, 4, Nov., 371-394.

1 An exploratory taxonomy of small group interaction-coding scheme constituents ranging from the philosophical perspective underlying the scheme to the technique employed to record the interaction. Six categories of constituents are identified that are neither exhaustive nor mutually exclusive: (1) philosophical perspective, (2) theoretical & operational foci, (3) observer inference, (4) methodological design, (5) unit of analysis, & (6) recording device. As the translatability of results across category systems is central to the integration of research findings, this outline of the similarities & differences in construction & application can serve as a foundation for exploring the translation possibilities. A number of recommendations are offered for future research. 1 Figure, 63 References. Modified HA

88T1357

Wall, Victor D., Jr. & Nolan, Linda L. (Dept. Communication Ohio State U, Columbus 43210), Small Group Conflict: A Look at Equity, Satisfaction, and Styles of Conflict Management, in Small Group Behavior, 1987, 18, 2, May, 188-211.

1 A study in small group conflict to ascertain the relationships among equity, group satisfaction, amount of perceived group conflict, type of conflict-management strategies, & quality of outcome. Seventy-one task-oriented groups of 5-7 undergraduates from a communication course at a midwestern US U responded to a questionnaire regarding group interaction. Analysis of the questionnaire data indicated that inequality was negatively related to the amount of expressed satisfaction with the group, & positively related to the amount of perceived conflict within the group. Groups characterized by integrative management reported less perception of inequity than groups using an avoidance style. Group satisfaction was negatively related to the amount of conflict experienced, & people conflicts were predominately associated with avoidance management styles & task conflicts with integrative styles. 4 Tables, 44 References. Modified HA

122422
12391
88T1377

Dannefer, Dale (Graduate School Education & Human Development U Rochester, NY 14627), Aging as Intracohort Differentiation: Acculturation, the Matthew Effect, and the Life Course, Sociological Forum, 1987, 2, 2, spring, 211-236.

† Recent research by sociologists & others has generated new theoretical understanding of the extent to which human aging & life-course patterns are shaped by social conditions & influenced by social change. Yet the potential of many social processes to account for individual aging patterns remains largely unexplored, because research & theory have focused on comparisons between cohorts rather than internal differentiation of cohorts. It is argued that focusing on intracohort differentiation over the life course leads to a mobilization of sociological findings whose age-related implications have not been exploited. Using the phenomenon of "aged heterogeneity" as an illustrative case, it is suggested that intracohort differentiation can explain significant aging phenomena previously not explained by sociological theory, such as the "Matthew effect" (eg, see SA 19 7/71F2663). Implications for biological aging & for research are discussed. 133 References. Modified HA

88T1378

Dion, Kenneth L. & Yee, Paul H. N. (Dept Psychology U Toronto, Ontario M5S 1A1), Ethnicity and Personality in a Canadian Context, Journal of Social Psychology, 1987, 127, 2, Apr, 175-182

† Personality differences between Rs representing Eastern (ie, Chinese, Japanese, Indo-Pakistani) vs Western (ie, Anglo & European) cultural traditions were explored as a function of sex & ethnicity using scale data gathered between 1978 & 1982 from 635 U of Toronto (Ontario) students. Rs were classified into Asian, European, or Anglo categories of ethnicity on the basis of their surname. Analyses of Asian ethnic groups scored higher than those of Anglo or European background on needs for order, harm-avoidance, & social recognition, but lower on needs for dominance, exhibition, nurturance, & affiliation. Interaction effects on several scales also suggested greater gender-role differentiation among those classified in the Asian category. 1 Table, 26 References. HA

88T1379

Doehlemann, Martin (Fachbereich Sozialwesen Fachhochschule Munster, Hufferstr 27 D-4400 Federal Republic Germany), Verwaisung im Erwachsenenalter: Der Tod des letzten Elternteils als Entwicklungspunkt im Lebenslauf (On Being an Adult Orphan: The Death of the Last Parent and the Life Course), Zeitschrift für Sozialisationsforschung und Erziehungssoziologie, 1987, 7, 3, July, 178-196 (GER)

† The psychological & sociological consequences that the death of the last parent has for adults are discussed, using the approaches of family sociology & identity theory. Tangential treatments of this theme by the approaches of the psychology of critical life events, role & status biography, & family development are mentioned. A framework of family-phase sequencing is found to be useful in understanding the alteration & preservation of the collective identity of the family in the phases of dissolution & transcendence. The phase of "the last individuation" in the development of the personality is characterized as a loss of past & future & a confrontation with one's own death. The problem of judging & reconciling with dead parents is said to be especially difficult for Germans, because of the past the parents participated in. 46 References. Modified HA

88T1380

Dijkstra, Pearl (Vakgroep Methoden & Technieken Vrije U, NL-1075 BH Amsterdam Netherlands), Vrienden en vriendinnen. Anders dan andere persoonlijke relaties? (Friends. Different than Other Personal Relationships?), in Mens en Maatschappij, 1987, 62, 3, Aug, 257-269 (DUT)

† An examination of whether a theoretically based conceptualization of friends is in accord with what individuals report about their friends. Interview data from Dutch adults aged 30-40 & 65-75 ($\Sigma N = 63$) reveal that characteristics generally assigned to friends also apply to other types of personal relationships, eg, romantic partners & relatives. Thus, there appears to be a distinction between the concept of "friend," which is a category label, & the concept of "friendship," which applies to the equality of a relationship. Caution is suggested in the use of the label attached to a relationship as the sole indicator of the particular quality of that relationship. 2 Tables, 15 References. Modified HA

88T1381

Farran, Denise, A Photograph of Marilyn Monroe, in Studies in Sexual Politics, 1987, 16, 1-22.

† A feminist sociological analysis of how the meanings of photographs are socially constructed & subject to change depending on the context in which they are perceived & the viewer's individual characteristics & expectations. This argument revolves around a specific photograph of actress Marilyn Monroe & the ways that it comes to be interpreted as sexual by M & F viewers. Analytical ideas concerning photographs as artful productions, interactions, & ways of "doing biography" are summarized, & implications for future feminist research discussed. 1 Photograph, 19 References. K Hyatt

88T1382

Flaherty, Joseph A. & Richman, Judith A. (Dept Psychiatry U Illinois, Chicago 60612), Effects of Childhood Relationships on the Adult's Capacity to Form Social Supports, in The American Journal of Psychiatry, 1986, 143, 7, July, 851-855

† Social supports have been viewed as central to psychological well-being, but little attention has been directed to the capacity to form supportive relationships. Psychoanalytic perspectives suggest that the quality of adult relationships is derived from earlier childhood attachment experiences. This thesis is tested by correlating 153 U of Illinois medical students' perceptions of their earlier relationships with their parents with the perceived quality of their current social support networks. Data from self-report questionnaires suggest the need for a more complex & psychodynamically relevant conceptualization of social supports. Implications for therapeutic interventions to ameliorate support deficits are discussed. 1 Table, 41 References. Modified HA

88T1383

Foa, Uriel G., Anderson, Barbara, Converse, John, Jr., Urbansky, William A., Cawley, Michael J., III, Muhlhausen, Solveig M. & Tornblom, Kjell Y. (Temple U, Philadelphia PA 19122), Gender-Related Sexual Attitudes: Some Crosscultural Similarities and Differences, Sex Roles, 1987, 16, 9-10, May, 511-519

† Three studies of attitudes toward love & sex held by single & married homosexual & heterosexual Ms & Fs in the US ($\Sigma N = 390$) & Sweden ($\Sigma N = 179$) are summarized. Ss sorted 33 statements referring to sex, love, & service behaviors into 2 categories on the basis of their perceived similarity. As predicted, Ms in both countries separated sex & love behaviors more than did Fs; this gender difference was accentuated in homosexuals & diminished in married as opposed to single heterosexuals. However, Swedes did report a slightly greater association between love & sex than did their US counterparts. 1 Table, 2 Figures, 13 References. K Hyatt

88T1384

Gentry, Cynthia S. (Dept Sociology Tulane U, New Orleans LA 70118), Social Distance Regarding Male and Female Homosexuals, Journal of Social Psychology, 1987, 127, 2, Apr, 199-208

† Questionnaire data from 201 La U undergraduate students ($N = 96 M$ & 105 F) are used to assess social distance toward M & F homosexuals. Rs had higher degrees of discomfort toward same-sex homosexuals than toward opposite-sex homosexuals. Results indicated comfort around homosexuals to be negatively associated with the frequency of religious participation & positively associated with having had a friend who was believed to be homosexual. Having been subjected to sexual advances by homosexuals did not appear to be related to discomfort. 1 Table, 21 References. Modified HA

88T1385

Gilmartin-Zena, Pat (Youngstown State U, Youngstown OH 44555), Attitudes toward Rape: Student Characteristics as Predictors, in Free Inquiry in Creative Sociology, 1987, 15, 2, Nov, 175-182.

† An exploration of current rape myths in the US including myths about the causality of rape (eg, rape as victim precipitated) & myths about "real" rapes (eg, rape victims must meet certain criteria before others believe them), based on questionnaire data from Coll students ($N = 198$) regarding their belief in 29 specific rape myths. The findings suggest that (1) many students disregard many of the blatant myths (eg, women want to be raped), (2) subtle issues about rape were often problems for this group (eg, after an assault, women are supposed to be visibly upset); & (3) Rs' characteristics (eg, sex, age, self-esteem, beliefs, race, & personal experiences) explained 25% of the variance of rape myth acceptance. 3 Tables, 27 References. Modified AA (Disturbed Psychosocial Behavior Reflected in School Desk Graffiti: A Proposed Personality Inventory and Contribution to Psychoanalytical Theory of Education and Group Dynamics) * Dissertation Abstracts International C European Abstracts, 1987, 48, 2, summer, 285 (GfR).

Unavailable from UMI; contact the degree-granting university.

88T1369

Bruner, Jerome (New School Social Research, New York, NY 10011). Life as Narrative. WM Social Research, 1987, 54, 1, spring, 11-32.

† A discussion of the nature of thought involved in the creation of stories or narratives utilizing a constructivist approach that takes as its central premise that world making is the principle function of mind. Dilemmas inherent in the application of a constructivist viewpoint to the self-narrative of autobiography are analyzed & specific forms of self-narrative are discussed. A psychological assessment of four individual self-narratives is presented, & formulas for structuring experience are offered. 1 Reference. Rasmussen.

88T1370

Brutnaert, Herman (State U Ghent, B-9000 Belgium). Geslacht, zelf-waardering en studieresultaten: een onderzoeksnote (Gender, Self-Esteem, and Study Results: A Research Note). Tijdschrift voor Sociologie, 1987, 8, 1, 83-90. (DUT)

† It is proposed that the convergence of biological & sociocultural aspects of the sex role contribute to the differential personality development of M & F. Data from students at various grade levels (N = 358) shows that self-esteem is affected by grades received for preadolescent boys but not for preadolescent girls. From age 15 on, however, both sexes experience similar effects. 3 Tables, 6 References. Modified HA.

88T1371

Callero, Peter L., Howard, Judith A., & Piliavin, Jane A. (Dept Sociology, Western Oregon State Coll., Monmouth 97361). Helping Behavior as Role Behavior: Disclosing Social Structure and History in the Analysis of Prosocial Action. WM Social Psychology Quarterly, 1987, 50, 3, Sept, 247-256.

† Dominant approaches to the study of helping behavior are characterized by an empirical focus on temporally isolated acts of helping with little concern either for social structure or for interactional history. It is suggested that George Herbert Mead's conceptualization of role offers a unique theoretical basis for incorporating dimensions of both social structure & history. This conceptualization of role also points to certain circumstances in which role & person merge, the extent of role-person merger has direct implications for action. Mail questionnaire data from a sample of 658 blood donors support the hypothesis that the degree of merger between person & a particular role, that of a blood donor, is both distinct from & compensatory to more traditional variables such as social & personal norms in its influence on blood donation behavior. This approach illustrates the importance of conceptualizing helping behavior as role behavior, facilitating incorporation of both social structural & historical characteristics of such behavior. 6 Tables, 27 References. Modified HA.

88T1372

Cargan, Leonard (Wright State U, Dayton OH 45435). Stereotypes of Singles: A Cross-Cultural Comparison. International Journal of Comparative Sociology, 1986, 27, 3-4, Sept-Dec, 200-208.

† The validity of two stereotypes about single persons that they are either sexually promiscuous "swingers" or pathologically lonely in comparison with their married counterparts are tested in 3 countries undergoing similar demographic trends: the US, Australia, & New Zealand. A self-administered questionnaire was administered to probability-proportionate-to-size cluster samples (2Ns = 1,250) in Dayton, Ohio, Sydney, Australia, & New Zealand. Results generally support the stereotype of singles expressing more aspects of loneliness than marrieds, however, singles will more often take steps to allay their loneliness, e.g., joining organizations, & report less discomfort with being alone than do marrieds. The sexual swinging stereotype is upheld if it deals merely with number of sexual partners; if, however, it implies casual sex with large number of partners, it is more applicable to the divorced than to singles. Thus, these stereotypes have a grain of truth, but their application to the entire population of single people is more misleading than revealing. 4 Tables, 5 References. Modified HA.

88T1373

Charmaz, Kathy (Gerontology Program Sonoma State U, Rohnert Park CA 94928). Struggling for a Self: Identity Levels of the Chronically Ill. Research in the Sociology of Health Care, 1987, 6, 283-321.

† A symbolic interactionist perspective is used to explore the effect of chronic illness on self-identity. In-depth interview & biographical data from 57 chronically ill persons aged 20-91 reveal a strong rejection of identities founded in invalidism. Chronic illness makes it increasingly important to attain, maintain, or recreate a valued identity, & is influenced by (1) type & degree of illness, (2) meanings of illness experiences, (3) timing & sequencing of illness, & (4) expectations of & for the self. In addition, identity levels may change, particularly in response to the evaluation, recognition, confirmation or disconfirmation, & treatment by others in the social context. Major implications for social & medical research are discussed. 35 References. K. Hyatt.

88T1374

Clark, Candace (Dept Sociology, Montclair State Coll., Upper Montclair, NJ 07043). Sympathy Biography and Sympathy Margins. WM American Journal of Sociology, 1987, 93, 2, Sept, 290-321.

† Sympathy is an emotion guided by cultural "feeling rules" & by the structure of relationships. How sympathy flows between sympathizer & sympathizee in society's "emotional economy" is examined. Data from field observations, interviews (N = 902 adult residents of northern NJ), content analyses, & published ethnographic materials show that sympathy margins exist as a right of group membership. The size of one's sympathy margins vary with, among other factors, one's sympathy biography or past adherence to sympathy etiquette. Rules of sympathy etiquette for sympathizees are (1) do not make unwarranted claims to sympathy, (2) do not claim too much sympathy or accept sympathy too readily, (3) claim & accept some sympathy to keep sympathy accounts open, & (4) repay sympathy with gratitude, sympathy, or both. Sympathizers are expected to enforce these rules, people who under- or overinvest are considered deviant sympathizers. Finally, sympathy processes may be used consciously or unconsciously for micropolitical ends. 64 References. HA.

88T1375

Corbin, Juliet & Strauss, Anselm L. (Dept Social & Behavioral Science School Nursing U California, San Francisco 94143). Accompaniments of Chronic Illness: Changes in Body, Self, Biography, and Biographical Time. Research in the Sociology of Health Care, 1987, 6, 249-281.

† Severe chronic illness can have a profound effect on the identities & lifestyles of the ill, even shattering the person's self-conception. Here, data from a larger interview study conducted in San Francisco, Calif., regarding the work & experiences of chronically ill persons & their marital partners are used to illustrate the effects of chronic illness on the sufferer's sense of self (N = 60 couples). Also discussed are several biographical ideational processes, representing types of biographical accommodation to the physical effects of the illness. The impact of illness on performance is elucidated, & inevitable biographical processes of reconstructing one's life & identity are described. 1 Table, 1 Figure, 39 References. Modified AA.

88T1376

Curry, Timothy Jon & Weaver, Jeffrey S. (Ohio State U, Columbus 43210). Sport Identity Salience, Commitment, and the Involvement of Self in Role: Measurement Issues. Sociology of Sport Journal, 1987, 4, 3, Sept, 280-288.

† The social psychological concept of identity has been recognized as an important approach to the study of role-related behavior, including sports behavior. Identity has been linked theoretically to the self-concept via the notion of a salience hierarchy, & the salience of an identity in turn has been shown to be associated with time spent in role & other measures of role performance. Measurement procedures for the study of the sport identity are presented, & the utility of these procedures is demonstrated by testing hypotheses derived from Sheldon Stryker's & Richard T. Serpe's "Commitment, Identity Salience, and Role Behavior: Theory and Research Example" (in Ickes, William, & Knowles, Eric S. (Eds.), Personality, Roles, and Social Behavior, New York: Springer-Verlag, 1982, 199-218), describing research on religious role behavior, using 1985 questionnaire data from a sample of 220 M Ohio State U students & athletes in which Ss ranked the salience of 6 role identities. 4 Tables, 13 References. HA.

88T1393

Hopf, Christel (Max-Planck-Institut Bildungsforschung, Lentzeallee 94 D-1000 Berlin 33 Federal Republic Germany), Zur Aktualität der Untersuchungen zur "autoritären Persönlichkeit" (The Topicality of Research on the "Authoritarian Personality"), Zeitschrift für Sozialisationsforschung und Erziehungssoziologie, 1987, 7, 3, July, 162-177. (GER)

† The relevance for current socialization theory of the research on the authoritarian personality carried out at the U of California, Berkeley, in the 1940s by Theodor W. Adorno, Else Frenkel-Brunswik, Daniel J. Levinson, & R. Nevitt Sanford is discussed. The limited reception of this research in West Germany is explained by: (1) the insistence on standardized procedures & measurable data, (2) the hostility toward psychoanalysis among psychologists & sociologists; & (3) the tendency to emphasize Adorno's work at the expense of those not belonging to the Frankfurt school. The integration of quantitative & qualitative research methods by the Berkeley group is examined & claimed to be a good example for today. Recent theories of nonauthoritarian & narcissistic personality types are summarized & criticized for failing to address key issues of autonomy, cooperation, & self-interest. 54 References. Modified HA

88T1394

Hrabovský, Marian (Psychologický ústav FFUK, Bratislava Czechoslovakia), Psychologické aspekty hodnotových orientácií-možnosti a metódy empirického výskumu (Psychological Aspects of Value Orientations-The Possibilities and Methods of Empirical Research), Filozofia, 1980, 35, 1, 73-76. (CZE)

* It is argued that the field of psychology owes a great deal to the study of value problems. The technique of research is less significant than the generalization of such problems. Modified HA

88T1395

Hrachovec, Herbert (Institut Philosophie U Wien, A-1010 Austria), Kann man einmal schreien? (Can One Just Scream?), Osterreichische Zeitschrift für Soziologie, 1986, 11, 4, 31-39. (GER)

* The difference between the spontaneous shout of the individual & the organized shouting of society is analyzed in the context of a song by rock musician Patti Smith & two contrasting reactions to one of her concerts. The song is shown to represent the dilemma between two political-philosophical positions: on the one hand, meaning systems are omnipresent & effectively co-opt any opposition; on the other hand, spontaneous impulses that make no effort to understand the organization & extension of manipulation systems against which they struggle are doomed to failure. The role of the cultural figure in this dilemma is examined. J. Anderson

88T1396

Huff-Corzine, Linda Kathrine (Washington U, Saint Louis MO 63130), Beauty and the Beast: A Social Psychological Study of Weight Satisfaction and Dieting Behavior, * Dissertation Abstracts International, 4 The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 47, 12(1), June, 4520-A

Available from UMI, Ann Arbor MI. Order No. DA8708374.

88T1397

Jacob, Theodore & Krahn, Gloria (Division Child Development & Family Relations U Arizona, Tucson 85721), The Classification of Behavioral Observation Codes in Studies of Family Interaction, ♦ Journal of Marriage and the Family, 1987, 49, 3, Aug, 677-687.

† Groupings of family observation codes that are identified through the application of multivariate analysis to videotaped interaction data are examined. The data set involves laboratory interactions with 96 marital dyads, including couples in which the husband was an alcoholic, a depressive, or a normal control. All interactions were coded with the Marital Interaction Coding System (Hops, Hyman, Wills, Thomas, Patterson, Gerald, & Weiss, Robert, "Marital Interaction Coding System," unpublished manuscripts, U of Oregon, Eugene), & subsequently subjected to 3 types of analysis-multidimensional scaling (MDS), principle components analysis, & transitional probability analyses. Resulting solutions indicated several clusters that were common across methods (eg, negative evaluation & problem solving) as well as noteworthy differences as a function of the analytic procedure employed (eg, a clear grouping of positive evaluation emerged only with the MDS procedure). The classification of observation codes & the selection of particular groupings are discussed in regard to several theoretical & methodological considerations. 4 Tables, 1 Figure, 32 References HA

88T1398

Kiciński, Krzysztof (U Warsaw, PL-00-325 Poland), Social Determinants of Moral Orientations, ♦ The Polish Sociological Bulletin, 1983, 1-4(61-64), 159-180.

† Questionnaire survey data collected in 1977 are used to assess the social determinants of moral orientations in Polish society. Responses from 500 Ss in the greater Warsaw area & 500 Ss from Ru villages indicated that reciprocity orientations are stronger in Ru areas, while prosocial orientations are dominant in Ur centers. Theoretical implications of the findings are discussed, & Ru vs Ur tendencies are contrasted. 4 Tables. F. Rasmussen

88T1399

Kipper, David A. & Uspiz, Varda (Dept Psychology Bar-Ilan U, Ramat-Gan 52100 Israel), Emotional and Cognitive Responses in Role Playing, Journal of Group Psychotherapy, Psychodrama and Sociometry, 1987, 39, 4, winter, 131-142

† The contention that different role-playing interventions predispose players to respond in a predominantly cognitive or emotional manner was investigated via a role-simulation experiment in which 27 Israeli U students were randomly assigned to 3 role-playing conditions as follows: (1) a spontaneous simulation where the players portrayed the role freely as themselves; (2) a mimetic-pretend simulation where the players portrayed the role under an assumed identity; & (3) a mimetic-replication simulation where the players imitated a specific & a familiar model. The role-playing situation involved a discussion with a person in distress. Content analyses of the Ss' responses confirmed the prediction. Ss in the mimetic-pretend simulation produced more cognitive responses than those in the spontaneous simulation. The latter produced more emotional responses than Ss in the other 2 simulation conditions. 2 Tables, 11 References. Modified HA

88T1400

Kunkel, John H. (Dept Sociology U Western Ontario, London N6A 5C2), Vivaldi in Venice: An Historical Test of Psychological Propositions, ♦ The Psychological Record, 1985, 35, 4, fall, 445-457.

† A historical test of psychological propositions involving the creation of complex activities crucial in the lives of individuals. The deliberate establishment & extinction of concert-quality musical performances by orphan girls in Venice (Italy) between 1650 & 1800 demonstrates that behavior principles have been applied successfully in other cultures & times, & that effective procedures can be employed by administrators who are unaware of the underlying principles. In addition, the rise & fall of Venetian conservatories shows the limitations of various types of reinforcers in the modeling & maintenance of complex behavior chains. It is demonstrated that historical events can be used to test psychological propositions & their application, as long as the data are detailed enough so that they can be structured according to the experimental paradigm. 22 References. HA

88T1401

Lakatos, Gyula, A motivációs konfliktusok és a személyiség harmóniájának értelmezéséhez (On Interpreting Motivational Conflicts and Harmony of the Individual), Szociológia, 1982, 1, 1-12. (HUN)

† An attempt is made to interpret motivational conflicts & personal harmony from the viewpoint of motivation theory & attitudinal consistency. The struggle between organizational control & individual autonomy is discussed. Individual motivational conflicts are a normal phenomenon in regulating the multiple system of individual/activity/social environment. This is also reflected by inconsistency in the emotional, cognitive, & conative dimensions of attitudes. Tension & inconsistency between certain dimensions of attitudes may actually stimulate increased productivity or artistic activity. Incentives (eg, financial incentives or external compulsion) are able to stabilize attitudinal inconsistency in a positive or negative form, resulting in harmony between the personality & its social activity. In this context it becomes clear that dissonance between attitudes & their various dimensions is a major motive power in individual development. 7 References. Modified HA

88T1402

Lance, Larry M. (Dept Sociology & Anthropology U North Carolina, Charlotte 28223), The Effects of Interaction with Gay Persons on

88T1386

Glass, Jennifer & Polisar, Donna (Dept Sociology U Notre Dame, IN 46556). A Method and Metric for Assessing Similarity among Dyads. Journal of Marriage and the Family, 1987, 49, 3, Aug, 663-668.

† Assessments of similarity between dyad members are frequently made with statistical tools that are inappropriate. Problems in defining & measuring similarity with dyadic data are reviewed, & a simple alternative is proposed. The method of planned comparisons between related & random dyads is illustrated with questionnaire data on sociopolitical attitude from 1 generation families collected in southern Calif in 1973 ($N = 2,044$). Results show both greater & less intergenerational attitude similarity in certain domains than would have been discerned on the basis of correlations or difference scores alone. 2 Tables, 1 Appendix, 11 References. Modified HA.

88T1387

Grabb, Edward G. & Waugh, S. L. (U Western Ontario, London N6A 3K7). Family Background, Socioeconomic Attainment, and the Ranking of Self-Actualization Values. Sociological Focus, 1987, 20, 3, Aug, 215-226.

† The interrelationships between family background, SE attainment, & self actualization goals & values are explored using 1981 survey data from 1,425 Canadian adults engaged in full time occupations. Moderate SC differences in the perceived importance of self actualization are revealed, with those from the higher strata more likely to stress this value orientation. Multivariate analyses indicate that Rs' education has the greatest effect on value differences among the past & current SE variables considered, age is also a significant factor, while current occupation is not. However, the educational & occupational statuses of Rs' parents have appreciable indirect influences on self-actualization attitudes, lending provisional support to an intergenerational transmission interpretation of value differences between SCs. 4 Tables, 1 Figure, 27 References. Modified HA.

88T1388

Gramling, Robert & Forsyth, Craig J. (U Southwestern Louisiana, Lafayette 70504). Exploiting Stigma. Sociological Forum, 1987, 2, 2, spring, 401-415.

† In an analysis of stigma, the role of exchange theory is expanded to allow closer attention to the motivation of actors, a more careful examination of the negotiated value of stigma, & an increased awareness of the ways in which stigmas affect all parties in the interaction (both marked & unmarked individuals) by altering outcomes. The use of stigma exploitation in the exchange process is also explored. Seven strategies are identified & discussed, eliciting special consideration, evoking selected aspects of a stereotype, avoiding a more serious stigma, avoiding interaction, using submissive manipulation, avoiding membership, & gaining membership. 60 References. HA.

88T1389

Greenwood, John D. (Dept Philosophy U North Carolina, Greensboro 27412). Scientific Psychology and Hermeneutical Psychology: Causal Explanation and the Meaning of Human Action. Human Studies, 1987, 10, 2, 171-204.

† It is argued that none of the arguments of hermeneutical psychology based on the meaningful nature of human action establish that meaningful explanations of human action are noncausal in nature. Such arguments are based only on contrasts with an inadequate conception of scientific psychology that is itself based on an inadequate empiricist account of science & causal explanation, they do not mark any significant contrasts with a realist account of science & causal explanation, but only establish that the meaning of human action descriptions are relational in nature, which has no ontological implications for the types of interaction that can take place between entities designated by such descriptions. Nevertheless, these arguments do indirectly illustrate two critical features of human actions that distinguish them from natural scientific phenomena. Human actions are themselves relational in nature: they are partially constituted by extrinsic social relations, & by the relations of social & agent representation. In general, the arguments of the hermeneutical psychologist illustrate important truths about the explananda, rather than the explanans of social psychological science. 75 References. AA.

8T1390

Heaven, Patrick C. L., Brewer, John D. & Bester, C. L. (Riverina-Murray Instit, Wagga Wagga New South Wales 2650 Australia). Attitudes to the Army and Pro-Nuclear Activism in Three Student Groups. International Journal of Comparative Sociology, 1986, 27, 3-4, Sept-Dec, 190-199.

† Questionnaire data are used to investigate the correlates of attitudes toward the army & pronuclear activism among Coll students in Australia, Northern Ireland, & (white) South Africa ($N = 246$). Results show the South Africans to be most favorably disposed toward the army & toward the deployment of nuclear weapons. Across the three groups, those with positive attitudes toward military action have the most authoritarian attitudes, support of those in positions of authority, & typically vote for right-wing parties. In addition, Northern Irish militarists tend to be Protestant with little personal experience of political violence, & are not anxious, while South African militarists are typically conformers. Pronuclear activists in Northern Ireland are older & have not experienced political violence, South African activists are more likely to be F. In general, however, sociodemographic variables per se are not important in explaining the dynamics of militarism, rather, personal experiences & sociocultural factors are of more influence. 3 Tables, 18 References. Modified HA.

88T1391

Heckerens, Hans-Peter (Fachbereich Sozialwesen Fachhochschule Munchen, Bogenhauser Kirchplatz 3 D-8000 80 Federal Republic Germany). Intergenerationale Kontinuitat: Der Bildungsstand von Vatern und Toechtern (Intergenerational Continuity Educational Achievement of Fathers and Their Daughters). Zeitschrift fur Sozialisationsforschung und Erziehungssoziologie, 1987, 7, 3, July, 197-208 (GER).

† Data from a 1982 survey of West German girls aged 15-19 ($N = 492$ living with both parents, 26 living with divorced mothers) confirm the hypothesis that the educational status of fathers has more influence than that of mothers on the educational achievement of daughters, both when the daughters are raised by both parents & when the father is absent. Possible explanations involve patriarchal features of society, the adoption of the father's orientation & attitudes by the mother, the daughter's desire to copy the more powerful role model of the family, & general increases in the educational achievement of women. 2 Tables, 21 References. Modified HA.

88T1392

Holzkamp, Klaus (Psychologisches Institut WE 3 Freie U Berlin, D-1000 33 Federal Republic Germany). Die Verknuffung von Handlungsbegrundungen als empirische Zusammenhangsannahmen in sozialpsychologischen Theorien: Methodologische Fehlorientierung infolge von Begriffsverwirrung (The Mistaking of Reasons for Acting for Propositions about Empirical Relations in Social-Psychological Theories: Methodological Misorientation as a Result of Conceptual Confusion). Zeitschrift fur Sozial Psychologie, 1986, 17, 3, 216-238 (GER).

Comments, 239-254.

† The common conception of social-psychological theories as propositions about contingent if-then relationships is questioned. Instead it is claimed that such theories consist of statements about "good reasons" for individuals to behave under specified conditions in a specified way. As definitions of rational conduct on certain premises, such patterns of reasoning are neither in need nor capable of experimental testing. Experimental facts merely act as cases for application, or examples of such definitions. Through sufficient specification of theoretical premises, the empirical instances of supposedly conflicting theories can be differentiated as exemplary cases of distinct hypothetical patterns of reasoning. It is explained in detail how, in the interpretation of experimental data, the fact becomes obscured, thus, theories giving patterns of reasoning cannot be abandoned in view of deficient or contrary empirical evidence. The relationship between the official logic of prediction & the implicit logic of exemplification is elucidated. Perspectives of social-psychological research that pay respect to intersubjective reasons for action are outlined. Experimentieren in der Sozialpsychologie: Empirische Prufung theoretischer Vorhersagen oder Herstellung von Beispielen fur theoretische "Begrundungsmuster"? (Experimentation in Social Psychology: Empirical Testing of Theoretical Predictions or Creation of Examples for Theoretical "Patterns of Giving Reasons"?). is the transcript of a tape-recorded discussion of this article by the editors of Zeitschrift fur Sozialpsychologie, Hubert Feger, Carl Friedrich Graumann, Martin Irl, & Holzkamp. The discussion is devoted to clarifying the main thesis of the article, with special attention to the concepts "reason," "giving reason," & "cause." 22 References. Modified HA.

88T1411

McBroom, William H. (U Montana, Missoula 59812), Longitudinal Change in Sex Role Orientations: Differences between Men and Women, Sex Roles, 1987, 16, 9-10, May, 439-452.

† The effects of changes in life circumstances & values on sex-role orientations were investigated in a longitudinal study (1975 to 1980) of 604 persons who had attended the U of Montana during 1954, 1964, or 1974. Analysis of mail questionnaire data indicates that both Ms & Fs in all 3 cohorts had become less traditional in their sex-role orientations, with Fs experiencing a greater change over time. Multiple regression analyses reveal that major role changes—eg, entry into marriage, change in work status, & motherhood—had the greatest effect on Fs' orientations, while the continuation of marriage was most influential for Ms. Results are discussed in terms of the sexual DoFL in the US & overall societal changes. 2 Tables, 2 Appendixes, 35 References. K. Hyatt

88T1412

McGuire, Meredith B. & Kantor, Debra J. (c/o Kantor—Dept Sociology Rutgers U, New Brunswick NJ 08903), Belief Systems and Illness Experiences: The Case of Non-Medical Healing Groups, Research in the Sociology of Health Care, 1987, 6, 221-248.

† Data from a larger study of nonmedical healing in Essex County, NJ, are used to examine 3 alternative healing groups—Christian, traditional metaphysical, & occult/eclectic, represented respectively by Women Aglow, Unity, & a psychic healing circle. Interviews with group leaders, healers, adherents, & clients ($\Sigma N = 95$), supplemented by field notes of ethnographic material gathered during participant observation, reveal the different belief systems of the groups, particularly regarding the meaning of healing & definitions of health & illness. Varying notions about the nature, source, & appropriate channeling of healing power are examined. Healing & prevention are viewed as practically indistinguishable, a philosophy which is manifested in the beliefs & practices of everyday life. Dramatic differences between alternative healing groups & the dominant medical system are explored. 23 References. K. Hyatt

88T1413

McNevin, Stephen H., Lechner, Pierre, Harper, Dan & McCrimmon, Elaine (c/o Lechner—Dept Psychiatry U Manitoba, Winnipeg R3E 0W3), Sex Role Ideology among Health Care Professionals, ♦ Psychiatric Journal of the University of Ottawa/Revue de Psychiatrie de l'Université d'Ottawa, 1985, 10, 1, Mar, 21-23.

† A sex-role ideology scale developed by R. Kalin & P. J. Tibby ("Development and Validation of a Sex-Role Ideology Scale," Psychological Reports, 1978, 42, 731-738) was mailed to 11,983 medical & related health care professionals in Manitoba in 1980/81. Results of the 45.4% returned indicate that health care professionals do not hold a traditional sex-role ideology. In addition, there were significant differences between the various professions independent of age & sex. The most feminist groups are social workers & psychologists, while the least feminist are registered nurses & licensed practical nurses. Such differences may indicate potential areas of conflict among professional caregivers. 2 Tables, 11 References. Modified HA

88T1414

Moore, Timothy E., Griffiths, Karen & Payne, Barbara (Dept Psychology Glendon Coll York U, Toronto Ontario M4N 3M6), Gender, Attitudes towards Women, and the Appreciation of Sexist Humor, Sex Roles, 1987, 16, 9-10, May, 521-531.

† A test of D. Zillman's & J. R. Cantor's dispositional theory of humor, which posits that as the degree of positive disposition toward a disparaged entity increases, the magnitude of mirth decreases (see "A Disposition Theory of Humour and Mirth," in Chapman, A. J. & Foot, H. C. (Eds), Humour and Laughter: Theory, Research and Applications, London: Wiley, 1976). After completing an Attitudes toward Women Scale, 34 introductory psychology students rated the funniness of 11 sexist & 11 nonsexist cartoons drawn from various newspapers & magazines. Results of an analysis of variance reveal that both Ms & Fs with less traditional views of women enjoyed sexist humor less than did their counterparts with more traditional views, supporting the dispositional theory. Predictions for the future of humor are offered. 2 Figures, 26 References. K. Hyatt

88T1415

Morawska, Ewa (Dept Sociology U Pennsylvania, Philadelphia 19104-6229), Sociological Ambivalence: The Case of East European Peasant-Immigrant Workers in America, 1880s-1930s, U

Qualitative Sociology, 1987, 10, 3, fall, 225-250.

† An understanding of the tensions experienced by nineteenth- & twentieth-century East European immigrants in the US is developed by drawing on the concept of sociological ambivalence, ie, being pulled in cognitively & emotionally opposed directions generated by social situations in which the actors are located. Using a variety of primary data—letters, diaries, poems, prayers, newspaper articles, & oral histories—along with data from previous studies, the kinds of sociological ambivalence experienced by immigrants are discussed. 108 References. Modified HA

88T1416

Morgan, David (Dept Sociology Victoria U Manchester, M13 9PL England), 'It Will Make a Man of You': Notes on National Service, Masculinity and Autobiography, ♦ Studies in Sexual Politics, 1987, 17, 1-90.

† The complex & ambiguous linkages between the concepts of masculinity & violence are explored within the context of national service—conscription into one of the three branches of the British Armed Services (BAS) between 1945 & 1963. Personal experience gained while serving in the Royal Air Force between 1955 & 1957, supplemented by other published accounts, are used to examine how the BAS worked to accomplish its claim that it would "make a man of you." It is revealed that this process was largely the result of indirect factors, principally, the BAS provided an arena where young men could display & develop masculine attitudes & behaviors, which were reinforced by group identification & institutional values. The value of autobiography in social analysis is discussed. 5 Photographs, 30 References. Modified AA

88T1417

Muller, Werner (Sektion Marxistisch-leninistische Philosophie Karl-Marx-U Leipzig, 7010 German Democratic Republic), Massenbewusstsein und soziale Aktivität (Mass Consciousness and Social Activity), ♦ Wissenschaftliche Zeitschrift der Karl Marx Universität Leipzig, Gesellschaftswissenschaftliche Reihe, 1985, 34, 1, 6-14, (GER)

† Some theoretical aspects of mass consciousness in socialist society are considered, focusing on the social importance of the development of socialist consciousness in the working masses. It is argued that understanding the dialectical unity of objective social relations & subjective activity is crucial to any explanation of mass consciousness. The determining factors of mass consciousness are declared to be conditions & content of social activity. Mass consciousness is distinguished from merely widespread everyday consciousness by, among other things, its appropriation of socialist ideals & values. The reciprocal relation between the assimilation of personal experience in socialist reality & the appropriation of socialist ideology is discussed. J. Anderson

88T1418

Myers, David (Dept Communications Loyola U, New Orleans LA 70118), "Anonymity Is Part of the Magic": Individual Manipulation of Computer-Mediated Communication Contexts, U Qualitative Sociology, 1987, 10, 3, fall, 251-266.

† In an investigation of the reported lack of social context cues in computer-mediated communication contexts, participant observations methods are used to demonstrate how electronic bulletin board system (BBS) users establish online identities. Communication leaders, who maintain their identities & leadership roles through manipulation of the BBS social context, are also identified. The findings appear to contradict perspectives that characterize computer-mediated communications as deindividuated (see Kiesler, S., Siegel, J., & McGuire, T. W., "Social Psychological Aspects of Computer Mediated Communication," American Psychologist, 1984, 39, 1123-1134). 1 Figure, 20 References. HA

88T1419

Neilsen, Kai (Dept Philosophy U Calgary, Alberta T2N 1N4), Cultural Identity and Self-Definition, Human Studies, 1987, 10, 3-4, Oct, 383-390.

† A discussion of the central significance of local attachments—a self-identity as a particular kind of cultural identity—with specific attention to the work of Jürgen Habermas. His conception of undistorted discourse is explored in terms of its nonethnocentric basis for cultural comparison. The extent to which undistorted discourse provides the basis for transcending one's own culture's way of viewing things without completely setting it aside is examined. Implications for the participant observer are discussed. F. Rasmussen

Attitudes toward Homosexuality. Human Relations, 1987, 40, 6, June, 329-336

¶ Homosexuals have long been negatively perceived in much of US society. The degree to which interaction with homosexuals modifies such attitudes of heterosexuals is assessed using group-administered questionnaire data from students at a southeastern metropolitan U. (N = 46). In 1 class, the questionnaire was completed before a session of interaction with 2 M & 2 F homosexuals; in the other, after the session. Interaction was significantly related to lower levels of discomfort with homosexuals. 2 Tables, 19 References. W. H. Stoddard

88T1403

Lane, Helen J. (School Social Work Loyola U., Chicago 11 60611), Self-Differentiation in Symbolic Interactionism and Psychoanalysis. U Social Work, 1984, 29, 3, May-June, 270-274

¶ The clinical practice of social work has been strongly influenced by the theoretical tradition of individual psychology & psychiatry. Parallels are drawn concerning the development of the self between recent psychoanalytic theory & earlier formulations found in the sociological tradition of symbolic interactionism. It is suggested that a unity of understanding between the two thought systems is useful to the knowledge base of social work practice. HA

88T1404

LaFlore, Larry (U Southern Mississippi, Hattiesburg 39406), The Just Desert Philosophy and Its Impact on Child Saving: From the Perspective of Black Children. U Free Inquiry in Creative Sociology, 1987, 15, 2, Nov, 145-150

¶ Several philosophies have guided juvenile justice systems since their origin in the late nineteenth century: rehabilitation, due process, & nonintervention. Recently, a new philosophy has emerged: the just deserts model, closely related to the classical idea of deterrence. The adoption of this model would have several implications for blacks, most important of which is that black juveniles may become even more overrepresented in the juvenile justice system. In addition, black M's image may deteriorate further & blacks who could benefit from treatment strategies would not receive them. However, the black community may realize the need for greater involvement in preventing & controlling black delinquency, & can be effective in that portion of delinquency not controlled by social structural factors. 18 References. W. H. Stoddard

88T1405

Lennon, Mary Clare (School Public Health Columbia U., New York NY 10032), Sex Differences in Distress: The Impact of Gender and Work Roles. U Journal of Health and Social Behavior, 1987, 28, 3, Sept, 290-305

¶ An examination of a potential source of gender differences in distress that has received relatively little attention: the workplace itself. Focus is on the extent to which work conditions & the sexual segregation of occupations are related to two measures of distress: demoralization, which is more prevalent among women, & drinking, which is more prevalent among men. Multiple regression analyses of US survey data collected between 1971 & 1975 from 3,464 employed M's & F's, aged 25-74, indicate that the only work-related factors associated with demoralization are substantive complexity & full-time work, & these have an effect among women only. Substantive complexity is also associated with drinking, but only among men, as complexity declines, levels of drinking increase. These findings indicate the importance of considering work-related factors & measures of distress associated differentially with gender when investigating gender differences in distress. 2 Tables, 2 Figures, 2 Appendixes. Modified HA

88T1406

Lerner, Melvin J. (Dept Psychology U Waterloo, Ontario N2L 3G1), Integrating Societal and Psychological Rules of Entitlement: The Basic Task of Each Social Actor and Fundamental Problem for the Social Sciences. Social Justice Research, 1987, 1, 1, Mar, 107-125

It is argued that "entitlement," i.e., the feeling of being entitled to a certain outcome, originates from both psychological & sociocultural conceptions of justice. In the normal course of development, adults acquire two bases for evaluating entitlement, which often conflict: (1) the primitive, unconscious scripts concerning rules & the organization of experience, & (2) the conscious scripts acquired from the normative social structure. Data from previous experiments reveal that, in affectively motivating situations, people will call on their deeper psychological rules of entitlement & "justice for all," even when that alternative is more costly to the individual; their behavior, however, will be shaped by the normative expectations of the situation. This theoretical framework offers an alternative to prevailing models of social motivation; its methodological, theoretical, & social policy implications are discussed. 52 References. K. Hyatt

88T1407

Lesieur, Henry R. & Paig, Kenneth (Dept Sociology & Anthropology Saint John's U., Jamaica NY 11439), Insurance Problems and Pathological Gambling. Journal of Gambling Behavior, 1987, 3, 2, summer, 123-136

¶ A 1984 survey of 241 members of Gamblers Anonymous (GA) in the US was conducted in order to find out the impact of pathological gambling on the insurance industry & whether GA reverses that impact. Fifty-two % of the Rs cashed in, surrendered, lapsed, or had policies revoked for nonpayment, 46% borrowed on or used the cash value of their life insurance policies while gambling, 47% admitted to some form of insurance-related fraud, embezzlement or arson in connection with their gambling. The cost to the insurance industry was estimated at $66 billion in surrendered policies & $33 billion in fraud. Attendance at GA reversed much of this loss as members picked up new policies & engaged in programs of restitution after attendance. A discussion is made of the insurance-related activities in terms of the usage of options up to & including suicide. Possible insurance industry responses are presented. 3 Tables, 29 References. HA

88T1408

Lester, David. Availability of Guns and the Likelihood of Suicide. U Sociology and Social Research, 1987, 71, 4, July, 287-288

¶ Since the majority of US suicides are committed with guns, it is hypothesized that decreasing the availability of guns should decrease the number of these deaths. Three indirect measures of gun ownership: strictness of state handgun control laws, % of homicides committed with guns, & rate of accidental gun deaths are examined using data from the 1970 Vital Statistics of the US & D. Lester's Gun Control (Springfield, Ill: Charles C. Thomas, 1984). Results indicate that each measure of gun availability correlates significantly with the rate of suicide by guns. The possibility that potential suicides might simply switch methods if guns were made less available is rejected based on evidence that suicides by domestic gas in GB & by automobile carbon monoxide in the US decreased when these gases were made less toxic. 1 Table, 6 References. K. Hyatt

88T1409

Malhotra, Valerie Ann (Dept Sociology & Social Work Texas Woman's U., Denton 76204), A Comparison of Mead's "Self" and Heidegger's "Dasein": Toward a Regrounding of Social Psychology. Human Studies, 1987, 10, 3-4, Oct, 357-382

¶ A comparison of George Herbert Mead's behaviorally grounded concept of "self" with Martin Heidegger's existential ontology of "dasein." Dasein, as a manifestation of being in the world, is already thrown into specific historical & social circumstances. Mead posits the self as a socially constructed entity. Heidegger's approach to the following themes is presented: everydayness as inauthenticity, the fourfold, language, moods, & the ecstasies of temporality. The following aspects of Mead's social psychology are critiqued in light of Heidegger's thought: the self as use-value, objects as constituted by organisms, symbols in behavior, emotions, & space-time. It is concluded that research based on Heidegger's concept of dasein would enrich social psychological understandings. 34 References. AA

88T1410

Mason, J. B., Moodley, T., Fourie, M. C., Candotti, S. & Lamprecht, E. A. M. (Dept Social Work U Durban-Westville, 4000 Republic South Africa), An Analysis of Family Variables and Intellectual Functioning of a Group of Pre-School Indian Children. Suid-Afrikaanse Tydskrif vir Sosiologie/The South African Journal of Sociology, 1987, 18, 3, Aug, 110-117

¶ Several hypotheses about the functioning of Indian families in South Africa are tested via analysis of intelligence tests & family drawings completed by preschool children in Chatsworth, South Africa, & structured interviews conducted with the families. Results yield a wide variety of information about families in a low-income housing area, particularly the continuing importance of the extended family for childrearing, financial support, & decision making. A need is seen for parent training programs to aid the development of problem-solving techniques, sex education, & cognitive stimulation. 12 References. Modified HA

88T1429

Rubin, Rebecca B. & McHugh, Michael P. (Kent State U, OH 44242), Development of Parasocial Interaction Relationships, ♦ Journal of Broadcasting & Electronic Media, 1987, 31, 3, summer, 279-292.

¶ Questionnaire data collected in 1985 from 303 undergraduate communications students at a large midwestern U are utilized to assess the parasocial interaction relationship process (a one-sided interpersonal relationship that viewers establish with TV characters) by applying principles of uncertainty reduction theory. Results suggest that parasocial relationship development follows a path from social & task attraction through parasocial interaction to a sense of relationship importance. Length of exposure to the TV character is not related to parasocial interaction in the path model. The contribution of interpersonal communication theories to understanding relationships people have with TV personalities is affirmed, & implications for future research are explored. 1 Table, 2 Figures, 48 References. Modified HA

88T1430

Sackett, Robert Eben (Dept History U Colorado, Boulder 80309), Images of the Jew: Popular Joke-telling in Munich on the Eve of World War I, Theory and Society, 1987, 16, 4, July, 527-563

¶ An exploration of public attitudes toward the Jews in Germany prior to the rise of Nazism, as revealed in popular entertainment. In the years before WWI, the city of Munich had numerous folksingers who provided varied forms of entertainment that grew out of popular traditions, one of the most popular of these was Weiss Ferdi (1883-1949). Much of his humor consisted of jokes about Jews in which popular anti-Semitic attitudes were often reflected. Six of these jokes are subjected to content analysis. The audience of the Munich folksingers, made up largely of artisans, appears to have been dubious about legal measures granting equal rights to Jews. This case study illuminates the cultural origins of Nazism. W. H. Stoddard

88T1431

Sagy, Shifra & Antonovsky, Helen (Dept Sociology Health Ben Gurion U Negev, Beer Sheva 84 105 Israel), Adolescents' Reactions to the Evacuation of the Sinai Settlements: A Longitudinal Study, The Journal of Psychology, 1986, 120, 6, Nov, 543-556

¶ Psychological reactions of adolescents to a severe stress situation the evacuation of the Sinai settlements are investigated. Two central problems are considered: (1) the intensity of the emotional responses of anxiety & anger of the adolescents to the stress situation, before & after the evacuation; & (2) the impact of three intervening variables on these emotional reactions—cognitive perception of the political situation, family functioning, & personality characteristics. Longitudinal questionnaire data were collected in a regional high school in Israel from 418 pupils in grades 9-12, including 78 from the Yamit evacuation area. The results support the predicted trend that adolescents in the Yamit group before the evacuation would score higher on state anxiety & state anger than would those in the comparison group, but that those scores would drop 2 months after the evacuation. Concerning the impact of the three intervening variables on the intensity of the state emotional responses, the results do not support any of the hypotheses. 2 Tables, 39 References. Modified HA

88T1432

Sauvageot, Anne (Centre recherches sociologiques U Toulouse II, F-31058 Cedex France), Mémoire et anticipation d'un imaginaire numérique (Memory and Anticipation of Computer-Generated Images and Digital Mental Pictures), Cahiers Internationaux de Sociologie, 1987, 34, 82, Jan-June, 99-107 (FRE)

¶ Computer-produced images permit the introduction of forms that transgress human perceptive & cognitive codes & symbolic relation to the world. Their models, generated by mathematics, allow endless changes, contributing to the magic of ever-evolving forms & eliciting new perspectives. These were investigated in a 1985-1987 survey of the conditions of reception & interpretation of the "new images" among different sociocultural groups. A total of 350 French individuals (children, elderly persons, students from different faculties, & social workers) were shown 22 animated sequences & asked to classify the images they contained & to link them with verbal expressions. It was possible to identify different modalities of perception for the different groups, indicating the dependence of perceptive systems on sociocultural experience. Correlations were established between new perceptive modes & certain processes of the collective imagination. It also appears possible that, in response to the increasing sophistication of images in the environment, people's modes of perception are becoming enriched. AA Tr & Modified by C. Waters

88T1433

Scheff, Thomas J. (U California, Santa Barbara 93106), Two Studies of Emotion: Crying and Anger Control, IM Contemporary Sociology, 1987, 16, 4, July, 458-460.

¶ A review essay on Crying: The Mystery of Tears by William H. Frey, II, with Muriel Langseth (Minneapolis: Winston Press & Harper & Row, 1985); & Carol Zisowitz Stearns's & Peter N. Stearns's Anger: The Struggle of Emotional Control in America's History (Chicago: U of Chicago Press, 1986 [see listings in IRPS No. 41]). These two books reflect growing academic interest in human emotions, though they are quite different in style & content. The Frey volume focuses on individual behavior & is written in a popular style with uneven citations & references, though its content has real value. The Stearns volume, in contrast, examines a large subject—historical changes over the past three centuries in the social control of anger—in a highly formal academic style. Its essential concern is with the currently debated question of whether anger should be expressed or held in. Ultimately, their scholarly style weakens their book rather than enhancing it, while the popular style of the Frey volume does not damage the usefulness of its contributions. 5 References. W. H. Stoddard

88T1434

Sfez, Lucien (Centre recherches & études décision administrative & politique U Paris IX, F-75775 Cedex 16 France), Etapes pour une agonie (Stages toward Agony), Cahiers Internationaux de Sociologie, 1987, 34, 82, Jan-June, 25-40. (FRE)

¶ The debate on the nature of reality is examined. Theorists of the media-dominated society have suggested that reality no longer exists. Here, the problem is investigated by analyzing the way the question has been posed & the processes through which it took a concrete form. This leads to a discussion of new concepts in cognitive science. Modified HA

88T1435

Stack, Steven (Auburn U, AL 36849), The Effect of Female Participation in the Labor Force on Suicide: A Time Series Analysis, 1948-1980, Sociological Forum, 1987, 2, 2, spring, 257-277.

¶ Two theoretical perspectives on the impact of F LF participation (FLFP) on suicide are contrasted: status integration theory (Gibbs, Jack, & Martin, Walter T., Status Integration and Suicide, Eugene: U of Oregon Press, 1964) & role accumulation/expansion theory (eg, see SA 23:1/75H1767 & SA 26:3/78J3284). Where the first predicts a positive association between the two, the second predicts a negative association. Here formulated is a synthetic view based on the cultural context surrounding FLFP. Analysis of national-level statistical data for 1948-1963 shows that FLFP increases both M & F suicide rates, as predicted by status integration theory; analysis of similar data for 1964-1980 shows no r between FLFP & F suicide, but still shows a positive r between FLFP & M suicide. These findings can be interpreted in terms of cultural changes in expectations regarding sex roles. 3 Tables, 2 Figures, 73 References. Modified HA

88T1436

Stack, Steven (Auburn U, AL 36849), The Sociological Study of Suicide: Methodological Issues, ♦ IM Suicide and Life-Threatening Behavior, 1987, 17, 2, summer, 133-150

¶ A critical review of selected methodological issues in the macrolevel sociological study of suicide. Three recurrent problems are identified: (1) measurement issues on four key variables (suicide & parasuicide, economic conditions, religion, & political conditions such as war); (2) problems in studying the effect of mass media stories on suicide; & (3) reasons why there is a need to adopt a cross-national method in order to test sociological theories for contextual effects. Partial remedies to many of these problems are discussed. 1 Table, 70 References. Modified HA

88T1437

Stein, Howard F. (Dept Family Medicine U Oklahoma Health Sciences Center, PO Box 26901 Oklahoma City 73190), Social Role and Unconscious Complementarity, ♦ The Journal of Psychoanalytic Anthropology, 1986, 9, 3, summer, 235-268.

¶ The individual & group psychology of role definition & interaction is explored. Using psychoanalytically informed anthropology, & drawing examples from preliterate & complex societies, an attempt is made to un-

88T1420

Newland, Daniel Michael (U Akron, OH 44325). The Causes and Consequences of Alienation: Public and Catholic Secondary Schools Compared. * Dissertation Abstracts International, A: The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 47, 11, May, 4195-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor MI. Order No. DA86704738.

88T1421

Norden, Gilbert (Institut Soziologie Sozial- und Wirtschaftswissenschaftlichen Fakultät U Wien, A-1010 Austria). "Langsamläufer": Ergebnisse einer Befragung der Teilnehmer an der Aktion "Langsamlauftreff" ("Slow Runners" Results of a Survey of Participants in a "Slow-Running" Event). Österreichische Zeitschrift für Soziologie, 1986, 11, 4, 79-86. (G:ER)

† The motivations for participation in different kinds of recreational running are examined in a 1986 study of joggers & slow runners in Vienna, Austria. "Slow running" is characterized as running at a comfortable pace with pauses for walking, games, & other exercise. People taking part in slow running events ($N = 82$) & joggers using a running course ($N = 35$) were questioned about their primary motives. While the same individual motives were found in roughly the same degree, more slow runners emphasized health, contact with others, & family participation. Both groups were found to run more for the pleasure felt after running than for the pleasure felt while running. 2 Tables, 11 References. J. Anderson

88T1422

Peyrot, Mark, McMurtry, James F., Jr. & Hedges, Richard (Social Research Center Loyola Coll, Baltimore MD 21210). Living with Diabetes: The Role of Personal and Professional Knowledge in Symptom and Regimen Management. Research in the Sociology of Health Care, 1987, 6, 107-146.

† An ethnographic investigation of the ways that adults with diabetes manage the disease's symptoms & treatment in everyday life, & the effect that these adaptations have on significant others in their lives. Data from interviews with 21 married couples in which 1 partner had diabetes & managed it with insulin on an out-patient basis, & with 10 diabetics hospitalized at the U of Kentucky Medical Center, reveal how diabetics synthesize personal & professional knowledge of their illness to customize their treatment regimes. Different lifestyle adaptations taken to maintain glucose control are identified, along with certain physiological & psychological factors that may disrupt such efforts. Whether following a relaxed or tight control regime, the basic strategy involves "normalization" i.e. minimizing the intrusiveness of the disease. The range of adaptive responses to diabetes illustrates how illness is socially constructed, & contradicts the prevailing medical conception of the ill passively coping with a predetermined condition. 1 Table, 38 References. K. Hyatt

88T1423

Phillips, David P. & Wills, John S. (Dept Sociology U California San Diego, La Jolla 92093). A Drop in Suicides around Major National Holidays. ♦ U Suicide and Life-Threatening Behavior, 1987, 17, 1, spring, 1-12.

† To study the fluctuation of suicides around the holidays, official statistics on 188,047 US suicides from 1973 to 1979 are examined. Correcting for the effects of extraneous variables e.g. seasons & days of the week—it is found that suicides dropped by an annual average of -102.5 in the period surrounding the holidays. One set of holidays (Memorial Day, Thanksgiving, & Christmas) was associated with an unusually low risk of suicide before, during, & after the holiday. Another set of holidays (New Year's Day, July 4th, & Labor Day) was associated with a low risk of suicide before the holiday & a high risk just afterward. Almost all demographic groups experienced a low risk of suicide around the holidays: whites, blacks, Ms, Fs, retired persons, & persons of working age. Only white teenagers deviated from this pattern. Thus, the evidence does not support the widespread popular assumption that holidays are a risk factor in suicide. 2 Tables, 3 Figures, 22 References. HA

88T1424

Rabkin, Leslie Y. (2200 24th Ave East, Seattle WA 98112). Longitudinal Continuities in the Personality of a Kibbutznik. ♦ The Journal of Psychoanalytic Anthropology, 1986, 9, 3, summer, 319-338.

† An examination of the personality of a kibbutz-born individual as reflected in his Rorschach protocols obtained in 1951 & 1968. The single-case study illuminates continuities & changes in structure & themes between young & middle adulthood, & how these reflect culturally significant aspects of personality development in the kibbutz. It is concluded that the psychological factors of splitting, fragmentation, & anal-sadism that mark these records can be linked to the kibbutz separation of caretaker functions between parents & nurses. This results in delayed fusion of pregenital libidinal feelings, a pervasive insecurity, & difficulties in Oedipal resolution & superego development. 28 References. AA

88T1425

Ray, J. J. (U New South Wales, Kensington 2033 Australia). Complex Jobs and Complex Mental Processes: Comment on Miller, Slomczynski, and Kohn. U American Journal of Sociology, 1987, 93, 2, Sept, 440-442. Reply, 442-444.

† Joanne Miller, Kazimierz M. Slomczynski, & Melvin L. Kohn report that people who assent to platitudinous statements often work in less demanding jobs (see SA 34 2/86Q4880). Although this is to be expected, it is surprising that Miller et al believe that the series of platitudes used in their research design are measures of conservatism or authoritarianism, & that their results reveal something about these tendencies. In reality, the scale used measures neither of these constructs validly: what it actually measures is willingness to agree indiscriminately with vague statements. Further, the cognitive style variables underlying this tendency, e.g. rigidity or complexity, are themselves highly multidimensional, making it difficult to conclude anything about cognitive style from this study. In Authoritarianism as Worldview and Intellectual Process: Reply to Ray, Miller, Slomczynski, & Kohn (City U of New York, NY) point out that the concept of authoritarian conservatism investigated is not wedded to Ray's scale, but is based on modern social psychology. Adherence to authoritarian conservative views is influenced by social context. Statistical controls for propensity to agree & propensity to make extreme assertions fails to explain the observed relationship between social stratification & authoritarian conservatism. The findings reveal a reciprocal relationship between job & personal cognitive development. 25 References. W. H. Stoddard

88T1426

Ray, John J. (School Sociology U New South Wales, Kensington 2033 Australia). Radicalism and Alienation. Journal of Social Psychology, 1987, 127, 2, Apr, 219-220.

† Research using students as subjects has tended to show that alienation & political leftism are associated. In the population at large, however, the results are more equivocal. Authors such as D. Loe (The Leadership Passion, San Francisco: Jossey-Bass, 1977) have defined alienation in a way that seems to guarantee the association, but more eclectic measures of alienation have shown little or no association with leftism. An eclectic measurement instrument administered in 1973 to a random sample of Australians ($N = 4,554$) revealed a negligible association between alienation & social, economic, & behavioral conservatism. 2, 8 References. Modified AA

88T1427

Reed, Mark David (State U New York, Albany 12203). Macrosociological and Organizational Determinants of Officially-Reported Suicide Rates. * Dissertation Abstracts International, A: The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 47, 11, May, 4195-A-4196-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor MI. Order No. DA8703993.

88T1428

Ruback, R. Barry (Dept Psychology Georgia State U, Atlanta 30303). Deserted (and Nondeserted) Aisles: Territorial Intrusion Can Produce Persistence, Not Flight. U Social Psychology Quarterly, 1987, 50, 3, Sept, 270-276.

† In a prior questionnaire study (Ruback, R. Barry, & Patnaik, Rajesh, "Crowding and Control in India," unpublished manuscript, Georgia State U, 1987), Ss said they would feel more comfortable in a library aisle if they were alone than if another person were present. Based on these results, it was expected that intruded-upon Ss would leave a library aisle quicker than would nonintruded-upon Ss. The results of two studies, however, conflicted with this prediction. In the first study, observations of 74 individuals revealed that those Ss who were by themselves spent significantly less time in the aisles than did individuals who were intruded upon by one or more other persons. The second study was an experimental investigation of the effect of a confederate on the amount of time 80 Ss spent in library aisles. Ss who were not intruded upon spent significantly less time in the aisle than did Ss who were joined by the confederate. The intrusion might have led to persistence because of distraction, arousal, or reactance. 18 References. HA

88T1447

Vizak-Vidović, Vlasta (Filozofski Fakultet U Zagrebu, YU-41000 Yugoslavia). Some Personality Dimensions and Job Stress in Blue Collar Workers. Studia Psychologica, 1984, 26, 3, 187-192.

† An empirical study of blue-collar workers is used to determine whether different persons experience different degrees of stress in the same physical work environment, & whether these differences correspond to personality traits assessed by standard techniques. Eysenck personality scales were adapted for assessing personality traits according to the "Type-A" variables—activity, responsibility, risk-taking, ambition, & independence. The S group ($N = 170$) was controlled for age, sex, income, education, job tenure, kinds of tasks, & exposure to a stressful environment (night shifts, noise, etc.). A significant r between degree of stress & personality type was found for the latter three variables only. It is concluded that workers who express a higher degree of independence, need for security, & need for achievement adapt best to unfavorable work conditions. 1 Table, 1 Figure, 6 References. Modified HA

88T1448

Wagner, Karl (Biedersteiner Str 24/WG1, D-8000 Munich 40 Federal Republic Germany). Ueber Prozesse der Etikettierung und Gegeneetikettierung (On the Processes of Labeling and Counterlabeling), Schweizerische Zeitschrift für Soziologie/Revue Suisse de sociologie, 1987, 13, 1, June, 105-122. (GER)

† A theoretical discussion of the labeling approach & of its contribution to a general theory of conflict. The interactionist core of the labeling approach lies in the negotiation of labeling & counterlabeling. From a systematic derivation, which goes beyond the previous subject area of this approach (criminology & social pathology), it becomes evident that by broadening the subject area, one can become aware of the general dynamics of social conflict. Conflicts can then be regarded as a possible consequence of reciprocal symbolic attributions. The physical & psychological costs thus incurred are often totally out of proportion to the initial intention. The concept of systemic deviance is discussed as a example of this new approach. It refers to the labeling processes by which two approximately equal superpowers produce their respective enemies. 71 References. Modified HA

88T1449

Wegener, Bernd (Max-Planck-Institut Bildungsforschung, Lentzeallee 94 D-1000 Berlin 33 Federal Republic Germany). Vom Nutzen entfernter Bekannter (The Use of Distant Acquaintances), Kolner Zeitschrift für Soziologie und Sozialpsychologie, 1987, 39, 2, June, 278-301. (GER)

† An explanation of Mark S. Granovetter's strength of weak ties paradox (see SA 22 2/74G7437) is attempted. Emphasis is on the advantage individuals have in gaining higher status jobs if they contact persons to whom they are related by weak social ties, & reasons why, in these situations, distant acquaintances are more beneficial than close friends. The concept of weak social ties is defined. A structural theory of job search outcomes is presented & discussed in relation to empirical findings. However, this theory is merely descriptive as opposed to causally explanatory; as an alternative, a theory of the rationally acting job seeker is proposed, which introduces a dynamic model of social action. This model is designed to map both the interests of job seekers & the expectations of potential contact persons. 1 Table, 6 Figures, 74 References. Modified HA

88T1450

Weimann, Gabriel, Fishman, Gideon & Rattner, Arye (Haifa U, Mount Carmel 31999 Israel). Social Distance and Misidentification, International Journal of Comparative Sociology, 1986, 27, 3-4, Sept-Dec, 217-225.

† An examination of the impact of national & ethnic divisions on misidentification, i.e., failure of recognition through either nonidentification—failing to identify a previously viewed picture—or false identification—incorrectly identifying a picture as one that has been previously viewed. An experiment was conducted with randomly selected samples of Canadian students at the U of Ottawa, Ontario ($N = 92$), & Ashkenazic Jews, Sephardic Jews, & Israeli-Arabs attending the U of Haifa in Israel ($\Sigma N = 513$). Results of an analysis of variance reveal that national distinction (Canadian vs Israeli) as well as interethnic grouping (Ashkenazic vs Sephardic vs Arab) affect the amount of both types of misidentification. However, the national distance separating societies is far more powerful as a cause for these errors than is the ethnic distance between groups within a society. 5 Tables, 19 References. Modified HA

88T1451

Wells, Joel W. & Kline, William B. (Dept Home Economics U Northern Iowa, Cedar Falls 50614-0442). Self-Disclosure of Homosexual Orientation, Journal of Social Psychology, 1987, 127, 2, Apr, 191-197.

† An open-ended questionnaire was distributed to Rs assessing how, when, where, why, & to whom gay men & lesbians ($N = 23$ & 17, respectively) in the US disclosed their sexual orientation. Results revealed a high degree of selectivity & fear of rejection, as well as a tendency to elicit the receiver's views about homosexuality before disclosing what is considered as intimate data. Rs cited honesty, developing meaningful relationships, education of nongays, & maintaining a positive self-image as major considerations in self-disclosing their sexual orientation. Gender differences were found between women & men supporting traditional sex-role socialization. 1 Table, 19 References. HA

88T1452

Wheeler, Raymond H. & Gunter, B. G. (Dept Sociology U South Florida, Tampa 33620). Change in Spouse Age Difference at Marriage: A Challenge to Traditional Family and Sex Roles?, U of The Sociological Quarterly, 1987, 28, 3, Sept, 411-421.

† It is speculated that four broad societal changes (postponement of marriage by large numbers of women, dispersion of divorce throughout the life cycle, more equitable distribution of power between men & women, & wide swings in fertility) should eventually affect M-F age differences at marriage—i.e., the age-mating gradient. Examination of age differences at marriage from 1930 to 1980 in a central Fla county shows a trend toward an increasing % of women marrying men younger than themselves. Data on all marriages for 1985 for this same county ($N = 7,021$) indicates a continuation of this trend. Previous investigation (see SA 35:2/87R4726) of the age-mating gradient disclosed that age at marriage & marriage parity are related to the % of marriages in which the age-mating gradient is "followed." Using the proportion marrying mates older or younger by 3+ years as a conservative measure of the violation of the age-mating gradient, it is found that persons most likely to deviate from the traditional age-mating gradient were men aged 24-29, women aged 30+, & those persons who were marrying for the second, third, or later time. Some suggested explanations for these patterns are offered. 6 Tables, 13 References. HA

88T1453

Wiatrowski, Michael & Anderson, Kristine L. (Dept Criminal Justice Florida Atlantic U, Boca Raton 33431). The Dimensionality of the Social Bond, Journal of Quantitative Criminology, 1987, 3, 1, Mar, 65-81.

† Social control theories claim that the structure of the social bond to society is a prime factor in juvenile delinquency. An empirical examination is made of the number & nature of dimensions of the social bond in order to determine which aspects are most influential. K. B. Joreskog's & D. Sorbom's method of simultaneously estimating the measurement & causal aspects of structural equation models (LISREL VI: Analysis of Linear Structural Relationships by the Method of Maximum Likelihood, Instrumental Variables, and Least Squares Methods, Mooresville, Ind: Scientific Software, 1984) is used to analyze data from the first wave of the five-wave Youth in Transition study, involving interview & questionnaire data from a nationally representative sample of 2,213 black & white M youths. Four models of the dimensionality of the social bond are investigated, & the superiority of an 8-factor model is demonstrated. The influences of parental & school attachment & Mc beliefs on deterring delinquency are revealed. 4 Tables, 2 Figures, 1 Appendix, 36 References. K. Hyatt

88T1454

Wieden, Anna, Eine Geburt mit Musik (A Birth with Music), Österreichische Zeitschrift für Soziologie, 1986, 11, 4, 68-73. (GER)

† A first-person narrative of a home birth, written by the mother giving birth with notes from the father. An editorial preface notes that the account illustrates how the act of giving birth conflicts with certain social norms relating to the body, especially sexual ones, & that the absence of a medical institutional context allows these conflicts to emerge fully. J. Anderson

88T1455

Witte, Erich H. (Psychologisches Institut I U Hamburg, D-2000 13 Federal Republic Germany). Die Idee einer einheitlichen Wissen- derstand what social roles are by examining what social roles are for, both to the individual & to the group who construct such identity models. Affect is shown to be an intrinsic part of role definition & structure, rather than an epiphenomenon to it. The dynamic of unconscious complementarity in role relations is shown to serve often as the homeostat that holds dyads, families, societies & intergroup relations together. The model is applied to understanding institutional roles, leadership, deviance, & intergroup relations. 89 References. Modified AA

88T1438

Stephens, B. Joyce (State U. New York, Fredonia 14063), Cheap Thrills and Humble Pie: The Adolescence of Female Suicide Attempters, ♦ U Suicide and Life-Threatening Behavior, 1987, 17, 2, summer, 107-118.

¶ An attempt to identify & describe characteristic social & psychological patterns of the adolescence of Fs who attempt suicide as adults. Life histories of 50 adult F suicide attempters were obtained & supplemented by a content analysis of personal documents written by the Fs during their adolescence. Two disparate social & psychological patterns were identified: "cheap thrills" & "humble pie." The former is a pattern of defiance, rebelliousness, acting out behaviors, drug involvement, & indiscriminate sexuality, while humble pie is in polar contrast, involving overconformity, docility, passivity, & emotional submergence. This second pattern is a stark contrast to the prevalent image in the suicide literature. Implications for understanding of the long term & processual nature of F's suicidal careers are discussed. 13 References. Modified HA Sitthran, Julius (Instit Philosophy & Sociology Slovak Academy Sciences, Obrancov Mieru 49 81438 Bratislava (Czechoslovakia), Niektoré aspekty racionalneho rozhodovania (On Some Aspects of Rational Decision Making), Filozofia, 1983, 38, 1, 27-32 (CZE).

88T1439

¶ In the varied decision making situations that arise in everyday life, science, & economic activities, not only informative but also emotional, volitional, axiological, & moral factors play a role. Thus, it is impossible to reduce the concept of rational decision making to choice by criteria of utility & risk. Rationality cannot be understood, either, as formal manipulation of signs according to requirements of inner consistency. These problems have previously been identified by such major philosophers as Aristotle, Immanuel Kant, & G. W. F. Hegel. 5 References. Modified HA

88T1440

Synnott, Anthony (Dept Sociology & Anthropology Concordia U, Montreal Quebec H3G 1M8), Shame and Glory: A Sociology of Hair, ♦ The British Journal of Sociology, 1987, 38, 3, Sept, 381-413.

¶ A sociological/anthropological examination of hair symbolism over the past forty years in the UK, US, & Canada, with focus on developments since Raymond Firth's analysis (Symbols: Public and Private, London: Allen & Unwin, 1973). The range of contemporary hair patterns & symbols in popular culture, & their changes over time, are discussed using a tripartite theory of oppositions: (1) opposite sexes have opposite hair, (2) head hair & body hair are opposite, & (3) opposite ideologies have opposite hair. The complexity & subtlety of hair symbolism is illuminated, particularly as relates to the differing norms for Ms & Fs regarding length, color, style, & additions. It is demonstrated that hair is a powerful symbol of the self & of group identity, ie, a physiological & social phenomenon that serves as a form of communication. Hair's significance for general theories of the body & of symbolism is discussed. 1 Table, 64 References. Modified HA

88T1441

Topalova, Velina (Instit Sociology Bulgarian Academy Sciences, Moskovska str 13 A BG-1000 Sofia), Cognitive Bias in the Representations of Social Structures, Studia Psychologica, 1984, 26, 3, 219-226.

¶ Questions are raised about methodological aspects of the study of cognitive balance & bias. An experiment tested secondary school pupils, factory managers, & workers (N = 97, 60 & 63, respectively) on depictions of relations within a fictitious social group, in which the status of group members was specified in one instance but not in the other. Results show that manifestations of balance, positivity, or congruency depend on the prevalence of defined structure types reflecting the content of representations about the nature of relations among social groups. 4 Tables, 9 References. Modified HA

88T1442

Törnblom, Kjell Y., Fredholm, Eva M. & Johnson, Dan R. (Dept Sociology U Göteborg, S-414 59 Sweden), New and Old Friendships: Attributed Effects of Type and Similarity of Transacted Resources, Human Relations, 1987, 40, 6, June, 337-359.

¶ Using attribution theory as an approach to human relationships, 9 hypotheses are advanced about how type & similarity of exchanged resources affect the growth of friendship. Questionnaire data from 47 F Swedish nursing students, including responses to 3 vignettes involving resource exchange, are used to test these hypotheses. Rs' expectations about development of friendships bear out many but not all of the hypotheses, & support the need to consider not only quantitative but qualitative aspects of equity. 4 Tables, 3 Figures, 29 References. W. H. Stoddard

88T1443

Turner, Bryan S. (Flinders U, Bedford Park South Australia 5042), A Note on Nostalgia, ♦ Theory, Culture & Society, 1987, 4, 1, Feb, 147-156.

¶ Nostalgic ideas have played a major role in the evolution of social thought in Western history &, in particular, of utopian thought. The evolution of the idea of nostalgia is traced through premodern intellectual history to the concept of melancholy as a temperament. Current nostalgic discourse has four basic dimensions: belief in historical decline & loss; belief in the absence of moral certainty; belief in the loss of personal autonomy, & belief in the loss of simplicity & emotional spontaneity. This nostalgic paradigm reflects the difficulties of intellectuals in coming to terms with the egalitarianism of mass culture. Despite the conservative implications of nostalgia, however, it can also generate utopian visions of the past that can in turn inspire radical critique of modern societies, such as embodied in Marxism. 27 References. W. H. Stoddard

88T1444

Umberson, Debra & Hughes, Michael (Instit Social Research U Michigan, Ann Arbor 48106-1248), The Impact of Physical Attractiveness on Achievement and Psychological Well-Being, ♦ Social Psychology Quarterly, 1987, 50, 3, Sept, 227-236.

¶ Operating within a status characteristics framework, the impact of attractiveness on the actual achievement & mental health of individuals is analyzed in a national sample (N = 3,692). Survey data reveal consistently significant & monotonic relationships of attractiveness with 4 measures of achievement & 8 measures of psychological well-being. Based on these analyses, it is concluded that survey research findings corroborate experimental findings on attractiveness, that one's attractiveness does impinge on achievement & psychological well-being, & status characteristics theory can be used to explain the effects of attractiveness on well-being & achievement. 3 Tables, 34 References. Modified HA

88T1445

Van Tran, Thanh & Byars, Lauretta F. (U Kentucky, Lexington 40506), Sources of Subjective Well-Being among Vietnamese Women in the United States, ♦ U Free Inquiry in Creative Sociology, 1987, 15, 2, Nov, 195-198.

¶ Questionnaire data collected from 100 Vietnamese women in Dallas/Fort Worth, Tex., & Oklahoma City, Okla., in 1985 are used to explore correlates of subjective well-being. Of 8 variables examined—social interaction anxiety, English communication ability, family income, education, age, social support, length of time in the US, & marital status—only marital status had no significant relationship with subjective well-being. Policy implications of these findings are explored. 1 Table, 17 References. W. H. Stoddard

88T1446

Vera, Hernan, Berardo, Felix M. & Berardo, Donna H. (Dept Sociology U Florida, Gainesville 32611), On Gold Diggers: Status Gain or Loss in Age Heterogamous Marriages, Journal of Aging Studies, 1987, 1, 1, spring, 51-64.

¶ An examination of age-heterogamous unions in US society, which often provoke negative stereotypes of the participants. Based on data from the 1976 wave of the Panel on Income Dynamics, age-homogamous & age-heterogamous couples are compared in terms of each of the spouse's achieved & inherited status & the contribution these make to explained variance in family income. Hierarchical multiple regression analysis reveals that, contrary to popular belief, the status of the older spouse does not make a more important contribution toward explained income. Here, the reverse was the case, in that the wife's status contributed more toward explained income. The notion that age heterogamy in marriage represents a channel of upward mobility for young women married to older men needs systematic reexamination. 5 Tables, 34 References. Modified HA ive vocabulary, & a unique worldview that allows members to justify their actions. The positive & negative functions that these subcultures serve for their members are analyzed from a symbolic interactionist perspective. 52 References. Modified HA

88T1464

Howard, Dorothy E. (Boston U, MA 02215), No Laughing Matter: Experienced Obesity. * Dissertation Abstracts International, A: The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 1, July, 224-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8709640.

88T1465

Kaplan, Howard B., Johnson, Robert J. & Bailey, Carol A. (Dept Psychiatry Baylor Coll Medicine, Houston TX 77030), Deviant Peers and Deviant Behavior: Further Elaboration of a Model, U Social Psychology Quarterly, 1987, 50, 3, Sept, 277-284.

† In an earlier analysis (see SA 34:5/86Q9523), a model was estimated in which later deviance was explained by the direct positive effects of disposition to deviance & early deviance, the direct negative effect of self-rejection, & the indirect positive effects of self-rejection & early deviance. This analysis estimates an elaborated model that specifies, in addition to the above effects, the direct effect of association with deviant peers on later deviance. Deviant peer association mediates the influence of early deviance, self-rejection, & disposition to deviance on later deviance. The model is estimated using the LISREL VI program for analysis of linear structural relationships among latent constructs in a three-wave panel data set. 2 Tables, 2 Figures, 22 References. HA

88T1466

Smith, Douglas A. & Paternoster, Raymond (U Maryland, College Park 20742), The Gender Gap in Theories of Deviance: Issues and Evidence, U Journal of Research in Crime and Delinquency, 1987, 24, 2, May, 140-172.

† The gender-specific origins of many deviance theories have led some to argue that "general" theories of deviance are little more than specific theories of M deviance. Here, the relative explanatory power of key elements of four major theories of deviance (social bonds, differential association, strain, & deterrence) in accounting for marijuana use among Ms & Fs is assessed via 1981/82 questionnaire data from a sample of high school students in a southeastern US city. Findings indicate that explanatory variables derived from these theories equally explain the behavior of Ms & Fs in two aspects of marijuana use. (1) participation decisions, & (2) frequency of use. 2 Tables, 3 Appendixes, 103 References. Modified HA

73 social interaction/everyday life

88T1467

Bloch, Charlotte (Institut Cultural Sociology U Copenhagen, DK-1130 K Denmark), Everyday Life, Sensuality, and Body Culture, Women's Studies International Forum, 1987, 10, 4, 433-442

† After distinguishing between two types of sensuality—dominant & concealed—the interplay between social power, the body, & sensuality in women's everyday lives is examined within the context of changing economic, political, & cultural ideologies. Some contradictory features of women's everyday lives are explored, with focus on how they affect women's experiences of sensuality, recognition, autonomy, & personal continuity. It is suggested that the radical disruption of everyday life leaves room for the surfacing of repressed conflicts & sensual yearnings. Evidence for this is offered from a 2-year qualitative interview study of 30 unskilled F laborers whose lives were disrupted when they became unemployed. Implications of a new sensitivity toward the body, & new opportunities for a divergent sensuality, that have developed through women's increased participation in sports are discussed. 20 References. Modified HA

88T1468

De La Rocha, Olivia Lorryne (U California, Irvine 92717), Problems of Sense and Problems of Scale: An Ethnographic Study of Arithmetic in Everyday Life. * Dissertation Abstracts International, A: The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 47, 11, May, 4198-A-4199-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor MI. Order No. DA8703926.

88T1469

Deenzin, Norman K. (Dept Sociology U Illinois, Urbana 61801), Under the Influence of Time: Reading the Interactional Text, U The Sociological Quarterly, 1987, 28, 3, Sept, 327-341.

† The phenomenon of first-time thoroughness, which speaks to how social events are experienced in real, interactional time, is examined. Multiple readings of the made-for-TV film Under the Influence (1986) are presented. These readings are used as evidence to support the conclusion that the lived orderliness of everyday life rests on the sense of history that first-time thoroughness gives to problematic & taken-for-granted interactional experiences. It is argued that contemporary social psychological theory ignores the temporal features of social life. 44 References. HA

88T1470

Keppeler, Angela (Sozialwissenschaftliche Fakultät Fachgruppe Soziologie U Konstanz, D-7750 1 Federal Republic Germany), Der Verlauf von Klatschgesprächen (The Sequential Organization of Gossip), Zeitschrift für Soziologie, 1987, 16, 4, Aug, 288-302. (GER)

† Gossip is analyzed as a process by which a communicative genre is realized & reproduced. Discourse analysis reveals a pattern of sequential organization in three stages: (1) a preliminary phase, in which the willingness to gossip is intersubjectively negotiated & ratified before any information is exchanged; (2) a story phase, in which a conspicuous action of an absent person is reported & evaluated, & specific characteristics are ascribed to the subject of gossip; & (3) a concluding phase, in which the individual characterization is generalized to social types & explicated by a common exchange of views. Interpretations situating the individual action within the frame of general social & moral rules are offered & tested. The social role of gossip & characteristics that distinguish it from other types of communication are noted. 19 References. Modified HA

88T1471

Lautz, Wolfgang (Sektion Marxismus-Leninismus Karl-Marx-U, 7010 Leipzig German Democratic Republic), Alltagsbewusstsein und gesellschaftliche Widersprüche (Everyday Consciousness and Social Contradictions), ♦ Wissenschaftliche Zeitschrift der Karl Marx Universität Leipzig, Gesellschaftswissenschaftliche Reihe, 1985, 34, 1, 35-41. (GER)

† Everyday consciousness as precursor of the scientifically grounded consciousness of the Wc is examined with regard to the social contradictions that give rise to it & its legitimate function in the social life process. Fundamental contradictions of socialist society that produce the experience of a divergence between individual & collective interests & that can give rise to individualistic modes of thought include: (1) that between the equal right to work & the attempt by some to evade work; (2) that between SE equality & the different degrees of status, responsibility, etc. in the production process; & (3) that between abstract & concrete labor. The necessity of ideological work to make individuals see their experiences as one-sided expressions of essential contradictions is stressed. The function of everyday consciousness is seen to be the binding of individual activity with social conditions by means of individual interests. J. Anderson

88T1472

Wolin, Richard (Dept History Rice U, Houston TX 77251), Agnes Heller on Everyday Life, Theory and Society, 1987, 16, 2, Mar, 295-304.

† A discussion of Agnes Heller's Everyday Life (London: Routledge & Kegan Paul, 1984 (see listing in IRPS No. 41)). Heller radically changes the phenomenological method by treating the everyday not as an insurmountable given but as possessing a potential for self-transcendence. The direction of this self-transcendence is toward universality from the standpoint of humanity in general. Heller sees species life as a struggle between the two poles of the in-itself & the for-itself. She emphasizes the need for reflective thought to free immediacy from blind compulsiveness. This work is provocative & stimulating in its development of the content of phenomenology toward a liberatory form of thought. W. H. Stoddard sozialpsychologie für die Sozialpsychologie (The Idea of a Unified Scientific Theory for Social Psychology). Zeitschrift für Sozial Psychologie, 1987, 18, 2, 76-87 (GER)

‡ The need for & the possibility of developing a unified theory for social psychology are discussed. Four different social psychologies are distinguished: psychological, sociological, anthropological, & applied—each with its own knowledge interest, model of the person, research object, method, & truth criterion. The situation of social psychology is characterized as neither paradigmatic nor preparadigmatic, with the solution called for being paradigm enrichment, or the integration of the four methodologies. Suggestions are given for integrating the four different truth criteria & the possible theoretical consequences are discussed. 1 Figure, 30 References. Modified AA

88T1456

Zaccaro, Stephen J., Peterson, Christopher & Walker, Steven (Dept Psychology Virginia Polytechnic Inst & State U, Blacksburg 24061), Self-Serving Attributions for Individual and Group Performance, U Social Psychology Quarterly, 1987, 50, 3, Sept, 257-263.

‡ The self-serving attributions made by individuals acting alone are compared with those acting in groups. Attributions for group performance to causal factors other than "self" & "environment" are also explored. Analysis of 549 statements made by professional athletes reveals that lone performers made more self-serving attributions than team performers. Also, as player actions became more interdependent, players made fewer self-attributions & more group-internal attributions for successful outcomes. Level of player interdependence did not affect failure attributions. 3 Tables, 27 References. HA

22 leadership

88T1457

Barnes, Louis B. & Kriger, Mark P. (Business School Harvard U, Cambridge MA 02138), The Hidden Side of Organizational Leadership, U Sloan Management Review, 1986, 28, 1, fall, 15-25

‡ The role of leadership is a favorite theme among students of management, but it is hypothesized that most studies focus too narrowly on the individual "hero-leader." It is argued that leadership typically does not rest with a single individual, but is both pluralistic & fluid. This pluralism is, in part, a function of two different leadership structures: the formal management hierarchy & the informal networks that cross & operate within hierarchical lines. The intelligent manager understands that these two structures are complementary. The most successful decision making & the most effective leadership occurs when they are encouraged to coexist. HA

88T1458

Bialer, Seweryn, How Far Can Gorbachev Go? Crisis, Reform, and Limits, U Dissent, 1987, 34, 2, spring, 188-194. Comment, 194

‡ An assessment of the political & social problems that confront Mikhail Gorbachev's efforts to reform the USSR. Three factors contribute to a potential for change: the emergence of a new generation of leaders, the ongoing change in US-USSR foreign relations, & the growing readiness of both sides to accept arms control. The economic system in the USSR is still Stalinist, & there is no sign that Soviet leaders intend to change it; they intend simply to make it work better through increased social discipline, new leadership, policy changes, & organizational change. These are not fundamental enough changes to resolve the economic crisis, & such changes may not be achievable. Gorbachev's foreign policy is one of retrenchment & of readiness to take advantage of the US's problems. The USSR's most important change in foreign & military policy is the emergence of a concept of common security with the US & movement away from the attempt to gain separate security through overwhelming power. These changes create a new opportunity for US-USSR relations. In Lewis Coser Comments, Lewis Coser largely agrees with Bialer, & emphasizes that the changes now occurring are not just cosmetic. At the same time, real structural change will not have occurred until new power centers emerge that can compel policy changes from the ruling apparatus. W. H. Stoddard

88T1459

Robins, Robert S. (Dept Political Science Tulane U, New Orleans LA 70118), Paranoid Ideation and Charismatic Leadership, U The Psychohistory Review, 1986, 15, 1, fall, 15-55

‡ An examination of the similarities & differences between destructive (eg, Hitler) & reparative, or salvationist (Mahatma Gandhi), charismatic political leaders. They have much in common: an abundance of practical political skills, a program that in substantial part features sound & unexceptional policies, & an audience whose great distress predisposes its members to subordinate their normal moral independence to a leader who not only promises but gives evidence of having a remarkable truth that will change their misery to joy. The difference, which appears early in the leader's career, is the paranoid style (ideation & behavior) most prominently manifested in the desire to destroy a putative all-responsible enemy. Though paranoid style & ideation may at points aid him, & are at the heart of his own motivation, it is the rest of his program combined with his practical abilities that afford success. Despite great initial success, the leader's insistence on the primacy of the paranoid aspect of his program will result in the destruction of many of his "enemies" unless he is removed from power. 2 Photographs, 80 References. AA

88T1460

Walt, Robert F. (Indiana U, Bloomington 47405), Task Performance Factors and Social-Emotional Leadership, Dissertation Abstracts International, A The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 47, 11, May, 4196-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor MI. Order No. DA8704024.

64 deviance

88T1461

Ben-Yehuda, Nachman (Dept Sociology Hebrew U Jerusalem, Mount Scopus 91905 Israel), The Politicization of Deviance: Resisting and Reversing Degradation and Stigmatization, U Deviant Behavior, 1987, 8, 3, 259-282

‡ It is argued that the labeling processes of deviantization, stigmatization, & degradation can be neutralized, resisted, & reversed. A case study is presented of Israeli leader Aharon Abu-hatzira, who in the late 1970s was able to turn criminal charges against him into a political asset to bolster his career. His success is attributed to ethnic & religious factors along with the politicization of his "deviance" so as to make a political statement within the context of an effective ideology geared to mobilize a receptive audience. Under similar conditions, such a result could be achieved in other cultures. 32 References. Modified HA

Jerusalem, Mount Scopus 91905 Israel), Sensuality and Venality in Bangkok: The Dynamics of Cross-Cultural Mapping of Prostitution, U Deviant Behavior, 1987, 8, 3, 223-234

‡ A revised version of SA 34 3S17763/ISA/1986/4344.

88T1463

Herman, Nancy J. (Dept Sociology McMaster U, Hamilton Ontario L8S 4M4), "Mixed Niggers" and "Looney Tunes": The Emergence, Development, Nature, and Function of Two Informal, Deviant Subcultures of Chronic, Ex-Psychiatric Patients, U Deviant Behavior, 1987, 8, 3, 235-258.

‡ Participant observation & informal interviews conducted over a 3-year period (1981-1984) with 97 chronic ex-psychiatric patients in 2 southern Ontario (Canada) cities provide an ethnographic description of the rise & nature of their informal, deviant subcultures. Developing in the wake of the deinstitutionalization movement, such subcultures have clearly defined sets of norms & values, crystallized patterns of behavior, a distinct

T1462

Cohen, Erik (Dept Sociology & Social Anthropology Hebrew U Je-

0400 group interactions

10 interaction between (large) groups (race relations, ethnicity, & inter-ethnic relations)

88T1473

Angerame, Pia Franca (U Rome, I-00100 Italy), Inserimento degli stranieri nel servizio sanitario nazionale (The Insertion of Foreigners in the National Health Service), ♦ Studi Emigrazione/Études Migrations, 1986, 23, 82-83, June-Sept, 306-314 (ITA)

‡ As a means of investigating the social integration of foreign immigrants in Italy, their utilization of the national health service is examined. The number of patients classified as foreigners admitted to Italian hospitals & clinics in 1984 totalled 27,000. The heaviest concentration (40% of the total) was in the northeastern regions, especially the province of Bolzano, & in the Latium region. Unfortunately, further information about these patients (eg, whether they are workers or students) is not available at present. 1 Table, 1 Figure, 11 References. Modified HA de Azevedo, Raimondo Cagiano (U Rome, I-00100 Italy), Le proposte di disciplina dell'ingresso, del soggiorno e dell'occupazione degli stranieri in Italia alla luce delle esperienze internazionali (The Proposals for Controlling the Entry, Stay, and Employment of Foreigners in Italy, in Light of International Experiences), ♦ Studi Emigrazione/Études Migrations, 1986, 23, 82-83, June-Sept, 443-461 (ITA)

88T1474

* Legislative & institutional aspects connected with foreign immigration in Italy are discussed. The recommendations of the most important international organizations, including the UN, the European Council, & the European Economic Community (EEC), are reviewed. Laws & policies currently in effect in some EEC & non-FEC European countries are examined. After drawing some conclusions concerning the international situation, the implications for Italy are discussed. Proposals made in the current political debate in Italy concerning immigration are studied, & the limits & risks of existing approaches are investigated. 45 References. Modified HA

88T1475

Barker, Lucius J. (Washington U, Saint Louis MO 63130), Dialogue on a New Dilemma, ♦ WM Society, 1987, 24, 2(166), Jan-Feb, 29-37

* A fictitious discussion among three scholars explores the issues raised by the Study on the Status of Black Americans. The origins of the study & its likely effects at this particular time are considered. A crucial issue is the exclusion of black scholars in the early planning of the study. Given the powerful influence on intellectual opinion of the National Black Research Council, the study sponsor, any weaknesses in the study's design could produce conclusions whose inaccuracy could significantly harm black Americans. The lack of black input into planning makes such weaknesses likely. (See SA 36.1 for abstracts of other articles on this subject appearing in this issue of Society.) W. H. Stoddard

88T1476

Barzotti, Odo & Bottai, Marco (U Pisa, I-56100 Italy), L'immigrazione straniera in Toscana: ipotesi di ricerca e problemi di campionamento (Foreign Immigration in Tuscany: Research Hypothesis and Fieldwork Problems), ♦ Studi Emigrazione/Études Migrations, 1986, 23, 82-83, June-Sept, 343-366 (ITA)

‡ The foreign immigrant population in Tuscany, Italy, which totals 17,600 persons, is described, based on data from official sources, especially the 1981 census, supplemented by information gathered through conversations with key witnesses (N not given). Focus is on the placement of foreign workers in the region's labor market, & on relations among the immigrant communities from different Third World countries. Criteria for defining the "universe" of these foreign communities are discussed, focusing on a process that will extract from a universe that is not thoroughly known a sample that is as representative as possible, avoiding the risks of excessive concentration & uniformity. 8 Tables. Modified HA

88T1477

Berger, Hartwig (Fritschestr 33, D-1000 Berlin 10 Federal Republic Germany), Interkulturelle Beziehungen und ethnische Diskriminierung im Spätkapitalismus (Intercultural Relations and Ethnic Discrimination in Late Capitalism), ♦ Peripherie, 1986, 6, 24, spring, 68-79 (GER)

‡ In West Germany, the sociology of migration is concerned increasingly with intercultural relations between migrant workers & majority society, involving discrimination, inequity, & racial prejudice. Three approaches for analysis of ethnic discrimination are discussed: (1) the SE approach is unable to explain the relevance of ethnic interpretation patterns; (2) the functionalist approach sees striving for social upward mobility as an absolute action motive & is unable to differentiate between ethnic & eg, sexist discrimination; & (3) the sociocultural approach presupposes a questionable notion of an increasingly multicultural society. Suggested is an enlargement of scope in the study of intercultural relations. The impact of phenomena such as institutional racism has not been sufficiently recognized by West German migration sociology. Modified AA

88T1478

Bonacich, Edna (Dept Sociology U California, Riverside 92521), "Making It" in America: A Social Evaluation of the Ethics of Immigrant Entrepreneurship, ♦ Sociological Perspectives, 1987, 30, 4, Oct, 446-466

‡ The concept of "making it" in the US is proposed as the central thrust behind immigrant entrepreneurship. The social values behind making it are found to be closely linked to the capitalist ethic of utilitarianism. Immigrant entrepreneurs are found to be both oppressed & oppressors. They are tools of large corporations, whose hard work is used by the corporations to make money. On the other hand, they also oppress others, including workers of their own ethnic group, family members, & the US underclass. The dual oppressed/oppressor role makes them useful middlemen, as they oppress those beneath them for the benefit of those above. It is hoped that seeing these relations clearly will enable people to break out of them. 2 Tables, 1 Figure, 9 References. Modified HA

88T1479

Brunelli, Lina, Bussini, Odoardo, Cecchini, Clara & Tittarelli, Luigi (U Perugia, I-06100 Italy), L'immigrazione di stranieri in Umbria: primi risultati della ricerca in corso (The Immigration of Foreigners in Umbria: First Results of Ongoing Research), ♦ Studi Emigrazione/Études Migrations, 1986, 23, 82-83, June-Sept, 367-379 (ITA)

‡ A report on preliminary findings of ongoing research on foreign immigration in Umbria, Italy. Umbria has not generally attracted foreigners seeking work, but it has traditionally offered educational courses for foreigners, who then often stay for various reasons. Statistical interview data (N not provided) are presented on the presence, matriculation, & permanence of foreign students at the U for Foreigners in 1985; foreign students enrolled at the U of Perugia in 1985/86, classified by sex, nationality, & doctoral program; foreign students enrolled in schools of higher education in Perugia province in 1985/86, classified by demographic & scholastic characteristics, & all foreigners living in the municipalities of Umbria in Jan 1986, classified by sex & age. 6 Tables. Modified HA

88T1480

Calvanese, Francesco & Pugliese, Enrico (U Salerno, I-84100 Italy), Immigrati e mercato del lavoro: note e riflessioni sulla pre-indagine in Campania (Immigrants and the Labor Market: Notes and Reflections on a Preliminary Study in Campania), ♦ Studi Emigrazione/Études Migrations, 1986, 23, 82-83, June-Sept, 419-428 (ITA)

‡ Preliminary findings of a study of foreign immigrant workers in the Campania region of Italy are reported. Data were obtained from official statistical sources & interviews with key witnesses (N not given). The

— SOCIAL — BEHAVIOUR

An International Journal of Applied Social Psychology

An International Journal of Applied Social Psychology

Geoffrey Stephenson

James H Davis

EDITOR

Professor Geoffrey M. Stephenson, Institute of Social and Applied
Psychology, University of Kent Canterbury, England

NORTH AMERICAN EDITOR

Professor James H. Davis,
Department of Psychology
University of Illinois,
Champaign, U.S.A.

The Editors are supported by an International Editorial Board

Social Behaviour is a new quarterly journal which provides a truly international forum for the exchange of research results and ideas in applied social psychology

A major hazard of applied research concerns the fragmentation of knowledge as investigators address particular questions, isolated issues, or other local problems. Applications of social psychology are particularly susceptible to such hazards, with cultural and national differences in problem formulation, approach and interpretation. Consequently Social Behaviour aims to foster international communication between applied social psychologists and to publish original, theoretical, methodological and empirical studies in social psychology which contribute to the analysis and critical understanding of social problems and issues.

The sharing of experience and ideas by social psychologists and other specialists concerned with social behaviour — working in a variety of settings, disciplines and organisations — can lead to the investigation of a common ground of concepts and methods. By addressing itself to this, the journal contributes to the development of a more coherent and applicable applied social psychology framework.

Articles relating to all areas of application are invited including:

- Communications and media
- Decision and forecasting
- Legal and criminal processes
- Politics and government
- Economic behaviour
- Health and behaviour
- Work and employment
- Education and training

In addition to the refereed articles, the journal includes topical literature reviews and reviews of relevant books, software and reports.

Subscription Details

Volume Two	1987	Four Issues
UK £55.00	Elsewhere	US$100.00
Volume Three	1988	Four Issues
UK £55.00	Elsewhere	US$105.00

 WILEY

Use the coupon to enter your subscription or send for a free specimen copy

SUBSCRIPTION ORDER FORM

 WILEY

Send your order to either address:

Jane Skinner,
John Wiley & Sons Ltd
Baffins Lane, Chichester
West Sussex PO19 1UD,
UK

Subscription Department C.,
John Wiley & Sons Inc
605 Third Avenue,
New York, NY 10158
USA

- ☐ Please send me a sample copy
- ☐ Please enter my subscription to Social Behaviour
- Volume Two (1987) ☐ UK £55.00 ☐ Elsewhere US$100.00
- Volume Three (1988) ☐ UK £55.00 ☐ Elsewhere US$105.00

Methods of Payment

- ☐ Cheque/Money order enclosed (payable to John Wiley & Sons Ltd.)
- ☐ Purchase order enclosed ☐ Please invoice
- ☐ Please charge to my credit card
- ☐ American Express ☐ Diners Club
- ☐ Barclaycard/Visa ☐ Mastercard/Access

Card
Number

Expiry Date

Name (Please print)

Address

Signature

Date

88T1489

Duster, Troy (Instit Study Social Change U California, Berkeley 94720), Purpose and Bias, ♦UM Society, 1987, 24, 2(166), Jan-Feb, 8-12.

† A critical analysis of the controversy behind the attempted update of Gunnar Myrdal's An American Dilemma (New York: Harper & Row, 1944) by the National Black Research Council on the status of blacks in the US. It is argued that the debate over whether blacks or whites control the study obscures the more fundamental issue, ie, what questions get asked? It is suggested that, had the debate & the original architecture of the study focused on the kinds of questions to be answered, the inherent politics of a study of blacks in the US would have surfaced in a much more intellectually vital & healthy manner at the outset. Balancing the advisory board by color, discipline, or methodological orientation would therefore have become more appropriately secondary considerations (See SA 36.1 for abstracts of other articles on this subject appearing in this issue of Society.) AA

88T1490

Gillis, A. R., Richard, Madeline A. & Hagan, John (Dept Sociology U Toronto, Ontario M5S 1A1), Ethnic Susceptibility to Crowding: An Empirical Analysis, UM Environment and Behavior, 1986, 18, 6, Nov, 683-706.

† Impressionistic evidence suggests that Asians, the British, & southern Europeans differ in the way they view & adapt to the physical environment. Here, differences in tolerance of population density across these ethnic categories are examined. Using room density & design density as predictors, & psychological strain as an indicator of crowding, questionnaire data collected from adolescents in Toronto, Ontario (N not given) show that Asians are most tolerant of high density. Rs of British origin seem least adaptable, & southern Europeans are somewhere in between. The findings support the qualitative observations & hold when gender & SES are included as controls. 4 Tables, 69 References. HA

88T1491

Green, Nancy L. (Ecole hautes études sciences sociales, 75006 Paris France), Juifs et Noirs aux États-Unis. La Rupture d'une "alliance naturelle" (Jews and Blacks in the US. Breach in a "Natural Alliance"), Annales, 1987, 42, 2, Mar-Apr, 445-464. (FRE)

† The changing relationships between blacks & Jews in the US in the early 1960s are examined, using the specific example of the garment industry in New York. Publications of unions & black organizations, press articles, & other documents are reviewed. Accusations of discrimination against blacks, brought against the largely Jewish International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union, show at least three levels of minority interaction: (1) direct institutional conflict, bringing into question the notion of a "natural alliance" between civil rights groups & the liberal Jewish union; (2) broader ethnic group conflict, as expressed through reciprocal charges of racism; & (3) differential strategies of adaptation within the global society, affecting interminority behavior. Modified HA

88T1492

Gross, Jan T. (Dept Sociology Emory U, Atlanta GA 30322), Polish-Jewish Relations during the War: An Interpretation, ♦UM Dissent, 1987, 34, 1, winter, 73-81.

† The subject of Polish-Jewish relations during WWII has been largely ignored by Polish researchers, & remains shrouded in myth & simplistic, one-sided patriotic stereotypes. Data from respected historical journals & underground publications is presented to counter the accepted view that the Poles did all they could to help the Jews within the constraints imposed by the Germans (most notably, the threat of death). Errors in such a value-free, cost-benefit analysis & its causal assumptions are illuminated. It is shown how relatively few Poles were actually involved in helping Jews; indeed, there was widespread anti-Semitism. Thus, Poles' attitudes & behavior were equally as important as the German-created situational context in shaping Polish-Jewish relations. It is argued that these facts have been ignored because of the incompatibility of such behavior with the dominant romantic interpretation of Poland's destiny. K. Hyatt

88T1493

Huel, Raymond (U Lethbridge, Alberta T1K 3M4), When a Minority Feels Threatened: The Impetus for French Catholic Organization in Saskatchewan, ♦Canadian Ethnic Studies/Etudes Ethniques au Canada, 1986, 18, 3, 1-16.

† The issues that have most threatened the cultural survival of French-speaking minorities in Canada have been related to education. Beginning in the early twentieth century, the dilemmas associated with minority status were most keenly perceived by the French Canadian clergy, who felt that assimilation would entail the loss of the Catholic faith. Thus, the clergy took the initiative of uniting & organizing the French-speaking population to defend & enhance their linguistic & educational privileges. The clergy was also instrumental in establishing Le Patriote de l'Ouest to provide a means of communication to the dispersed French elements; through its pages, the church promoted the concept of union & organization as a means of ensuring la survivance. The outcome of these efforts led to the Duck Lake convention of 1912 & the subsequent creation of l'Assoc Catholique Franco-Canadienne de la Saskatchewan. HA

88T1494

Jaynes, Gerald D. & Williams, Robin M., Jr. (Yale U, New Haven CT 06520), Challenges and Opportunities, ♦UM Society, 1987, 24, 2(166), Jan-Feb, 3-7.

† A review of the history of the Committee on the Status of Black Americans & a report on the progress of its work. Funded by the National Black Research Council, the committee has established five working groups in the areas of: education; employment, income, & occupations; health status & demography; political participation & administration of justice; & social & cultural change & continuity. In pursuit of conclusions on these issues, the committee has generated new data & analyses, & has begun to look forward to preparing reports summarizing its findings. (See SA 36.1 for abstracts of other articles on this subject appearing in this issue of Society.) 5 References. W. H. Stoddard

88T1495

Jaynes, Gerald D. & Williams, Robin M., Jr. (Yale U, New Haven CT 06520), Looking Before We Leap, ♦UM Society, 1987, 24, 2(166), Jan-Feb, 37-78.

† Responses are offered to some points raised by participants in a symposium on the Study on the Status of Black Americans sponsored by the National Black Research Council. (See SA 36.1 for abstracts of other symposium articles appearing in this issue of Society.) The participants offer many constructive suggestions, but their concerns about sensitivity to black concerns appear overstated given the record of the scholars participating in the study. W. H. Stoddard

88T1496

Kathner, Ingo (Tonstr 3, D-3000 Hannover 91 Federal Republic Germany), Verkramptheit: zur Geschichte und Gegenwart bürischer Herrschaftsmentalität (Rigidity: The History and Present of the Boer Mentality of Dominance), ♦Peripherie, 1986, 6, 24, spring, 29-51. (GER)

† The background to the past & present practice of apartheid in South Africa is investigated, based on various studies & literary texts. Emphasis is on some aspects of the Boers' social psychology & history, which tend to bias their ideas of reality & hamper them in action adapted to reality. This psychology revolves around a Calvinistic notion of predestination, linked with an idealized picture of historical turning points such as the Great Trek & the Boer Wars. At present, the Boers perceive themselves as surrounded by enemies; but they themselves are creating the dangers, & their defensive measures reinforce what they are meant to contain—resistance & fear. Current "reforms" of apartheid disguise the entrenchment of basic apartheid structures, above all, the territorial separation of racial groups. The Boers' racist attitudes are combined with obstinacy, which can only be understood as an outflow of fear. 29 References. Modified AA

88T1497

Koch, James V. (U Montana, Missoula 59812), The Incomes of Recent Immigrants: A Look at Ethnic Differences, ♦UM Social Science Quarterly, 1987, 68, 2, June, 294-310.

† Family income differentials existing among 18 different ethnic groups that migrated to the US between 1970 & 1980 are examined based on census data. Family size & fertility, education levels, LF participation, geographic location, & facility with the English language are found to be important determinants of immigrant incomes, although it is likely that the cultural inheritance of ethnic groups is also important. 4 Tables, 26 References. Modified HA

88T1498

Kohno, Tetsu (Hosei U, Chiyoda-ku Tokyo Japan), The Jewish Question in Japan, The Jewish Journal of Sociology, 1987, 29, 1, June, principal countries of origin of the immigrants were: the Cape Verde Islands, the Philippines, Sri Lanka, Ethiopia, Eritrea, Tunisia, Egypt, Morocco, Gabon, & the Ivory Coast. The hypothesis that the rigidity of local labor demand is the determining factor in the influx of migration is not supported; instead, a complex model has emerged, in which certain demographic & territorial variables, especially sex & place of origin, are important. M immigrants are generally African & work on farms or as peddlers or construction workers, almost all are illegal. F immigrants are more likely to be legal, generally work as maids, & come from Asia, non-Arabic areas of Africa with Christian traditions, or former colonies of Latin countries. Modified HA

88T1481

Campan, Aurora, Bianchi, Gian Carlo & Maffonini, Walter (U Milano, I 20122 Italy). La presenza straniera nell'area milanese: osservazioni e scelte per l'impostazione di una nuova ricerca (The Foreign Presence in the Milan Area: Observations and Criteria for New Research). ♦ Studi Emigrazione/Etudes Migrations, 1986, 23, 82-83, June-Sept, 380-386 (ITA)

† A preliminary report on research in progress on the presence of foreigners in the area of Milan, Italy, focusing on the placement of foreign immigrants in the job market. Data drawn from the 1981 census, the Provincial Labor Office, & other statistical sources reveal that the foreign population totals approximately 27,000 persons. In order to examine the recent evolution of the phenomenon of foreign immigration, the variety of data & estimates from different sources on the size & structural characteristics of this phenomenon are collected & analyzed, & the methodological criteria followed in setting up a sample investigation are described. Interviews have been conducted with 150 Arabs, 70 Eritreans, & 50 Filipinos, these represent 10% of the projected sample. Preliminary findings indicate political as well as economic reasons for migration. 2 Tables, 7 References. Modified HA

88T1482

Cerroni-Long, E. L. (Dept Sociology Eastern Michigan U, Ypsilanti 48197). Benign Neglect? Anthropology and the Study of Blacks in the United States. ♦ Journal of Black Studies, 1987, 17, 4, June, 438-459

† An analysis of historical & ideological factors that have contributed to the lack of interest displayed until recently by US anthropologists toward the study of ethnicity, & particularly of the black minority. Some of the causes for this neglect are found in the very concept of culture traditionally adopted by US anthropologists & in the fact that, because of the problematic characteristics of black life in the US, the study of this minority came to be seen as the natural preserve of ameliorative social science. However, various intellectual & social trends affecting US society in the 1960s & 1970s led to a shift of anthropological attention to the study of the black minority. As a result, a school of Afro-American anthropology is currently emerging. This development bodes well for the development of cultural anthropology in general & for a new understanding of what ethnicity is & how it should be studied. 64 References. Modified AA

88T1483

Chachere, Bernadette, Smith, Robert C. & Walters, Ronald W. (Dept Economics Hampton U, VA 23668). Causes for Alarm. ♦ US Society, 1987, 24, 2(166), Jan-Feb, 22-28

Theoretical, methodological, personnel, & policy objections to the National Research Council's study on the status of black Americans are raised by leaders of a nationwide protest by black scholars against this study. It is argued that the study exhibits a flawed theoretical perspective that serves as a mark for the dominant view of the state on the problem of racial subordination, the methodological design of the inquiry isague & lacks focus, selection of persons to conduct the research was biased because it systematically ignored the organized black academic community, & the policy consequences of the study, intended & unintended, are likely to provide intellectual support for the current conservative policy climate on questions of race in the US. Parallels are drawn with the 1944 Gunnar Myrdal study on race (see An American Dilemma, New York: Harper & Row) & the Kenner Commission report on racial violence in 1968. It is concluded that any comprehensive study of the black community must include the black perspective, otherwise it represents continued practice of intellectual colonialism. (See SA 36:1 or abstracts of other articles on this subject appearing in this issue of Society) Modified AA

88T1484

Cebal, José A. (Arizona State U, Tempe 85287). On the Study of Ethnic Enterprise: Unresolved Issues. ♦ Sociological Perspectives, 1987, 30, 4, Oct, 467-472.

† Comments are offered on the articles in this special issue of Sociological Perspectives devoted to the "ethnic economy." The articles are discussed in light of unresolved questions in the study of ethnic enterprise, eg: (1) the import & viability of ethnic enterprise, (2) the antecedents of ethnic entrepreneurship, (3) the status of ethnic business owners & employees, & (4) competition between entrepreneurial minorities & the wider society. 4 References. Modified AA

88T1485

Constantinides, Stephanos (U Québec, Montreal H3C 3P8). De l'autonomie relative de l'ethnicité en tant que construit idéologique (The Relative Autonomy of Ethnicity as an Ideological Construct). ♦ Canadian Ethnic Studies/Etudes Ethniques au Canada, 1986, 18, 2, 102-114 (FRE)

† A nonhistorical analysis attributes certain natural features to ethnic groups, while discussing aspects related to social domination. Culturally & psychologically oriented definitions are rejected in favor of an analysis of a social milieu & its historical context. Ethnic originality & a relative autonomy are considered as ideological accessories of ethnicity. Ethnic identity is not just a subjective phenomenon, because certain psychological & even cultural characteristics are influenced by social rapport. In this respect, discrimination & oppression not only spring from differences related to SC, but can also be attributed to the links with a community historically & culturally dominated (by its environment). This is why an effective cultural pluralism must eliminate all sources of domination. The intellectuals formulating the ethnic policies are not always blameless, due to the position they frequently occupy in the midst of ethnic ideologies in social surroundings that resist any change. Modified HA

88T1486

Corrente, Ello, Sindacato e questione stranieri in Italia (Trade Unions and Foreign Workers in Italy). ♦ Studi Emigrazione/Etudes Migrations, 1986, 23, 82-83, June-Sept, 471-475 (ITA)

† The activities of labor unions in various parts of Italy on behalf of foreign immigrants are examined, together with the policies put forward at a 1986 nationwide union conference on immigration. The attitude of the unions is one of solidarity with foreign workers, & efforts are being made to protect them against discrimination & the problems of black market work. Besides attempting to organize foreign workers, the unions provide services such as information on their rights, on legislation, & on bureaucratic procedures, social, legal, & labor union assistance, & courses in literacy & job skills. Modified HA

88T1487

DaRosa, Victor M. P. & Poulin, Richard (U Ottawa, Ontario K1N 6N5). Espaces ethniques et question linguistique au Québec: à propos des communautés italienne et portugaise (Ethnic Space and the Linguistic Question in Quebec. The Case of the Italian and Portuguese Communities). ♦ Canadian Ethnic Studies/Etudes Ethniques au Canada, 1986, 18, 2, 143-150 (FRE)

† The Italian & Portuguese communities have followed a particular pattern of development in Quebec. The difficult SE conditions in their homelands led these groups to choose English as a vehicle of social promotion & to resist the imposition of French as the language of instruction. The language conflict in Quebec, as well as the antagonisms between French- & English-speaking Quebecers, have allowed these groups greater room to maneuver in Quebec than elsewhere in Canada, & to assert their unique Portuguese & Italian identities. HA

88T1488

Denis, Ann B. (U Ottawa, Ontario K1N 6N5). Adaptation to Multiple Subordination: Women in the Vertical Mosaic. ♦ Canadian Ethnic Studies/Etudes Ethniques au Canada, 1986, 18, 3, 61-74.

† Patterns of paid LF participation of native-born & foreign-born Canadian Fs of selected ethnic origins & immigration status are examined as bases for status group formation in twentieth-century Canada. The relations of domination & subordination among such groups are considered together with their possible impact on paid employment. Census data from 1931 & 1971 are used to test the hypothesis that, because of closure exercised by more dominant status groups, foreign-born Fs of non-British origin were obliged to adapt to a situation of multiple subordination. The hypothesis is only partially supported, suggesting that the influence of gender, ethnicity, & immigrant status on F LF participation be re-evaluated. 2 Tables, 24 References. Modified HA

88T1508

Oliva, Keiko (Cornell U, Ithaca NY 14853), The Structure of Dispersal: The Japanese-Canadian Community of Montreal 1942-52, ♦ Canadian Ethnic Studies/Études Ethniques au Canada, 1986, 18, 2, 20-37.

† The uniqueness of the Montreal, Quebec, Japanese community may be summarized in terms of the high degree of communal "self-control." Paradoxically, the maintenance of communal order is characterized not by a ghettoization, nor by organizational cohesiveness, but rather, by residential decentralization & institutional fragmentation. In an attempt to examine the sociological behavior of what might be called "dispersal," an ideological approach is used to find an ideological structure within the people's thought & action. By reexamining in detail the study done by Kuni Uchida & Rei Nakashima ("The Japanese in Montreal: An Ecological and Sociological Survey," Montreal: unpublished paper, 1953), it is demonstrated how the theme of dispersal expressed itself clearly both in the pattern of residential distribution & in the organizational behavior of the Montreal Japanese community between 1942 & 1952. Within the residential & organizational dispersal, however, a double structure was found, which constitutes a strategy for ethnic survival. To denote this structure, the term "self-marginalization" is proposed. The key to understanding self-marginalizing behavior among the Japanese Canadians is their experience of the prewar discrimination in British Columbia & the war-time relocation camps. 4 Figures, 10 References. HA

88T1509

Olzak, Susan (Dept Sociology Cornell U, Ithaca NY 14853), Causes of Ethnic Conflict and Protest in Urban America, 1877-1889, Social Science Research, 1987, 16, 2, June, 185-210.

† An examination of some of the processes that generated ethnic conflict & social protest in response to the mass immigration of Asians & Western, Eastern Europeans to the US & the movement of blacks to northern cities between 1877 & 1889, with focus on the effects of changes in immigration flows & economic conditions. Two types of ethnic collective action are distinguished—conflict & protest—and an event history analysis conducted of incidences of each that occurred in 80 of the largest US cities during this period, based on reports in the New York Times. The data are used to examine the theory that economic (primarily labor market) competition for valued resources increases ethnic conflict by considering the effects of migration & immigration flows, economic contraction, & increases in ethnic group resources & real wages. It is demonstrated that overall economic decline increases ethnic collective action by increasing competition, & that there is a negative interaction effect between wages & immigration levels. Implications for current theories of ethnic collective action are discussed. 3 Tables, 4 Figures, 1 Appendix, 45 References. K. Hyatt

88T1510

Opitz, Wolfgang (U Texas, Austin 78712), Changing Hispanic Households: An Analysis of Household Income and Household Type, ♦ Dissertation Abstracts International, A: The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 47, 12(I), June, 4517-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor MI. Order No. DA8706084.

88T1511

Pasquino, Ugo (U Rome, I-00100 Italy), Tentativo di determinazione dei comportamenti differenziali attraverso indagini correnti: il caso della criminalità (An Attempt to Determine Different Behaviors through Current Surveys: The Case of Criminality), ♦ Studi Emigrazione/Études Migrations, 1986, 23, 82-83, June-Sept, 242-250 (ITA).

† The criminality rate of the foreign population in Italy is examined, using 1968-1984 Ministry of Justice statistics concerning persons convicted & imprisoned. Data for the foreign-born & the Italian-born are compared. The types of crimes committed & the geographical distribution of criminality are investigated. The foreign criminality rate is highest in the border areas & areas containing large cities. A notable finding is the marked increase, since 1976, in criminality among foreign minors, as compared to both foreign adults & Italian minors. 5 Tables. Modified HA

88T1512

Pérez, Juan A. & Mugny, Gabriel (U Geneva, CH-1211 4 Switzerland), Paradoxical Effects of Categorization in Minority Influence: When Being an Outgroup is an Advantage, ♦ European Journal of Social Psychology, 1987, 17, 2, Apr-June, 157-169.

† In a 2 × 2 factorial design, 165 Spanish high school girls responded to a questionnaire regarding their opinions about abortion (direct influence) & about contraception (indirect influence) after reading a message advocating abortion, said to have been written by either an ingroup (same sex), or an outgroup (opposite sex) minority, & explicitly opposed by the majority opinion of either the in- or outgroup. Results show that there is less direct influence when the ingroup majority is opposed to the minority, & more direct influence when the process of identification is less involved. Indirect influence appears in an intergroup context where categorization of majority & minority into different groups is superimposed on their ideological dissent, which has the effect of allowing recognition of the minority's distinctiveness & validity over & above the discrimination that appears at the direct influence level. A theoretical integration of social comparison & validation processes is proposed as a step toward explaining the diversity of minority influence phenomena. 1 Table, 29 References. HA

88T1513

Pittau, Franco, Implicazioni giuridiche del processo di integrazione dei lavoratori stranieri (Juridical Implications of the Process of Integration of Foreign Workers), ♦ Studi Emigrazione/Études Migrations, 1986, 23, 82-83, June-Sept, 462-470 (ITA).

† A legislative solution to the problems involved in the legal protection of foreign immigrants in Italy will require (1) clarity, so as to reduce the occasions for legal contention; (2) administrative capacity, so as to guarantee that a person's legal rights are actually achieved; & (3) graduality, so as to offer increasing benefits to those immigrants who have maintained a stable situation. It is also necessary to enhance the role of aid institutions, which promote legal integration. Modified HA

88T1514

Richmond, Anthony H. (York U, Downsview Ontario M3J 1P3), Ethnogenational Variation in Educational Achievement, ♦ Canadian Ethnic Studies/Études Ethniques au Canada, 1986, 18, 3, 75-89.

† Data from a 1982 telephone survey of 3,522 persons aged 20+ in metropolitan Toronto, Ontario, are used to analyze variations in educational achievement & qualifications as a function of ethnogenational category. Intergenerational educational mobility, measured by the difference in years of education of Rs & their same sex parent, is also examined. Canadian-born Rs of Canadian & foreign parentage are compared to each other & to foreign born Rs by ethnic background & period of immigration, & the effects of sex, age, religion, social origins, family size, parental encouragement, & Rs' occupational ambition when in school, are investigated. Multivariate regression analyses reveal that parents' educational level, family size, & occupational ambition are important determinants of educational attainment, & that the residual effects of ethnicity & religion are small when these factors are taken into account. In particular, Canadian-born Rs whose parents are both of non-British origin are not handicapped by their ethnicity in terms of educational attainment, surpassing the level of those with part British, Irish, US, or full-Canadian ancestry. 6 Tables, 24 References. Modified HA

88T1515

Roos, Patricia A. & Hennessy, Joyce F. (State U New York, Stony Brook 11790), Assimilation or Exclusion? Japanese and Mexican Americans in California, Sociological Forum, 1987, 2, 2, spring, 278-304.

† It is argued that the current SE positions of ethnic groups reflect in part the historical processes that differentially allocated labor market opportunities by ethnicity. Using historical & current US Census data, the usefulness of this approach is illustrated by investigating two ethnic groups at opposite ends of the SE spectrum—native-born Japanese & Mexican-American Ms & Fs in Calif. First, the structural context facing these two immigrant groups when they entered the US is documented, describing how early experiences shaped their occupational distributions. Then 1980 census data are used to show how the current occupational distributions of these ethnic groups resemble those of their immigrant ancestors, & how this occupational concentration now affects earnings attainment, relative to whites. The evidence on gender differences suggests caution in generalizing from the experiences of M ethnics, the occupational & earnings attainments of F ethnics differ notably from those of their M counterparts. 4 Tables, 61 References. HA

88T1516

Rosoli, Gianfausto, Problemi e prospettive degli interventi legislativi sull'immigrazione in Italia (Problems and Perspectives of Legislative

37-54

† The roots of Jewish Japanese relations are explored & traced through four major historical phases from the end of WWI through the present, with focus on the development of anti-Semitism. The greatest justifications for Japanese anti-Semitism are found to lie in their equation of Jews with ownership of massive global financial resources, which it is believed, enable them to manipulate world events. Political & economic implications of this 'Jewish Conspiracy' theory are discussed. K. Hyatt

88T1499

Lacewell, Linda A. & Shelowitz, Paul A. (School Law U Miami, Coral Gables FL 33124). Beyond a Black and White Reading of Sections 1981 and 1982: Shifting the Focus from Racial Status to Racist Acts. ♦ University of Miami Law Review, 1987, 41, 4, Mar., 823-854

† A discussion of effective means for determining the scope of coverage of sections 1981 & 1982 of the US Civil Rights Act. Focus is on techniques that go beyond rigid definitions of race. Attempts to define race in terms of predominant white, black, & other color groups are misguided as the ethnic makeup of society changes, perceptions of racial groups change accordingly. Many lower courts have rejected the definitional approach to determining statutory protection, however, the rules favored by these courts have sometimes conflicted with each other in their application. It is suggested that the focus should be shifted from the plaintiff's racial status to the racial content of the defendant's actions. In applying such a rule, the court can resolve the conflict of the lower courts & establish a principle that affords a remedy for all victims of racial discrimination. † Rasmussen

88T1500

Lipman, V. D., On the Frontiers of Jewish Life, The Jewish Journal of Sociology, 1987, 29, 1, June, 55-62

† A review essay on Steven J. Zipperstein's The Jews of Odessa: A Cultural History, 1794-1881 (Stanford, Calif: Stanford U Press, 1985), & Neil C. Sandberg's Jewish Life in Los Angeles: A Window to Tomorrow (Ithaca, NY: University Press of America, 1986 [see listings in IRPS No. 41]). These works examine Jewish communities that were founded in geographically distinct areas with attractive climates by pioneering groups of Jews seeking to escape the constraints of their former communities. Zipperstein uses various published sources to trace the intellectual, religious, & cultural history of Jews in Odessa (USSR) through 1881, before the community became a center of Zionism, Hebrew writing, & Jewish publishing. Sandberg uses data from interviews with 413 Jewish adults in Los Angeles, Calif, to describe the growth of the Jewish metropolis there since 1861. Both communities aroused the wonder & frequent reprobation of more traditional Jews, & illustrate the emergence of a new type of Diaspora Jew & new definitions of Jewish identity. K. Hyatt

88T1501

Lipner, Nira H. (George Washington U, Washington DC 20052). The Subjective Experience of Israeli Immigrant Women: An Interpretive Approach. ♦ Dissertation Abstracts International, A The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 47, 12(1), June, 4518-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor MI. Order No. DA8708356.

88T1502

Massey, Douglas S., Condran, Gretchen A. & Denton, Nancy A. (Population Studies Center U Pennsylvania, PA 19104-6298). The Effect of Residential Segregation on Black Social and Economic Well-Being. ♦ Social Forces, 1987, 66, 1, Sept., 29-56

† Some of the consequences of black residential segregation are investigated using census & other local & federal government data for Philadelphia, Pa, in 1980. Blacks, like whites, attempt to improve their neighborhood characteristics with rising SS, but unlike whites, they face strong barriers to residential mobility. As a result, blacks of high SS must live in neighborhoods with fewer resources & amenities than whites of similar background. Specifically, they live in poorer, more dilapidated areas characterized by higher rates of poverty, dependency, crime, & mortality, & they must send their children to public schools populated by low income students who score badly on standardized tests. These findings suggest that racial segregation remains an important basis for stratification in US society. 9 Tables, 44 References. Modified HA

88T1503

M'Hamsadji, Takia, L'Evolution et l'originalité de la communauté arabo-américaine (The Evolution and Originality of the Arab-American Community). ♦ Cahiers de Sociologie Economique et Culturelle, Ethnopsychologie, 1987, 7, June, 25-44. (FRE)

† A description of the Arab-American community, from the pioneers of the 1880s to the present. Three separate waves of immigration are identified within that period. The immigrants' social & professional structures, religious & cultural activities, ethnic organizations, & degree of assimilation are examined. As illustration, a case study of the activities of the Arab-American Anti-Discrimination Committee is presented. It is concluded that Arab-Americans today have reached all the social & professional strata & are represented on the political level. They have become a powerful lobby, able to exert pressure on the media & to create alliances with political & religious groups in the US. Their goals are, to assert their rights as citizens, to improve the Arab image, & to contribute to peace in the Middle East & assist Arab political prisoners & refugees. Modified HA

88T1504

Mi'ari, Mahmud (Birzeit U, West Bank Via Israel), Traditionalism and Political Identity of Arabs in Israel, Journal of Asian and African Studies, 1987, 22, 1-2, Jan-Apr., 33-44

† Questionnaire data from a 1977 sample of 292 Arab U graduates in Israel are used to examine the relationship between traditional (local, clan, & religious) identities & the political identity of Arabs in Israel. The results indicate that traditional identities are negatively correlated with Palestinian national identity & positively correlated with Israeli identity. This finding may explain why the colonial powers reinforced parochial identities among colonized people in Asia & Africa. By doing so, they intended to inhibit the emergence of a common national identity & thus to maintain loyalty to the colonial regime. 3 Tables, 20 References. HA

88T1505

Miari, Samir M. (Loyola U, Chicago IL 60611). The Arabs in Israel: A National Minority and Cheap Labor Force, a Split Labor Market Analysis. ♦ Dissertation Abstracts International, A The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 47, 11, May, 4198-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor MI. Order No. DA8704852.

88T1506

Nelson, William Javier (Dept Sociology Saint Augustine's Coll, Raleigh NC 27611). Racial Definition: Background for Divergence, Phylon, 1986, 47, 4, Dec., 318-326

† In the US, most assessments of the difficulties faced by blacks in housing, employment, & education begin by describing the immediate problems themselves (eg, the inequities in black & white school systems during segregation), rather than factors that may contribute to the creation & maintenance of the problems. One way of perceiving the genesis & scope of modern racism involves the very definitions of "white" & "black". Here, the issue of racial definition is addressed as a means of examining how the impoverished masses of Eastern & Southern Europe became modern US whites, with all the rights & privileges of that status, while other immigrants are considered "minority/blacks". Terms such as integration or desegregation of schools have meaning, in the US, only insofar as the racial definitional system of this country ensures separation of people. Modified AA

88T1507

Neri, Fabio & Orvati, Silvio (U Trieste, I-34127 Italy), La presenza straniera in Friuli-Venezia Giulia (The Foreign Presence in Friuli-Venezia Giulia). ♦ Studi Emigrazione/Études Migrations, 1986, 23, 82-83, June-Sept., 387-390. (ITA)

† The history of the presence of foreign workers in the Friuli-Venezia Giulia region of Italy is investigated, based on evidence from statistical sources & several small interview surveys. The number of foreign workers remained relatively stable through the 1960s & early 1970s, but experienced a sizeable growth due to reconstruction work in Friuli after the 1976 earthquake. In the early 1980s, there were estimated to be between 7,500 & 9,000 foreign workers in the region, mostly from Yugoslavia, employed especially in the building sector in Friuli & the service sector in Trieste. Recently, a marked quantitative change has resulted from the imposition of restrictions on emigration by the Yugoslav government. There has also been a qualitative change, from a general LF to one more specialized & intellectual, eg, employed in teaching & research. The local population appears tolerant of foreigners, & the foreigners show ability for economic & social integration. Modified HA

1987, 23, 2, Oct, 92-101.

¶ Recent publications in the Netherlands largely present ethnicity as a reaction by migrant groups to the host society's attempt to exclude them. This perspective has led to neglect of traditional themes, such as the institutions & cultural orientations of ethnic groups & the devices used to maintain group boundaries. Participant observation & ethnographic research conducted among Surinam Creoles in the Bijlmermeer suburb of Amsterdam reveal their efforts to mobilize material & cultural resources as a means of countering centrifugal tendencies caused by horizontal & vertical mobility & widespread dealing in drugs & other illegal industries. The traditional props of group unity, kinship & quasi-kinship, & religious beliefs are vital to this effort. 10 References. Modified HA

88T1526

Willie, Charles V. (Graduate School Education Harvard U, Cambridge MA 02138). Appearances and Sensitivities. ♦ WM Society, 1987, 24, 2(166), Jan-Feb, 19-22.

¶ The study of the adaptations of blacks in the US by the Committee on the Status of Black Americans of the National Research Council (NRC) is controversial. While the study director is black, M. & Mc, ultimate control of the NRC study resides in the Committee presided over by a white M. It is strange that NRC could not find a racial minority scholar to chair the Committee or to serve as cochair. This concern is structural & does not reflect on the committee chair's personal qualities, which are respectable. The issue is raised because the NRC intended the study to be "as free as possible from partisan advocacy." However, by ignoring black leadership for a study of blacks, it has created a real issue of partisan advocacy as well as insensitivity. (See SA 36 1 for abstracts of other articles on this subject appearing in this issue of Society.) Modified AA

88T1527

Woldemikael, Tekle M. (Dept Sociology U Hartford, West Hartford CT 06117). Opportunity versus Constraint: Haitian Immigrants and Racial Ascription. ♦ WM Migration Today, 1985, 13, 4, 7-12.

¶ The relationship between black immigrants & the black minority population in the US has been problematic. Black immigrants often seek to avoid being identified as part of the US-born black population. Here, the reasons for the behavior of black immigrants in relation to black Americans is analyzed based on a case study of Haitian immigrants in a small midwestern city that explores the triple interaction between dominant white & subordinate black Americans & doubly subordinated black immigrants. Haitian immigrants view the US as a land of economic opportunities, but their racial ascription is a major constraint in their life chances. The strategies Haitians use to minimize the effects of racial ascription & maximize their economic opportunities are outlined. 7 Photographs. Modified AA

88T1528

Yetman, Norman R. (Dept Sociology U Kansas, Lawrence 66045-2172). "Positional Segregation and the Economic Hypothesis:" A Critique. Sociology of Sport Journal, 1987, 4, 3, Sept, 274-277. Reply, 278-279.

¶ In "Positional Segregation and the Economic Hypothesis" (see SA 35:2/87R4055), Marshall H. Medoff proposes an explanation for the unequal distribution of playing positions on sports teams among racial groups: the differential ability of racial groups to pay the economic costs of developing skills needed for different positions. Reexamination of his statistical evidence & consideration of additional statistical sources directly contradict his hypothesis on several points. In particular, black relative SE position deteriorated between 1970 & 1984, rather than improving as Medoff asserts; yet at the same time, the positional distribution of blacks on baseball teams remained largely unchanged. In A Reply to Yetman: Toward an Understanding of the Economic Hypothesis, Medoff (California State U, Long Beach) suggests that, given the actual content of the economic hypothesis & the realities of US family structure, the data Medoff proposes to use to test the hypothesis are in reality irrelevant to it. 4 Tables, 1 Reference. W. H. Stoddard

88T1529

Zenner, Walter P. (State U New York, Albany 12203). Middleman Minorities in the Syrian Mosaic: Trade, Conflict, and Image Management. ♦ WM Sociological Perspectives, 1987, 30, 4, Oct, 400-421.

¶ An exploration of one aspect of the "middleman minority" situation: interactions of individuals belonging to different minorities when they are competing within a single social field. A case study is presented of the competition of Christians & Jews in late Ottoman Syria for certain positions attached to the government & for key roles in international trade. Image management in the present instance includes stigmatization of one's rivals. The implications of this case for other studies of minorities are considered. 1 Table, 66 References. Modified HA

Intervention Concerning Immigration into Italy). ♦ Studi Emigrazione/Études Migrations, 1986, 23, 82-83, June-Sept., 476-493 (ITA)

¶ The complex of laws & regulations governing the entry, length of stay, & employment of foreigners in Italy is examined. It is found that there is disagreement between constitutional indications & ordinary law, this situation is aggravated by administrative measures that are often arbitrary. Immigration from the Third World is a relatively new social phenomenon in Italy, since 1982, restrictionism toward Third World workers has become marked. The Italian parliament is currently revising the laws concerning immigrant workers, a bill that passed the lower house of parliament in May 1986 is discussed in detail. It is argued that greater coordination among the various laws under discussion is indispensable. The situation in Italy is compared to the analogous case of Spain, & Spain's 1985 legislation covering foreign workers is examined. Modified HA

88T1517

Schaefer, Richard L. (Coll Arts & Sciences Western Illinois U, Macomb 61455), Racial Prejudice in Capitalist State: What Has Happened to the American Creed?, Phylon, 1986, 47, 3, Sept., 192-198

¶ An examination of the continued contrast between the egalitarian moral precepts of the "American Creed" as described by Swedish social economist Gunnar Myrdal in his 1944 study (An American Dilemma: The Negro Problem and Modern Democracy, New York, 1944) & the nation's racist attitudes toward blacks. Myrdal had predicted that, in the long run, the higher values of the American Creed would win out over the lower ones that encouraged prejudice & discrimination. Drawing on nationwide survey data gathered 1942-1985, it is shown that there has been consistent & growing support among white Americans for racial integration. At the same time, the resistance to the American Creed is evident in white hostility to affirmative action, busing to achieve racial balance & immigration policies sensitive to the needs of racial minorities. 2 Tables. Modified AA

88T1518

Shaffer, Robert (390 11th St, Brooklyn NY 11215), Jews, Reds, and Violets: Anti-Semitism and Anti-Radicalism at New York University, 1916-1929, The Journal of Ethnic Studies, 1987, 15, 2, summer, 47-81

¶ Like many US Colls & Us, New York U (NYU), a private institution, attempted to decrease enrollment of Jewish students at its uptown University Heights campus in the years following WWI. Utilizing administrative records & correspondence from the NYU archives, the reasons, procedures, & ultimate failure of NYU's attempt to limit Jewish enrollment are described. NYU administrators publicly denied that exclusion of Jews was the purpose of its new "selective admissions" policy, adopted at the height of the Red Scare in 1919. However, private correspondence indicates that the personnel committees NYU set up to interview applicants targeted first- & second-generation immigrant Jews of Eastern European origin for exclusion. The links between NYU's anti-Semitism & its long-standing antiradical policies & attitudes are explored. Modified AA

88T1519

Stavenhagen, Rodolfo (Colegio Mexico, 10740 Mexico DF), Indians in Latin America, ♦ U Development, 1984, 3, 30-35

¶ A discussion of the status of Indian societies in Latin America. The principal tendencies of national state policies regarding indigenous populations are summarized, & the relatively recent development of Indian ethnic social movements is described. Various theoretical & ideological approaches relative to the issue of Indian ethnicity are discussed & evaluated. F Rasmussen

88T1520

Szokolczai, Árpád, A cigányok értékrendjének sajátosságai (Special Features of the Value System of Gypsies), Szociológia, 1982, 4, 521-533, (HUN)

The problem of the place of gypsies in modern society is discussed. Two opposing hypotheses are examined: (1) If the problem is simply one of social stratification, then the desirable goal is complete assimilation, thus eliminating discrimination & disadvantaged social position. (2) If gypsies are regarded as an ethnic group of specific culture, assimilation would mean the destruction of this culture, & would not be legitimate. Data from an empirical survey support the latter hypothesis. Although gypsies constitute a segment of society with the lowest living standards, they are not merely a social stratum; even today, gypsies are characterized by a specific value system, a distinct world outlook, & an existing culture. 4 Tables. Modified HA

88T1521

Tan, Alexis S., Li, Sarina & Simpson, Charles (Dept Communications Washington State U, Pullman 99164), American TV and Social Stereotypes of Americans in Taiwan and Mexico, U Journalism Quarterly, 1986, 63, 4, winter, 809-814

¶ Questionnaire data from purposive samples of U students in Taiwan (N = 788) & Mexico (N = 150) in 1985 are analyzed to assess social stereotypes of Americans acquired from viewing US TV programs. Correlations between the viewing of specific programs & characterizations of Americans are calculated & discussed. While the correlations are modest, a pattern of relationships is apparent in both samples, & predominately negative images of Americans are attributed to programs such as "Dallas" & "Dynasty". 2 Tables. F Rasmussen

88T1522

Tschöpe, Iris (Zentralinstitut Philosophie Akademie Wissenschaften DDR, Otto-Nuscke-Str 10/11 Berlin DDR-1086 German Democratic Republic), Bemerkungen zum Zusammenhang von ökonomischer Gesellschaftsformation und ethischen Prozessen (Remarks Concerning the Relationship between an Economic System and Ethic Processes), Deutsche Zeitschrift für Philosophie, 1986, 34, 12, 1088-1097 (GER)

¶ The role of ethnosocial processes in history is discussed. Recent contributions to this theme are found to have neglected the connection between formational development of societies & ethnosocial processes. This connection can be found by examining the way in which production relations evolve within territorial, temporal, & geographic borders, from tribal societies to the ethnic DofL in capitalism. The concept "ethnic" is clarified with emphasis on its necessary connections with Se relations. The problems of nation-building are noted with respect to recently liberated countries, where colonially determined boundaries do not correspond to ethnic groups. The USSR is said to represent a new level of development in the free consolidation & integration of different ethnic groups. J Anderson van Otterloo, Anneke H. (Egelwier 9, 3831 ZJ Leusden Netherlands), Foreign Immigrants and the Dutch at Table, 1945-1985. Bridging or Widening the Gap?, The Netherlands Journal of Sociology/Sociologia Neerlandica, 1987, 23, 2, Oct., 126-143.

88T1523

¶ An analysis of the historical interactions & mutual influences of native Dutch & immigrant cooking & eating practices in the Netherlands. Since WWII, traditional Dutch lack of concern with food has been modified by the increasing influence of immigrant cuisines. Attention is given specifically to (Chinese) Indonesian, Italian, & Greek cuisines. At the same time, immigrant cooking has taken on many Dutch characteristics. Implications for other aspects of interethnic relations in the Netherlands are noted. 37 References. Modified HA

88T1524

van Staden, Fred J. (Dept Psychology U South Africa, 0001 Pretoria), White South Africans' Attitudes toward the Desegregation of Public Amenities, Journal of Social Psychology, 1987, 127, 2, Apr., 163-173

¶ Questionnaire data gathered in 1985 were used to test the proposal that white attitudes toward the desegregation of public amenities in South Africa correlate with a number of demographic & psychological variables. Rs (N = 1,062, median age 28.6) were second- & third-year psychology students at the U of South Africa from middle- to higher-income families. Those favoring resistance to the desegregation of public municipal amenities were mainly Afrikaans-speaking, as well as active members of a religious organization. They also expressed stronger authoritarian tendencies, weaker acceptance of others, & a stronger need for privacy than did students who were prepared to accept desegregated public amenities. Furthermore, attitudes toward desegregated public amenities were not related to differences in age, sex, marital status, the breadwinner's occupation, the use or nonuse of public amenities, self-acceptance, or locus of control. 2 Tables, 23 References. Modified HA

88T1525

van Wetering, Wilhelmina (Biltseweg 17, 3735 MA Bosch en Duin Netherlands), Informal Supportive Networks: Quasi-Kin Groups, Religion and Social Order among Surinam Creoles in the Netherlands, The Netherlands Journal of Sociology/Sociologia Neerlandica,

0500 culture and social structure

08 social organizations

88T1530

Bouchard, Gérard & Larouche, Jeannette (SOREP U Quebec, Chicoutimi G7H 2B1). Paramètres sociaux de la reproduction familiale au Saguenay (1842-1911) (Social Parameters of Family Production in the Saguenay Region (1842-1911)). ♦ Sociologie et Sociétés, 1987, 19, 1, Apr, 133-144 (FRE)

* The social parameters of family reproduction in the Saguenay region (northeastern Quebec province) are examined during 1842-1911, the period of population settlement. Family files ($N = 3,888$ families) were drawn from a database assembled by SOREP (a Canadian inter-U research center). A subsample of 611 pioneer families is subject to analysis, focusing on (1) the kinship tie as a support of Ru society, as studied through several forms of coresidence; (2) the inequalities accompanying the transmission of land & the establishment of children, & (3) literacy as an indicator of social differentiation. It is found that, despite disparities created between elder & younger sons & between boys & girls, family reproduction pursued an egalitarian course. However, this was to be compromised by the tensions & constraints accompanying the saturation of arable lands in the 1920s. 12 Tables, 30 References. Modified HA

88T1531

DuLong, John Patrick (Wayne State U, Detroit MI 48202). Genealogical Groups in a Changing Organizational Environment: From Lineage to Heritage. * Dissertation Abstracts International, A: The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 47, 12(1), June, 4518-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor MI. Order No. DA8706163.

88T1532

Kempny, Marian. Structural Analyses in Social Anthropology. Some Observations on Diverse Definitions of Social Structure. ♦ The Polish Sociological Bulletin, 1983, 1-4(61-64), 45-63

* An examination of the influences of varying epistemological assumptions on different versions of structuralism in social anthropology. The rivalry between two epistemological paradigms—that of Levi-Straussian structuralism & of British structural-functionalism—forms a framework for discussion, & both of the two perspectives are elaborated & contrasted. Evidence from field research is utilized to describe varieties of the structural approach in social anthropology, the structural-Marxist model is also discussed. 1 Figure. F. Rasmussen

88T1533

Litwak, Eugene & Kulis, Stephen (School Public Health Columbia U, New York NY 10032). Technology, Proximity, and Measures of Kin Support. ♦ Journal of Marriage and the Family, 1987, 49, 3, Aug, 649-661

* The proposition is advanced that many current measures of kinship strength may paradoxically indicate inadequate or weakened kinship structures, because they rely on measures that emphasize continuous proximity. This paradox is a consequence of inattention to the relationship between technology, services, & proximity. Based on analysis of a 1978 survey of New York City & Fort Lauderdale-Miami, Fla, residents aged 65+ ($N = 1,346$) regarding their chief helper service delivery, non-proximity indicators of kinship contact & service delivery that can measure strength of kinship bonds are presented. Principles for assessing at what distances kin can deliver which services are also identified. 4 Tables, 2 References. Modified HA

88T1534

Rutgayzer, V. M., Mezhdunarodnyy simpozium issledovateley sotsial'noy struktury (International Symposium of Social Structure Investigators), Sotsiologicheskie Issledovaniya, 1987, 14, 2, Mar-Apr, 138-139 (RUS)

* The international scientific symposium celebrating the thirty-fifth anniversary of the founding of the Academy of Social Sciences in the German Democratic Republic was held in Dec 1986 in Berlin. R. Weidig gave the introductory speech. M. I. Ietsch spoke on positive social differentiation under socialism. T. Koloszi described SC differences in modern Hungary. K. Dimitroff discussed the virtual elimination of SC differences in postwar Bulgaria. I. Beskid discussed SC differences in Poland before & after WWII. A. Matejovsky described objective & subjective factors of SC relationships under socialism. J. Kosta outlined changes in SC structure in Slovakia. F. R. Filippov stressed the need for new approaches to study the social structure of the USSR. G. Prostavkov

88T1535

Schuster, Ilse (Dept Anthropology State U New York, Stony Brook 11794). Kinship, Life Cycle, and Education in Lusaka. ♦ Journal of Comparative Family Studies, 1987, 18, 3, autumn, 363-387.

* It is suggested that the kinship relations of Ur-Zambian women can be best understood by putting aside familiar assumptions about family structural units & inheritance patterns in favor of investigations of the individual, including changes in personal development brought about by passage through different stages of the life cycle, the use of kinship networks in achieving goals, & the effects of SF constraints. The shifts in kinship relations that occur with the passage from early childhood to maturity are examined in samples of 156 educated & 179 uneducated Fs in Lusaka, primarily aged 20-29, based on data gathered via interviews, questionnaires, & participant observation. Results indicate that Fs who attain education, & thus economic autonomy, become more independent from kin than those who do not; however, transient marriages & the absence of state welfare benefits ensure the survival of blood kin ties as the major form of social security for both groups. 7 Tables, 71 References. Modified HA

88T1536

Wheaton, Robert. Observations on the Development of Kinship History, 1942-1985. ♦ Journal of Family History, 1987, 12, 1-3, Jan-July, 285-301

* Post-WWII development of kinship history was initiated by the emergence of methods for the analysis of quantitative historical-demographic sources. In France by means of the Family Reconstitution Method, based on genealogical records & parish registers, & in GB by the analysis of nominative household censuses. Five areas of subsequent development are discussed: (1) the search for an investigation of large-scale kinship structures, & their influence on society as a whole; (2) life-course analysis, which integrates both events in individual life histories & larger historical events with the household developmental cycle; (3) interactions between kinship & economic relations, & particularly the roles played by women in the economic life of the family; (4) the effects of kinship on social relations at the community level; & (5) the relationships between kinship & social structures more generally. In this last respect, emphasis is placed on the influence of French intellectual institutions & traditions & on the alliance theory of marriage on the distinctive direction taken by French social historians. The study of mentalités, as it has influenced kinship history, is considered. 124 References. HA

... a focal point for collective choice and welfare:

Managing Editors:

Wolf Gaertner
Fachbereich Wirtschaftswissenschaften,
Universität Osnabrück, Postfach 4469,
4500 Osnabrück, FRG

Jerry S. Kelly
Department of Economics,
Syracuse University, Maxwell Hall,
Syracuse, NY 13210, USA

Prasanta Pattanaik
Department of Economics,
Faculty of Commerce and Social Science,
The University of Birmingham,
P O Box 363,
Birmingham B15 2TT, UK

Maurice Salles
(Coordinating Editor)
Institut des Sciences de la Décision,
Université de Caen,
14032 Caen Cédex, France

Editors:

K. J. Arrow, S. Barbera, A. Bergson,
C. Blackorby, G. Bordes, G. Chichilnisky,
J. S. Coleman, P. Dasgupta, B. Dutta,
R. Dworkin, J. Ferejohn, P. C. Fishburn,
W. V. Gehrlein, L. Gevers, G. Heal,
M. Kaneko, G. H. Kramer, J.-J. Laffont,
E. S. Maskin, B. Monjardet, H. Moulin,
Y.-K. Ng, B. Peleg, N. Schofield,
T. Schotovsky, R. Selten, A. K. Sen, P. Suppes,
K. Suzumura, W. Thomson, B. Williams

Subscription Information:

ISSN 0176-1714 Title No. 355
1988, Volume 5 (4 issues)
DM 178,- plus carriage charges
DM price is valid for all countries outside
North America
Sample copy available on request from

Springer-Verlag
Berlin Heidelberg New York
London Paris Tokyo

Heidelberger Platz 3, D-1000 Berlin 33 15 Fifth Ave.,
New York, NY 10010, USA 28, Lurke Street, Bedford
MK40 3HU, England 26, rue des Carmes, F-75005 Paris
37-3, Hongo 3-chome, Bunkyo-ku, Tokyo 113 Japan

Social Choice and Welfare

Social Choice and Welfare publishes original research, survey papers and book reviews on the ethical and positive aspects of welfare economics and collective theory. The appropriate topics comprise social choice and voting theory (normative, positive and strategic sides) as well as all aspects of welfare theory (Pareto optimality; welfare criteria; fairness, justice, and equity; externalities; public goods; optimal taxation; incentives in public decision making; cost-benefit analysis; etc.). Articles on choice and order theory are also published if their results can be applied to these topics. Papers both verbal and formal in style are considered

Up to now, contributions to welfare economics and social choice and voting theory have been spread over a large number of journals coming from various disciplines including economics, mathematics, operations research, philosophy, political science, psychology, and sociology. Social Choice and Welfare serves as a focal point for issues in collective choice and welfare for these and other disciplines.

A selection of recent papers:

A. Sliwinski: Bergson Social Welfare Functions in Applied Welfare Analysis

D. Donaldson, J. E. Roemer: Social Choice in Economic Environments with Dimensional Variation

V. Denicolò: Some Further Results on Nonbinary Social Choice

M. Le Breton, M. Salles: On the Generic Emptiness of the Local Core of Voting Games

M. Le Breton: On the Core of Voting Games

B. Peleg: Cores and Capacities of Compound Simple Games

tm 10 230/4/1

Springer

modern world are: the Western-style mystique of progress, Christian fundamentalism, Islamic fundamentalism, Marxist revolutionary ideology, Green politics, & the "new paradigm." Each of these is in conflict with other normative systems, & none is adequate to serve as the normative framework for a global society. Whether or not such a society emerges depends on whether, as a fundamental characteristic, there exists an ability to deal with information—not only data & concepts, but also "meta-information" about the uses & limitations of information. Whatever the norms of a global information culture, its emergence will be accompanied by a protracted period of conflict & great stress for individuals & institutions of governance. 9 References. HA

88T1546

Popelová, Jiřina. Axiologický aspekt kultury (An Axiologic Aspect of Culture). Filozofia, 1983, 38, 3, 354-362. (CZE)

¶ An examination of the relations of culture & value & of culture & civilization in Western history from ancient Greece to the Renaissance. A recurring theme is concern over the impact of human culture on the natural world. This concern has reemerged in the present century in response to the ecological effects of capitalism. It is also emphasized, however, that socialist countries may have similar harmful effects on the natural environment. Possibilities for removing the damage in nature are explored from a philosophical perspective. 3 References. Modified HA

88T1547

Rollwagen, Jack R. (Dept Anthropology State U New York, Brockport 14420). Reconsidering Basic Assumptions: A Call for a Reassessment of the General Concept of Culture in Anthropology. Urban Anthropology, 1986, 15, 1-2, spring-summer, 97-133

¶ "Culture" is regarded by anthropologists as the central concept in their perception of that which defines anthropology. Yet as anthropologists transfer their attention from perceptually or conceptually isolated societies to populations inextricably integrated into international relationships, & (more importantly) when they try to integrate microanalysis with macroanalysis in the study of populations to be studied through ethnographic means, the applicability of the traditional concept of culture in relating a specific identified population of individuals to a larger whole becomes increasingly problematic. Rather than retain the traditional definition of culture, a redefinition of culture in relation to different units than societies & nations should be attempted. Some of the basic questions confronting anthropologists about the general concept of culture as a result of examinations of nontraditional topics in anthropology are explored. 32 References. Modified HA

88T1548

Schwarz, Udo H. A. (FB Erziehungs- und Sozialwissenschaften Fern U Hagen, D-5800 Federal Republic Germany). Über Versuche, die Mode theoretisch einzuholen (On Attempts to Catch Up with Fashion through Theory). Soziologische Revue, 1987, 10, 2, Apr, 149-159. (GER)

¶ A review of ten recent works in the sociology of fashion (see individual listings of titles in IRPS No. 41). The books examine meaning & message of fashion, dress styles from primitive to contemporary cultures, behavioral aspects of fashion, innovative dressing, & dress & identity. Social protest movements tend to reject conventional dress. While many different angles are explored, the studies lack cohesiveness & theoretical analysis. M. Maxfield

88T1549

Shevchenko, B. P., K analizu psikhologicheskoy reproduktii kak faktora vosproizvodstva sotsiokul'turnogo opyta (An Analysis of Psychological Reproduction as a Factor in the Production of Sociocultural Experience). Filosofskie Nauki, 1986, 29, 6, 134-137. (RUS)

The production mechanism of sociocultural experience is very complicated, & has not been adequately analyzed by sociologists. Such sociocultural experience is ultimately dependent on the mode of economic production, & is transformed & transmitted directly from one individual to another by examples of behavior, action, style of thought, & forms of emotional & volitional expression. The psychological mechanisms of reflection & imitation are analyzed in terms of perception, transformation, & production of new behaviors. Implications of these findings for the behavior modification necessary for implementation of current USSR economic reforms are discussed. G. Prostakov

88T1550

Switzer, Les (U Houston, TX 77004). Cultural Studies and African Culture. Cahiers d'Etudes Africaines, 1986, 26, 1-2(101-102), 257-263.

¶ A review essay on Jean Comaroff's Body of Power, Spirit of Resistance: The Culture and History of a South African People (Chicago & London: U of Chicago Press, 1985 (see listing in IRPS No. 41)). Comaroff examines the struggle between the forces of dominance & dependency in a neocolonial, peripheral area from the perspective of social anthropology. The analysis of the cultural struggles in a Tswana chiefdom (Barolong boo Ratshidi) in Ru southern Africa is penetrating, & goes beyond simplistic representations of dominance & subordination. A complex conceptualization of the structures of both power & resistance is presented. Unfortunately the study is marred by weaknesses in theory, methodology, & writing style. 10 References. C. Waters

88T1551

Tamano, Kazushi. Title in Japanese (The Independence of Seikatsu-Kozo [Lifestyles] and the Significance of Local Areas). Shakaigaku Hyoron/Japanese Sociological Review, 1987, 38, 1(149), June, 42-59. (JPN)

¶ A case study of a traditional Japanese consumer-oriented city is utilized to analyze the sociological basis for maintaining independence of social life from economic factors. The evidence indicates that residents' lifestyles are affected by the cultural system & social organizations produced by the unique historical processes in the city. The uniqueness is reproduced by the development of the city itself, & is significant because it provides the diversity needed for people to create their own lifestyles. 10 Tables. Modified HA

88T1552

Tsukishima, Kenzo (U Tokyo, Bunkyo-ku Japan). Le Sens de l'honneur au Japon (The Sense of Honor in Japan). Cahiers de Sociologie Economique et Culturelle, Ethnopsychologie, 1987, 7, June, 19-24. (FRE)

¶ A discussion of the sense of honor in Japanese society, past & present; it is considered to be a key characteristic of the Japanese people. Focus here is on: (1) reactions to this trait expressed in the writings of European visitors to Japan from the sixteenth century onward; (2) Inazo Nitobe's analysis of the sense of honor (Bushido, the Soul of Japan, Philadelphia, 1899); & (3) a discussion of the nature of the sense of honor that is still alive in modern society, & how it acts as a normative force for conduct. Modified HA

88T1553

Werbner, Richard P., The Political Economy of Bricolage. Journal of Southern African Studies, 1986, 13, 1, Oct, 151-156.

¶ A review essay on Jean Comaroff's Body of Power, Spirit of Resistance (Chicago: Chicago U Press, 1985 (see listing in IRPS No. 41)). This important work is based on fieldwork among the Tshidi in the borderland of Botswana & South Africa & focuses on the colonial encounter between dominant & subordinate cultures. Issues raised include questions regarding the cultural defense against domination during the great transformation in which people become semiproletarians. The author's use of poststructuralism provides a perspective that is historically informed & illuminates the concrete embodiments of a largely nonverbal consciousness. F. Rasmussen

13 culture

88T1537

Anderson, Olive (Westfield Coll, Hampstead London NW3 7ST England). Did Suicide Increase with Industrialization in Victorian England?, Past and Present, 1980, 86, Feb, 149-173

† Contrary to the widely accepted belief that the transition from a traditional to a modern society is associated with a rise in Ur suicide rates, evidence is offered that this was not the case in Victorian & Edwardian GB & Wales. Analysis of occupational suicide rates & suicide statistics from mortality returns of 57 counties between 1878 & 1910 reveals that high suicide rates were not necessarily associated with increased industrialization; indeed, the most urbanized areas often have the lowest rates. Detailed examination of age & gender specific rates of suicide for 3,254 Ms & 1,151 Fs from 76 Ur registration districts allows for the development of a suicide taxonomy by area size & economic type. Results challenge beliefs about industrialization & suicide as well as its increased occurrence among the young & F. In the new industrial towns, retired Ms were quite vulnerable to suicide, but younger Ms & Fs were relatively immune until middle age. Important differences between the suicide characteristics of different industrial communities are revealed to be a function of primary occupational category, state of industrialization, & culture. The possibility that myths surrounding industrialization & suicide grew out of systematic biases toward over- or underreporting is examined. 5 Tables. K. Hyatt

88T1538

Arditt, George (Dept Sociology State U New York, Stony Brook 11790). Role as a Cultural Concept, Theory and Society, 1987, 16, 4, July, 565-591

† The concept of role is a relatively recent idea in sociology, which draws on two main sources: the symbolic interactionism of George Herbert Mead & the social structural concerns of Henry Maine, Emile Durkheim, & Max Weber. The reasons for the emergence of this concept, for the failure of a third version of it due to Georg Simmel, & for the equal failure of the rival concept of social type advanced by the Chicago school are explored. It is suggested that the concept of role articulates two contradictions inherent in modern culture, between self & society & between relativism & morality. The rival concepts do not so successfully articulate these issues. These conclusions challenge belief in the objectivity of theory choice in sociology. Modified AA

88T1539

Gawthrop, Richard & Strauss, Gerald (Northwest Missouri State U, Maryville 64468). Protestantism and Literacy in Early Modern Germany, Past and Present, 1984, 104, Aug, 31-55.

† The belief that early Protestantism encouraged literacy as a means to Bible reading has become historical orthodoxy. Martin Luther's own writings show consistent support for education for the elites, but also reveal his views shifting from advocacy of literacy & Bible reading to advocacy of early education focused on catechism drill. This did not require literacy, being a task focused on memorization. The German Pietist movement, especially after it gained the support of the Prussian state, gave stronger support to literacy & put numerous Bibles in print, backed by the ruling elite. The result was substantial growth in German literacy at all levels of society. W. H. Stoddard

88T1540

Ghosh, Amitav (U Delhi, 110007 India). Tambiah on Ritual, Contributions to Indian Sociology, New Series, 1987, 21, 1, Jan-June, 217-224.

† A review essay on Stanley Jeyaraja Tambiah's Culture, Thought and Social Action: An Anthropological Perspective (Cambridge, Mass: Harvard U Press, 1985 [see listing in IRPS No. 41]). These essays concern Tambiah's most important contribution to anthropological theory: the proposal of a performative theory of ritual. The basic opposition between science & religion which are ultimately ineffective—are standard concepts that Tambiah seeks to transcend. He conceives magical acts of ritual by their very performance—as producing a change of state in the societies around them. Tambiah's earlier work on cosmology & classification, which seeks a middle ground between structuralism & empiricism, is less original & ultimately disappointing in its quest for good sense. W. H. Stoddard

88T1541

Hennetta, James A. (Boston U, MA 02215). Ethnography, Drama and Historical Method, Past and Present, 1983, 101, Nov, 158-161

† A review article on Rhys Isaac's The Transformation of Virginia, 1740-1790, (Chapel Hill, NC: U of North Carolina Press, 1981 [see listing in IRPS No. 41]). Isaac divides his narrative into three parts: a portrait of the traditional society of the earlier period, a description of forces that eroded the gentry's cultural/ideological hegemony, & an overview of the society that those forces created. Isaac's material is rich & makes effective use of small scenes from human life to suggest larger events. This book is thus an effective example of dramaturgical historiography, a method difficult to apply for a less gifted writer & one that at times leads Isaac to idiosyncratic & perhaps unsound conclusions. W. H. Stoddard

88T1542

Hunt, Geoffrey & Satterlee, Sandra (Dept Sociology North London Polytechnic, Holloway N7 80B England). Darts, Drink and the Pub: The Culture of Female Drinking, W The Sociological Review, 1987, 35, 3, Aug, 575-601

† Based on fieldwork research, the use of 2 pubs by 2 different groups of women in an English village is described, focusing on SC differences between the 2 groups & their differential use of the pubs. For many Wc women, as opposed to their Mc counterparts, the pub represents an important social center in the village, eg. joining the darts team provides one of a limited range of available options to get away from responsibilities of home & kin. This is not the case for Mc women, for them the pub represents only one of many options in their social lives, & as a result they make less use of the pub & its facilities. 37 References. HA

88T1543

Luchanskii, A. I., Metodologicheskie problemy issledovaniya traditsionnoy kul'tury (Methodological Problems of the Study of Popular Culture Traditions), Filosofskie Nauki, 1986, 29, 6, 25-34. (RUS)

† Various means are explored for the philosophical analysis of folk traditions. The genesis of folk (traditional) culture was determined by Karl Marx to be the moment when the members of society initiated reproduction, not as a means of gaining wealth but as a step to ensure the future welfare of the community. Folk culture includes a stable set of customs, beliefs, & moral, legal, & aesthetic norms blended together from the beginning of primitive communities to the development of the modern national state. Special attention is given to the role of traditional culture in the socialist state. G. Prostakov

88T1544

Medina, Angel (Dept Philosophy Georgia State U, Atlanta 30303). Morality and Writing in the Baroque, Human Studies, 1987, 10, 2, 263-279

† A review essay on John O'Neill's Essaying Montaigne: A Study of the Renaissance Institution of Reading and Writing (London, Boston, & Henley: Routledge & Kegan Paul, 1982 [see listing in IRPS No. 41]). O'Neill's work is seen as appropriating both the ethos & the style of Montaigne's Essays with uncommon sharpness. The consequent understanding illuminates the tradition of "embodied thinking" expounded by O'Neill & M. Merleau-Ponty, but at the same time inherits the problematic character of Montaigne's work. As a result, this book suffers from the apparent lack of focus, message, & theme typical of the Essays itself. F. Rasmussen

88T1545

Michael, Donald N. & Anderson, Walter Truett (1472 Filbert Apt 511, San Francisco CA 94109). Norms in Conflict and Confusion: Six Stories in Search of an Author, W Technological Forecasting and Social Change, 1987, 31, 2, Apr, 107-115

† Political conflict involves the conflict of norms, yet resolution of political conflict requires that the disputants share some norms about conflict resolution. This presents a problem at the global level, where no such shared normative framework exists. The world is increasingly interconnected; yet the peoples of the world continue to embrace ideas of separateness, which are reinforced by their various normative systems. Six major "stories"—worldviews or paradigms—competing in the current post-

165-209

¶ An attempt is made to assess some recent Peruvian & North American studies of Peru's Ru sector in terms of researchers' awareness of & response to criticism of their earlier work. Some of the questions have focused on problems of method & theory, eg. whether or not the "community" is the appropriate unit of study & analysis, assumptions as to the sources & processes of social change, & judgments about the character of Ru people. Although there is a residual tendency to treat Andean culture as a constant, research has been largely redirected to the study of variables. 115 References. Modified HA

88T1563

Therwys, Jacques A. (Prosperdreef 9, B-3046 Vaalbeek Belgium). Luba Culture: Ultimate Reality in an African Society. A Phenomenological Approach, Ultimate Reality and Meaning. 1986, 9, 3, Sept. 163-187

* A phenomenological approach to cultural anthropology is outlined whose focus is the deepest level of human encounter between the anthropologist & his or her Ss. This is applied to an examination of the beliefs about ultimate reality of the Luba Syankadi of southern Zaire. Examined are group rituals, the complex reality of human beings, the ancestor world, & the supreme being or videve mukulu. Together these form the life-space within which each Luba exists & within which his or her culture continually realizes itself. 26 References. W. H. Stoddard

88T1564

Ubbink, Irene D., Clitoridectomie bij de Masai, een poging tot interpretatie (Clitoridectomy among the Masai. An Interpretation). ♦ Sociologische Gids. 1987, 34, 4, July-Aug. 279-295. (DUT)

¶ The feminist movement of the 1960s was accompanied by a general interest in women's position in Third World countries, resulting in debate over the practice of clitoridectomy. Feminist groups generally condemned this as a M attempt to control F sexuality, but failed to distinguish between either the different forms of F circumcision or the social settings where they occur. A case study of clitoridectomy among the Masai of Africa against the social, cultural, & political background of their tribal organization gives evidence to suggest that the general argument for condemnation has no validity in their case. 22 References. Modified HA

SAVE FOR FUTURE REFERENCE.

Document Delivery Service

The costs of reproduction are: US $0.25 per reproduced page. Orders must be PREPAID (unprepaid orders cannot be acknowledged or returned) and sent to SOCIOLOGICAL ABSTRACTS, INC. (P.O. Box 22206, San Diego, CA 92122, USA) together with the SA accession number and the complete citation of the document to be reproduced. To calculate price per document, multiply the number of pages as indicated in the citation of the abstract by US $0.25 and add a US $1.50 search fee per document. POSTAGE is EXTRA. Below is a table for postage fees that vary by weight/size of paper.

No. of Pages	US & Canada Postage Fee	All Other Countries
		Postage Fee	Air Mail
1- 5	$0.39	US $1.40	Surface US $1.00
6-10	$0.73	$2.24	$1.90
11-15	$1.07	$2.78	$2.30
16-20	$1.41	$3.32	$2.75
21 +	Additional multiples as above

CONFERENCE papers are available ONLY when the following notation precedes the text of the abstract; ● "Complete paper available from SA Reproduction Service prepaid at $0.25 per page plus $1.50 search and postage. Length: pp." For copies of paper without this notation, write directly to the author, whose address is listed in the citation.

14 social anthropology

88T1554

Gibbal, Jean-Marie (Centre national recherche scientifique, F-75700 Paris France) De l'expérience à la fiction (From Experience to Fiction) ♦ Cahiers de Sociologie Economique et Culturelle, Ethnopsychologie, 1987, 7, June, 11-18 (FRE)

† Ethnological inquiry always comes within the scope of a wider experience which must be taken into consideration in order to elucidate the social reality observed. This is illustrated by a discussion of three examples that go against the limited universe of forms of Western, classical science: (1) a description of fieldwork in the Ghimbala region of Niger, focusing on observations of a priestess of the spirit cult, (2) a review of Kabire Fidaali's investigations of healers in the Ouagadougou region of Burkina Faso, formerly Upper Volta (Le Pouvoir du Bangre [The Power of Bangre], Presses de la Renaissance, 1987), & (3) general reflections, drawing on various studies, concerning the phenomenon of the possession trance. 1 Illustration. Modified HA

88T1555

Gordon, Robert (U Vermont, Burlington 05405), Remembering Agnes Winifred Hoernle. ♦ Social Dynamics, 1987, 13, 1, June, 68-72

† A review of Peter Carsten's edition of A. W. Hoernle: The Social Organization of the Nama and Other Essays, (Johannesburg: Witwatersrand U Press, 1985 [see listing in IRPS No. 41]). This is a tribute to Agnes Winifred Hoernle, the "Mother of Social Anthropology in South Africa," on the occasion of the centenary of her birth. Hoernle & her work are placed within the context of South African anthropology, though emphasis is on her academic rather than applied or political work. This is a grave injustice, for it ignores her involvement with the social issues of her day & her moral stance against apartheid, messages that could be useful to social anthropologists struggling with ethical issues in contemporary South Africa. 15 References. K. Hyatt

88T1556

Hebert, Rene, Le Langage de "l'Objet-Symbole" dans une communauté rurale (The Language of the "Symbol Object" in a Rural Community). ♦ Cahiers de Sociologie Economique et Culturelle, Ethnopsychologie, 1987, 7, June, 141-155 (FRE)

† An examination of the role of ritual & symbols in the nonreligious social life of a small Ru community, based on participant observation. A detailed description is presented of 4 civil marriages & a ceremony of "civil godparenting" in a French village of 300 inhabitants. Ways in which the rituals used meet some human needs & reinforce the community link are discussed. 10 References. Modified HA

88T1557

Kramer, Frith, Die Relativität der Normen (The Relativity of Norms), Österreichische Zeitschrift für Soziologie, 1987, 12, 1, 93-99 (GER)

† A review essay on Mary Douglas's Reinheit und Gefährdung. Eine Studie zu Vorstellungen von Verunreinigung und Tabu ([Cleanliness and Jeopardy: A Study of Perceptions of Pollution and Taboo], Berlin: Dietrich Reimer Verlag, 1985), Alain Corbin's Pest hauch und Blutenduft. Eine Geschichte des Geruchs ([Pestilential Scent and the Scent of Blossoms: A History of Odors], Berlin: Verlag Klaus Wagenbach, 1984), & Horst V. Krumrey's Entwicklungsstrukturen von Verhaltensstandards. Eine soziologische Prozessanalyse auf der Grundlage deutscher Anstands- und Manierenbücher von 1870-1970 ([Developmental Structures of Behavioral Standards: A Sociological Process Analysis on the Basis of German Books of Etiquette and Manners], Frankfurt/M.: Suhrkamp Verlag, 1984 [see listings in IRPS No. 41]). All are concerned with the relative nature of cultural norms of behavior. (1) Douglas presents an intercultural comparison of rules concerning taboo & purity/pollution. The concept of dirt or pollution is explained as arising from the desire for order. Its relationship to the caste system & to ritual & magic is investigated. (2) Corbin examines changes in standards of hygiene & of acceptable odors in European society since the eighteenth century. This historical study also investigates how concepts of hygiene came to be used as instruments of power strategy & social stratification. (3) Krumrey describes changes over the past century in general rules of behavior for public & private occasions based on a review of German etiquette manuals published between 1870 and 1970, among which 46 are examined in detail. These reveal aspects of interpersonal relations among individuals from different groups & in different social situations. C. Waters

88T1558

Nash, June (Dept Anthropology City Coll City U New York, NY 10031), Anthropological Research in Latin America in the 1980s, Urban Anthropology, 1986, 15, 1-2, spring-summer, 79-96.

† A brief review of selected work in Middle America, South America, & the Caribbean in the 1970s & 1980s indicates fruitful areas for expanding the scope & methods of the field & demonstrates the existence of a basis for comparative & longitudinal studies. The following approaches are treated: (1) ecological analyses, (2) structural analytical studies, (3) ideological & religious studies, & (4) developmental & applied projects. Advances in the first three areas have in some cases contributed directly to applied interests. 74 References. Modified HA

88T1559

Nissan, Elizabeth (Dept Anthropology U Durham, DH1 3HN England), The Work of Sri Lankan Anthropologists: A Bibliographic Survey, Contributions to Indian Sociology: New Series, 1987, 21, 1, Jan-June, 1-25

† A review of published research in anthropology conducted by Sri Lankan anthropologists, especially by Gananath Obeyesekere & Stanley Jayaraja Tambiah. Major areas of research examined include kinship, land tenure, & elite formation, caste, Ru change, religion, the person, & nationalism, violence, & communalism. A wide range of writing is found that merits increased attention. 185 References. W. H. Stoddard

88T1560

Parker, Seymour (Dept Anthropology U Utah, Salt Lake City 84112), The Waning of the Incest Taboo, Legal Studies Forum, 1987, 11, 2, 205-221

† An examination of how changing attitudes & assumptions about sexual mores & behaviors in the US & other industrial societies have contributed to a reappraisal of the incest taboo, its societal functions, & its significance in the legal system. A distinction is made between incest & intrafamilial child sexual abuse, the latter concerns sexual acts performed on a naive child by an adult family member that causes physical or psychological harm to the victim, & continues to be a serious problem for society. Incest, however, involving consensual sex between adults who happen to be related, is argued to be a matter of personal choice, not legal control. Theories on the origins & maintenance of the incest taboo are examined via a review of the literature, & its abolition is recommended due to the fact that it is based on fears about its biological & social consequences that are no longer tenable. In addition, analysis of laws governing incestuous behavior reveals them to be definitionally vague, variably enforced, & rooted in anachronistic rationale. It is suggested that the well-being of the family & protection of children from sexual abuse would be better served if the concept of incest were eliminated from the law. 60 References. K. Hyatt

88T1561

Quigley, Declan, Ethnicity without Nationalism: The Newars of Nepal, Archives Européennes de Sociologie, 1987, 28, 1, 152-170

† A discussion of the ethnic identity of the Newar people of Nepal criticizes David Gellner's conclusions (see SA 35 1/87R1399) & argues that the sense of ethnicity has always been weak among the Newars. Reasons for this are found in the divisive nature of the caste system, & in the traditional marriage patterns dictated by this system. A discussion of the history of the Newars, especially since the heyday of the Newar kingdoms in the eighteenth century, draws on fieldwork, census data, & numerous studies. The Newars' caste system & religious practices are discussed (Newars may be Hindu, Buddhist, or a combination of the two). It is found that Newar communities are characterized by a lack of social mobility & an absence of nationalism. 1 Figure, 31 References. C. Waters

88T1562

Stein, William W. (Dept Anthropology State U New York Buffalo Amherst 14260), Peruvianist Social Anthropology: An Appraisal of Recent Work, Urban Anthropology, 1986, 15, 1-2, spring-summer,

0600 complex organization

21 sociology of work

88T1565

Abbott, Martin L. (Seattle Pacific U, WA 98119), Looking Closely at Quality Circles: Implications for Intervention, Clinical Sociology Review, 1987, 5, 119-131

* A discussion of quality circles (QCs), a popular type of work group employed extensively in business & industry, despite a number of empirical studies pointing out their failure to achieve desired outcomes. On the basis of the findings of a questionnaire survey (N not given) regarding QCs in an electronics manufacturing firm, three categories of QCs are identified: management-dominated, stable, & QCs in crisis. Practitioners should recognize the complexity of QCs & focus intervention efforts on individual, QC group, & organizational levels of analysis. 31 References. Modified HA

88T1566

Abramo, Luis Wendel, Empresarios y trabajadores: nuevas ideas y viejos fantasmas (Employers and Workers: New Ideas and Old Ghosts), Revista Mexicana de Sociología, 1986, 48, 4, Oct-Dec, 261-281 (SPA)

Translated by Rosa Cusminsky de Cendrero.

* It is argued that a new democratic order can be constructed in Brazil only if the laws & institutions that regulate labor are radically changed, as well as the elitist, authoritarian position that employers have traditionally taken in any conflict. In this context, new measures introduced by the Ministry of Labor & the resurgence of the trade union movement are examined. The latter has become more creative, with diversified demands, some radicalized values, & a broader spectrum of support, its development since the wave of strikes in 1978 is reviewed. Reactions of employers to the new situation are investigated, based especially on 15 in-depth interviews conducted in 1983 with employers in 5 different states in Brazil. Individual positions differ considerably but, in general, an increased acceptance of the legitimacy of workers' organizations is observed. C. Waters

88T1567

Affleck, Marilyn & Morgan, Carolyn Stout (Dept Sociology U Oklahoma, Norman 73019), The Influence of Sex Role Attitudes on Work Commitment of Female Adolescents, Free Inquiry in Creative Sociology, 1987, 15, 2, Nov, 189-194

* The effect of sex-role attitudes on work commitment among a 1982 nationwide survey of US F high school seniors (N = 3,539) is investigated, using multiple regression. Other predictor variables include race, parental education, paid employment of mother while R was growing up, political beliefs, religiosity, & educational plans. Four-year Coll plans proves to be the single most important predictor of commitment to work, followed by sex-role attitudes & religiosity. 3 Tables, 36 References. Modified AA

88T1568

Andersen, Svein Sundvall (Stanford U, CA 94305), Offshore Industrial Relations in Britain and Norway: Pluralism and Neo-Corporatism as Contexts of Strategic Adaptation, Dissertation Abstracts International, A: The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 47, 12(1), June, 4522-A.

Available from UMI, Ann Arbor MI. Order No. DA8707623.

88T1569

Anbeier, Helmut K. (Dept Sociology Rutgers U, New Brunswick NJ 08903), The Socio-Genesis of Psychological Distress in Developing Countries: Industrial Workers in Nigeria, International Sociology, 1987, 2, 3, Sept, 219-234

A basic causal model is developed describing the effects of factors such as socialization, Ru-Ur background, current occupation, perceived job stressors, & locus of control as determinants of psychological distress in factory workers in Nigeria via 1978 survey data (N = 190). The analysis builds on major results & theories of causation of psychological distress in African populations experiencing high rates of social change. Findings regarding perceived job stressors are similar to results found in Western samples, but the findings concerning the effects of cognitive attribution tendencies contrast with Western research findings. The ensuing discussion of the reasons for such differences emphasizes basic themes in the sociogenesis of psychological distress in an African context. 3 Tables, 2 Figures, 51 References. Modified HA

88T1570

Bale, Anthony Frederick (Brandeis U, Waltham MA 02254), Compensation Crisis: The Value and Meaning of Work-Related Injuries and Illnesses in the United States, 1842-1932, Dissertation Abstracts International, A: The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 47, 12(1), June, 4522-A.

Available from UMI, Ann Arbor MI. Order No. DA8705769.

88T1571

Balló, Róbert, Az egészségügy és a táppénzes helyzet (Public Health and Sick Pay), Szociológia, 1982, 3, 437-446. (HUN)

* Abstract not currently available

88T1572

Barker, Melissa Ann (U Oregon, Eugene 97403), An Organizational Perspective on Job Evaluation Methods: Implications for Comparable Worth Approaches to Pay Equity, Dissertation Abstracts International, A: The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 47, 11, May, 4201-A.

Available from UMI, Ann Arbor MI. Order No. DA8705868.

88T1573

Benninghaus, Hans (Instt Soziologie Technische U Berlin, D-1000 10 Federal Republic Germany), Substantielle Komplexität der Arbeit als zentrale Dimension der Jobstruktur (The Substantive Complexity of Work as a Central Dimension of Job Structure), Zeitschrift für Soziologie, 1987, 16, 5, Oct, 334-352 (GER)

* An investigation of the relative contributions of various perceived job characteristics, including the substantive complexity of the work (ie. the variety of skills used), to job satisfaction, self-esteem, well-being, & stress. Questionnaire data from 499 M employees (383 white-collar & 116 blue-collar) at 15 workplaces in the public sector in a West German city were analyzed, using multiple linear regression, to predict psychosomatic complaints, depression, & current levels of health & energy according to the following perceived job characteristics: variety of skills employed; latitude for decision making; demands of the job; & interaction with fellow employees. Variety of skills used was found to be the strongest predictor. 5 Tables, 4 Figures, 36 References. Modified HA

88T1574

Beronius, M. (Lunds U, S-221 00 Sweden), Den disciplinära maktens organiseringsmakt och arbetsorganisation (The Organization of Disciplinary Power: Power and Work Organization), Dissertation Abstracts International, C: European Abstracts, 1987, 48, 1, spring, 61-62 (SWE)

Unavailable from UMI; published by Arkiv avhandlingsserie, Box 1559, S-221 01 Lund, Sweden.

88T1575

Binion, Gayle (U California, Santa Barbara 93106), Affirmative Action Reconsidered: Justifications, Objections, Myths and Misconceptions, Women & Politics, 1987, 7, 1, spring, 43-62.

* The current attack on affirmative action in the US is based on a series of misconceptions about the nature & operation of affirmative action programs. Critics claim that gender or race consciousness is inherently "reverse discrimination." This & other objections to affirmative action are explored & critiqued. A review of the relevant case law suggests that the poor quality of the posture & litigation of affirmative action cases has helped to reinforce the negative mythology. It is further suggested that the full SE integration of women & minorities into US society must be understood as underlying affirmative action programs & that federal law must be understood as fully supportive of these policies. 53 References. HA

SOCIOLOGY FROM PLENUM

PLENUM STUDIES IN WORK AND INDUSTRY:

Work and Industry: Structures, Markets, and Processes.

by Arne L. Kalleberg and Ivar Berg

ISBN: 0-306-42344-8/262 pp./ill./1987/$24.95 ($29.90 outside US & Canada)

Workers, Managers, and Technological Change: Emerging Patterns of Labor Relations

by Daniel B. Cornfield

ISBN: 0-306-42450-9/384 pp./1987/$37.50 ($45.00 outside US & Canada)

See IPFC No. 41, 88100910 this issue

Modeling Multigroup Populations.

edited by Robert Schoen

ISBN: 0-306-42649-0/320 pp. + index
1987/$29.50 ($35.40 outside US & Canada)

Decision Making in Criminal Justice: Toward the Rational Exercise of Discretion (2nd ed.).

by Michael F. Gottfredson and Don M. Gottfredson

ISBN: 0-306-42525-4/324 pp. + index
1987/$35.00 ($42.00 outside US & Canada)

The Diffusion of Medical Innovations: An Applied Network Analysis.

edited by Mary L. Fennel and Richard B. Warnecke

ISBN: 0-306-42752-4/345 pp. + index
1988 /$34.50 ($41.40 outside US & Canada)

Eliminating Racism: Profiles in Controversy.

by Phyllis A. Katz and Dalmas A. Taylor

ISBN: 0-306-42631-5/approx. 400 pp. + index/1988/$49.50 ($59.40 outside US & Canada)

The Social Organization of Schools: New Conceptualizations of the Learning Process.

edited by Maureen T. Hallinan

ISBN: 0-306-42428-2/246 pp./ill./1987
$34.50 ($41.40 outside US & Canada)

Social Psychology of Self-Referent Behavior.

edited by Howard B. Kaplan

ISBN: 0-306-42356-1/224 pp./1987/$29.50
($35.40 outside US & Canada)

Handbook of Marriage and the Family.

edited by Marvin B. Sussman and Susan K. Steinmetz

ISBN: 0-306-41967-X/958 pp./1987
$95.00 ($114.00 outside US & Canada)

Justice: Views from the Social Sciences

edited by Ronald L. Cohen

ISBN: 0-306-42256-5/296 pp./1986/$32.50
($39.00 outside US & Canada)

Plenum Publishing Corporation, 233 Spring Street, New York, N.Y. 10013-1578

A 1983-1985 case study of procedures used to recruit temporary & part-time warehouse workers in the mail order industry in GB is presented. Based on interviews & observations, an attempt is made to explain why & why temporary "picking" & "packing" jobs continue to remain women's work even within a region of severe unemployment. The evidence suggests that the reserve army of labor thesis can contribute to an understanding of women's relationship to paid employment. 1 Table, 1 figure, 36 References. Modified HA

88T1588

Cox, Sue & Swarbrick, Ailsa (Centre Extension Studies Loughborough U Technology, Leicestershire LE1 3TU England), Women and Technology: A Review of Training Initiatives, Work & Stress, 1987, 1, 3, July-Sept, 285-291.

† An overview of recent training programs & related initiatives in the UK developed to encourage young Fs to enter nontraditional areas of work & to assist them in their career progression & return to work after a career break. The roles played by national training bodies, particularly the Manpower Services Commission & Engineering Industry Training Board, & various educational institutions are reviewed. Though these training schemes have met with some success at both the personal & group levels, they have suffered from a failure to adequately address the social & psychological problems facing women entering nontraditional occupations. The debate surrounding the use of single-sex groups for training women in new technical & scientific skills is summarized. The design, implementation, & evaluation of additional training programs will require more secure funding & the creation of a supportive database. 35 References. Modified HA

88T1589

Cripps, Jane Sperry (Texas Tech U, Lubbock 79409), The Relationship between Family Life Satisfaction and Job Satisfaction for Employed Hispanic and Anglo Women, * Dissertation Abstracts International, 4 The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 47, 12(1), June, 4519-A.

Available from UMI, Ann Arbor MI. Order No. DA8707909.

88T1590

deLange, Willem & Bouwmans, Martien (Economics Dept Katholieke U Brabant, 5000 LE Tilburg Netherlands), De werkweek gecompriemerd (2) (The Working Week Compressed (2)), M&O, 1987, 41, 3, May-June, 162-173 (DUT).

† (For Part 1 see M & O, Tijdschrift voor Organisatiekunde en Sociaal Beleid, 1986, 40, 4, July-Aug) The 4-day work week has not been popular in the U.S. due primarily to the burden of a 10-hour working day. The Netherlands has experienced a more favorable reaction to this innovation largely because the work week was reduced to 36 hours. Evaluated are the reactions of workers in 7 Dutch firms, which are largely favorable, except among older employees or those with heavy workloads. A careful introduction of the reduced work week, with close cooperation with labor unions, should make this system gain popularity in the Netherlands. 1 Table. Modified HA

88T1591

Earley, P. Christopher (Dept Management & Policy U Arizona, Tucson 85721), Trust, Perceived Importance of Praise and Criticism, and Work Performance: An Examination of Feedback in the United States and England, Journal of Management, 1986, 12, 4, winter, 457-473.

Two studies which examined the usefulness of performance feedback in shaping US & English workers' behaviors are described. In the first study, a field experiment was conducted using an in-basket task to assess the importance of praise or criticism concerning work performance for 6 US & 36 English workers in a traditional, heavy-manufacturing industry. A questionnaire survey was also conducted (N = 86 Rs in the US, & 74 in England) to examine the relations among a worker's trust in a supervisor, perceived importance of praise & criticism, a worker's perceived amount of praise & criticism received, & performance. Results suggest that US & English workers value & respond to praise & criticism differently, & that the influence of feedback is partially mediated by a worker's trust in the feedback source & perceived importance of the feedback. 5 Tables, 20 References. HA

88T1592

Erez, Miriam (Faculty Industrial Engineering & Management Technion Instit Technology, Haifa 32000 Israel), The Congruence of Goal-

Setting Strategies with Socio-Cultural Values and Its Effects on Performance, Journal of Management, 1986, 12, 4, winter, 585-592.

† The congruence between goal-setting strategies & sociocultural values of the working environment was investigated using a 3 x 3 factorial design work simulation comparing kibbutz, public (Histadrut), & private sectors in Israel with respect to the goal-setting strategies of group participation, participation by representation, & no participation. 58 were 135 first-level supervisors who evaluated forms of task descriptions filled out by their subordinates. Performance was measured by the number of descriptions checked by the supervisors. Results indicate that in the private sector, the most effective strategy was assigned goals, in the public sector, participation by representation, & in the kibbutz, group participation. The implications of these findings for participation in goal setting & decision making are discussed. 2 Tables, 1 Figure, 20 References. HA

88T1593

Evans, Jennifer (Instit Education U London, WC1H 0NS England), Women, Men, VDU Work and Health: A Questionnaire Survey of British VDU Operators, Work & Stress, 1987, 1, 3, July-Sept, 271-283.

† The health problems of video display unit (VDU) users in the UK were investigated via a questionnaire published in Health & Safety at Work (Jan 1985) that was distributed mainly to operators in large firms with health & safety & union representation. Analysis of the 3,819 questionnaires returned reveals gender differences in work patterns, types of work, & health effects. Fs tended to be engaged in more repetitive tasks for longer hours & longer periods without a break than Ms, & also reported health problems more frequently, even when these factors were controlled. The most commonly reported problems were eyestrain, neck & shoulder pain, & fatigue, which were not alleviated by the use of ergonomically designed equipment such as adjustable chairs, lighting, or keyboards. There appears to be a complex interaction between the physical, ergonomic, & psychosocial factors associated with the use of new technology, which should be taken into account in future research. 8 Tables, 2 Figures, 16 References. Modified HA

88T1594

Falussy, Bela, Az ingázás és az életmód összefüggései (Relationships between Commuting and Lifestyle), Szociologia, 1982, 4, 535-560 (HUN).

† Special features of the lifestyle of commuters are investigated, based on the results of time-balance studies conducted by Hungary's Central Statistical Office. Findings of the 1963 & 1977 studies are compared. Changes that have taken place in the structure of daily activities of commuting & noncommuting M & F workers are examined. The majority of commuters travel from rural villages to jobs in town. The daily average time commuters spend on travel has decreased. The time spent by M commuters in part-time farming or work on a household plot has increased, while the time spent by F commuters on housework has decreased, although Fs still spend more time than Ms in work activities, including housework. The variety of leisure activities has increased. Ownership of a car reduces the disadvantages of commuting. It is concluded that the disadvantages of the commuter lifestyle do not result from commuting itself but from the underlying circumstances. Basically, the need for a higher income that cause an individual to choose to commute to a job. 16 Tables, 1 Appendix. Modified HA

88T1595

Fischer, Joachim & Minssen, Heiner (Sozialforschungsstelle Dortmund Landesinstitut, Rheinlanddamm 199 D-4600 1 Federal Republic Germany), Weder Reprofessionalisierung noch vollendeter Taylorismus. Neue Leistungs-politik in der Bekleidungsindustrie (Neither Reprofessionalization nor Perfected Taylorism. New Policies in the Clothing Industry), Soziale Welt, 1987, 38, 2, 197-210 (GER).

† Assertions that capitalist industry is undergoing fundamental changes in rationalization strategies are challenged by longitudinal studies of policies in the clothing industry, based on observations of five companies. Alterations in work organization are claimed to represent neither a fundamental trend toward professionalization of industrial labor nor the mere continuation (or perfection) of Taylorism. A new production strategy developed in response to market demands for flexibility is found to aim at an intensified utilization of a hitherto neglected cooperative potential in the LF. Some modification of technical systems & control strategies is noted, along with evidence of some relaxation in the pre-structuring of work & some withdrawal of traditional controlling concepts. Consequences for workers are considered, & questions are raised about the plausibility of a specifically capitalist logic of rationalization. 35 References. Modified HA

88T1576

Black, J. B. (Queen's U, Belfast BT7 1NN Northern Ireland). Regional Industrial Relations: The Case of Northern Ireland. * Dissertation Abstracts International C European Abstracts. 1987, 48, 2, summer, 286.
Unavailable from UMI; reference copy at University Library, Queen's U, Belfast, Northern Ireland.

88T1577

Blankenship, Kim M. (Duke U, Durham NC 27706). Sex Discrimination in Employment: An Analysis of U.S. Federal Policy. * Dissertation Abstracts International A The Humanities and Social Sciences. 1987, 47, 11, May, 4193 A.
Available from UMI, Ann Arbor MI. Order No. DA8704883.

88T1578

Bolle De Bal, Marcel (Institut sociologie U Libre Bruxelles, B-1050 Belgium). Aspirations au travail et expérience du chômage: crise, délinance et paradoxes (The Desire to Work and the Experience of Unemployment: Crisis, Detachment and Paradoxes). Schweizerische Zeitschrift für Soziologie/Revue Suisse de sociologie. 1987, 13, 1, June, 63-83 (FRF).

§ Experiences of marginalization & stigmatization arising from unemployment, especially for the young, are investigated. It is argued that work serves a social function beyond its purely economic one. The findings of several studies are discussed that focus on unemployed youths in Belgium & analyze various initiatives aimed at creating jobs for them. An attempt is made to present a profile of such youths, including their attitudes & aspirations both before & after obtaining a job. The contradictions & paradoxes that characterize institutional practices & the affirmation of values in the working world are discussed. 17 References. Modified HA

88T1579

Borg, Ingwer (I B 06 Psychologie U Giessen, D 6300 Federal Republic Germany). Arbeitszufriedenheit, Arbeitswerte und Jobauswahl: Ein hierarchischer, individuenzentrierter Ansatz (Job Satisfaction, Work Values, and Job Selection: A Hierarchical, Individual-Centered Outline). Zeitschrift für Sozial Psychologie. 1987, 18, 1, 28-39. (GER)

§ An individualized approach to scaling attitude components of job satisfaction is introduced & illustrated with data from one subject. A hierarchical value & expectancy structure is constructed using value categories of aggregative-correlative job satisfaction research. The degree of dependency of a hierarchically higher element on lower elements is determined by means of pair comparisons with the individual subject, & a method for computing these determination weights is given. Since a lower value can determine a higher one through various paths, the influence of a lower value on a much higher one can be assessed by considering the determination weights of all paths leading from the lower to the higher. By evaluating the bottom values of the system with respect to concrete action alternatives, it is shown that choices can be predicted & explained. 3 Tables, 2 Figures, 36 References. Modified HA

88T1580

Byers, James Franklin (U Wisconsin, Madison 53706). Unemployment Insurance and Retraining: An Analysis of Institutional Threats to the Insurance Character of the Unemployment Insurance System. * Dissertation Abstracts International A The Humanities and Social Sciences. 1987, 48, 1 July, 226 A.
Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8702292

88T1581

Čaldrović, Ljerkja Jaeger & Šakic, Nikola (U Zagreb, 41000 Yugoslavia). Sociološki aspekti grupne proizvodnje (Sociological Aspects of Group Production). Revija za Sociologiju. 1984, 14, 3-4, July-Dec, 275-288. (SCR)

§ The main sociological aspects of the introduction of group production in industry are discussed through a review of Canadian, British, US, & Yugoslav literature. Attention is focused on efforts to restructure the labor format of a Yugoslav factory in which workers & managers (N = 213) formed autonomous work groups with quality circles & planning circles. Analysis of worker responses to a 49-item questionnaire shows that 28.8% were fully satisfied & 30.0% partially satisfied with the new forms of labor organization. Only minute changes were introduced on the institutional level, which is concluded to be the main obstacle to obtaining better production results. 7 References. Modified HA

88T1582

Campero, Guillermo & Cortázar, René. Lógicas de acción sindical en Chile (The Logic of Trade Union Action in Chile). ♦ Revista Mexicana de Sociología. 1986, 48, 4, Oct-Dec, 283-315. (SPA)

§ An analysis of the past, present, & future of the trade union movement in Chile, drawing on statistical evidence & various studies. The logic of union action under the authoritarian regime, up to 1973, is reviewed. The conceptions & strategies of the union movement today, its response to the economic crisis, & its possible role in new relations of cooperation among various social & political actors are investigated. Several possible scenarios are suggested for the future development of the union movement in general, & for its role in different sectors. 18 References. C. Waters

88T1583

Castles, Stephen (Center Multicultural Studies U Wollongong, New South Wales 2500 Australia). The Guest-Worker in Western Europe—An Obituary. ♦ International Migration Review. 1986, 20, 4, winter, 761-778.

§ Most West European countries recruited guest-workers (temporary labor migrants) to fuel the postwar boom. The significance of this flexible & mobile labor source is examined for six countries—GB, Belgium, France, the Netherlands, Switzerland, & West Germany. The dynamics of the migratory process led to family reunification & settlement, against the original intentions of the workers, employers, & states concerned. The recruitment of guest-workers stopped after 1974, but many migrants stayed on, becoming permanent ethnic minorities, in a situation of economic & social crisis. It is argued that guest-worker systems inevitably lead to permanent migration in the long run, & that it is better to plan for orderly settlement through appropriate policies. 19 References. HA

88T1584

Charles, Marin (Soziologisches Institut U Zurich, CH-8032 Switzerland). Geschlechterspezifische Arbeitsmarktsegregation in der Schweiz (Gender-Specific Job Market Segregation in Switzerland). Schweizerische Zeitschrift für Soziologie/Revue Suisse de sociologie. 1987, 13, 1, June, 1-27. (GER)

§ The degree & pattern of gender-specific occupational segregation in Switzerland are investigated via data from the 1980 Swiss census, & the situation is compared with that in other industrialized nations of Western Europe, the US, Japan, & Israel. Segregation levels are measured through various empirical methods, including the internationally used Duncan index of dissimilarity. Values computed for this index suggest that to establish a proportionally representative distribution of the sexes across occupations, at least 62% of Fs or Ms in the Swiss LF would have to change their occupational category. Index values are similar across the countries investigated, a surprising result in light of the broad international variation in rates of F LF participation. Segregation is greatest in traditionally M occupations, suggesting that F access to M-dominated positions is still very limited in Switzerland. Implications of the findings for individuals in the labor market, for social policy, & for segregation theory are discussed. 9 Tables, 54 References. Modified HA

88T1585

Clark, Paul Frederick (U Pittsburgh, PA 15260). Union Member Attitudes Toward the Grievance Procedure: Measurement, Correlates, and Relationship to Union Commitment. * Dissertation Abstracts International, A The Humanities and Social Sciences. 1987, 48, 1 July, 227-A.
Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8708481.

88T1586

Cohen, Rina (York U, Downsview Ontario M3J 1P3). Cinderella in the House: Definitions and Management of Deprivation Feelings among Non-White Domestic. * Dissertation Abstracts International A The Humanities and Social Sciences. 1987, 47, 11, May 4194-A.

Unavailable from UMI; contact the degree-granting university.

88T1587

Collinson, David L. (Dept Management Sciences Instit Science & Technology U Manchester, M60 1QD England). 'Picking Women': The Recruitment of Temporary Workers in the Mail Order Industry. ♦ Work, Employment and Society. 1987, 1, 3, Sept, 371-387.

Manufacturing Technologies and Work Organization: Objectives and Interests of the Involved Actors, Soziale Welt, 1987, 38, 2, 81-196 (GER) study of production organization in several West German machine tools shows that the introduction of computer-directed machine tools has not resulted in new structures of work organization, & suggests that the structures depend more on the constellation of interests within the firm, particularly the desire to maintain a clear distinction between planning & execution—than on the nature of the technology employed. The ranges to rationalization posed by the required flexibility inherent in machine industry are examined, & the introduction of computer technology as an attempted solution is assessed. Responses to problems posed by this new technology are shown to tend toward traditional patterns of organization. It is observed that such conservative organizational structures are likely to be preserved in the future because of the growing of technical experts in middle management. 32 References. Modified HA

1607

Hodson, Randy & Seitz, Patricia (Dept Sociology Indiana U, Bloomington 47405), Identifying Workers' Industries: Survey Responses versus Corporate Product Lines, Social Science Research, 1987, 16, 2, June, 154-168

An examination of potential discrepancies between workers' self-reports of industrial affiliation & their companies' published reports of their product line in order to assess the accuracy of these 2 sources of industrial information. Survey data from a 1975 follow-up to the 1957 Wisconsin Longitudinal Study of Schooling & Attainments provide employment information on 2,215 employees of US companies large enough to be listed in the 1974 editions of Moody's Manuals, which contain information taken from companies' financial statements regarding their product lines. These companies were coded according to published industry & compared to employees' self-reports. A high level of disagreement (nonmatching) was found that was unaffected by employees' gender or commitment/attachment, though slightly affected by tenure & more so by union membership. In addition, large company size increased the degree of nonmatching, but large plant size had the opposite effect. It is concluded that nonmatches are better explained by the structural aspect of employment relations than by individual workers' characteristics. Suggestions for improving methodology in future investigations using industrial data to study labor market segmentation, organizational analysis, & industrial relations are provided. 3 Tables, 22 References. K. Hyatt

88T1608

Hossain, Abu Ali Mokerrom (U California, Riverside 92521), The International Labor Migration to the Middle East: The Impact and Consequences for the Social Structure of a Sender Country, the Case of Bangladesh, * Dissertation Abstracts International, A The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 47, 12(1), June, 4524-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor MI. Order No. DA8706991.

88T1609

Howard, John H. (School Business Administration U Western Ontario, London N6A 3K7), Coping with Stress on the Job, ♦ Journal of Comparative Sociology and Religion/Bulletin de sociologie et de religion comparées, 1979-80, 6-7, 78-86

Society at present confronts individuals with numerous sources of stress, important among which is work. Individuals differ in their ability to cope with stress. Seven approaches to coping with stress more effectively are described. It is emphasized that individuals have a need for some amount of stress. 2 References. W. H. Stoddard

T1610

Howell, David (Dept Government Victoria U Manchester, M13 9PL, England), Goodbye to All That? A Review of Literature on the 1984/5 Miners' Strike, ♦ Work, Employment and Society, 1987, 1, 3, Sept, 388-404

A review essay on Martin Adeney's & John Lloyd's The Miners' Strike of 1984-85: Loss without Limit (London: Routledge & Kegan Paul, 1986); Ian Macgregor's & Rodney Tyler's The Enemies Within: The Story of the Miners' Strike 1984-85 (London: Collins, 1986); Tony Parker's Red Hill: A Mining Community (London: Heinemann, 1986); the People of Thurcroft's Thurcroft: A Village and the Miners' Strike—An Oral History (Nottingham: Spokesman, 1986); Geoffrey Hodgman's The Miners' Strike (London: Pluto, 1985); Peter Wilsher et al. Strike, Thatcher, Scargill and the Miners (London: Coronet, 1985);

The Enemy Within: Pit Villages and the Miners' Strike of 1984-85 (Samuel, Raphael, Bloomfield, Barbara, & Boanas, Guy (Eds) London: Routledge & Kegan Paul, 1986); Digging Deeper: Issues in the Miners' Strike (Beynon, Huw (Ed), London: Verso, 1985); The Cutting Edge: Women and the Pit Strike (Seddon, Vicki (Ed), London: Lawrence & Wishart, 1986); & Norma Dolby's Norma Dolby's Diary: An Account of the Great Miners' Strike (London: Verso, 1987 [see listings in IRPS No. 41]). All of these works discuss the miners' strike of 1984/85 in GB. It appears impossible to draw simple political conclusions from this event. A response to dismissals of the strike as irrational requires a sophisticated historiography that will examine the wide range of issues involved. W. H. Stoddard

88T1611

Hsung, Ray-May, Sun, Ching-Shan & She, Chi-Soun (Dept Sociology Tunghai U, Taichung Republic China), Title appears in Chinese (Strength of Social Ties and Job Transfer for Manufacturing Laborers), Kuo Li Tai-wan Ta Hsueh She Hui Hsueh K'an/National Taiwan University Journal of Sociology, 1986, 18, Nov, 1-24 (CHI)

¶ Data from 341 operators in 10 manufacturing factories in the Taichung area of Taiwan are used to explore the relationship between job-seeking behavior & strength of social ties. Results show that most job information diffusion was through personal relationships, & that laborers tended to find preferred jobs through strong ties with job information providers in both the first & the most recent job-seeking experience. In addition, job information providers themselves tended to have more preferred jobs, & social ties between job information providers & employers tended to be strong. Manufacturing laborers tended to view strong social ties as the social resources of their occupational mobility. Though occupational prestige among manufacturing laborers could not change much because of their limited education, the match between job seekers & their preferred jobs could be improved by strong social ties. 11 Tables, 3 Figures, 20 References. Modified HA

88T1612

Jacobson, David (Dept Anthropology Brandeis U, Waltham MA 02254), Models of Stress and Meanings of Unemployment: Reactions to Job Loss among Technical Professionals, Social Science and Medicine, 1987, 24, 1, 13-21

¶ Two models of stress variation—one based on the concept of person-environment transactions, the other on psychosocial transition—are applied to studies of reactions to job loss among technical professionals. Following the end of the Vietnam War, large numbers of engineers, scientists, & technical managers from defense industries lost their jobs. In an attempt to understand the impact of unemployment on these individuals, interviews were conducted with 35 unemployed engineers & scientists. Analysis provides evidence for transactional, but not transitional, stress. Rs were able to cope with unemployment when they had the resources to meet their needs, & suffered anxiety & disturbed emotional states when resources were inadequate. Implications for psychosocial transaction models are discussed. 1 Figure, 46 References. Modified HA

88T1613

Jaeger, Carlo, Bieri, Lisbeth & Durrenberger, Gregor (Geographisches Institut ETH, Winterthurerstr 190 CH-8057 Zurich Switzerland), Berufsethik und Humanisierung der Arbeit (Professional Ethics and the Humanization of Labor), Schweizerische Zeitschrift für Soziologie/Revue Suisse de sociologie, 1987, 13, 1, June, 47-62 (GER)

¶ A discussion of the concept of humanization of work, & of the disappearance of the Protestant work ethic. The idea of humanization developed as a reaction to Taylorism, which was accused of ignoring the social & psychological needs of the workers. New ways of organizing labor are now being sought. It is suggested that, rather than focusing on individual needs, it would be more productive to concentrate on building up professional identity. This approach is supported by the findings of a survey of work attitudes among 316 white-collar workers in 2 Swiss firms. 1 Table, 40 References. Modified HA

88T1614

Janofsky, Barbara Jill (U Georgia, Athens 30602), Spouse Support: A Structural Model of Husbands' Support for Wives' Employment, * Dissertation Abstracts International, A The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 47, 12(1), June, 4520-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor MI. Order No. DA8706870.

88T1596

Friedman, Andrew L. (Dept Economics U Bristol, BS8 1HY England). The Means of Management Control and Labour Process Theory: A Critical Note on Storey. ♦ Sociology, 1987, 21, 2, May, 287-294

¶ In his recent article "The Means of Management Control" (see SA 33 5/85(1545)), John Storey criticizes the labor process literature for "nominalism" which he describes as the development of simple generalizations that cannot deal with the diversity & complexity of social control processes that occur within work organizations. His argument has three main weaknesses: (1) it describes the labor process literature as more homogeneous than it actually is, (2) many of his proposed alternative approaches can readily be incorporated into the management strategies version of labor process theory, & (3) his alternative formulation, the theory of management control itself is seriously flawed. 13 References. Modified HA

88T1597

Furnham, Adrian (Dept Psychology, University Coll London, WC1E 6BT England). Predicting Protestant Work Ethic Beliefs. European Journal of Personality, 1987, 1, 2, June, 93-106

¶ Two correlational studies were conducted in GB to determine the etiology of Protestant work ethic (PWE) beliefs by looking at the relationship between it & 10 theoretically related demographic & psychographic variables. In study 1, a 5-part questionnaire administered to 406 adults revealed that 5 of the 10 predictors were significant, indicating that people with high internal & powerful other locus of control beliefs, limited education, conservative/free enterprise economic beliefs, & strong postponement of gratification beliefs & practices are most likely to endorse the PWE. In study 2, parents & college children ($N = 165$) completed the same questionnaire, a within family analysis revealed family resemblances in PWE & economic & voting beliefs, although sons were less similar to their parents than were daughters. Results provide partial support for earlier theses regarding the role of religion & early socialization in the establishment of PWE beliefs, & also suggest the importance of psychological conservatism. 2 Tables, 38 References. Modified HA

88T1598

Gash, Debra Carol (Cornell U, Ithaca NY 14853). The Effects of Microcomputers on Organizational Roles and the Distribution of Power. ♦ Dissertation Abstracts International, 4, The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 1, July, 227-A

Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8708968.

88T1599

Gaziel, Haim Henry (School Education Bar-Ilan U, Ramat-Gan 52100 Israel). Correlates of Job Satisfaction: A Study of the Two Factor Theory in an Educational Setting. The Journal of Psychology, 1986, 120, 6, Nov, 613-626

¶ The generality of the dual factor theory of job satisfaction as proposed by F. Herzberg, B. Mausner, & B. Snyderman (The Motivation to Work, New York: Wiley & Son, 1959) was investigated via a 2-part questionnaire based on the semistructured interview of Herzberg et al. & on a job-facet scale regarding the sources of job satisfaction & dissatisfaction for elementary school principals in Israel ($N = 220$). Results generally support the theory & Herzberg's designation of satisfier factors. A comparison of the scale & the questionnaire results indicates that the attitudes toward the items are usually consistent. Results also show that the two-factor theory is contingent on individual factors. 6 Tables, 40 References. Modified HA

88T1600

Górski, Janusz F. (Instytut Socjologii U Łódzkiego, Narutowicza 65 Poland). Zróżnicowanie układów aksjonormatywnych w środowisku pracy (Differentiation of Axionormative Systems in the Work Environment). Przebieg Socjologiczny, 1986, 36, 131-154 (POL)

¶ A philosophical essay on the functioning of axionormative systems in the work environment, in which values are treated as elements of the institutional context of human activity, being largely independent of individual will. To determine differences between employee & employer models of what qualities make up a good employee, questionnaire data were gathered in 1982 from Polish workers ($N = 152$). Significant differences were found between the institutional models of the good worker & those models offered by the workers themselves. Categories of alienation theory offer the best explanations for these divergences in opinion. 6 Tables, 4 Appendixes. Modified HA

88T1601

Granger, Denise (Ecole service social U Montréal, Québec H3C 3J7). Réflexion sur les enjeux sociaux de la politique québécoise des garderies des années 1970 à 1982 (Reflections on the Social Issues Relating to Quebec Day Care Policies between 1970 and 1982). ♦ Sociologie et Sociétés, 1987, 19, 1, Apr, 73-81 (FRE)

¶ Social issues surrounding public policy on day care in Quebec from 1970 to 1982 are investigated. Statistical evidence, ideological statements, & government measures concerning the establishment, regulation, & financing of day care centers are examined. Two opposing ideologies are revealed: response to citizens' demands, during the 1970s, for public day care centers tended to favor full-time employment for Fs & de-emphasize the family milieu; the shift toward small, privately organized day care facilities in the 1980s has had the opposite effects. Underlying these policy developments are basic economic issues that bring into question the very foundations of Quebec capitalist society. Modified HA

88T1602

Grenes, Thomas C. (Bucknell U, Lewisburg PA 17837). The Woman's Voice in Andean Labor Unions. ♦ Urban Anthropology, 1986, 15, 3-4, fall-winter, 355-376

¶ Field observation data gathered at intervals in the 1960s & 1970s from Peruvian & Bolivian agricultural & mining union locals suggest that women as women have forged a legitimated leadership role in the struggle for life improvements among the workers. Women's organizational role is different from that of men, dictated in part by prevailing exclusionary attitudes of men, & partly due to their own perceptions of their points of maximum leverage. Three modalities of labor involvement are described. While cases of nationally prominent women labor leaders in Latin America are well known, these findings argue that such women are not anomalous charismatic leaders; they reflect & are defined by established avenues of labor struggle by women. 45 References. HA

88T1603

Greenfield, Patricia Ann (Cornell U, Ithaca NY 14853). The National Labor Relations Board's Deferral to Arbitration: An Empirical Case Study Analysis. ♦ Dissertation Abstracts International, 4, The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 1, July, 227-A

Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8708937.

88T1604

Hendericks, F. (Rijks U Gent, B-9000 Belgium). Afwezigheid wegens ziekte: Een empirisch onderzoek naar het strategisch handelen van arbeiders en bedienden (Absence from Work: A Research on the Strategy of Industrial Workers and Employees). ♦ Dissertation Abstracts International, 4, European Abstracts, 1987, 48, 1, spring 62 (DUT)

Unavailable from UMI; contact the degree-granting university.

88T1605

Hinterhuber, Hans H. (Institut Unternehmensführung U Innsbruck A-6020 Austria). Die soziologischen Grundlagen der industriellen Organisation / I fondamenti sociologici dell'organizzazione industriale (The Sociological Foundations of Industrial Organization). Annali di Sociologia/Sociologisches Jahrbuch, 1986, 2(11), 235-245, 246-257 (MUL)

Translated by Hans H. Hinterhuber.

¶ An overview of the sociological foundations of industrial organization is presented. Experience, argument, & experiment are all necessary for gaining a thorough understanding of industrial organization. The influence of scientific research & technological progress on industrial organization is expounded, & it is concluded that many ideas prevailing in the past are not adequate for solving present & future organizational problems. The three trends of organizational theory—classical, neoclassical & situational—are described. The Italian & German contributions, in particular, are stressed. Finally, it is proposed that a theory of culture of organization be a new task for sociology.

88T1606

Hirsch-Kreinsen, Hartmut & Wolf, Harald (Institut sozialwissenschaftliche Forschung e.V. Jakob-Klar-Str 9 D-8000 Munich 40 Federal Republic Germany). Neue Produktionstechniken und Arbeitsorganisation: Interessen und Strategien betrieblicher Akteure (New worker's active involvement in creative work activity. Analysis of motivational factors reveals that a general predisposition to make suggestions is prompted largely by a need for learning & development irrespective of level of education & level of job held. A direct relationship was found between type of motivation & individual creativity. 10 Tables, 1 Figure. Modified HA

88T1625

Manske, Fred (Soziologisches Forschungsinstitut Gottingen, Friedlander Weg 31 D-3400 Federal Republic Germany), Ende oder Wandel des Taylorismus? Von der punktuellen zur systemischen Kontrolle des Produktionsprozesses (End or Transformation of Taylorism? From the Elemental to the Systemic Control of the Production Process), Soziale Welt, 1987, 38, 2, 166-180 (GER)

The value of Taylorism as a principle for the division & control of labor is reconsidered in light of recent technological developments. The machine industry is singled out as an example where Taylorism cannot be effectively utilized because the labor process cannot be reduced to a series of mindless tasks. Attempts to maintain centralized control in such situations are discussed, with particular emphasis on the introduction of computer technology. The transition from elemental to systemic control of the production process is argued to permit increased control of labor without having to reduce the concentration of skills in the laborer. Consequences of this trend for policy & sociology are considered. 1 Figure, 23 References. J. Anderson

88T1626

McKeon, John William (U Akron, OH 44325), Inter-Generational Transmission of Father's and Mother's Occupational Characteristics to Son's and Daughter's Substantive Complexity of Work, Work Foci, and Work Values, *Dissertation Abstracts International: 4. The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 47, 11, May, 4200-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor MI. Order No. DA8704726.

88T1627

Michon, François (Séminaire économie travail U Paris I, F-75634 Cedex 13 France), Time and Flexibility: Working Time in the Debate on Flexibility, ♦ Labour and Society, 1987, 12, 1, Jan, 154-174

Flexibility is a necessary condition of adaptation for contemporary economies. Here it is shown how the problem of flexibility in a firm is closely linked with the question of time. An approach to flexibility is proposed that is microeconomic in terms of time expenditure, particularly working time. The roles of work-sharing & flexible work time within the main types of microeconomic flexibility available to a firm are analyzed. The question of flexibility on the macroeconomic level is also discussed, examining how the large industrial countries' policies concerning work time integrate the need for flexibility. 2 Figures, 33 References. AA Tr. Modified by C. Waters

88T1628

Mikić, Dragutin (U Zagreb, 41000 Yugoslavia), Primjer djelomične kvalitativne analize u slučaju autonomnih radnih grupa (An Example of the Application of Partial Qualitative Analysis in the Case of Autonomous Working Groups), Revija za Sociologiju, 1984, 14, 3-4, July-Dec, 289-305 (SCR)

Key philosophical & sociological questions about different approaches to the humanization of work are discussed. The introduction of autonomous working groups in Yugoslavia may be a means for the final liberation of laborers or merely another mechanism for effecting technologically-determined changes in the organization of production. More sociological research, especially qualitative studies, should be performed in this area. 1 Table, 1 Figure. Modified HA

88T1629

Moeti, Moltsadi (285 Flagstone Dr SW, Atlanta GA 30331), The Origins of Forced Labor in the Witwatersrand, Phylon, 1986, 47, 4, Dec, 276-284.

The forced labor system in the Witwatersrand, South Africa, originated with the intensive gold mining of the 1880s. The mining system that existed for centuries under African control was diverted to European control & operated with forced labor & contract labor drawn away from large agriculture by various means. Taxes imposed on housing created need for money that compelled many Africans to take up mine labor. Shortly before 1900 a poll tax was established that exacted two months' labor from African Ms aged 15-80. A system of controls & sanctions forced Africans to work for little or no pay & to give up virtually all rights. European entrepreneurial strategies centered on ensuring a continuing supply of cheap labor for mine development. W. H. Stoddard

88T1630

Molnár, Venyige Julia & Orolin, Zsuzsa, A korlátozott teljesítőképességű munkaerő fogalma és fontosabb csoportjai (The Concept and Major Types of Workforce Members of Limited Abilities), Szociológia, 1982, 1, 109-119 (HUN)

† Abstract not currently available

88T1631

Narskiy, I. S., Kategoriya otchuzhdeniya i ideologicheskaya bor'ba (The Category of Alienation and the Ideological Struggle), Filosofskie Nauki, 1986, 29, 6, 15-24 (RUS)

† During the current stage of intensified ideological struggle between bourgeois & Marxist philosophies, the problematic of alienation holds a key position. By focusing on the presence in socialist societies of types of alienation universal to all societies, bourgeois theorists have sought to discredit Marxism as a social system for its failure to eliminate the types of alienation originally discussed by Karl Marx. Many bourgeois social scientists are repeating the Trotskyite assertions of the late 1920s that the Bolshevik Revolution was betrayed, leading to increased alienation of workers & a loss of freedom. Here, it is shown that the USSR has stayed true to the original goals of the revolution, verifying Marx's prediction that the elimination of private property would lead to true emancipation of man from his immoral, selfish qualities. G. Prostavkov

88T1632

Newman, Rhona (Dept Sociology & Social Anthropology U Ulster Jordanstown, Newtownabbey BT37 0QB Northern Ireland), Laymen as Lawyers in the Processing of Dismissal Disputes, Journal of Law and Society, 1987, 14, 2, summer, 217-228.

† A review of the controversy concerning alternative forms of statutory provision for the adjudication of disputes arising out of employment termination, bringing to bear some evidence from a study of the arbitral disposition of dismissal disputes, under statutory regulation, by law officials (Rights Commissioners) in the Republic of Ireland. In the UK, complaints of unfair dismissal are heard by an Industrial Tribunal, chaired by a lawyer who sits with two lay panel members. The influence of lawyers has led industrial relations specialists to criticize "tribunal legalism" & to call for the tribunals to be replaced by lay regulated arbitration. Both proponents of change & defenders of the existing system assume a dichotomy between legal & industrial-relations models for dispute resolution. Evidence from extended semistructured interviews with the Irish Rights Commissioners (N = 5) suggests that such a dichotomy is untenable. It is argued that the industrial relations model is necessarily interpenetrated with core values of legal justice, & that the assumption of a dichotomy between lay & legal rationality results from an unwarranted ideological simplification. Modified AA

88T1633

Nový, Ivan (School Economics, Nam Ant Zápotockého 4 CS-130 67 Prague 3 Czechoslovakia), Některé otázky řízení profesních a kvalifikačních struktur v podniku (Some Issues Connected with the Control of Professional and Qualification Structures in the Enterprise), Sociologický časopis, 1987, 23, 4, 338-345 (CZE)

† The effective functioning of economic organizations requires that their personnel possess optimal professional qualifications. Efforts to accelerate SE development in Czechoslovakia following the Seventeenth Congress of the Communist Party will bring about substantial changes in the technical base of various enterprises, as a result of which work qualifications will also change. Generation of an overall LF with proper qualifications will require attainment of several preconditions, including (1) identification of trends in economic activity, (2) definition of work activities & professional statuses, (3) stabilization of the working collectives of enterprises, (4) control of intra-enterprise mobility, (5) development of a system of internal training, & (6) creating an information system to track these social processes. 15 References. Modified HA

88T1634

Nunes de Almeida, Ana, A fábrica e a família-tópicos para uma reflexão (The Factory and the Family Topics for Reflection), ♦ Análise Social, 1986, 22, 2(91), 279-312 (POR)

† Wc families have not been a very popular subject in the social sciences, which is curious in light of the many studies on the Wc of industrialized societies. It would seem that how the workers spend their free time at

88T1615

Kempeneers, Marianne (Dept sociologie U. Montreal, Quebec H3C 3J7). Questions sur les femmes et le travail: une lecture de la crise (Questions on Women and Work: An Interpretation of the Crisis). ♦ Sociologie et Sociétés 1987, 19, 1, Apr., 57-71 (FRE).

† A review of research on F's work, referring especially to recent Canadian surveys. It is argued that the alternation between F's salaried & domestic work no longer corresponds to traditional patterns, & that the transformations that have occurred in F's work, both in its rhythm & in the relationships that structure it, have a pivotal role in social transformations as a whole. Therefore, a critical approach must be adopted in such research, & the concepts of work & family must be reconsidered. An attempt is made to illustrate this necessity, & to open new pathways for reflection in sociology & demography. 4 Tables. Modified HA.

88T1616

Krolczak, Alice (Catholic U. America, Washington DC 20064). Work Experience Among High School Adolescents: Its Predictors, Dimensions, and Effects. ♦ Dissertation Abstracts International 4. The Humanities and Social Sciences 1987, 48, 1, July, 225 A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8710417.

88T1617

Lapajne, Zdenko, Izobrazbeni izvor, sposobnosti, šolski uspeh in študijska pot učencev štiri letnih srednjih šol (Educational Origin, Abilities, Achievement, and Educational Career of Secondary School Students in Slovenia). ♦ Anthropos, Časopis za vodenje humanističnih in naravoslovnih ved, za psihologijo in filozofijo 1986, 5, 6, 269-294 (SLO).

† Fourth year students in Slovene (Yugoslavia) secondary schools in 1976 (N = 2,805 Ms, 1,950 Fs) were followed up by mail questionnaire surveys for 9 years after graduation. A causal model was developed to test relationships between: educational origin, educational level of both parents, household income, cognitive abilities (using verbal, abstract, & spatial DAT subtests), scholastic achievement, academic standing of secondary school, & completion of U. degree. The model was tested using the MLLS program of R. Schoenberg's MLLS: A Computer Program to Estimate the Parameters of Multiple Indicator Linear Structural Models (Bethesda: National Inst. of Health, 1985). The significant remaining residuals are attributed to the unsuitability of ability as a single explanatory factor. Recommendations are made for dealing with social inequality in schools. Differences in some estimates between boys & girls are explained by differential selectivity in the two samples & preferences for certain types of secondary schools by boys & girls during early adolescence. 2 Tables, 3 Figures, 43 References. Modified HA.

88T1618

Lecher, Wolfgang (Huslerstr. 2, D 4000 Düsseldorf Federal Republic, Germany). Deregulierung der Arbeitsbeziehungen. Gesellschaftliche und gewerkschaftliche Entwicklungen in Grossbritannien, den USA, Japan und Frankreich (Deregulation of Industrial Relations, Social and Union Development in Great Britain, the USA, Japan, and France). Soziale Welt 1987, 38, 2, 148-165 (GER).

† The decline of trade union strength in industrialized countries is linked to the recent development of deregulation, where the unwillingness or inability of the state to guarantee social welfare & stability, combined with high unemployment, creates a vacuum of legal-political bargaining power that employers exploit in an effort to roll back social policies. This trend, contrasted with the models of pluralism in the 1960s & corporatism in the 1970s, is analyzed in G.B., the U.S., Japan, & France with emphasis on: (1) state & private campaigns to weaken unions, (2) the push for flexibility of labor, (3) the dismantling of the social state, & (4) the privatization of state functions. Some potential negative social consequences of this trend & possible strategies for unions to avert them are discussed. Modified HA.

88T1619

Lieblich, Amin (Dept Psychology Hebrew U. Jerusalem, Mount Scopus Israel). Successful Career Women at Midlife: Crises and Transitions. International Journal of Aging and Human Development 1986, 23, 4, 301-312.

† The life histories, at midlife, of 25 U.S. career women who can be considered as successfully combining masculine & feminine roles are examined to test theories regarding cross-sex transition in adulthood. Interview data were used to categorize the transitions experienced by these women into masculine or feminine types. It is found that they were distributed about equally between the two types of transitions, thus excluding a simple biological approach. Acute midlife crisis was reported by only about 33% of the sample. It is proposed that the double M-F role protects these women from acute crisis. 19 References. Modified HA.

88T1620

Lipset, Seymour Martin (Hoover Inst. Stanford U., CA 94305). Comparing Canadian and American Unions. ♦ UM Societ. 1987, 24, 2(166), Jan-Feb, 60-70.

† Unions in the US are at a low point in their history. The origins of this situation are explored through a comparison of unionism in the US & Canada, a country that has also made the transition to a service-based economy but that has relatively strong unions. Legal differences do not appear to explain the situation in the US, especially in that US labor unions have much more formal recognition than labor unions in other countries. Nor do companies' efforts to undermine support for unions appear to explain their situation. Rather, the clue is found in declining public support for unions, which reflects distinctive national values in the US that favor Lockean individualism rather than the collectivism more typical of Canada. Canadian socialism has survived both prosperity & depression because it is rooted in Canadian values, & labor unions in Canada draw strength from those same values, which is not available to US unions. W. H. Stoddard.

88T1621

Lorence, Jon (Dept Sociology U. Houston, TX 77004). A Test of "Gender" and "Job" Models of Sex Differences in Job Involvement. ♦ UM Social Forces 1987, 66, 1, Sept., 121-142.

† The sources of gender differences in subjective job involvement are investigated utilizing cross-sectional & panel data from 1972/73 & 1977 national survey data (N = 2,970). Analyses do not support previous arguments that differences in gender socialization & family responsibilities are the sources of F's lower involvement with a job. Instead, characteristics of the job setting, in particular, work autonomy, are more important determinants of job involvement, as Ms & Fs generally react similarly to their work conditions. Women are found to be more involved with their jobs than men after controlling differences in work autonomy. Findings also indicate Fs become more involved with their jobs over time whereas Ms subjective involvement decreases. 2 Tables, 1 Appendix, 67 References. HA.

88T1622

Lunde, Tormod K. & Borgersaas, Eiling (Columbia U., New York NY 10027). Tradisjoner og nye perspektiver i forskningen om arbeidsløshet (The Research on Unemployment: Traditions and New Perspectives). Tidsskrift for samfunnsforskning 1987, 28, 2, 111-142 (NOR).

† A review of previous research suggests that individuals respond to unemployment differently, depending on sex, education, & other background variables; also, the average unemployed person goes through an identifiable set of stages over time. The duration of the unemployment period then influences the consequences of unemployment as well. An institutional theory of unemployment is proposed that focuses on institutional resources available to the unemployed & the presence of institutionalized alternatives to work. 2 Tables, 117 References. Modified HA.

88T1623

Lupandin, V. M., O povyshenii kachestva trudovogo potentsiala (Improving the Quality of Labor Potential). Sotsiologicheskii Ispytovaniya 1987, 14, 2, Mar-Apr, 141-143 (RUS).

† In Dec 1986 a conference was held in Lvov, Ukraine, on "Improving the Quality of Labor Potential." A. G. Kharchev discussed the negative effects of alcoholism on labor productivity. V. K. Ovcharov examined territorial differences in the amount of worktime lost to illness. M. I. Dolishnyy addressed local demographic issues, & D. K. Sokolov & F. G. Grogrev discussed environmental influences. V. M. Lupandin addressed the methodological issues. 1 Reference. G. Prostavov.

88T1624

Makowska, Teresa J., Motywacyjne uwarunkowania pracowniczego aktywnosci racjonalizatorskiej (Motivational Determinants of Employees' Productivity Suggestions). Przegląd Socjologiczny 1986, 36, 155-182 (POL).

† An analysis of the motivational determinants of suggestions made by Polish workers for improving labor productivity, based on questionnaire data obtained in 1982 (N = 2,004 Rs). Their suggestions reveal the work

01 Lund, Sweden.

88T1645

Rim, Veljko. Jugoslavensko samoupravljanje—trideset godina kasnije (Yugoslav Self-Management—Thirty Years Later). Revija za Sociologiju, 1985, 15, 1-2, Jan-June, 89-106 (SCR)

- ¶ After a summary of the results of the Yugoslav self-management economic system over the past thirty years, attention is focused on a critique of Albert Meister's "Pour finir avec l'autogestion yugoslave" ((The End of Yugoslav Self-Management), Autogestión, 1981, 6, 255), Branko Horvat's "Dvije masovne ideološke devijacije u suvremenom jugoslovenskom društvu" ((Two Important Ideological Deviations in Modern Yugoslav Society) see SA 31 2/83M9386), & Zagorka Golubović's "Kriza jugoslovenskog društva, priroda krize i njeni korjeni" ((The Crisis of Yugoslav Society: The Nature of the Crisis and Its Roots) see SA 31 2/84M9380). Impressionistic judgments about self-management are avoided, with attention given to various sociological studies showing successes & shortcomings of self-management. An outline is given of problems yet to be resolved. Modified HA

88T1646

Saffioti, Heleieth I. B., Força de trabalho feminina no Brasil: no interior das cifras (Female Labour Force in Brazil: Inside the Statistics). Perspectivas, 1985, 8, 95-141 (POR)

- * A Marxist-feminist examination of the unequal incorporation of women into the Brazilian L.F. from 1872-1982. According to the first national census of 1872, women comprised 45.5% of the L.F., with about 33.0% of these employed as domestic servants. The increasing industrialization after 1930 brought higher numbers of women into automated production, but mostly in the textile & food industries. At the height of economic prosperity in 1970 the proportion of women workers reached an all-time low, only to bounce upward 6% by the time of the economic crisis of 1982. Most women continue to occupy low positions, receive low wages & many augment the family income through cottage industries. The elimination of this situation can be attained through the destruction of the patriarchy-capitalism symbiosis. 20 Tables, 67 References. M. Meeks

88T1647

Sagmeister, Gunhild (Inst. Soziologie U Bildungswissenschaften, Klagenfurt, A-9020 Austria), Studienabschluss und Beruf: Ergebnisse zweier am Institut für Soziologie der UBW-Klagenfurt durchgeführter Projekte (Completion of Studies and Career: The Findings of Two Projects Carried Out by the UBW-Klagenfurt Institute for Sociology), Österreichische Zeitschrift für Soziologie, 1987, 12, 1, 62-73 (GER)

- * A report on 2 surveys that constituted the Austrian portion of an international panel study of the socialization process in U & professional training. Ss were students from different faculties at 2 Us, 1 technical U, & 1 Coll of education in Vienna (ΣN = 466), & 1 U in Klagenfurt, Austria (ΣN = 279). Mail questionnaires were completed at the beginning of the course of studies (in 1977/78), at intervals during the course, & finally after several years of work (in 1985). Focus was on the transition from study to employment, & the qualifications obtained through higher education & their relevance for the demands of a professional career. It was found that the studies emphasized professional competence & specialization, but did not sufficiently develop autonomy, critical faculties, or social skills; more practical training was also needed. Many students experienced uncertainties & difficulties in obtaining stable professional positions. AA Tr & Modified by C. Waters

88T1648

Satzewich, Victor & Li, Peter S. (Dept Sociology U Glasgow, G12 8QQ Scotland), Immigrant Labour in Canada: The Cost and Benefit of Ethnic Origin in the Job Market, ♦ Canadian Journal of Sociology/Cahiers canadiens de sociologie, 1987, 12, 3, fall, 229-241

- * Recently, John Porter's "ethnically blocked mobility" thesis, regarding Canadian society (The Vertical Mosaic, Toronto: U of Toronto Press, 1965) has been revised by A. Gordon Darroch (see SA 28.4/80K9157) on the ground that ethnic occupational dissimilarity tends to diminish over the census years 1931-1971. Here the effect of ethnic origin on occupational status & income are examined, using longitudinal questionnaire survey data for 4,584 immigrants entering Canada between 1969 & 1971. The findings suggest that despite a reduction of occupational status differentials over a 3-year period, income inequality increases. Since the rankings by occupational status & income are largely along racial lines, the evidence indicates income discrimination despite occupational mobility for nonwhite immigrants. 3 Tables, 26 References. HA

88T1649

Schutt, Russell K. (Dept Sociology U Massachusetts, Boston 02125), Craft Unions and Minorities: Determinants of Change in Admission Practices, ♦ Social Problems, 1987, 34, 4, Oct, 388-402

- ¶ Race-based exclusionary practices of craft unions were the focus of intense political protest & legal action in the late 1960s & early 1970s. Previous research suggests that these pressures were followed by higher rates of minority entry into both apprentice programs & the trades themselves; however, these analyses have not controlled for applicants' human capital characteristics, nor for changing labor market conditions. The success of minority & white applicants to a large craft union apprentice program are analyzed before, during, & after a period of intense political conflict over discriminatory admission practices (1967-1973) based on program records. The predictions of the monopoly (bargaining power) model of discrimination are evaluated, while controlling for variables relevant to human capital & split labor market (institutional) explanations. The results generally support the monopoly model explanation of the bases of change in discriminatory practices, while also indicating the importance of business cycle, human capital, & institutional processes in unionized construction labor markets. 3 Tables, 1 Appendix. HA

88T1650

Snyder, Robert A., Verderber, Kathleen S. & Morris, James H. (Coll Business Northern Kentucky U, Highland Heights 41076), Voluntary Union Membership of Women and Men: Differences in Personal Characteristics, Perceptions and Attitudes, ♦ Journal of Occupational Psychology, 1986, 59, 3, Sept, 205-216

- ¶ On the basis of previous research & unincorporated theories of attitude formation & learning, multivariate analysis of variance & discriminant analysis were used to identify differences in personal characteristics, perceptions, & attitudes of union members & nonmembers in general, & by sex via a 5-year questionnaire study (1979-1984) of employees in all job categories in a US social service organization (N = 525). The field setting used incorporated the unusual characteristics of: (1) substantial proportions of women, (2) complete volition in the membership decision, & (3) control of nonrandom confounding variables across employment settings. Results indicate that differences exist between voluntary members & nonmembers, & potentially important sex differences exist within these groups as well. 5 Tables, 35 References. HA

88T1651

Streeck, Wolfgang (Dept Sociology U Wisconsin, Madison 53706), The Uncertainties of Management in the Management of Uncertainty: Employers, Labor Relations and Industrial Adjustment in the 1980s, ♦ Work, Employment and Society, 1987, 1, 3, Sept, 281-308

- ¶ An attempt is made to reconstruct the general strategic problem to which employers respond, during economic crisis, when the initiative in industrial relations shifts to them, & they must find ways of managing an unprecedented degree of economic uncertainty deriving from a need for continuous rapid adjustment to a turbulent market environment. This requires an increasingly close (re-)integration of industrial relations & industrial strategy in the context of a comprehensive manufacturing policy. Flexibility is a key concept; however, the management of uncertainty remains incomplete & beset with contradictions due to profound uncertainties of management regarding the structure & function of a flexible industrial relations system. These uncertainties are linked to wider problems of industrial strategy, whose resolution partly depends on the strategic decisions of other actors, in particular trade unions. 2 Tables, 50 References. HA

88T1652

Tomlinson, R. & Hyslop, J. (Dept Town & Regional Planning Dept Sociology U Witwatersrand, Johannesburg Republic South Africa), Industrial Decentralisation, Bantustan Policy and the Control of Labour in South Africa, ♦ African Urban Quarterly, 1986, 1, 3-4, Aug-Nov, 220-234.

- ¶ Industrial decentralization is widely employed as a regional planning tool. In South Africa, however, industrial decentralization is being used to further the apartheid system, most obviously by creating jobs in the Bantustans & thereby enabling the government to reduce the pressure on impoverished blacks located in the Bantustans to migrate. Since the latter policy is itself viewed as furthering the end of labor control, both industrial decentralization & Bantustan policy are assessed in terms of home & how they relate to their families are an important part of their existence. A European bibliography on this subject is presented as a starting point for the development of theoretical approaches suited for this type of research. Several topics of research on contemporary Portuguese Wc families are discussed. 70 References. Modified HA

88T1635

Nygren, L. (Umeå U, S-901 87 Sweden). Nedläggningen av och i kopmanholmen-Fn studie av de hushållsekonomiska konsekvenserna (The Close Down of SCB in Kopmanholmen: A Study of the Consequences for Household Economy). * Dissertation Abstracts International. C European Abstracts, 1987, 48, 2, summer, 287 (SWE). Unavailable from UMI, published by Dept Social Welfare, U Umeå, S-901 87 Sweden.

88T1636

Pfaffer, Alfred. Introduction. The Global Dimensions of the Employment Issue. ♦ U The Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science, 1987, 497, July, 12-21.

¶ In an introduction to this special journal issue (see abstracts of various other articles in SA 361), the resurgence of mass unemployment on a global scale is argued to be closely associated with the slowdown of worldwide economic growth to which the labor markets have not yet adjusted. The global character of the problem can be examined from the perspective of increased interdependence of national economies, which might require more coordinated growth policies. On the other hand, lack of coordination appears as less central to those who diagnose the breakdown of the whole postwar syndrome of mutually reinforcing growth-conducive conditions. To reestablish a new growth syndrome might even require restrictions on the trend toward internationalization. Either approach is represented in various shades among the articles in this volume, some of which also focus on the adjustment of national labor markets to the condition of slow worldwide growth. Also discussed is the importance of political priorities for dealing with the challenge of global unemployment. HA

88T1637

Philzacklen, Annie (U Warwick, Coventry CV4 7AL England). Minority Women and Economic Restructuring: The Case of Britain and the Federal Republic of Germany. ♦ Work, Employment and Society, 1987, 1, 3, Sept., 309-325.

¶ It is argued that capital in advanced industrial Western societies has pursued several crisis induced & related strategies to maintain profitability: automation, relocation, & flexibility. Each of these strategies has major implications for women's work generally. Focus here is on their specific impact on minority women's employment in GB & the Federal Republic of Germany based on previous studies. On the basis of comparative analyses, it is concluded that the relative collapse of traditional job opportunities in manufacturing for minority women has resulted in an increasing proportion being pushed sideways into the manual sectors of service work & in the UK also into a burgeoning ethnic economy. 1 Table, 45 References. HA

88T1638

Pratt, Joanne H. (1520 Routh St, Dallas TX 75219). Methodological Problems in Surveying the Home-Based Workforce. ♦ Technological Forecasting and Social Change, 1987, 31, 1, Mar., 49-60.

¶ The evolving LF of home-based workers is difficult to survey partly because common descriptors such as "home," "office," & "work" are taking on new meanings. Estimates of the numbers of home-based workers, which range from 8% to 23% of the LF, are conflicting because they do not count all home workers & do not identify equivalent segments of a diverse population. More data are needed to enable US society to approach a consensus as to whether home-based work should be encouraged. To enable identification of long-range employment trends, it is recommended that detailed questions be asked about the characteristics of work at home in surveys based on US Census Bureau employment categories & methodology. A conceptual model is developed that relates US Census Bureau categories to information needed by others, using the Small Business Administration as an example. Measurement challenges in gathering information arise from definitional problems, measurement of a changing population, undercounts of segments of the home-based LF, & possible high nonresponse rates. 2 Tables, 21 References. Modified HA

88T1639

Pugliese, Enrico (U Naples, 80138 Italy). The Three Forms of Unemployment. ♦ U Social Research, 1987, 54, 2, summer, 303-317.

¶ A discussion of the nature & varied effects of unemployment in Italy. Three types of unemployed are defined: (1) unemployed individuals who have not yet been workers but are likely to become new employees, (2) employed workers who become unemployed, & (3) unemployed individuals who have not been working & have little opportunity for becoming employed. The process of discovering the conditions of unemployment are discussed & related to the conditions of poverty. Transitions from worker to nonworker status are examined, & youth unemployment identified as a new & different phenomenon. The problem of unemployment, even if it is most severe among the young who will never be workers, affects the Wc as a whole & threatens the very basis of Wc solidarity. F. Rasmussen

88T1640

Rajan, Amin. The Riddle of Unemployment. ♦ U New Society, 1987, 79, 1257, 30 Jan., 10-12.

¶ Recent economic forecasts for GB & other countries are critically examined. Recent growth in service industries has created numerous new jobs, but not enough to offset fully the general trend toward increased unemployment. Many service jobs are ultimately dependent on a still deteriorating manufacturing sector. New jobs can be expected to benefit new labor market entrants more than long-term unemployed. A laissez-faire policy is insufficient to resolve this problem; what is needed is systematic redevelopment of the industrial base. Greater state intervention is needed in resource allocation or income distribution or both. W. H. Stoddard

88T1641

Rankin, Thomas Donald (U Pennsylvania, Philadelphia 19104). Unions and the Emerging Paradigm of Organization: The Case of E.C.W.U. Local 800. * Dissertation Abstracts International, 4 The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 47, 12(1), June, 4522-A-4523-A.

Available from UMI, Ann Arbor MI. Order No. DA8703257.

88T1642

Ridgeway, Cecilia L. (Dept Sociology U Iowa, Iowa City 52242). Nonverbal Behavior, Dominance, and the Basis of Status in Task Groups. ♦ American Sociological Review, 1987, 52, 5, Oct., 683-694.

¶ Linking nonverbal behavior to influence in task groups has been interpreted as evidence that behavioral dominance is the basis of status. Challenging this interpretation, it is proposed that both the power processes that underlie status formation & the structural implications of dominance hierarchies indicate that expectations about task performance will be the usual basis of status in task groups. Furthermore, while some nonverbal behavior communicates dominance, it is not linked to influence; rather, influence results from nonverbal task cues that affect the performance expectations of an actor. An experiment was conducted in which 83 F undergraduates rated the influence achieved by a F confederate displaying high or low dominance or task cues to another F confederate. Results confirm that the association between nonverbal behavior & influence in task groups is due not to dominance behavior but to task cues that affect perceptions of an actor's task competence. Thus, status appears to be a collective product of the entire network of group members, rather than an aggregate of pairwise competitions among members. 4 Tables, 34 References. Modified HA

88T1643

Robison, Garry Lee (U California, Santa Cruz 95064). The Political Economy of the Urban Underclass: Black Subemployment in Advanced Capitalism. * Dissertation Abstracts International, 4 The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 1, July, 222-A.

Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8709125.

88T1644

Rothstein, B. (Lunds U, S-221 00 Sweden). Den socialdemokratiska staten. Reformen och förvaltning inom svensk arbetsmarknads- och skolorpolitik (The Social Democratic State: Reforms and Administration in Swedish Labor Market and School Policy). * Dissertation Abstracts International, C European Abstracts, 1987, 48, 1, spring, 63 (SWE).

Unavailable from UMI; published by Arkiv Forlag, Box 1559, S-221

Their Lesson," New York Journal of Medicine, 1919, 59, 994-999), proved to be unfounded. Rather, casualty victims' participation in both the army & family social systems augmented improved functioning in each. It is concluded that family participation during the acute phase of treatment is vital, case examples are provided as evidence. 15 References. K. Hyatt

88T1661

Marullo, Sam (Georgetown U., Washington DC 20057), The Functions and Dysfunctions of Preparations for Fighting Nuclear War, U Sociological Focus, 1987, 20, 2, Apr, 135-153.

A survey of the economic, political, social-psychological & cultural functions & dysfunctions of the nuclear arms race on US society. The analysis of positive functions does not serve as justification for the status quo but was undertaken to point out the numerous constraints mitigating against change. The dysfunctions of US nuclear war preparations are explicitly considered here to point out the direct, indirect, & opportunity costs of adhering to a policy of extended deterrence. The juxtaposition of both functions & dysfunctions provides insights concerning potential sources of change & policy alternatives that may decrease the negative consequences without weakening US national security. 62 References. HA

88T1662

Meeker, Barbara Foley & Segal, David S. (U Maryland, College Park 20742), Soldiers' Perceptions of Conflict Likelihood: The Effects of Doctrine and Experience, U Journal of Political and Military Sociology, 1987, 15, 1, spring, 105-115.

A revised version of SA 34 5/S19052/ASA/1986/4093

88T1663

Rothberg, Joseph M. & Jones, Franklin D., Suicide in the U.S. Army: Epidemiological and Periodic Aspects, U Suicide and Life-Threatening Behavior, 1987, 17, 2, summer, 119-132.

An overview of suicide in the US Army is presented in two sections. (1) the epidemiology of US Army suicides, based on biennium reports from 1910 to 1982, & (2) the temporal aspects of those suicides compared with the data for the US as a whole. A brief historical review documents some of the changes in contemporary military suicide rates compared to those of the past century. The cycles in the number of suicides by day of the week, day of the month, & month of the year for the US Army are computed & contrasted with those reported for the US resident population. 7 Tables, 5 Figures, 14 References. HA

88T1664

Scruton, Roger (Birkbeck Coll, WC1E 7HX England), Notes on the Sociology of War, U The British Journal of Sociology, 1987, 38, 3, Sept, 295-309.

Various theories on the social origins of war are examined & criticized for their failure to consider the role of natural & political factors. A sociological analysis of fighting is presented, with focus on how this activity begins, which social structures are most likely to engender & sustain it, & how it differs from contract. It is proposed that war is a special case of fighting that involves two corporate entities, political organization, & collective agency, the decision to fight arises through the process of government rather than through some private faction or feud. Jean-Jacques Rousseau's ideas on the role of the state in causing war are reviewed, & the role of law in mediating conflicts before they escalate into violence is discussed. It is argued that law will limit aggression only to the extent that it affects the political process. Ways that totalitarian governments have changed the conduct of both war & peace are examined. K. Hyatt

24 bureaucratic structures/organizational sociology

88T1665

Alexander, Sheldon & Ruderman, Marian (Dept Psychology Wayne State U, Detroit MI 48202), The Role of Procedural and Distributive Justice in Organizational Behavior, Social Justice Research, 1987, 1, 2, June, 177-198.

An examination of the role of both procedural & distributive justice in the workplace, with focus on the influence of fairness perceptions on employees' job-related attitudes. Following a review of justice-based research conducted over the past 2 decades in laboratory & organizational settings, results of a study of 2,800 US government employees at 6 installations (in Washington, DC, Ill, Mich, & Ohio) are reported. Factor analytic & multiple regression analyses of questionnaire data revealed 6 different dimensions of justice-fairness, which were then used to predict 6 attitudes related to organizational life: evaluation of supervisor, job satisfaction, workplace conflict/harmony, trust in management, turnover intention, & tension. Results indicate that procedural & distributive justice have differential effects in organizational settings. Some conceptual & methodological issues are discussed, & directions provided for future research. 6 Tables, 50 References. K. Hyatt

88T1666

Ames, Lynda Jo (U California, Santa Barbara 93106), Relevance, Resistance, Revenge: An Investigation into the Everyday Life and Common Sense of a Bureaucratic, Hierarchical Organization, Dissertation Abstracts International, A The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 1, July, 228-A.

Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8709095.

88T1667

Anderson, James C. (J L Kellogg Graduate School Management Northwestern U, Evanston IL 60201), An Approach for Confirmatory Measurement and Structural Equation Modeling of Organizational Properties, U Management Science, 1987, 33, 4, Apr, 525-541.

A comprehensive, confirmatory measurement approach is presented that enables a researcher to explicitly represent & assess the significance of informants' perceptual agreement with respect to each measure, individual-level & organizational-level measurement errors, & the posited relationships of the organizational constructs to one another. This approach consists of three hierarchically related models that draw on past work in organizational behavior, marketing, & psychometrics. After exposition & illustration of the models, an extension of the approach is described that evaluates commonalities & differences between different kinds of organizations. Applications of the approach to research in organizational behavior, business marketing, & channels of distribution are considered. 4 Tables, 2 Figures, 46 References. Modified HA

88T1668

Brown, Rupert, Condor, Susan, Mathews, Audrey, Wade, Gillian & Williams, Jennifer (Social Psychology Research Unit Beverley Farm U Kent, Canterbury CT2 7NZ), Explaining Intergroup Differentiation in an Industrial Organization, U Journal of Occupational Psychology, 1986, 59, 4, Dec, 273-286.

A 1983 study of intergroup relations in an English paper factory is reported in which the utility of three social-psychological approaches—realistic conflict theory, the contact hypothesis, & social identity theory—is examined. Interview & scale data were collected from a sample of 177 shop floor workers from 5 different departments. A new scale of group identification developed for this study was tested for reliability & validity. Using multiple regression analyses, an attempt is made to explain variance in Rs' intergroup differentiation using the other measures as predictor variables. The most powerful & reliable predictor was perceived conflict, which was positively correlated with differentiation. Amount of contact was negatively but weakly associated with differentiation. Strength of group identification, while showing a positive r with differentiation, was only a weak & inconsistent predictor variable. Noting that these results confirm findings from other studies, their theoretical implications are discussed. 4 Tables, 43 References. Modified HA

88T1669

Donaldson, Lex (Australian Graduate School Management U New South Wales, Kensington 2033), Strategy and Structural Adjustment to Regain Fit and Performance: In Defence of Contingency Theory, Journal of Management Studies, 1987, 24, 1, Jan, 1-24.

In response to criticisms that structural-functionalist organization analyses that employ comparative, contingency approaches are inherently static, it is argued that they can be used to describe organizational change if the theory used in the analysis is properly formulated. This involves the partial abandonment of the main theories of structural change—contingency determinism & strategic choice in favor of a "structural adjustment to regain fit" (SARFIT) formulation. The advantage of this what is considered to be a crisis of labor control. The conclusion is that neither policy will relieve that crisis, & that the current reforms must be seen in this light. 3 Tables, 1 Figure. Modified HA

88T1653

Vellinga, Menno (Dept Cultural Anthropology State U. Utrecht, NL, 3508 TC, Netherlands). Grupos de presión bajo presión: cambios en la organización, la problemática y la acción dentro del movimiento obrero de occidente. Lecciones del caso holandés. (Pressure Groups under Pressure: Changes in the Organization, Problems and Action of the Workers' Movement in the West: Lessons from the Case of Holland). ♦ UM Revista Mexicana de Sociología, 1986, 48, 4, Oct-Dec, 317-335. (SPA)

Translated by Marta Donis.

¶ An investigation of the changes in labor relations that have resulted from the profound economic changes in Western industrialized societies since 1970, based on official statistics & previous studies. The tremendous growth of the service sector & the deindustrialization of the 1970s have given way to the reindustrialization & emphasis on advanced technology of the 1980s. Massive unemployment has become a structural phenomenon. The consequences of these factors for labor relations & the relations among work, administration, & state, & for the composition, organization, problems, & action of the Wc are examined, taking Holland as an example. A classification of the systems of labor relations in other Western European countries is also presented. It is concluded that it is important that the "new" Wc be represented in the process of restructuring of industry. 3 Tables. C. Waters

88T1654

Verhaeren, Raphael-Emmanuel (U. Grenoble II, F-38040 Cedex France). The Role of Foreign Workers in the Seasonal Fluctuations of the French Economy. ♦ UM International Migration Review, 1986, 20, 4, winter, 856-874.

¶ The few studies that have been carried out on foreign seasonal workers in France only take into account the annual inflows of seasonal immigrants. Here, two other aspects of the problem are considered: the seasonal nature of immigration in general, & the role of permanent immigrant workers in certain sectors influenced by seasonal changes. The number of permanent first-time immigrants is determined by, among other causes, the need for a certain seasonal regulation of overall economic activity. 6 Tables, 1 Figure, 15 References. Modified HA

88T1655

Vranjek, Božo (U. Zagreb, 41000 Yugoslavia). Organizacijski oblici proizvodnje. (The Organizational Forms of Production). Revija za Sociologiju, 1984, 14, 3-4, July-Dec, 259-274. (SCR)

¶ The basis is presented for the development of production systems useful for multidisciplinary teams interested in production innovation. Experimentation with production layout in the Federal Republic of Germany, the USSR, & Yugoslavia is examined, based on a review of the literature. Factor analysis is utilized to assess issues of spatial organization & the distribution of work among individuals, partners, & groups. The effects of job rotation, enlargement, & enrichment in a Zagreb (Yugoslavia) industrial enterprise are positively evaluated. 6 Figures, 11 References. Modified HA

88T1656

Wharton, Amy S. & Baron, James N. (Dept Sociology Washington State U. Pullman 99164). So Happy Together? The Impact of Gender Segregation on Men at Work. ♦ American Sociological Review, 1987, 52, 5, Oct, 574-587.

¶ An exploration of how gender segregation at work affects men's well-being, as expressed in their psychological orientations toward work, using interview data from a nationally representative sample of 822 employed US Ms who participated in the 1973 Quality of Employment Survey. Analysis reveals that men in mixed work settings report significantly lower job-related satisfaction & self-esteem & more job-related depression than do men in either M- or F-dominated work settings, even after controlling for individual job, organizational, & economic determinants of well-being. These findings are difficult to reconcile with theories suggesting that men dislike gender integration at work simply for economic reasons or that token Ms suffer psychologically by occupying low-status positions viewed as "F" jobs. Rather, findings are more consistent with perspectives that emphasize how the quality & quantity of intergroup relations decline as groups become more balanced. Implications for segregation theories & for efforts to remedy segregation are discussed. 2 Tables, 58 References. Modified HA

23 military sociology

88T1657

Azarya, Victor & Kimmerling, Baruch (Hebrew U. Jerusalem, Mount Scopus Israel). Cognitive Permeability of Civil-Military Boundaries: Draftee Expectations from Military Service in Israel. ♦ UM Studies in Comparative International Development, 1985-86, 20, 4, winter, 42-61.

¶ An analysis of the boundaries between civilian & military spheres in Israel, as perceived by Israeli-raised draftees compared to new immigrant counterparts, showing how the institutional civil-military permeability that characterizes Israeli society is reflected at the individual cognitive level. Response to a questionnaire distributed to a sample of 539 new M conscripts (N = 234 new immigrants & 309 nonimmigrants) show that, while the entire group professes a high willingness to serve in the military, the willingness of nonimmigrant draftees is markedly higher than that of the new immigrants. Furthermore, nonimmigrant draftees have difficulty distinguishing between collective needs related to their military service & their personal costs or rewards from military service (eg, physical danger, effects on their family, education & professional opportunities or social ties), while new immigrants do distinguish more clearly between collective needs & personal costs & rewards. For Israeli-raised draftees, cognitive boundaries are blurred between the national security functions of the armed forces & the personal incentives of serving in the military, contrasting with trends in contemporary western all-volunteer forces in which personal SF opportunities offered to the enlisted personnel become a major recruitment incentive. 8 Tables, 2 Figures, 18 References. Modified AA

88T1658

Babin, Nehama Ella (U. Maryland, College Park 20742). The Impact of Military Expenditures on Economic Growth and Development in the Less Developed Countries. ♦ Dissertation Abstracts International 4. The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 1, July, 228-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8709042.

88T1659

Davis, Charles L. & Taylor, Ronald D. (U. Kentucky Center, Fort Knox 40121). The Effects of Military Service on Political Participation: The Case of Long-Term Soldiers. ♦ UM Journal of Political and Military Sociology, 1987, 15, 1, spring, 89-103.

¶ The influence of long-term military service on individual participant citizenship (both civic & political participation) is investigated using interview data from a random sample of veterans, civilians, & active-duty personnel (N = 116) who attended the U of Kentucky Center at Fort Knox during 1984/85. Results are compared to those of previous studies, & reveal an association between long-term service & diminished participatory capability only for veterans, thus, long-term exposure to the authoritarian structures of the military does not necessarily undermine capability for democratic citizenship. Two alternative explanations for these differences between veterans & active-duty soldiers are examined & it is argued that veterans' lack of participation may be due to their marginal status in US society rather than to previous military service. 5 Tables, 3 Appendixes, 20 References. Modified HA

88T1660

Levy, Amihay & Neumann, Micha (Shalvata Mental Health Centre Kupat-Holim Hod Hasharon Israel). Involving Families in the Treatment of Combat Reactions. Journal of Family Therapy, 1987, 9, 2, May, 177-188.

¶ Described is how the families of combat reaction casualty victims being treated at a military base installation (MALTAK) in Israel in 1982 came to be incorporated into the therapeutic process. MALTAK's treatment principles & goals are examined; they were initially designed to provide group & individual therapy without intervention from families, but pressure from the families caused the policies to be changed. Fears that such participation would violate T. W. Salmon's principles on treating combat reactions, particularly that of expectancy ("The War Neuroses and

88T1679

Kakabadse, Andrew. Organizational Alienation and Job Climate: A Comparative Study of Structural Conditions and Psychological Adjustment. In Small Group Behavior. 1986, 17, 4, Nov, 458-471

¶ The relationship between aspects of organizational structure & alienation, as experienced by personnel employed in 9 social service organizations, is investigated. Structured interviews were conducted with 3 groups in these organizations: those making executive decisions, those making supervisory assessments, & those concerned primarily with client interaction ($N = 603$ Rs). The best predictors of organizational structure were aspects of centralization & formalization, which related strongly to the dimensions of powerlessness & self-estrangement. 2 Tables, 2 Figures, 32 References. HA

88T1680

Karczmarszok, Krystia (Instytut Socjologii U Łódzkiego, Narutowicza 65 Poland). Kierowanie a warunki sytuacyjne: rola struktury zadania (Management and Situational Conditions: The Role of Task Structure). Przegląd Socjologiczny. 1986, 36, 65-79 (POL)

¶ To investigate the role of situational conditions in the structural & processual aspects of industrial management & to determine the impact of task structure on interpersonal processes in management, questionnaire data were obtained from 250 supervisors & 500 workers at a Polish factory in Apr 1981. A follow-up survey was conducted 7 months later, with 154 supervisors & 154 workers. The management process is shown to contain four unit processes of exchange, social influence, functional behavior, & perception, all of which are interrelated. The structure of the task is shown to be an important modifier in the management process only for some of these factors, however. This may be because the personalities of the workers were not considered in this study. 2 Tables. Modified HA

88T1681

Kim, Yong-Hak (U Chicago, IL 60637). Resource Mobilization and Deployment in the National Policy Domains Linking Structure and Action Using Mathematical Models. * Dissertation Abstracts International, A The Humanities and Social Sciences. 1987, 47, 11, May, 4204-A

Unavailable from UMI; contact the degree-granting university.

88T1682

Kloosterboer, Paul & van de Vliert, Evert (Veerstr 23, NL-1075 SM Amsterdam Netherlands). Andersom intervenieren bij weerstand (Intervening the Other Way Round in the Case of Resistance). M&O. 1987, 41, 3, May-June, 134-146 (DUT)

¶ An analysis of resistance to organizational changes as a relational phenomenon between client & consultant. Various expressions of resistance are classified in a typology of four social styles of behavior. Resistance can escalate due to mutually strengthening social reflexes between interventionist & client. The interpersonal complementarity principle of D. J. Kiesler ("The 1982 Interpersonal Circle: A Taxonomy for Complementary Human Transactions," Psychological Review. 1983, 90, 3, July) is used to explain this phenomenon. This principle suggests a quadrinomial model of intervening the other way round in case of resistance, as a way of changing the client's behavior directionally. The model is characterized by the suppression of behavioral inclinations in favor of the opposite intervention behavior. 1 Table, 3 Figures. Modified HA

88T1683

Knegt, Robert (Copernicusstr 66, 1098 JJ Amsterdam Netherlands). Rule Application and Substantive Justice: Observations at a Public Assistance Bureau. The Netherlands Journal of Sociology/Sociologia Neerlandica. 1987, 23, 2, Oct, 116-125

¶ An exploration of the utilization of rules governing the activities of local government officials made by those officials, & a critique of Robert A. Kagan's typology of modes of rule application (Regulatory Justice: Implementing a Wage-Price Freeze, New York, 1978). Participant observation of public assistance administration in the Netherlands shows that social workers can decisively influence decision making by using their information monopolies. Daily frustrations arise from the nature of assistance as professional case-oriented help within a bureaucratic rule-oriented organization. The subjectivity of decisions is reduced to a syntax of practical decisions. Analysis of the process of looking for & finding adequate argumentation for rulings suggests a new typology of rule application styles. Modified HA

88T1684

Lengyel, Gyorgy & Pártos, Gyula, A "hagyományos vezetői típus" felbomlása (Economic Managers, Views on Economic Activities), Szociológia. 1982, 4, 561-576 (HUN)

¶ Abstract not currently available

88T1685

Lesieur, Henry R. & Sheley, Joseph F. (Dept Sociology & Anthropology Saint John's U, Jamaica NY 11439). Illegal Appended Enterprises: Selling the Lines. In Social Problems. 1987, 34, 3, June, 249-260

¶ A revised version of SA 35 3/S19679/ASA/1987/4396

88T1686

Lővey, Imre, A tekintélyelvű gondolkodás vizsgálata és néhány merési eredmény a vezetők köréből (The Principle of Authority, as Reflected and Measured in Managerial Thinking). Szociológia. 1982, 3, 351-372 (HUN)

¶ An attempt is made to detect & measure thinking that is based on the principle of authority, using Theodor W. Adorno's The Authoritarian Personality (New York, 1950) as a starting point. From Adorno's F-scale, a T-scale suitable for use in Hungary is developed. Described are how this new measuring instrument was developed & how it can be tested for validity & reliability. Five major components of authoritarian thinking are identified: ingroup-outgroup thinking patterns, conventionalism, a negative, cynical attitude toward human nature, demagoguery, & anxiety. This analysis is applied to a sample of 1,200 managers, & the limits of data interpretation are defined. The relationships between authoritarian thinking & certain sociological variables are demonstrated, i.e., sex, age, education, position, spouse's education, & number of children. Some hypotheses are outlined to explain these relationships. 3 Tables, 1 Figure. Modified HA

88T1687

Meyer, Marshall W. (Dept Sociology U California, Riverside 92521). The Growth of Public and Private Bureaucracies, Theory and Society. 1987, 16, 2, Mar, 215-235

¶ A theoretical exploration of the growth of public & private bureaucracies in advanced capitalist societies. Three themes are emphasized: bureaucracies are best understood in terms of rationality rather than of efficiency; many conventional assumptions of the literature on organizations must be modified to produce a theory of bureaucratic growth based on a rationality model of organizations, & bureaucratic growth can generate organizations that are at once rational & inefficient. Efficiency & rationality models are compared & a synthesis is sought. Two conditions combine to produce bureaucratic growth: belief in organizing as rational problem-solving & existence of problems without known solutions. W. H. Stoddard

88T1688

Montanari, John R. & Adelman, Philip J. (Dept Management Coll Business Administration Arizona State U, Tempe 85287). The Administrative Component of Organizations and the Ratchet Effect: A Critique of Cross-Sectional Studies. Journal of Management Studies. 1987, 24, 2, Mar, 113-123

¶ When growth & decline are examined with regard to the administrative component of organizations, an apparent dichotomy exists between cross-sectional designs & within organization longitudinal studies. The results of longitudinal studies indicate the existence of a ratcheting effect of the administrative component that cannot be explained by the size construct alone. Therefore, an analysis of the ratchet effect is presented & a conceptual model of factors influencing the growth & decline of the administrative component is proposed. A review of the literature indicates that larger organizations have a smaller % of personnel employed in administration. This relationship appears to persist in cross-sectional, longitudinal, & growth studies. However, the longitudinal studies indicate that the administrative component fails to decrease at the same rate as the direct component in periods of economic decline, suggesting that the administrative component may increase disproportionately to the direct component or "ratchet" over several business cycles. This phenomenon is investigated, using results of previous empirical studies, & a new theoretical framework incorporating the ratchet dynamic is proposed. 1 Table, 1 Figure, 21 References. Modified HA framework is empirically demonstrated in an analysis of changes in strategy & structure in corporations in 8 advanced industrial countries in the 1950s & 1960s (the U.S., UK, Australia, Canada, France, Italy, Japan, & West Germany), using data from previous studies. It is revealed that there is a cycle of change in strategy leading to mismatch & low performance, then structural adjustment to a new match rarely does adjustment occur through altering the contingency to fit the structure. Suggestions for using the SAREIT model to explore other relationships between contingencies & structure are offered. 4 Tables, 5 Figures, 51 References. Modified HA

88T1678

88T1670

Edwards, Christine (Dept Sociology North East London Polytechnic, E15 2JL England), Formal Industrial Relations and Workplace Power: A Study on the Railway, Journal of Management Studies, 1987, 24, 1, Jan, 63-90

† Data on industrial relations practices & attitudes at 3 British rail stations were obtained via interviews with a spokesman from each of 90 local departmental committees (IDCs) & 51 local managers, as well as mail questionnaires sent to 5,000 other IDC representatives (64% response rate) & ordinary railway staff (38% response). It is shown that centralized control & formality do not unequivocally benefit railway management though they may act to depress the power of workplace representatives overall. It is at the cost of increased industrial conflict & loss of effective means of consultation & negotiation with the workforce. Implications for industrial relations of recent efforts to change the railway from a production to business led industry are discussed. 3 Tables, 1 Figure, 54 References. K. Hyatt

88T1671

Higuera, Javier (Centro Estudios Sociológicos Colegio México, 10740 Mexico DF), Case Study Methods and the Cultivation of Mental Skills: Management Training for Developing Countries, ♦ Public Enterprise, 1985, 5, 2, Feb, 173-186

† A discussion of the use of case study methods in management training, particularly in developing mental skills for management. However, the potential of case studies will only be realized if care is exercised in ensuring that cases are relevant to the needs of the trainees & to the cultural context of management. They also require adequate leadership on the part of the trainer & a clear understanding of the training goals. 8 References. HA

88T1672

Folger, Robert (A. B. Freeman School Business Tulane U, New Orleans LA 70118), Distributive and Procedural Justice in the Workplace, Social Justice Research, 1987, 1, 2, June, 143-159

† An attempt to synthesize two distinct literatures on the psychology of justice that dealing with distributive justice, ie, perceptions of the fairness of amounts received, & that of procedural justice, ie, perceptions of the fairness of decision making processes. This integration is achieved using the conceptual framework of "referent cognitions theory," which describes the various components of the resentment that results from the belief that a particular outcome is unfair. Procedural justice is reformulated as an expected value conceptualization of procedures in which judgments about the fairness of a procedure reflect beliefs about its typical consequences. Implications for organizational practice are explored & illustrated via a discussion of the procedures used to evaluate workers' performance. 28 References. K. Hyatt

88T1673

Fujimura, Masayuki (Tokyo Metropolitan U, Meguro-ku 152 Japan), Title appears in Japanese (Interorganizational Relations in the Policy-Making System for Public Assistance), Shakaigaku Hyoron/Japanese Sociological Review, 1987, 37, 4(148), Mar, 408-425 (JPN)

† Organizational theory is used to analyze interorganizational relations within the Japanese policy-making system for public assistance (Seikatsu Hogo). Public assistance policy is construed in terms of a system model, composed of three action systems: policy making, implementation, & appeal & one institutional system, composed of a main program (Daily Life Security Law) & subprograms. Case studies of the standard of livelihood assistance (Seikatsu Fugo) & the supplementary payments to elderly recipients (Rorei Kasan) are provided to illustrate resource scarcity, similarities & differences in the norms & values of interorganizational relations, & strategies of the Ministry of Health & Welfare. 2 Tables, 2 Figures, 49 References. Modified HA

88T1674

Greenberg, Jerald & Tyler, Tom R. (Faculty Management & Human Resources Ohio State U, Columbus 43210-1399), Why Procedural Justice in Organizations?, Social Justice Research, 1987, 1, 2, June, 127-142

† A review of the history & current status of research & theory on procedural justice in work organizations. A distinction is made between procedural & distributive justice, & the contexts in which they emerged during the 1960s are analyzed along with some major conceptual contributions from past research. Previous attempts to apply procedural justice to organizational settings are summarized, & an agenda is proposed for future research & theory that will benefit both the field of procedural justice & that of organizational behavior. 51 References. K. Hyatt

88T1675

Gross, D. (U Kent, Canterbury CT2 7NZ England), The Social Structure of the Small Firm, ♦ Dissertation Abstracts International C European Abstracts, 1987, 48, 2, summer, 286

Unavailable from UMI; contact the degree-granting university.

88T1676

Haber, Lesław H., Formy stabilizacji kadry kierowniczej w warunkach maksymalizacji zatrudnienia (Forms of Stabilization of Managerial Cadres in Conditions of Employment Maximization), Przegląd Socjologiczny, 1986, 36, 81-91 (POL)

† A literature review of primarily Polish sources is presented, focusing on the stabilization of management cadres as a function of economy of scale, the labor market, & personnel policies. Recent economic reforms have introduced new problems, especially in the area of labor specialization. Despite the reforms, dysfunctional situations exist, resulting in minimal stabilization in some managerial groups. Improvements will not occur until an optimal level of employment is reached on both the micro- & macroeconomic levels. Modified HA

88T1677

Hopf, Christel (Max-Planck-Institut Bildungsforschung, Lentzeallee 94 D-1000 Berlin 33 Federal Republic Germany), Normen in formalen Organisationen-Theoretische und methodische Probleme der empirischen Analyse (Norms in Formal Organization: Theoretical and Methodological Problems of Empirical Analysis), Zeitschrift für Soziologie, 1987, 16, 4, Aug, 239-253 (GER)

† Different methodological approaches to the empirical analysis of social norms are examined with reference to organizational research. Two theoretical approaches are contrasted: (1) the existence or validity of norms is determined primarily from an external perspective with a focus on behavioral regularities & sanctions for deviance (Emile Durkheim, Theodor Geiger, H. Popitz), & (2) the internal perspective of individual actors is emphasized, especially regarding the validity of norms (Max Weber). It is concluded that the operational definition of norms consistent with the first approach gives rise to serious problems of interpretation & that this tradition is more applicable to the analysis of legal or formal norms than to conventional or moral norms. 60 References. Modified HA

88T1678

Jarosławska, Maria (Instytut Filozofii/Socjologii PAN, Pałac Staszica Nowy Świat 72 00-300 Warsaw Poland), Zatrudnienie w świetle społecznych doświadczeń i w opiniach kadry kierowniczej (Employment in Light of Social Experience and in the Opinion of Managerial Cadres), Przegląd Socjologiczny, 1986, 36, 93-118 (POL)

† At the end of WWII Poland experienced a labor shortage, which the new Communist government tried to deal with by creating special labor reserves with elastic utilization & management techniques. This strategy failed, leading to a decrease in labor productivity & increased worker turnover. Short periods of labor surplus appeared some years later, leading to a socially acceptable reduction of the LF & to the hiring of excess workers by the state to ensure full employment. To examine how these national trends affect workers, questionnaire data were obtained in May 1982 from a representative national sample (N = 828, age 16+). Analysis reveals that managerial-level employees often overestimated the number of workers that their enterprises needed, fueling the problems of low labor productivity typical of the 1982 Polish economy. 1 Table. Modified HA

88T1700

Zanzi, Alberto (School Management Suffolk U, Boston MA 02108). How Organic Is Your Organization?—Determinants of Organic/Mechanistic Tendencies in a Public Accounting Firm. Journal of Management Studies, 1987, 24, 2, Mar, 125-142

† Two units within a major US public accounting firm—the audit group & the management consulting group—are compared to determine their organic/mechanistic tendencies & establish the variables most closely related to these organizational characteristics. Questionnaires were completed by a sample of 67 professional staff members, balanced by unit & hierarchical level. Results indicate that the process-oriented elements of an organization are the most relevant indicators of organizational development & provide a system for evaluating an organization on an organic/mechanistic continuum. 5 Tables, 1 Appendix, 19 References. Modified HA

88T1701

Ziegler, Rolf (Institut Soziologie U Munich, D-8000 22 Federal Republic Germany). Besitzverhältnisse, Parteipräferenz und Personenverbindungen in der österreichischen Wirtschaft (Ownership, Party Affiliation, and Interlocking Directorates in the Austrian Economy). Österreichische Zeitschrift für Soziologie, 1987, 12, 2, 81-92. (GER)

† A description of the structure of common directorships among the 259 largest Austrian corporations in 1976. Austrian industry & banking are characterized by a high level of nationalization. The largest state-owned holding company & the two big nationalized banks form distinguishable though overlapping clusters; however, no split exists between public & private sectors. A large part of the interlocks is due to a few big linkers who hold or have occupied leading positions in the main institutions of the corporatist system of intermediation. This interest organization is closely intertwined with the party system & kept in balance by the pervading principle of parity. The data indicate that conservative linkers form a denser & more extended network than socialist partisans, though both networks overlap to a large degree. 24 References. AA

65 social network analysis

88T1702

Andrews, Howard F. (Dept Geography Center U & Community Studies U Toronto, Ontario M5S 1A1). The Effects of Neighbourhood Social Mix on Adolescents' Social Networks and Recreational Activities. Urban Studies, 1986, 23, 6, Dec, 501-517

* Census & interview data are used to examine the extent to which the social networks & recreational activities of 212 teenagers living in low income public housing in metropolitan Toronto, Ontario, are associated with the social mix characteristics of the neighborhoods in which the housing projects are located. Alternative models of housing design, Rs' sex, & minority status are also investigated to account for variations in adolescents' social networks & out-of-school activities. The results of discriminant analyses & cluster analyses suggest that neighborhood social mix characteristics are more strongly associated with variations in social network measures & recreational patterns than are the competing factors of housing design, Rs' sex, or minority status. 10 Tables, 1 Appendix, 19 References. Modified HA

88T1703

Hepworth, H. Philip. A Network of Networks. International Social Work, 1987, 30, 1, Jan, 5-9

* A discussion of the role of systematic networking in the field of international social welfare. The terms used in the discussion are defined for clarity, & the increasingly important role of computer networking is evaluated. Dangers inherent in international networking are identified, & several problems associated with interpretation & evaluation of data are described. Networking is seen as a powerful tool when used with awareness of possible pitfalls. F Rasmussen

88T1704

Ho, Edric & Kochen, Manfred (Mental Health Research Instit U Michigan, Ann Arbor 48109). Perceived Acquaintanceship and Interpersonal Trust: The Cases of Hong Kong and China. Social Networks, 1987, 9, 2, June, 153-169

* The relationship between a person's perception of others & how many acquaintances he thinks he has is analyzed using questionnaire data from a quota sample of 978 Rs in Hong Kong & 94 in China. Rs in Hong Kong perceive one another as not trustworthy, selfish, & unfair, much as in Japan, but this is not the case for China, nor for the US. It is argued that competitiveness rather than culture accounts for this. Also, people who do not trust one another tend not to perceive themselves as having many acquaintances. 7 Tables, 1 Figure, 21 References. HA

88T1705

McElroy, James C. & Shrader, Charles B. (Coll Business Administration Iowa State U, Ames 50011). Attribution Theories of Leadership and Network Analysis. Journal of Management, 1986, 12, 3, Fall, 351-362

* The potential of applying network analysis to attribution theories of leadership is examined. Network analysis allows the identification of social groups linked together by work, friendship, influence, or communication relations & of the relative position of actors within the social group. Moreover, network properties such as centrality, influence domain or prestige, & the presence of isolates enable the identification of leaders in relation to their position, status, & influence in a particular social setting. The use of network analysis in evaluating leader-subordinate relationships & leader behavior descriptions is discussed & a research agenda suggested. 1 Table, 40 References. HA

88T1706

Mitchell, J. Clyde (Nuffield Coll Oxford U, OX1 1NF England). The Components of Strong Ties among Homeless Women. Social Networks, 1987, 9, 1, Mar, 37-47

† The qualities that characterize strong ties in social networks are investigated, utilizing fieldwork data relating to the social networks of 10 homeless women in Manchester, England. Interviews focused on the f of contact, self-defined closeness, conviviality, emotional support, & practical aid given between members of the networks of the women concerned. A latent structural analysis of the attribute patterns of links among all the members of the networks suggests 4 latent classes of network linkage: strong ties where all attributes are present, ties involving frequent associations, convivial links, & some closeness; ties involving frequent associations & some practical aid, & weak ties in which most attributes were absent. An examination of the f of attributes with strong ties confirms P. V. Marsden's & K. E. Campbell's finding that emotional support & closeness are the most important attributes of strong ties (see SA 33:1/85O4396). The classification of types of links is illustrated using 2 cases drawn from the wider homeless families study. 2 Tables, 1 Figure, 7 References. AA

88T1707

Morgan, David L. (Instut Aging Portland State U, OR 97207). Rehabilitating Technique to Measure Perceived Social Networks. Social Networks, 1987, 9, 2, June, 135-152

† A. P. M. Coxon described a technique using card sorts to capture perceptions of the structure in social networks, but also expressed pessimism due to problems that limited its applicability ("Perspectives on Social Networks" in Holland, P. W., & Leinhardt, S. (Eds), Perspectives on Social Network Research, New York: Academic Press, 1979). Here, problems arising from "lumper-splitter differences" are addressed by first estimating their magnitude & then controlling for their effects. The magnitude of lumper-splitter differences is found to depend on the metric used to capture overlaps in perceptions, with the pair-bonds measure used by Coxon being especially susceptible. A control for lumper-splitter differences (based on randomly generated data) sharply reduces their influence. 2 Tables, 4 Figures, 11 References. HA

88T1708

Orth-Gomér, Kristina & Undén, Anna-Lena (National Instit Psychosocial Factors & Health, Box 60210 S-104 01 Stockholm Sweden). The Measurement of Social Support in Population Surveys. Social Science and Medicine, 1987, 24, 1, 83-94

† The convenience, clarity, & applicability of several social support instruments for use in population studies are assessed. Seventeen instruments were administered to employees (N = 15) of the National Instit for Psychosocial Factors & Health & the Swedish Governmental Health

88T1689

Morrill, Catha Keith (Harvard U. Cambridge MA 02138). Conflict Management among Corporate Executives: A Comparative Study. * Dissertation Abstracts International, A: The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 47, 11, May, 4195-A.
Available from UMI, Ann Arbor MI. Order No. DA8704436.

88T1690

Nutt, Paul C. (Ohio State U., Columbus 43210). Decision Style and Strategic Decisions of Top Executives. * Technological Forecasting and Social Change, 1986, 30, 1, Aug, 19-62.

¶ The influence of decision style on strategic decisions made by 137 top executives is described. Decision style is defined, using concepts proposed by Carl G. Jung, in terms of the decisionmaker's introversion-extroversion & judgment perception predispositions as well as in terms of data & data processing preferences. The executives evaluated hypothetical capital expansion scenarios with strategic importance. In these scenarios, types of information, the decision environment, & uncertainty were defined in terms of decision style & then systematically manipulated. Each executive's age & experience were collected to qualify the findings. Decision style was found to be a highly significant factor in explaining the adoptability & perceived risk for strategic decisions. Decision style uncertainty & decision style environment interactions were found to be important & were used to explain the preferences that top executives express for diagnostic information & ways of measuring organizational performance. These preferences suggest that style may explain why managers make different strategic decisions when faced with similar choices. 7 Tables, 47 References. HA

88T1691

Pyramits, Yulo Erikhovich & Sizhkh, Alla Nikolaevna. Kachestvo upravlencheskikh resheniy (The Quality of Management Decisions). Sotsiologicheskie Issledovaniya, 1987, 14, 2, Mar-Apr, 41-48. (RUS)

¶ An experimental project is described in which Estonian (USSR) managers (N = 300) are trained to improve their leadership skills. Most of these managers are highly skilled workers without formal management training. Instruction centers on methods of managerial consultation & complex microeconomic analysis. Special attention is given to techniques for reducing worker turnover, eg, interviewing all workers at both initiation & termination of employment. 2 Photos, 7 References. G. Prostavov

88T1692

Radine, Lawrence B. (Dept Behavioral Sciences U Michigan, Dearborn 48128). Organization Theory in Administrative Law: A Proposal for a Design Science. * The American Sociologist, 1987, 18, 3, Fall, 278-283.

¶ A design science for administrative law is proposed. Organization-controlling law should be designed in terms of sociological competence. Architecture & engineering offer a model based on: (1) good fit, (2) multidisciplinary perspectives, (3) analysis & feedback on failures, & (4) a coherent paradigm. The science would begin with characteristics of regulated organizations & categories of law organization relationships & lead to better design of compliance machineries. However, methodological strictures within mainstream sociology reduce the prospects for this science. 8 References. HA

88T1693

Savage, Constance Marie (Case Western Reserve U., Cleveland OH 44106). The Envisioning Process: Dynamics of Vision in Organizational Life. * Dissertation Abstracts International, A: The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 1, July, 230-A.
Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8710082.

88T1694

Singh, Jaspal, Sampangiramaiah, S. & Kaur, Rajinder (Dept Sociology Guru Nanak Dev U., Amritsar Punjab India). Effectiveness of Consultative/Participative Bodies in Industry-Report of a Survey. * Guru Nanak Journal of Sociology, 1986, 7, 2, Oct, 13-52.

The increasing bureaucratization of society & of industry, which in developed societies has worked to increase efficiency at the price of limiting freedom, has in undeveloped societies tended not only to limit freedom it to retard economic development. In India, an attempt has been made reverse this trend by encouraging participative management. Personal interview data from 214 persons employed as managers, supervisors, workers, or trade union leaders in large factories in Karnataka State are used to assess the effectiveness of this measure. Attention is given to the formation of participative bodies, to their functioning & the effects of participation, & to attitudes toward participation. While participation as yet is not widespread in industry, awareness of it is, & participative organization is already showing its effectiveness. 53 Tables, 28 References. W. H. Stoddard

88T1695

Storey, John (School Industrial & Business Studies U Warwick, Coventry CV4 7AL England). The Management of New Office Technology: Choice, Control and Social Structure in the Insurance Industry. Journal of Management Studies, 1987, 24, 1, Jan, 43-62.

¶ Managerial practice related to the use of new office technology is investigated, with focus on issues of choice & control. After summarizing some theoretical issues from the literature on the technical & social aspects of microelectronics in work organizations, management behavior in 3 GB insurance company branches with different levels of technological sophistication is analyzed using data obtained from semistructured interviews (< not provided), observations, & documents. It is found that while control is of crucial long-term importance in shaping the general direction of organizational change regarding new technology, the process is neither straightforward nor unambiguous. Rather, managerial decisions are continually affected by variables such as organizational setting/culture, social structure, & personal meaning systems; the dialectical nature of managerial practice is emphasized. Differences in organizational practice & managerial behavior are concluded to be only indirectly associated with level of technological sophistication. 3 Tables, 50 References. Modified HA

88T1696

Symons, Gladys L. (Ecole nationale administration publique U Quebec, Montreal H2J 3G8). Coping with the Corporate Tribe: How Women in Different Cultures Experience the Managerial Role. * U Journal of Management, 1986, 12, 3, fall, 379-390.

¶ The ways in which women perceive, experience, & cope with the initiation rites of the corporate tribe (gaining entry, establishing credibility, & managing gender identity) are explored based on data from intensive interviews conducted 1978-1986 with managerial women (46 professionals & 21 self-made women) employed in a variety of industries in France & Canada. The rites these women experience transcend cultural boundaries & national frontiers. They are encountered by both professionals & self-made women, although some differences between the two groups are found. Individual coping strategies & suggestions for organizational change are discussed. 8 References. Modified HA

88T1697

Vaillet, Benedicte Marie (New York U., NY 10003). The Nuclear Safety Institution in France: Emergence and Development. * Dissertation Abstracts International, A: The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 47, 12(1), June, 4523-A.
Available from UMI, Ann Arbor MI. Order No. DA8706793.

88T1698

Weed, Frank J. (U Texas, Arlington 76019). Interorganizational Relations in Welfare Agencies as Rituals of Co-Optation. The Sociological Journal, 1986, 23, 4, Oct, 431-438.

¶ Interorganizational relations among community welfare agencies are analyzed as an outgrowth of a legitimacy problem created by funding of welfare agencies. A review of current research shows the importance of consensus among agencies, & reveals a pattern of asymmetric relationships between agencies, with the smaller, weaker agencies being more involved in interagency relations than the larger agencies with more secure funding. It is argued that grant funding places normative demands on organizations that create legitimacy problems, & that these problems, under certain conditions, lead to the process of ritual co-optation found in interagency networks. HA

88T1699

Weinreb, Batya Bertha (Stanford U., CA 94305). Cultural Reflections in Multinational Corporations: A Comparison between Israeli and U. S. Subsidiaries. * Dissertation Abstracts International, A: The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 47, 12(1), June, 4514-A-4515-A.

Available from UMI, Ann Arbor MI. Order No. DA8707760.

0700 social change and economic development

15 social change & economic development

88T1713

Andorka, Rudolf & Falussy, Bela. Az időmérleg változása, 1963-1977 (Changes in the Time Balance, 1963-1977). Szociologia, 1982, 3, 325-349 (HUN)

¶ Changes in the way of life of the Hungarian people are investigated by comparing time balance studies conducted by the Central Statistical Office in 1963 & 1977, which examined the activities of a sample of the entire population aged 15-69. It was found that official working hours & the time spent by Fs on housework had both decreased, but the proportion of Fs in employment & the number of workers holding second jobs had increased, so that the decrease in total work time was slight. Private farming was the major second job, involving about 40% of the population; this occupation had become more widespread among the village-based Wc, & time spent on it had increased. The greatest change in leisure activities was caused by the spread of TV, watching TV was the main pastime of all social strata. Differences among the time balances of the various SCs had grown: the working hours of intellectuals & professionals had decreased sharply, those of manual workers had decreased slightly, those of M farm workers had hardly changed, while those of Ru Fs had actually increased (due to more regular employment in cooperative farms). 21 Tables. Modified HA

88T1714

Archer, Sean (U Cape Town, Rosebank 7700 South Africa), South Africa's Industrial Experience in Perspective, ♦ Social Dynamics, 1987, 13, 1, June, 31-46

¶ South Africa's import replacement policies over the past 60 years have produced a diversified industrial structure, but recent disappointments have outweighed achievements in areas such as job creation, capital intensity, & the increasing resource cost of further import substitutions. UNESCO & World Bank data are used to compare South Africa to some newly industrializing countries that have become successful industrial exporters: South Korea, Hong Kong, Taiwan, & Singapore. Analysis of their SE, cultural, & political structures reveals some major differences that make it doubtful that South Africa could successfully emulate them. Some policy options are discussed. 5 Tables, 1 Figure, 41 References. Modified HA

88T1715

Balazs, Katalin, Kornai János: a hiány (János Kornai. In Short Supply). Szociologia, 1982, 1, 149-153 (HUN)

¶ Abstract not currently available

88T1716

Black, Anthony & Stanwix, John (School Economics U Cape Town, Rosebank 7700 South Africa), Manufacturing Development and the Economic Crisis: Restructuring in the Eighties, ♦ Social Dynamics, 1987, 13, 1, June, 47-59

¶ An analysis of some of the structural features of South African industrial development from 1946 to 1985 that have contributed to the deepening crisis in the manufacturing sector. Data from the Reserve Bank & Central Statistical Services indicate some negative aspects of the tremendous growth in manufacturing that took place until the 1970s, a highly polarized pattern of development was engendered by import substitution & a failure to develop a broadly based mass market due to the existence of major income/wealth inequalities. The recent introduction of neoconservative economic policies by the state & efforts by manufacturing firms to restructure are unlikely to provide a way out of the crisis. Though they do have serious implications for wages & employment, the fundamental structural constraints on manufacturing will impede further expansion. 2 Tables, 38 References. Modified HA

88T1717

Borja, Jordi, Transformaciones territoriales e institucionales en Europa (Territorial and Institutional Transformations in Europe), ♦ Revista Mexicana de Sociologia, 1986, 48, 4, Oct-Dec, 225-257.

(SPA)

¶ Recent trends in the political-administrative situation in Europe are examined, focusing on changes in institutional structures & new territorial & economic problems. Particular attention is given to France, Italy, GB, Spain, & Portugal, data from many other European countries are also reviewed. Institutional changes from the early 1970s to the present are discussed & SE & territorial phenomena underlying those changes are investigated, including the economic crisis & resulting new conceptions of Ur planning & social policy, especially as regards decentralization & citizen participation. A critical appraisal of realities of the situation & of the institutional changes is presented, & some methodological proposals concerning decentralization are put forward. 26 References. C Waters

88T1718

Brenner, Robert (U California, Los Angeles 90024), The Agrarian Roots of European Capitalism, Past and Present, 1982, 97, Nov, 16-113.

¶ A rejoinder to seven critiques of a previously published article (see SA 26 1/78J0806). Brenner summarizes his earlier argument that under different property structures & balances of power among classes in pre-industrial Europe, the same demographic & commercial trends yielded different economic results in different regions with regard to both long-term trends in the distribution of income & overall development patterns of productive forces. Thus, the feudal social property system gave way to one more conducive to growth through a shift in class relations. Challenges to these views on the internal dynamics of the European feudal economy & the divergent development of different systems of property relations as they affected long-term economic patterns are responded to in detail. Fault is found with both M. M. Postan's & John Hatcher's "Population and Class Relations in Feudal Society" (Past & Present, 1978, 78, Feb, 24-37) & E. Le Roy Ladurie's "A Reply to Professor Brenner" (Past & Present, 1978, 79, May, 55-59), discussing population-centered notions of economic development in preindustrial Europe, as well as with Guy Bois's "falling rate of feudal levy" explanation (see "Against the Neo-Malthusian Orthodoxy," Past & Present, 1978, 79, May, 60-69). The origins of different property systems that emerged in different European regions & their role in determining subsequent paths of economic development are illuminated using a general approach to feudal SE evolution that incorporates factors such as income distribution, feudal crisis, & class formation. Criticisms by Heide Wunder ("Peasant Organization and Class Conflict in East and West Germany," Past & Present, 1978, 78, Feb, 47-55), Patricia Croot & David Parker ("Agrarian Class Structure and Economic Development" Past & Present, 1978, 78, Feb, 37-47) & J. P. Cooper "In Search of Agrarian Capitalism" (Past & Present, 1978, 80, Aug, 20-65) are addressed in detail. K. Hyatt

88T1719

Buchner-Jeziorska, Anna (Instytut Socjologii U Łódzkiego, Narutowicza 65 Poland), Istota i funkcja płac w gospodarce (Essential Characteristics and Functions of Wages in the Economy), Przegląd Socjologiczny, 1986, 36, 119-130. (POL)

¶ The functions of wages for the employer are not identical with those for the employee. Very often economists analyze wage structure from the employer's perspective only. More attention should be paid to the motivational function of wages for employees. Wages give the employees an economic standard of living as well as a sense of usefulness. These factors of social stratification & capacity to participate in consumption must be considered by economists along with the simple relationship of the wage as an equivalent quantity & quality of work. 1 Figure. Modified HA

88T1720

Bugiel, Julian, Kadra techniczna w warunkach przemian społeczno-gospodarczych przedsiębiorstwa przemysłowego (Technical Cadres in Conditions of Socioeconomic Transformations in the In-

Service. Two distinct groups of instruments were identified: those describing quantitative aspects of social network & social interaction, & those describing functions & adequacy of social support. The former instruments were found to be more easily applicable in that questions were more easily & quickly understood & answered. Qualitative instruments, on the other hand, were found to include questions not universally applicable to a general population. Further research is suggested to determine the psychometric properties & illness predictive capacity of these measures. 4 Tables, 48 References. Modified HA von Collani, Gernot (Institut Psychologie Technische U. Braunschweig, D-3300 Federal Republic (Germany)). Anmerkungen zu Rechenverfahren für die Ermittlung von Cliques. Eine Replik auf Freeman & Libhart (Notes on Calculation Procedures for the Determination of Cliques. A Reply to Freeman & Libhart), Zeitschrift für Sozialpsychologie, 1987, 18, 2, 131-133. (G-FR)

88T1709

¶ A response to the criticism by L. C. Freeman & D. L. Libhart ("Eine Anmerkung zu Rattingers Algorithmus zur Ermittlung von Cliques" [A Note on Rattinger's Algorithm for the Determination of Cliques], Zeitschrift für Sozialpsychologie, 1986, 17, 119-121) of an algorithm developed by H. Rattinger for determining cliques in a social network ("Eine einfache Methode und ein FORTRAN-Programm zur Ermittlung von Cliques" [A Simple Method and a FORTRAN Program for Determining Cliques], Zeitschrift für Sozialpsychologie, 1973, 4, 5-14). The proposed solution to the inaccuracy of Rattinger's algorithm is, combining it with the slower one developed by F. Harary & I. C. Ross ("A Procedure for Clique Detection Using the Group Matrix," Sociometry, 1957, 20, 205-215)—is rejected as being insufficiently fast & accurate. It is recommended that, depending on computer language & hardware, the algorithm developed by C. Bron & J. Kerbosch ("Algorithm 457 (H) Finding all Cliques of an Undirected Graph," Communications of the ACM, 1973, 16, 575-577) or W. Knodel ("Algorithmus 8" [Algorithm 8], Computing, 1968, 3, 239-240) be used. 10 References. Modified HA

88T1710

Zimmer, Catherine & Aldrich, Howard (North Carolina State U., Raleigh 27650). Resource Mobilization through Ethnic Networks: Kinship and Friendship Ties of Shopkeepers in England, WM Sociological Perspectives, 1987, 30, 4, Oct, 422-445.

¶ Shopkeepers have social networks composed of ties to many others: family, friends, suppliers, customers, employees, & moneylenders. Examined here are the effects of ties to family & friends on three aspects of entrepreneurship: business foundations, success, & turnover—for Asian & white shopowners (N not given) in four English cities. Social ties are important for all three processes in both groups. These findings shift the focus in comparative studies of immigrant & native groups from group differences to group similarities. Studies examining only immigrants may find apparently distinctive characteristics, but, in fact, many traits are common to all small business owners. 3 Tables, 16 References. Modified HA

74 voluntary associations

88T1711

Sihlainen, M. (Jyväskylän Yhdistys, SF-40100 Finland). Intressit, yhdistyslaitos ja poliittisen järjestelmän vakaisuus (Interests, Voluntary Associations and the Stability of the Political System). * Dissertation Abstracts International C: European Abstracts, 1987, 48, 2, summer, 285. (FIN)

Unavailable from UMI; published by U. Jyväskylä, Seminaarinkatu 15, SF-40100 Finland.

88T1712

Stones, Christopher R. (Rhodes U., Grahamstown South Africa). The Volunteers: An Empirical Exploration of Relative Psychosocial Isolation, WM Small Group Behavior, 1987, 18, 2, May, 168-178.

¶ A study of 14 individuals who volunteered to live in relative psychosocial isolation for 6 months in an attempt to emulate the lifestyle of the English settlers in South Africa in 1820. Personal orientation changes over time were explored through administration of the Personal Orientation Inventory, a psychometric measure of 12 dimensions of self-actualization. Significant change was found on the self-acceptance dimension only. Group dynamics & the general lack of detected significant change in values & behavior are discussed, & trends in reorientation are examined. 1 Figure, 12 References. Modified HA

88T1731

Kao, Cheng-Shu & Hamilton, Gary G. (Dept Sociology Tunghai U, Taichung Taiwan). Max Weber and the Analysis of East Asian Industrialization. International Sociology, 1987, 2, 3, Sept, 289-300

¶ An assessment of the usefulness of Max Weber's sociology, particularly his writings on China, for the analysis of East Asian industrialization. Many scholars writing about modern Asia criticize Weber's views on the relation between Confucian values & the development of capitalism. Here it is suggested that many of these critics misinterpret Weber's writing on China. Acknowledging that Weber made errors in interpreting China, it is argued that his institutional approach is valuable in analyzing Asian economic development. This approach is outlined & briefly applied in a comparison of Japanese & Chinese industrialization in the twentieth century. Modified HA

88T1732

Kaplan, David (Dept Economic History U Cape Town, Rosebank 7700 South Africa). Machinery and Industry: The Causes and Consequences of Constrained Development of the South African Machine Tool Industry. ♦ Social Dynamics, 1987, 13, 1, June, 60-67

¶ Data from interviews with members of the South African Machine Tool Manufacturing Assoc (N not provided) & 9 of the largest machine tool producers are used to outline the principal factors responsible for the industry's retarded development. Comparison with the successful machine production of some newly industrializing Asian countries, particularly South Korea & Taiwan, indicates that reasons traditionally advanced to explain the lack of development of South Africa's capital goods sector—the small size of the domestic market & dependence on imported technologies—are inadequate for understanding the plight of the machine tool industry. A number of interrelated factors are argued to be responsible, particularly the lack of state support for the industry & some characteristics of the South African business cycle. Consequences for the overall development of other industries are discussed. 1 Table, 19 References. Modified HA

88T1733

Kim, Doo Sik (Ohio State U, Columbus 43210). A Cross-National Study on Economic Development, Cultural Dependency, and Internal Structural Mechanisms: Modernization or Dependency. ♦ Dissertation Abstracts International, 4 The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 1, July, 229-A

Available from UMI, Ann Arbor MI. Order No. DA8710014.

88T1734

Lee, Su-Hoon (Johns Hopkins U, Baltimore MD 21218). State-Building in the Periphery, 1960-1980. ♦ Dissertation Abstracts International, 4 The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 47, 12(1), June, 4513-A-4514-A

Available from UMI, Ann Arbor MI. Order No. DA8707274.

88T1735

LeFranc, Elsie (U West Indies, Mona Kingston 7 Jamaica). The Bauxite Labour Force in Jamaica: A High Wage Sector in a Dual Economy. ♦ U Social and Economic Studies, 1987, 36, 1, Mar, 217-268

¶ Data collected with a structured questionnaire administered to a 10% sample of bauxite & non-bauxite workers in Jamaica, stratified by skill category & based on the existing occupational structure, show that, although the bauxite LF comes largely from the skilled, Ur, & relatively well educated sector, the relationships within the industry between skill, education, & internal occupational mobility are contrary to most expectations, very limited, & not necessarily linear. The nonutilization of skills & the process of "deskilling" are pronounced in the bauxite sector. The levels of job dissatisfaction & commitment are also higher. One principal conclusion is that while the bauxite LF is part of the primary labor market, it exhibits secondary labor-market working conditions. This coexistence of opposing features helps to explain the instability, tension, & conflicts found. 15 Tables, 2 Appendixes, 20 References. Modified AA

88T1736

Lew, Seok-Choon (U Illinois, Urbana 61801). The Contextual Effect of Dependency on Economic Growth and Sectoral Inequality: A Cross-National Study Toward an Integration of Internal and External Factors in Third World Development. ♦ Dissertation Abstracts International, 4 The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 47, 12(1), June, 4524-A

Available from UMI, Ann Arbor MI. Order No. DA8701548.

88T1737

Mann, Susan A. (Dept Sociology U New Orleans, LA 70148). The Rise of Wage Labour in the Cotton South: A Global Analysis. ♦ The Journal of Peasant Studies, 1987, 14, 2, Jan, 226-242

¶ Much of the existing literature on the replacement of sharecropping by wage labor in the cotton-producing area of the South during the post-Depression era focuses on developments internal to the US & to the South, & fails to provide a more global analysis. Here, the impact of changes in the SC structure of Southern cotton production on both foreign cotton production & the rise of the man-made fiber industries between 1930 & 1950 is examined based on previous research & official statistics. The analysis attempts to avoid some of the major criticisms leveled against dependency theories & world-system approaches, while showing how a global approach provides a more complete understanding of the relationships between the internal & external SE factors that contributed to this historical transformation. 4 Tables, 45 References. HA

88T1738

McGuire, Patrick William (State U New York, Stony Brook 11790). The Control of Power: The Political Economy of Electric Utility Development in the United States, 1870-1930. ♦ Dissertation Abstracts International, 4 The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 47, 11, May, 4205-A

Available from UMI, Ann Arbor MI. Order No. DA8704927.

88T1739

Mehta, S. R. (Dept Sociology Panjab U, Chadigarh 160014 Union Territory India). Communication and Development: Concepts and Methods. ♦ Sociological Bulletin, 1987, 36, 1, Mar, 1-19.

¶ After a brief discussion of the role of development perspectives & ideologies in the formation of communication strategies, communication concepts & methods relevant to liberal & nonliberal development frameworks are evaluated. Further, an attempt is made to highlight the communication methods & strategies relevant to India's development within her social structure, organization, & value orientations. 25 References. Modified AA

88T1740

Meshcherkin, A. K., Rol' trudovykh kolektivov v reshenii vorosov sotsial'no-ekonomicheskogo razvitiya (The Role of Working Collectives in the Determination of Social and Economic Development Questions). Sotsiologicheskie Issledovaniya, 1987, 14, 2, Mar-Apr, 135-137. (RUS)

¶ The All-Union Scientific Conference on "Raising the Role of the Collectives in Deciding Issues of Social and Economic Development in the Light of Decisions by the Twenty-Seventh Soviet Communist Party Congress and the Tasks of Trade Unions" was held recently in Moscow (date not provided). Opening remarks were made by K. Turysov. A. I. Anchishkin spoke on the utilization of labor resources for the acceleration of economic development. S. I. Shkurko stressed the necessity of giving more decision-making power to local economic enterprises. V. P. Serikov discussed necessary legal reforms. A. K. Orlov analyzed forms of worker participation in self-management. V. V. Tkachenko discussed problems in the interpretation of new economic laws. N. I. Travkin spoke on the nature of managerial tasks. I. A. Grigor'eva discussed the brigade method of labor organization. B. I. Komarov described recent economic successes with metallurgical plants near Moscow. P. S. Pen'kov discussed necessary salary boosts for raising productivity. G. P. Makarov spoke on the need for trade unions to help resolve the housing problem. G. Prostakov.

88T1741

Near, Henry (Kibbutz Reit Ha'emek, Western Galilee 25 115 Israel). Paths to Utopia: The Kibbutz as a Movement for Social Change. Jewish Social Studies, 1986, 48, 3-4, summer-fall, 189-206

¶ The kibbutz movements have evolved a number of strategies to influence the society around them. Many have been tried & abandoned over the years, including kibbutz holism (the attempt to expand until the kibbutzim encompass the whole of Israeli society) & three versions of "kibbutz Marxism." Those which remain part of kibbutz belief & practice are: commendatory holism (a negative judgment of nonkibbutz society), belief in the kibbutz's ability to survive social catastrophe, its function as a model (or, more accurately, a prototype) for social innovation, the aspiration to moral & political leadership, service to the community at large, & education, within the youth movements & by other means. Of these, the kibbutz's role as a prototype, as a serving elite, & as an educational force, have been the most effective. AA dustrial Establishment). Przeglad Socjologiczny 1986, 36, 41-64 (POL)

- 9 To measure changes in the viewpoints of Polish engineers on political, economic, & social issues, questionnaire data were obtained in 1980, 1981, & 1987 from employees (28 = 2415) in the construction & machine tool industries. Analysis of the engineers' attitudes to their professional activity with its formal & informal social systems reveals constantly changing technological, organizational, economic, & social conditions inducing new ideas for increasing productivity & satisfaction among employees. New goals have been set for these technological cadres calling for modification of behavior. Further adjustments are needed in the areas of social diff., prestige, power structures, & wage & salary policies. 4 Tables, 3 Figures. Modified HA

88T1721

Bullock, Bradley Phillip (Vanderbilt U., Nashville, TN 37240). Basic Needs Fulfillment among Less Developed Countries, 1960-1980: Social Progress over Two Decades of Economic Growth. Dissertation Abstracts International, A: The Humanities and Social Sciences 1987, 47, 11, May, 4703A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor MI. Order No. DA8703868.

88T1722

Clark, Samuel (U. Western Ontario, London N6A 3K7, England). Nobility, Bourgeoisie and the Industrial Revolution in Belgium, Past and Present. 1984, 105, Nov., 140-175.

- 1 It is argued that though industrialization in Western Europe during the nineteenth century had a profound impact on the SC structure, its effect was not as straightforward nor immediate as has been assumed. A case study of Belgium, drawing largely on Max Weber's model of social stratification & related concepts of SS, SC, & power, reveals factors other than industrialization per se that contributed to the decline of the nobility & rise of the bourgeoisie. Research from Belgian historians & studies on the occupation & income of notables reveal that the traditional correspondence between SS & political/economic power was breaking down by the end of the eighteenth century. Though the wealth of the landed aristocracy persisted throughout the nineteenth century, the bourgeoisie & non-notables were beginning to become more powerful. Also, while the nobility remained a legal status group, its numbers continued to decline numerically, with a corresponding loss of economic & political power. The subsequent rise to power of the bourgeoisie was due to a complex interaction of factors, & particularly to the industrial & political revolutions of Belgium's nearest neighbors, France & GB. 2 Tables, 8, Hyatt

88T1723

Deutschmann, Christoph (Forschungsschwerpunkt Arbeitsmarkt und Beschäftigung, Wissenschaftszentrum Berlin, Platz der Luftbrücke 2, D-1000 42 Federal Republic Germany). Der "Betriebsclan": Der japanische Organisationstypus als Herausforderung an die soziologische Modernisierungstheorie (The "Industrial Clan": Japanese "Clan" Type Organization as a Challenge to the Sociological Theory of Modernization). Soziale Welt 1987, 38, 2, 133-147. (GER)

The efficiency & stability of Japanese industrial organizations present problems for traditional sociological theories of rational bureaucracy. An investigation of Niklas Luhmann's theory of the functional autonomy of social systems indicates that it is precisely in rejecting the dichotomy, which Luhmann believes essential, between society & organization that he flexibility & innovative power required for enhanced self-direction are maintained. Such problems faced by bureaucracy as tasks too complex to be formalized or increasing costs of internal conflict management, which are due to the assumption of a necessary monopoly of decision making power, are avoided in the "clan"-type organization. Jürgen Habermas's theory of crisis is shown to be contradicted in the Japanese case. The inflexibility of Japanese organizations with regard to employee loyalty & race & gender diversity is noted. 26 References. Modified HA

88T1724

Diesel, Caroline & van der Veer, Peter. Antropologie en de feministische ontwikkelingsociologie (Feminist Anthropology and the Sociology of Development). ♦ Sociologische Gids 1987, 34, 4, July-Aug., 296-307. (DUT)

The relationship between feminist anthropology & the sociology of development is explored. In the Netherlands a feminist variety of applied anthropology has evolved in which Western ideas about individualism, autonomy & equality are accepted without reserve. An important task of anthropology is to criticize the ideological nature of these ideas. Because the distinction between anthropology & ideology is blurred in favor of activist slogans & programs, feminist anthropology should be seen as a form of antianthropology. 26 References. Modified HA

88T1725

Dobbins, Frank Richardson (Stanford U., CA 94305). The Institutionalization of the State: Industrial Policy in Britain, France, and the United States. ♦ Dissertation Abstracts International, A: The Humanities and Social Sciences 1987, 47, 12(1), June, 4524-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor MI. Order No. DA870655.

88T1726

Giguere, Alain. Le Développement capitaliste de régions et la mobilité de la force de travail au Québec, de 1966 à 1976 (Regional Capitalist Development and Manpower Mobility in Quebec from 1966 to 1976). ♦ Sociologie et Sociétés 1987, 19, 1, Apr., 117-131. (FRE)

- 9 The spatial mobility of the Quebec population between 1966 & 1976 is examined in the light of regional capitalist development. Census data on migration & categories of economic activity & other statistical data are used. Based on the concepts of mobility & development, it is demonstrated that Quebec presents an irregular territorial distribution of its poles of development, & that LF mobility follows this distribution. A few regions within the Montreal metropolitan area have attained a relatively evolved stage of capitalist development, & consequently are able to attract a majority of migrants. In contrast, most regions in Quebec may be considered underdeveloped, & their net mobility figures are negative. 3 Tables, 3 Figures, 4 Maps, 1 Appendix, 8 References. Modified HA

88T1727

Godina-Vuk, Vesna. Socializacija in procesi reprodukcije družbe (Socialization and the Processes of Reproduction of Society). ♦ Anthropos, Časopis za sodelovanje humanističnih in naravoslovnih ved, za psihologijo in filozofijo 1986, 5, 6, 230-243. (SLO)

- 9 Basic starting points are given for studying the link between processes of socialization & social reproduction. It can be shown that socialization is above all a process of social reproduction, only in this way is it possible to explain a number of features of socialization (eg. conservatism & class socialization). Such an approach facilitates the historical analysis of socialization processes & enables us to explain the position of the individual within such processes. Modified HA

88T1728

Hall, Thomas D. (U. Oklahoma, Norman 73019). The Political Economy of Social Change in Oklahoma: Proceedings of the Annual Meeting, November 7, 1986. ♦ Free Inquiry in Creative Sociology 1987, 15, 2, Nov., 219-220.

- 9 An introduction to four papers on the theme of political economy in Okla. presented at the Nov. 1986 annual meeting of the Oklahoma Journal Society & published in this issue (see abstracts in SA 36-1). Modified AA

88T1729

Hall, Thomas D. (U. Oklahoma, Norman 73019). Why Oklahoma Sometimes Looks Like a Third World Country, but Isn't. ♦ Free Inquiry in Creative Sociology 1987, 15, 2, Nov., 235-238.

- 9 The analogy sometimes drawn between the economy of Okla. & the economies of Third World countries is argued to be only superficially applicable. The limits of this analogy temper the validity of attempts to derive suggestions about future development in Okla. from the analysis of the political economies of Third World countries. These discussions are used to generate suggestions on how sociologists might introduce development concerns into their teaching & research. 10 References. Modified AA

88T1730

Ismail, Mohamoud Mohamed (Wayne State U., Detroit MI 48202). Economic Dependency and Development: Sub-Saharan Africa. ♦ Dissertation Abstracts International, A: The Humanities and Social Sciences 1987, 47, 12(1), June, 4524-A-4525-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor MI. Order No. DA8706171.

88T1755

Yanitskiy, Oleg Nikolaevich (Soviet Academy Sciences, Leninsky Prospekt 14 Moscow V-71), Otkaz ot shablonov, lomka stereotipov (Giving Up Cliches and Overcoming Stereotypes). Kommunist, 1987, 11, July, 74-84 (RUS)

† Current attempts to restructure the USSR economy are dependent on changes in group dynamics within many small organizations. Efforts to renovate & accelerate the economy are threatened by conservative elements, including many hard-working individuals, loyal to the bureaucratic agencies employing them. Another difficulty that must be overcome is the supercentralization of authority, restructuring of the economy depends on the distribution of decision-making power at various managerial levels. Dangerously frivolous consumption patterns must also be stopped. G. Prostavkov

88T1756

Young, Frank W. (Dept. Ru Sociology Cornell U, Ithaca NY 14853), Export and Urbanization: A Comparative Study of the Province of Sub-Saharan Africa. ♦ African Urban Quarterly, 1986, 1, 2, May, 75-85

† One variant of the export impact hypothesis states that export agriculture or mining retards Ur growth, while the counterposition claims that export activity fosters economic growth & with it Ur development. These two positions are explored & tested using 1970 data coded from detailed maps of 253 subnational regions in the 40 sub-Saharan African countries. The breakdown analysis of means for towns & cities shows that mining is positively related to both positively related to both town-based & city-based urbanization & that agricultural export activity is related to the number of towns in both zones & rather strongly related to the number of cities in the hinterland, but not on the coast. Thus, the negative version of the export impact hypothesis is contradicted, except for agriculture in coastal zones. The possible interpretations of that fact are assessed. 4 Tables, 1 Appendix. Modified HA

88T1757

Zagorski, Krzysztof (Instytut Filozofii i Socjologii Polskiej Akademii Nauk, PO Box 2A PL-00-901 Warsaw), Economic Development: Agricultural and Structural Changes (General Regularities and the Case of Poland). ♦ The Polish Sociological Bulletin, 1983, 1-4(61-64), 133-142

† A discussion of the economic development & industrialization of Poland that attempts to locate the Polish experience within a larger framework of SE development. Demographic factors are shown to have greater influence in more developed European societies than previously thought, causing difficulties at more advanced stages of development, while facilitating earlier stages. Early Polish economic policy, in spite of many negative social features, facilitated the beginnings of industrialization, but later became burdensome. A changing demographic situation creates new circumstances & must be considered during economic policy formulation. 1 Table, 1 Figure. 1 Rasmussen

88T1758

Zaslavskaya, Tat'yana Ivanovna (Inst. Economics & Organization Industrial Production Siberian Division, prospekt akademika Lavren'eva 17 630090 Novosibirsk 90 USSR), Rol' sotsiologii v uskorenii razvitiya sovetskogo obshchestva (The Role of Sociology in the Acceleration of Soviet Society Development). Sotsiologicheskoe Issledovanie, 1987, 14, 2, Mar-Apr, 3-15 (RUS)

† The Twenty-Seventh Congress of the USSR Communist Party launched a titanic effort to rid socialism of negative phenomena that deter Soviet society from reaching its optimal potential. Barriers were lowered to allow individuals & families greater freedom in setting up small enterprises, & constant battle is being waged against alcoholism, crime, & bureaucracy, while literary & artistic experimentation are encouraged. These positive changes, like fundamental changes anywhere, meet opposition from conservative groups. Sociologists are expected to contribute to the new accelerated economic development by raising the scientific status of their discipline, improving professional training, making better use of statistics, maintaining the proper balance between theory & practice, & focusing on appropriate objects of study. 1 Photograph, 2 References. G. Prostavkov

49 market structures & consumer behavior

88T1759

Allesi, Bonnie Jeannine (State U New York Buffalo, Amherst 14260), Women's Shopping: A Sociological Approach. ♦ Dissertation Abstracts International, A: The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 47, 11, May, 4193-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor MI. Order No. DA8629048.

88T1760

Anderson, Paul F., On Method in Consumer Research: A Critical Relativist Perspective. ♦ The Journal of Consumer Research, 1986, 13, 2, Sept, 155-173

† A critical relativist perspective is offered on research in consumer & buyer behavior. It is argued that a relativistic construal of this area is far superior to a positivistic approach because: (1) it provides a more accurate description of how knowledge is actually generated in the field, (2) it offers a more rigorous & tough-minded approach to the evaluation of knowledge claims in the discipline, & (3) it suggests a framework for coming to grips with the various problems that arise in day-to-day research. A new model of the research generation process in social science is developed & illustrated using data from previous consumer research. 2 Figures, 1 Exhibit, 150 References. HA

88T1761

Cherrington, Ruth, Tomlinson, Dylan & Watt, Paul (Harrow Coll Higher Education, HA1 3TT England), Pinch and Clark's Patter Merchanting and the Crisis of Sociology. ♦ Sociology, 1987, 21, 2, May, 275-280. Response, 281-286.

† In a recent article, Trevor Pinch & Colin Clark report on the sales techniques used by pitchers engaged in patter merchanting in local markets in GB (see SA 34:5/86R1172). Their approach raises methodological, ethical, & substantive issues. Pinch's & Clark's work supports the belief that sociology is in a state of crisis, & justifies some popular doubts about its validity. In On Misunderstanding the Hard Sell, Pinch & Clark (U of York, Heslington, England) examine the questions raised by Cherrington, Tomlinson, & Watt, finding that some of them reflect misreadings of the original study, & suggest that further research on the sociological aspects of economic processes is needed. 4 References. Modified HA

88T1762

Deshpande, Rohit, Hoyer, Wayne D. & Donthu, Naveen (U Texas, Austin 78712), The Intensity of Ethnic Affiliation: A Study of the Sociology of Hispanic Consumption. ♦ The Journal of Consumer Research, 1986, 13, 2, Sept, 214-220

† Recent work dealing with the sociology of consumption has assumed a general homogeneity among consumers within subcultures. Consumer behavior among Hispanics in Tex is examined & compared to that of Anglos (2N = 425) using questionnaire data. An examination of recent developments in sociology & anthropology reveal that most work on the Hispanic consumer market has overlooked certain major ethnic identification differences between groups of Hispanics. Implications of these differences for future research & theory on consumer subcultures are discussed. 1 Table, 37 References. Modified HA

88T1763

Driedger, Leo & Hengstenberg, Peter (Dept Sociology U Manitoba, Winnipeg R3T 2N2), Non-Official Multilingualism: Factors Affecting German Language Competence, Use and Maintenance in Canada. ♦ Canadian Ethnic Studies/Etudes Ethniques au Canada, 1986, 18, 3, 90-109

† Although considerable research on official (English & French) language maintenance & use has been conducted in Canada, research on nonofficial languages has been limited. The present study, based on data from the 1971 & 1981 censuses, examines the Mennonite subgroup of German speakers & shows that language competence varies considerably by regions of Canada, social domain, Mennonite type, generation, place of residence, & religious orthodoxy. Significantly more foreign-born Mennonites use their ingroup language, & shifting from German to English occurs more rapidly with High German than with Low German &

88T1742

Purvatham, C. (Dept Sociology Mysore U, 570005 Karnataka India). Should Caste Be a Basis for Recognizing Backwardness?, ♦ Guru Nanak Journal of Sociology, 1986, 7, 2, Oct, 89-101

¶ An examination of how the concept of backwardness should be defined for Indian society. Concepts based solely on possession of material goods are rejected; the need to take poverty of culture, education, & experience into account as well is argued. Backwardness is not confined to only a few religions, linguistic groups, or tribes. 13 References. Modified HA

88T1743

Perez, Pedro. La coparticipación y descentralización del Estado nacional (Coparticipation and Decentralization of the National State). ♦ Revista Mexicana de Sociología, 1986, 48, 4, Oct-Dec, 175-224 (SPA)

¶ The system of distribution of resources among the national government & the provinces of Argentina is examined. Specific attention is given to the system of federal copartition, which has operated since 1935, by which nationally levied taxes are divided among the national government & the provinces. Relevant legislation & modifications of this system over time are described. Statistical data concerning the collection & distribution of this revenue during 1959-1981 are reviewed. Consequences for the system of changes in the political regime are investigated & solutions for possible problems are presented. 2 Tables, 1 Graph, 7 References. C. Waters

88T1744

Promgahutr, Worapol (Northwestern U, Evanston IL 60201). The Logic of Foreign Aid: A Case Study of Its Impact on Thailand's Post-war Development, * Dissertation Abstracts International, A: The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 1, July, 230-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8710376.

88T1745

Rahmanian, Hassan (U Pittsburgh, PA 15260). Critique of Theoretical Knowledge: A Case Study of Fundamental Problems in Theories of Development, * Dissertation Abstracts International, A: The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 1, July, 231-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8708484.

88T1746

Rau, William C. & Roncek, Dennis W. (Illinois State U, Normal 61761). Labor Force Transformations among Seven Major Industrial Nations, 1920-1970, ♦ Social Science Quarterly, 1987, 68, 2, June, 326-339

¶ A reanalysis of LF data from previous studies for 7 industrial nations from 1920 to 1970 shows that the changing concentration of labor across industrial sectors follows an almost invariant sequence. The first dimension of the analysis describes this pattern quite well & supports the sectoral-succession model of development from agriculture to manufacture & from manufacture to commerce & services. Yet, adding two more dimensions supports a multiple-path model, but only for nations at relatively advanced levels of development. 2 Tables, 1 Figure, 27 References. Modified HA

88T1747

Roach, Penelope M., The Early Peace Corps: A Retrospective on Cross-Cultural Learning, Studies in Third World Societies, 1985, 31, Mar, 1-33

¶ A case study of the first group of Peace Corps volunteers (N = 51) who were sent to Ghana in the summer of 1961. This group, "Ghana One," bore the weight of various symbols attached to the Peace Corps, & was exceptionally motivated to meet its goals of expanding US assistance abroad & increasing cross-cultural exchange & understanding. The meaning of these experiences & their subsequent effects on volunteers' personal lives & careers are assessed using data from interviews, correspondence, historical documentation, & participant observation in the Peace Corps & among returned volunteers over the past two decades. Various groups for returned volunteers at both the local & national levels are described, including their effects on US culture. 46 References. K. Hyatt

88T1748

Sengupta, Chandan (Unit Ur Studies Tata Instit Social Sciences, Sion-Trombay Rd Deonar Bombay 400088 India). Small Industry as a Social System, ♦ Sociological Bulletin, 1987, 36, 1, Mar, 55-76

¶ In many developing countries, such as India, the domestic system or preindustrial forms of economic behavior still persist in the industrial sector. Here, the nature of small industrial activities & the SE background of the workers of 8 small-scale industries are examined, based on interviews with owners & workers (N not given) during 1979/80 in Calcutta, India. Focus is on two aspects of the identification of the social system related to small industries in India: (1) how the workers are recruited & are obliged to their owners, & (2) the effect of the recruitment, background, & obligations on the social world of the workers. The position of the workers engaged in small-scale production is similar to that of nonindustrial Ur informal sectors that exist in many Third World countries. Most of them resemble the features of feudal social order despite working as productive industrial units. 10 Tables. Modified AA

88T1749

Silvert, Henry M. (New York U, NY 10003). Post-Industrial United States: A Prototypical Study of the Breakdown of the Impact of Energy Consumption on Social and Economic Indicators, * Dissertation Abstracts International, A: The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 47, 12(1), June, 4526-A-4527-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor MI. Order No. DA8706783.

88T1750

St. John, Craig (U Oklahoma, Norman 73019). Growth and Development in Oklahoma, ♦ Free Inquiry in Creative Sociology, 1987, 15, 2, Nov, 231-234

¶ Strategies for economic growth & development are considered for Okla. A distinction is drawn between simple growth, which expands existing industries, & development, which creates new industries. Okla's major industries agriculture & energy have not undergone much development, nor have new industries been created. Though it will be difficult for Okla to compete with other states in creating development, such competition is urgently needed. 3 References. W. H. Stoddard

88T1751

Szegő, Andras. Termelési viszonyok, gazdasági eredmények és a költségvetési korlát jellege (Production Relations, Economic Institutions and Budgetary Limits), Szociológia, 1982, 1, 153-163 (HUN)

¶ Abstract not currently available

88T1752

Tchaltchian, Mohammad Ali (Michigan State U, East Lansing 48824). Uneven Capitalist Development, Peripheral Urbanization, and Petty Commodity Production in Iran and Egypt: A Comparative Study with a Focus on Tehran and Cairo (1800-1970), * Dissertation Abstracts International, A: The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 47, 12(1), June, 4527-A

Available from UMI, Ann Arbor MI. Order No. DA8707199.

88T1753

Thomas, Wolfgang H., Economic Crisis or Transformation? South Africa's Economy in the Late 1980s, ♦ Social Dynamics, 1987, 13, 1, June, 1-12

¶ Discussions about South Africa's economic prospects usually focus on a wide range of contemporary problems that seem to interact in such a way as to guarantee the persistence of the current economic crisis. A comparative perspective reveals parallels between South Africa & other semideveloped upper-middle income countries, all of which are experiencing similar SE & sociopolitical transformations. Interactions between the symptoms of the current crisis & this transformation process are analyzed, & some central policy issues are reviewed. The formulation & implementation of appropriate policies aimed at strengthening this transformation process will face a significant hurdle in the current legitimacy debate. 4 References. Modified HA

88T1754

Warner, Larkin (Oklahoma State U, Stillwater 74078). What's Good about Oklahoma?, ♦ Free Inquiry in Creative Sociology, 1987, 15, 2, Nov, 221-224.

¶ Five negative linkages between economic conditions & psychological states are identified that trouble residents of Okla: (1) self-blame for the state's economic problems, (2) belief that those problems are due to a conspiracy; (3) loss of faith in public figures & institutions; (4) loss of historical perspective; & (5) despair. The resulting negative mind-set needs to be corrected. Evidence for an alternative view is advanced & the need for optimism is stressed. W. H. Stoddard

88T1773

Prus, Robert (U Waterloo, Ontario N2L 3G1). Developing Loyalty: Fostering Purchasing Relationships in the Marketplace. Urban Life, 1986-87, 15, 3-4, Oct-Jan, 331-366

† Addressing the more general topic of developing & maintaining relationships, the ways in which vendors endeavor to generate & sustain repeat patronage on the part of those with whom they do business are considered. Data collected as part of a larger ethnographic study of the social basis of marketing & sales behavior in the US are used to examine (1) the significance of repeat patronage for businesses & those working therein, (2) the forms this patronage assumes, & (3) vendor attempts to cultivate repeat patronage. Although uneven in their efforts, vendors' efforts to promote such patronage reflects buyer perspectives, identifications, activities, investments, & relationships. These themes suggest some of the more general limitations people encounter in their attempts to sustain the involvements of others in particular settings. 38 References. HA

88T1774

Ryan, Michael (School Communication U Houston, TX 77004). Public Relations Practitioners' Views of Corporate Social Responsibility. Journalism Quarterly, 1986, 63, 4, winter, 740-747, 762

† Questionnaire data from members of public relations practitioners' professional associations (N = 135) are analyzed to determine the extent to which the Rs are committed to the view that corporations & practitioners themselves should act in a socially responsible manner. Broad questions designed to tap the general attitudes of the Rs toward several social responsibility issues were utilized. Results indicate a virtually unanimous response assessing programs that are good for society as good business, relating social responsibility to credibility, linking corporate social responsibility to firm management conviction, & stressing the need for consistent action in the public's interest. 2 Tables. 1. Rasmussen

88T1775

Weinstein, Jay & McIntyre, John R. (Eastern Michigan U, Ypsilanti 48197). Multinational Corporations and the Diffusion of World Standards: A Theoretical Exploration. Studies in Comparative International Development, 1986, 21, 3, fall, 51-84

† Current research on multinational corporations (MNCs) is connected with cultural diffusion theory in several social science disciplines. Research on MNCs has failed to achieve the theoretical significance merited by the phenomenon, in large part because of disciplinary & ideological partisanship that characterizes such research. In a self-conscious attempt to render an interdisciplinary & unbiased account of the impacts of the MNCs in host societies, two related hypotheses are developed & discussed: (1) MNCs are effective agents of the diffusion of modern culture, playing a role in contemporary international relations comparable to the roles played by missionaries & invading armies during the colonial era. (2) In particular, the MNCs are active in the diffusion of world standards of belief & behavior, although this activity is usually the unintended, unanticipated outcome of the pursuit of other, manifest corporate goals. 1 Table, 64 References. Modified AA

88T1776

Whittaker, John (U Cape Town, Rosebank 7700 South Africa). Monetary Policy: Its Scope and Limitations. Social Dynamics, 1987, 13, 1, June, 13-20

† Based on the observation & analysis of the institutional practices of South Africa's Reserve Bank, it is argued that domestic monetary policy is nothing more than interest rate policy for short-term loans. Examination of the effects of recent interest rate changes indicates that South Africa has not successfully fulfilled the objective of controlling price inflation through a suitable choice of interest rates. It is argued that this strategy has not been consistently pursued due to political uncertainty. The possibility of relieving the current recession through fiscal stimulus is doubtful, & the reduction of nonproductive state expenditures is offered as a more viable solution. 1 Figure, 5 References. Modified HA

70 capitalism/socialism—world systems

88T1777

Altwater, Elmar (Freie U Berlin, D-1000 33 Federal Republic Germany). The Crisis of the World Finance System. The Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science, 1987, 492, July, 36-48

† Unemployment has become a structural feature in all industrialized countries because a worldwide decline in the profit rate has reduced the speed of economic growth. This decline has been due mainly to the decreasing productivity of capital in the course of ever-increasing capital intensity of production. The crisis is perpetuated by two additional factors: (1) the decay of the order-maintaining capability of the US, & (2) the expansion of uncontrolled international credit, as funds were diverted from relatively unprofitable real investment to profitable financial investment. The need to service the debt, which was thus accumulated, keeps up the demand for fresh credits & prevents interest rates from becoming low enough not to discourage real investment. To overcome the crisis, debt would have to be written off, which in turn requires some form of consensus on how to distribute the resulting losses. HA

88T1778

Arato, Andrew (Dept Sociology New School Social Research, New York NY 10011). The Budapest School and Actually Existing Socialism. Theory and Society, 1987, 16, 4, July, 593-619

† A discussion of Ferenc Fehér's, Agnes Heller's, & Gyorgy Markus's Dictatorship over Needs (New York: St. Martin's Press, 1983 [see listing in IRPS No. 41]). This work represents a new departure in Marxism in that Fehér et al do not merely apply its concepts but reconstruct them through an analysis of Soviet type societies. The book explores the nature of these societies, the process of their legitimation, the relationship of structure & history, the modernity of these societies, their contradictions, crisis tendencies, & possibilities for conflict & change. W. H. Stoddard

88T1779

Čifrić, Ivan. Osvrt na terminologiju i poimanje dualne privrede (An Overview of the Terminology and Conceptions of Dual Economy). Revija za Sociologiju, 1985, 15, 1-2, Jan-June, 107-120. (SCR)

† Literature on different aspects of the crisis of capitalism has increased over the last ten years. The dual economy has been proposed as an alternative to problems caused by technological development & heated economic competition. Various terms found in Western economic literature are explained for a Yugoslav audience interested in the theory of dual or "parallel" economies. While some Western economists argue in favor of parallel economies as a means of reducing unemployment, the feminist & radical left movements are against this solution. 4 Tables. Modified HA

88T1780

D'Incao, Maria Angela (Dept Sociologia & Anthropologia Faculdade Educação Filosofia Ciências Sociais Documentação U Estadual Paulista, 17500 Marília São Paulo Brazil). Notas sobre o capitalismo agrário no Brasil (Notes on Brazilian Agrarian Capitalism). Perspectivas, 1985, 8, 29-39. (POR)

† A study of current trends in Brazilian agricultural capitalism is presented, focusing on the Alta Sorocabana region of São Paulo state. Since 1970 the feudal-type relationships between the large landowners & the landless peasantry have changed to a partially capitalistic system, with wages being introduced for the first time for certain types of workers. Analysis of size of the land holdings vis-a-vis type of remuneration (sharecropping, tenant farming, daily wage, & monthly wage) reveals that the landowners lack sufficient capital to fully implement a capitalist wage system in the modern sense. Both landowners & landless farmworkers will continue to rely on precapitalist relationships for some time. 1 Table, 7 References. Modified HA

88T1781

Elsenhans, Hartmut (U Konstanz, 7750 Federal Republic Germany). Staatsklasse, Umverteilung und die Überwindung von Unterentwicklung. Versuch einiger nichtpolemischer Klarstellungen zum "Ansatz von Hartmut Elsenhans" (State Class, Redistribution, and the Overcoming of Underdevelopment. Attempt at a Nonpolemical Elucidation in Response to "The Stance of Hartmut Elsenhans"). Peripherie, 1985-86, 6, 22-23, fall-winter, 149-165. (GER)

† A response to criticism voiced by Wolfgang Hein ("Staatsklasse, Umverteilung und die Überwindung von Unterentwicklung", Peripherie, 1985, 18/19, 172-186). It is argued that bureaucratically governed, de-

Pennsylvania Dutch speakers. As urbanization increases, use of English increases. It was found that Ku segregated, institutionally complete ethnic enclaves provide much support for language maintenance & that U. areas, where enclaves are not possible, are least supportive contexts for language maintenance. 3 Tables, 1 Figure, 58 References. Modified HA

88T1764

Dukarevich, Evgeniy Abramovich. Potrebitel'skoe povedenie v usloviyakh defitsita (Consumer Behavior under Deficit Conditions). Sotsiologicheskie Issledovaniya, 1987, 14, 2, Mar-Apr, 65-68 (RUS)

* An analysis of consumer behavior in the USSR based on questionnaire data obtained from adults ($N = 1,938$) in Leningrad in 1985. The results show that for many high fashion items (eg, leather shoes), about 10% of those visiting the store are not buying shoes for themselves, but for someone else to whom they can sell them at a profit. Such practices have adverse effects on price setting mechanisms & lead to artificially high demand & short supply. 2 Tables, 7 References. G. Prostakov

88T1765

Farber, Stephen (Louisiana State U, Baton Rouge 70803). Market Segmentation and the Effects of Group Homes for the Handicapped on Residential Property Values, Urban Studies, 1986, 23, 6, Dec, 519-525

* Seeking to determine whether the existence of group homes ($N = 9$) for the retarded & emotionally disturbed in submarkets of the Shreveport-Bossier City, La. SMSA affected property values, price levels, price increases, & length of time on the market were used as measures of effects. Housing markets were divided into high & below average SE markets, both predominantly white. In high SE markets, there was no observable, statistically significant effect of such a home on housing prices, but there was some evidence that the opening of a group home might have increased the time a house remained on the market before being sold. In below average SE areas, where housing markets were weak, there was an observable, statistically significant increase in the price of houses. Both the time-on-the-market effect in the high SE market & the price effect in the below average SE market diminished with distance from the site of the group home. 2 Tables, 11 References. Modified AA

88T1766

Featherstone, Mike (Dept Sociology, Teesside Polytechnic, Middlesbrough Cleveland TS1 3BA England). Lifestyle and Consumer Culture. ♦ Theory, Culture & Society, 1987, 4, 1 Feb, 55-70

Recently the concept of "lifestyle" has become popular as denoting an image of consumer culture based on choice & individualization. An attempt is made to critique that view, without adopting the opposite perspective of lifestyle & consumption as totally manipulated by capitalist mass society. The concept of consumer culture is proposed, & it is argued that what is consumed is not use values so much as signs. The theoretical perspective of Pierre Bourdieu (Distinction: A Social Critique of the Judgement of Taste, Nice, R [Tr], London: RKP, 1984 [see IRPS No. 9/85c00510]) offers a basis for a fuller understanding of this concept. The petite bourgeoisie of producers of symbolic goods & services is the group particularly concerned with lifestyle, seeking to take on the manners of intellectual elites but not at ease with themselves. Current developments in the intellectual/cultural sphere are analyzed from this viewpoint. 32 References. AA

87T1767

Fischer, Claude S. (U California, Berkeley 94720). Comment on Gartman, Sociological Theory, 1987, 5, 2, Fall, 201-202. Reply, 202-203

A refutation of David Gartman's thesis (see SA 35 3/87R5776) that the automobile was mystified, reified, & marketed to US workers as a way of distracting them from the alienation & exploitation of their labor. Analysis of the history of US advertising reveals that automobile ads are directed at the Mc housewife rather than the industrial worker. Gartman has ignored the historical record concerning how cars were manufactured & who their consumers were. In Reply to Fischer, Gartman (U of South Alabama, Mobile) argues that his purpose was not to offer a detailed case study of the automobile, but an interpretive history, as, his seeming neglect of "historical" sources. He reiterates that work's automobile consumption was not merely a product of corporate manipulation through advertising, & that consumer needs are socially constituted in social conflicts. 27 References. K. Hyatt

88T1768

Formicheffa, Cecelia & Thomas, J. Stephen (U South Alabama, Mobile 36688). Personal Ties between Shrimpers and Buyers in a Gulf Coast Fishing Community. ♦ U Sociological and Social Research, 1987, 71, 4, July, 271-274

* An exploration of the reasons shrimp fishermen in Bayou La Barte, Ala, give for selecting the dealers to whom they sell their catch, based on questionnaire data from fishermen & dealers ($N = 150$ & 17, respectively). In the absence of market information, social rather than economic factors best predict dealer selection. Reasons given for the selection of specific dealers have no inherent economic payoff for fishermen, reflecting instead personal relationships & goals. It is suggested that such relations provide long-term economic security at the expense of short-term economic gain. 4 Tables, 10 References. HA

88T1769

Gibson, Bill, Lustig, Nora & Taylor, Lance (U Massachusetts, Amherst 01003). Terms of Trade and Class Conflict in a Computable General Equilibrium Model for Mexico. ♦ The Journal of Development Studies, 1986, 23, 1, Oct, 40-59

* A computable general equilibrium model for Mexico is constructed, in which SC conflict over the distribution of the surplus is the principal determinant of the terms of trade. The model consists of seven SCs & eight productive sectors. SCs are distinguished as fundamental or subsumed, according to whether their incomes are primarily determined by conscious SC struggle or by the resulting system of relative prices. Flexible prices are assumed to clear markets for which nonproduced means of production, such as agricultural land, limit supply, while output in the remaining sectors is determined by the level of effective demand. For the latter sectors, two theories of price formation are compared & are seen to differ radically in their implicit conception of the nature of SC conflict. A "Keynes-Kalecki" closure is considered in which prices are determined by a fixed mark-up on costs. This enables capitalists to protect themselves from incursions on the rate of profit due to labor militancy or state-imposed terms-of-trade policy designed to favor peasants &/or the agrarian bourgeoisie. A second, "Marx-Straffian" price closure constrains the economy to a wage-profit-terms-of-trade surface; where the economy conjuncturely resides on this surface depends on the level of effective demand, wages, & terms-of-trade policy. Various policy scenarios are investigated under both closures. 3 Tables, 1 Figure, 1 Appendix, 28 References. HA

88T1770

Ho, Kong-Chong (U Chicago, IL 60637). Interests, Relationships and Networks in Three Builder Clubs in Chicago. ♦ Dissertation Abstracts International, 4, The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 47, 11, May, 4203-A-4204-A

Unavailable from UMI; contact the degree-granting university.

88T1771

Mick, David Glen. Consumer Research and Semiotics: Exploring the Morphology of Signs, Symbols, and Significance. ♦ U The Journal of Consumer Research, 1986, 13, 2, Sept, 196-213

* The importance of signs & symbols has been widely recognized, but few consumer researchers have developed theory & research programs based on semiotics, the doctrine of signs. The emergence & principal perspectives of semiotics are outlined, & its applications & implications for consumer research are discussed. Among its strengths, semiotics positioning meaning at the nucleus of consumer behavior, provides a rich meta-language for semiotic consumer research, & recommends a multi-paradigm philosophy of science. 3 Figures, 175 References. HA

88T1772

Moschis, George P. (Georgia State U, Atlanta 30303). The Role of Family Communication in Consumer Socialization of Children and Adolescents. ♦ U The Journal of Consumer Research, 1985, 11, 4, Mar, 898-913

* An examination of the effects of interpersonal communication-particularly family communication-on the consumer behavior of young people. Family communication processes & effects are conceptualized, literature regarding the role of family communication in consumer learning of children & adolescents is reviewed, & a set of propositions on the basis of theory research are developed. Suggestions are made for future research directions. 1 Figure, 84 References. Modified HA

* A conference on how the central planning organization of socialist countries could better deal with the consumption of public funds was held in Sofia, Bulgaria, in autumn 1986. O. Sobek & A. Zatkulikova noted that certain categories of society have needs not adequately addressed. T. Stoykov & E. Maslarova showed how the current system lowers worker productivity. V. M. Rutgayser spoke on a new measure of national welfare. P. Ondračka addressed differentiated & centralized approaches to the problem. I. Zukowska, D. Eney, & G. Bali cited miscalculations in determining worker pensions. G. Prostavkov

88T1791

Timberlake, Michael & Williams, Kirk R. (Memphis State U, TN 38152), Structural Position in the World-System, Inequality, and Political Violence. ♦ Journal of Political and Military Sociology, 1987, 15, 1, spring, 1-15.

* Based on the empirically documented relationship between position in the world system & income inequality &, in turn, the impact of inequality on violence, it is argued that structural position in the world system should directly & indirectly influence the magnitude of lethal political violence. The argument is empirically tested using cross-national data from various sources (primarily, media reports of political events) for 60 countries (none of which are in Eastern Europe) to estimate single & simultaneous equation models. Results indicate that both peripheral & semiperipheral positions in the world system have independent positive effects on income inequality, which in turn has similar effects on deaths due to political violence. Implications for further such cross-national analyses are discussed. 48 References. Modified HA

88T1792

Althameen, Yousef A. (American U, Washington DC 20016), The Welfare State in Saudi Arabia: Structure, Dynamics, and Function. * Dissertation Abstracts International, A: The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 47, 12(1), June, 4523-A-4524-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor MI. Order No. DA8700012.

88T1793

Wallerstein, Immanuel (Fernand Braudel Center State U New York, Binghamton 13901), World System and Civilization. ♦ World Development, 1986, 1-2, 114-119.

* A discussion of concepts of civilization & world systems relating definitions to historical processes. Problems of ambiguity in definitions of civilization are explored, & shortcomings of Marxist definitions are discussed. Three variations of historical systems are suggested: (1) mini-systems, (2) world-empires, & (3) world-economies. Definitions of these systems are offered & their relationship to the ideological construction of civilization is analyzed. The moral & political dilemma related to the concept of civilization & its relevance to problems of the late twentieth century are elaborated. F. Rasmussen

88T1794

Williams, Kristen M. (American Embassy, Beijing People's Republic China), Is "Unequal Exchange" a Mechanism for Perpetuating Inequality in the Modern World System?. ♦ Studies in Comparative International Development, 1985, 20, 3, fall, 47-73.

* An investigation of the unequal exchange model (Emmanuel, Arghiri, Unequal Exchange: A Study of the Imperialism of Trade, New York, Monthly Review, 1972) as a mechanism for perpetuating inequality as compared to other models for analyzing national development. A panel study was conducted with data collected for four points in time: 1960, 1965, 1970, & 1975—with 13 variables for 16 core countries & 24 peripheral countries included. None of the theoretical models tested can form a complete framework for interpreting the empirical findings obtained. A new model that might be useful in future research is discussed. 7 Tables, 6 Figures, 1 Appendix, 40 References. F. Rasmussen

88T1795

Zald, Mayer N. (Center Advanced Study Behavioral Sciences, 202 Junipero Serra Blvd Stanford CA 94305), Review Essay: The New Institutional Economics. ♦ American Journal of Sociology, 1987, 93, 3, Nov, 701-708.

* A review essay on Oliver E. Williamson's The Economic Institutions of Capitalism: Firms, Markets, Relational Contracting (New York: Free Press, 1985 [see listing in IRPS No. 41]). Williamson's work is seen as a major contribution to the sociology & economics of organizational life. In this work he has moved beyond the firm to larger issues of the organization of economic life—to issues of the boundaries of the firm, the nature of contracting, decisions to internalize or externalize transactions, & the comparative efficiency of alternative forms of work organization. Transaction-cost economics have been applied to an extraordinary range of economic phenomena extending & elaborating a version of property rights theory. 16 References. F. Rasmussen veloping Third World countries where social surplus is controlled by political (state) classes cannot be considered capitalist, despite such aspects as wage labor & partial integration into the world capitalist system. Other topics discussed include: (1) the relation between types of consumption & economic growth; (2) differences in the concepts of "state" & "class" between capitalist & bureaucratic societies; (3) the dependence of state classes on the capitalist world system; & (4) the typology of the bureaucratic development mode of production. 28 References. Modified HA

88T1784

Fengin, Joe R. (Dept Sociology U. Texas, Austin 78712). Irrationality in Real Estate Investment: The Case of Houston. ♦ Monthly Review, 1987, 38, 10, Mar, 18-27.

* A discussion of the overbuilding of Houston, Tex, in the last two decades illustrates how capital overaccumulation leads to irrational behavior. The economic history of Houston is traced, & developments since the 1982 economic decline are discussed. Overproduction of commodities & overaccumulation of money capital are chronic problems in a capitalist system, & real estate investment is seen as a secondary circuit for investment of surplus capital. This secondary investment is not undertaken for solely corporate or value reasons, but also for purely financial reasons, leading to the irrational investment behavior seen in the Houston example. 1 Table. F. Rasmussen

88T1783

Fornalczyk, Anna (Instytut Ekonomii Politycznej U. Łódzkiego, Narutowicza 65 Poland). Mechanizm artykulacji interesów ekonomicznych w różnych formach własności ogólnonarodowej (Mechanisms of Articulation of Economic Interests in Different Forms of National Ownership). Przegląd Socjologiczny, 1986, 36, 21-40. (POL)

* An analysis of nationalized socialist ownership of the means of production in Poland, focusing on the determination of management objectives, the means necessary for their accomplishment, the current management of economic processes, & the disposal of realized income. The objective or subjective role of employees in the execution of economic ownership functions is a criterion in distinguishing between forms of socialist ownership. Procedures are analyzed for the determination of SE goals on a macroeconomic scale. Such procedures differ according to the subject accomplishing the economic functions of ownership: (1) the socialist state on behalf of society; (2) the socialist state with the participation of society; & (3) the society by various means of self-management. Doctrinal assumptions here differ as regards: (A) unity of interest; (B) application of social consultations; & (C) recognition of a pluralism of economic interests requiring negotiation. Modified HA

88T1784

Foster, John Bellamy (U. Oregon, Eugene 97403). The United States and the Crisis of World Finance. ♦ Monthly Review, 1987, 38, 10, Mar, 5-17.

* A review essay on Susan Strange's Casino Capitalism (New York: Basil Blackwell, 1986 [see listing in IRPS No. 41]). The title of this work conveys the primary metaphor of its message, ie, the Western financial system has come to resemble a vast casino. Strange describes an explosion in the financial superstructure of the modern, advanced capitalist economy, which is expanding both absolutely & relatively in comparison to a stagnant industrial base. It is argued that (1) the roots of the world's economic disorder are monetary & financial; & (2) the disorder has not come about by accident, but has in fact been nurtured & encouraged by a series of governmental decisions. However, Strange makes no serious attempt to defend the first contention, & the argument in support of the second point is inadequately grounded in material facts. F. Rasmussen

88T1785

Ka, Chih-Ming & Selden, Mark (State U. New York, Binghamton 13901). Original Accumulation, Equity and Late Industrialization: The Cases of Socialist China and Capitalist Taiwan. World Development, 1986, 14, 10-11, Oct-Nov, 1293-1310.

Based on official statistics & previous empirical research, two dynamic approaches to original accumulation—that of socialist China (1953-1957) & that of capitalist Taiwan (1953-1960)—are explored in a search for cues to the developmental options available for preindustrial, predominantly agrarian nations. The comparative analysis of these two cases highlights the human costs associated with each, & suggests the necessity to rethink the categories of socialist & capitalist development paths. The analysis focuses on the relationships among the state, the peasantry, & the dominant landed class in the struggle to control & channel agricultural surplus & on state mechanisms to transfer resources from agriculture to industry & from the private sector to the state & the institutions it controls. 13 Tables, 85 References. Modified HA

88T1786

Kuvačić, Ivan. O socijalnim osnovama privrednog zastoja u socijalističkim zemljama (Social Basis of the Economic Recession in Socialist Countries). Revija za Sociologiju, 1985, 15, 1-2, Jan-June, 3-23. (SCR)

* An international literature review is presented showing various analyses of the recent economic recessions in socialist countries. Western interpretations generally proceed by investigating the different economic & social characteristics of socialist societies, stressing important differences between capitalism & socialism, eg, maximization of profit vs power of state apparatus or individualization vs collectivism. Additional studies offering empirical data on the social reasons for the recession are needed. Modified HA

88T1787

Lazic, Mladen (Institut društvena istraživanja, Zagreb Yugoslavia). O općim uzrocima društvenih kriza u realnom socijalizmu—teze (General Sources of Social Crisis in Real Socialism—Theses). Revija za Sociologiju, 1985, 15, 1-2, Jan-June, 25-29. (SCR)

* An analysis is presented of the key reasons for the social crisis in the countries of "real socialism," ie, the Warsaw Pact nations. Emphasis is given to the structural elements producing the crisis & to different contradictions within the system, eg, poor planning, low labor productivity, oscillation between centralization & decentralization, militarization of the system, & the absence of inherently adaptive dynamic mechanisms. Modified HA

88T1788

Neuhaus, Richard John. Capitalism, Radicalism, and the New Order. The Public Interest, 1987, 88, summer, 112-118.

* A review essay on Samuel Bowles's & Herbert Gintis's Democracy and Capitalism: Property, Community, and the Contradictions of Modern Social Thought (Basic Books, 1986), & Peter I. Berger's The Capitalist Revolution: Fifty Propositions about Prosperity, Equality, and Liberty (Basic Books, 1986 [see listings in IRPS No. 41]). These two books contrast markedly. Bowles & Gintis seek to defend a new radicalism that fuses radical democracy with liberal & Marxist values, while Berger argues that democratic capitalism has a far better track record than any form of socialism in fulfilling people's desires. Bowles & Gintis are visionaries ultimately looking forward to a socialist revolution, while Berger is consistently empirical & acknowledges capitalism's lack of a mythopoetic vision. Berger's only failing may be his nonrecognition of a growing worldwide awareness that socialism cannot deliver the things people actually want, or fulfill the promise seen in it by advocates such as Bowles & Gintis. W. H. Stoddard

88T1789

Rausch, Sibylle (Hochschule Wirtschaft und Politik, Von-Melle-Park 9 2000 Hamburg 13 Federal Republic Germany). Frauenarbeit in der Bekleidungsproduktion: Veränderungen der internationalen Arbeitsstellung durch Einsatz neuer Technologien? (Female Employment in the Garment Industry: Changes in the International Division of Labor Due to New Technologies?). ♦ Peripherie, 1985-86, 6, 22-23, fall-winter, 137-148. (GER)

* The new international DoLE is discussed, based on a review of numerous studies. For the past decade, the West German garment industry has been shifting production abroad, replacing badly paid F labor at home by worse paid F labor in developing countries. Today, automation of the garment industry is technically feasible &, thanks to state assistance, is expected to be competitive by the 1990s. A repatriation of high-technology garment production might take place. Automation will certainly change & reduce employment worldwide. Newly created jobs will probably be occupied by Ms, because of high technical qualification requirements & work protection rules. However, this is not a technical necessity, but a consequence of the specific use made of technology by a society that discriminates against Fs. 32 References. Modified HA

88T1790

Rutgayzer, V. M., Ratsional'noe ispol'zovanie obschestvennykh fondov potrebleniya (The Rational Usage and Consumption of Public Funds). Sotsiologicheskie Issledovaniya, 1987, 14, 2, Mar-Apr, 139-141. (RUS)

0800 mass phenomena

26 social movements

88T1796

Anderson, Kevin (Northern Illinois U, Dekalb 60115-2854). Review Essay, Revolutions. ♦ Journal of Political and Military Sociology 1987, 15, 1, Spring, 125-127.

* A review essay on Revolutions: Theoretical, Comparative and Historical Studies (Goldstone, Jack [Ed], San Diego, Calif: Harcourt Brace Jovanovich, 1986) & Rava Dunayevskaya's Women's Liberation and the Dialectics of Revolution: Reaching for the Future (Atlantic Highlands, NJ: Humanities Press International, 1985 [see listings in IRPS No. 41]). These works share a sympathetic view of revolution, but differ in their focus & theoretical orientation. They are a welcome addition to the sociology of revolution in that they analyze more recent upheavals (since 1979) than have previous works. Goldstone's collection of twenty-four previously published essays is largely influenced by the social-structural approach of Theda Skocpol, moving away from traditional Marxian models. Dunayevskaya's collection of twenty-eight essays focuses on women & revolution, & employs a Marxist-humanist perspective to explore some new issues within Marxian theories of revolution. K. Hunt.

88T1797

Appelgryn, Ans E. M. (Dept Sielkunde U Suid-Afrika, Pretoria 0001). Relatiewe deprivasie en militantheid in die Suid-Afrikaanse konteks (Relative Deprivation and Militancy in the South African Context) ♦ Suid-Afrikaanse Tydskrif vir Sosiologie/The South African Journal of Sociology 1987, 18, 3, Aug, 95-101 (Afr).

An investigation of the relationship between relative deprivation & militancy in South Africa. Information on relative deprivation, biographical background, ethnic attitudes, conservatism & the experience of justice were obtained from 361 blacks, 335 Coloureds, 402 Indians, 129 Afrikaans speaking whites, & 134 English-speaking whites. Multiple regression analysis shows that age, negative attitudes toward whites, & degree of economic deprivation significantly influenced black militancy, while negative attitudes toward Afrikaans-speaking whites most significantly affected Coloured militancy, & attitudes toward English-speaking whites most significantly affected Indian militancy. Among white SAs, feelings of justice regarding their social situation explained a significant part of the variance in militancy. 6 Tables, 28 References. Modified HA.

88T1798

Argersinger, Peter H. (U Maryland Baltimore County, Catonsville 21228). Populists in Power: Public Policy and Legislative Behavior. ♦ The Journal of Interdisciplinary History 1987, 18, 1, Summer, 81-105.

* A discussion of the practical policy objectives of Populists in power in the US, based on cohesion/disagreement index analysis of 81 roll-call votes in the 1897 Kansas State Senate. Specific issues that divided the legislators are analyzed, & the nature of the different groupings & their implications for traditional political questions about Populism are assessed. It was found that a majority of Populists worked against a fairly consistent Republican opposition to fashion a Populist legislative program. 3 Tables. F. Rasmussen.

88T1799

Austin, James E., & Ickis, John C. (Graduate School Business Administration Harvard U, Cambridge MA 02138). Management, Managers, and Revolution. World Development 1986, 14, 7, July, 775-790.

* The role of management & managers in the revolutionary process is explored via interview & survey data (N not provided) collected in postrevolutionary Nicaragua over a six-year period & supplemented with data from previous research on other nations. During revolutions, the increased demand for & decreased supply of managers create a costly management gap, resulting in significant problems in mobilizing & developing managers for state-owned enterprises & in motivating private sector managers who face eroding SS & changing societal values. Conflicting relationships with some segments of the private sector complicate the task. Avenues for further research on management & revolution are suggested. 62 References. Modified HA.

88T1800

Back, Kurt W. (Dept Sociology Duke U, Durham NC 27706). The Logic of Socially Innovative Movements. ♦ Journal for the Theory of Social Behaviour 1987, 17, 2, June, 161-180.

* Rules of development for innovative social movements are proposed, using concepts of modal logic. The initial impetus comes in a situation where actions & beliefs have been seen as impossible & forbidden & this steady state has been disturbed. The first, active, phase makes new patterns possible & leads to more alternatives in society. However, this situation is not stable & further development tends toward the innovation to be necessary & required, leading to a new steady state. Other alternatives happen in special conditions. Examples are shown in the family planning movement (a successful movement) & the encounter group movement (a failing movement). 1 Figure, 27 References. AA.

88T1801

Bakuniak, Grzegorz & Nowak, Krzysztof (c/o Nowak Instytut Socjologii U Warsaw, PL-00325 Poland). The Creation of a Collective Identity in a Social Movement: The Case of "Solidarność" in Poland. Theory and Society 1987, 16, 3, May, 401-429.

* An analysis of the formation of the collective identity of Poland's Solidarity movement based on a reconstruction of the social process that generated this movement. Key events in recent Polish history are reviewed, including the strikes of June 1976, the papal visit of June 1979, the strikes of July 1980, the Gdansk shipyard strikes of Aug 1980, & the warning strike of Oct 1980. All of these episodes represent the basic conflict between civil society & the party & state. W. H. Stoddard.

88T1802

Beames, M. R. (University Coll Swaziland, Kwaluseni). The Ribbon Societies: Lower-Class Nationalism in Pre-Famine Ireland, Past and Present. 1982, 97, Nov, 128-143.

* An examination of the specific historical character of the Ribbon societies that flourished in late eighteenth- & early nineteenth-century Ireland. A nationalist movement of the Catholic 1cs, Ribbonism arose between the demise of the United Irish movement & the emergence of Young Ireland, & was the only organized sector of the Catholic community that expected Irish independence to be achieved by rebellion & violence. Data from diaries, police records, & historical reports reveal the occupational & social backgrounds of Ribbonmen as well as the organizational structure of the movement. Their failure as revolutionaries is attributed to inherent contradictions between their organizational structure & insurrectionary tactics which were based on mysticism & ritual rather than military knowledge. Their work continued into the 1840s, however, in the form of continued opposition to the Orange Order, involvement in labor disputes, & function as mutual aid societies or clubs. Their resemblance to the secret ritual brotherhoods that characterized other European cities during the same period is discussed. 2 Tables. K. Hyatt.

88T1803

Browett, J. (School Social Sciences Flinders U, Bedford Park South Australia 5042). On the Significance of Geographical Space: Reply to Smith. International Journal of Urban and Regional Research 1987, 11, 2, June, 262-269.

* A reply is offered to Neil Smith's critique (see SA 34 5/86Q9815) of a previously published article (see SA 33 1/85Q4748). Three points of misunderstanding: the original article's focus on uneven regional development within advanced capitalist nations, its critique of claims that uneven spatial development is necessary for capitalism's survival, & its recognition of the relevance of geographic analysis are clarified. Three issues of substantive disagreement are noted: it is necessary for advanced capitalism to have uneven regional development, spatiality is not central to social life, & spatial centralization is not the inevitable consequence of social centralization. 27 References. W. H. Stoddard.

88T1804

Brustein, William & Levi, Margaret (Dept Sociology U Utah, Salt

STUDIES OF MEANING LANGUAGE & CHANGE

Language interpreted as a collection of interacting idiolects, less than perfect as a means of interpreting experience. An interpretive epistemology which also emphasises difficulties of communication and differences between individuals. An object-relations theory of human action. Plus the application of these ideas to cultural problems.

Edited by David Wells, and published three times each year by Rain Publications, 6 Carmarthen Road, Westbury on Trym, Bristol, England BS9 4DU.

Some recent articles and issues

Scientists, priority and the schizoid personality (SMLC 13)
Theories as first approximations, only (SMLC 16)
Out of this world: Wellek and Popper (SMLC 16)
Mathematicians and dissidence (SMLC 17)
General concepts, and teaching (SMLC 18)

No. 19, July 1987

Idiolectal interactionism
Rational, corational, irrational
Science, beauty and corationality

No. 20, November 1987

Epistemology of abstract games and mathematics

ORDER FORM: STUDIES OF MEANING, LANGUAGE & CHANGE

Rain Publications, 6 Carmarthen Road, Westbury on Trym, Bristol, England BS9 4DU

Please send me the current issue, SMLC 20 (£1 to individuals or institutions, prepaid.)

Please enter my subscription for 1 year, starting with issue _____.

(Subscription rates: for any three consecutive issues, £3 for individuals, prepaid, £5 to institutions, which will be invoiced.)

I enclose my cheque for _____ / Please invoice.

Date _____

Name

Address

media. The results provide mixed support for the hypotheses that media contribute to the formation of knowledge about an attitude & that the greater the knowledge, the stronger the attitude. For mass attention to economic issues in newspapers predicts attitude length directly, & operates indirectly through cognitions. For FRs, education & party identification appear to be the only predictors of attitude length, & media attention has no significant impact on either attitude length or cognitions. 2 Tables, 2 Figures. F. Rasmussen

88T1813

Kivisto, Peter (Dept Sociology Augustana Coll, Rock Island IL 61201). What's New about the "New Social Movements"? Continuities and Discontinuities with the Socialist Project. Mid-American Review of Sociology, 1986, 11, 2, winter, 29-43.

Since the 1960s, social theorists have sought to explicate factors that contributed to the emergence of the New Left in North America & Western Europe & to the new social movements that arose during that decade. Here, the relationship of these movements to socialism is explored, based on a review of issues raised in theoretic discourse & in concrete instances of these new contestatory actors. The work of figures such as Andre Gorz, Jurgen Habermas, Claus Offe, & Alain Touraine is discussed. Three region-specific variants of the new social movements are also examined: Eurosocialism, US populism, & the Green movement. 59 References. AA

88T1814

Knapp, Lawrence (Dept Geography U Iowa, Iowa City 52242). Social Theory, Social Movements and Public Policy: Recent Accomplishments of the Gay and Lesbian Movements in Minneapolis, Minnesota. International Journal of Urban and Regional Research, 1987, 11, 2, June, 243-261.

The gay & lesbian movements have challenged current relations of gender & sexuality, & merit nonfunctionalist, political-economic analysis. Here, recent accomplishments of the gay & lesbian movements in Minneapolis, Minn., are examined from such a perspective. Particular attention is paid to a conflict between the gay M community & the police department. The actors & events considered are situated within a broad system of SC relations, as experienced at the local level. Gay & lesbian activists employed a confrontational strategy that exposed the socially constructed nature of gender & sexual identities. An unintended consequence of this strategy was the undermining of an important link in the broader system of capitalist social relations. 2 Tables, 67 References. Modified AA

88T1815

LeGoff, T. J. A. & Sutherland, D. M. G. (York U, Downsview Ontario M3J 1P3). The Social Origins of Counter-Revolution in Western France. Past and Present, 1983, 99, May, 65-87.

An examination of the impact of property-holding reforms of 1789 on Ru society in western France, continuing previous research (see SA 2327642856) on the intrusion of the new revolutionary French state into affairs of the Ru community. Economic & social conditions of western France preceding the counterrevolution are analyzed, especially the system of land tenure & leaseholding, & questions influencing acceptance of the revolutionary regime from region to region are addressed. The reaction of the tenant farmers is seen as a critical element in the reaction of the Ru communities to the revolution. 3 Tables. F. Rasmussen

88T1816

McNall, Scott G. (U Kansas, Lawrence 66045). Class Analysis and Social Movement Theory: Toward a Synthesis. Mid-American Review of Sociology, 1986, 11, 2, winter, 3-28.

It is often proposed that class be examined simultaneously as structure, organization, & ideology. The roots of class consciousness are explored, & its role in mobilizing people to form class movements is detailed. The dynamics of class formation are revealed through conceptualizing it as a social movement & analyzing: (1) sources of solidarity & bases of mobilization, (2) strategy & creative escalation, (3) the rational class actor & the selective/collective incentives that motivate him/her, (4) speed of movement formation & its effects on movement size & power, (5) the bureaucratization process, & (6) organizational structure & system crises. Implications of such a conceptualization of class for the current US political situation are discussed. 3 Figures, 51 References. K. Hyatt

88T1817

Ovryn Rivera, Rachel Jo (City U New York, NY 10021). A Question of Conscience: The Emergence and Development of the Sanctuary Movement in the United States. * Dissertation Abstracts International, A: The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 47, 12(1), June, 4525-A.

Available from UMI, Ann Arbor MI. Order No. DA8708312.

88T1818

Pierce, John C., Lovrich, Nicholas P., Jr., Tsurutani, Taketsugu & Abe, Takematsu (Washington State U, Pullman 99164). Culture, Politics and Mass Publics: Traditional and Modern Supporters of the New Environmental Paradigm in Japan and the United States. U Journal of Politics, 1987, 49, 1, Feb., 54-79.

¶ An examination of the putative link between postmaterial values & the new environmental paradigm (NEP) among mass publics, based on survey responses from residents of Shizuoka Prefecture, Japan, & Spokane, Wash (N = 684 & 524, respectively) collected in 1983/84. Unlike Western postindustrial nations, in Japan, support for environmentalism comes from two distinct sources—one traditional & the other modern. In Japan, materialist supporters of the NEP are generally indistinct from materialist nonadherents to the NEP, but they are quite distinct in political & personal attributes from the postmaterialist supporters of the NEP. In the US, the materialist NEP support group is distinct from both the materialist non-NEP group & from the postmaterialist pro-NEP group. This pattern of findings is attributed to the traditional Japanese view of the unity of nature & humans, a view that is mirrored in the NEP. Unlike the US, the NEP paradigm is not really that new in Japan. 8 Tables, 42 References. HA

88T1819

Schmid, Carol L. (Guilford Technical Community Coll, Jamestown NC 27282). The Green Movement in West Germany: Resource Mobilization and Institutionalization. U Journal of Political and Military Sociology, 1987, 15, 1, spring, 33-46.

¶ In order to extend theoretical models of social movements to countries outside the US, the mobilization & institutionalization of West Germany's Green movement are examined. The general social, economic, & generational conditions that created the potential for a new social movement in West Germany following WWII are analyzed, with focus on the resources & constraints that have influenced each step of the movement's evolution & contributed to the Green Party's victories in 1983 & 1987. Insight is provided into ways that political structures can influence the dynamics & development of social movements. 47 References. Modified HA

88T1820

Stanfield, John H. (Dept Sociology Yale U, New Haven CT 06520-1965). Northern Money and Southern Bogus Elitism: Rockefeller Foundations and the Commission on Interracial Cooperation Movement, 1919-1929. The Journal of Ethnic Studies, 1987, 15, 2, summer, 1-22.

¶ An examination of the historic, colonial-like relationships between northern-based elites & their sponsored southern organizations, institutions, & movements. The Atlanta-based Commission on Interracial Cooperation Movement, organized in 1919 by a group of southern liberals, was the most extensive liberal civil rights organization in the South for twenty-five years. The interrelationships between foundation financiers & the Commission's leadership demonstrate how it is possible for an external elite with qualities analogous to those of colonial administrators to cultivate & subsidize an indigenous colonized elite that leads a movement that may have sympathy & support among the externals but minimal support among those who the leadership claims it represents. For this reason the Commission's leadership was a bogus regional elite in that it gained its authority & longevity through networking with external elites with surplus capital; not through developing a broad indigenous constituency. 1 Table, 29 References. Modified AA

88T1821

Walsh, J. F., Jr. (Dept Speech Communication & Theatre Arts Texas A&M U, College Station 77843-4234). An Approach to Group Communication in Historical Social Movements: Group Communication in Maoist Insurgent Mobilization. U The Southern Speech Communication Journal, 1986, 51, 3, spring, 229-255.

¶ An examination of the selection & strategies of group communication used by Maoist insurgent mobilizers based on data from the theoretical Lake City 84112), The Geography of Rebellion: Rulers, Rebels, and Regions, 1500 to 1700, Theory and Society, 1987, 16, 4, July, 467-495.

† A model for the geography of rebellion is provided. Focus is on sixteenth- & seventeenth-century agrarian, anti-state rebellions in France, England, & Spain, but these arguments apply equally to other parts of the world & eras. It is hypothesized that rebellion occurs only where rebels (1) are able to engage in collective action, & (2) possess relatively equal bargaining power vis-a-vis the monarch. The hypotheses are based on the assumption that peasants, lords, clerics, & rulers are rational, i.e. they calculate the costs & benefits before embarking on a course of action. Rebellion is a form of bargaining that occurs only where insurgents calculate a high probability of success. To illustrate these hypotheses, each region within the three countries is given a designation of present or absent for the variables of context of rebellion, capacity for collective action, & opportunity & resources for collective action. This account of the geography of agrarian anti-state rebellions in sixteenth & seventeenth century France, England, & Spain fits the historical data well. 3 Tables. AA

88T1805

Burgoon, Judee K., Burgoon, Michael & Buller, David B. (Dept Communication U Arizona, Tucson 85721), Newspaper Image: Dimensions and Relation to Demographics, Satisfaction, U Journalism Quarterly, 1986, 63, 4, winter, 771-781.

† Telephone interview data from 9,971 adult readers, rating 150+ US newspapers from 39 diverse locales, are analyzed to assess the dimensions of Rs' perceptions of newspaper image. Results indicate that (1) the public's conceptualizations of newspaper image have expanded, (2) the public makes discriminating judgments among those facets of image on which newspapers are doing a good job, & those on which they are not, (3) the public is not homogeneous in its perceptions, based on demographic & media use differences, & (4) image is more strongly related to satisfaction than use. 3 Tables. F. Rasmussen

88T1806

Cohen, Erik & Ben-Yehuda, Nachman (Hebrew U Jerusalem, Mount Scopus Israel), Counter-Cultural Movements and Totalitarian Democracy, ♦ Sociological Inquiry, 1987, 57, 4, fall, 372-393.

† A generalization of the concept of "totalitarian democracy," as proposed by J. K. Galton (The Origins of Totalitarian Democracy, London: Secker & Warburg, 1952), to the countercultural movements of the 1960s & 1970s. These movements are classified on two dimensions: whether they aspire to inner or outer liberation, & whether they seek to monopolize the means to its attainment. Marked differences in totalitarian potentialities are found between these movements. 1 Table, 39 References. Modified HA

88T1807

Donnelly, Brenda W. (Center Study Family Development U Dayton, OH 45469), The Social Protest of Christian and Nonreligious Groups: The Importance of Goal Choice, ♦ Journal for the Scientific Study of Religion, 1987, 26, 3, Sept, 309-326.

† The political efforts of 28 Christian & 41 nonreligious organizations in the post-Civil-War US are compared empirically, using random sampling procedures with primary archival sources & data compiled by William A. Giamson (The Strategy of Social Protest, Homewood, Ill: Dorsey Press, 1975). Analysis shows that religious organizations are less likely to be successful than nonreligious ones. However, during the period examined, religious identification was not directly responsible for the Christian groups' relative inability to reach their goals. Instead, their failure was linked with the Christian challengers' choice of multifaceted goals that were more difficult to obtain. 8 Tables, 2 Appendixes, 34 References. Modified HA

88T1808

Eptein, Steven (c/o Socialist Review, 3202 Adeline St Berkeley CA 94703), Gay Politics, Ethnic Identity: The Limits of Social Constructionism, ♦ Socialist Review, 1987, 17, 3-4(93-94), May-Aug, 9-54.

† A discussion of theory & practice in gay & lesbian movements in the US, focusing on the contradiction between the tenets of social constructionism: the new orthodoxy of sexual theory - & the practical politics of gay movements. A modified constructionist position is proposed that would allow identities such as gay & lesbian ones to be conceived of as core components of the self, without reifying those identities. The themes of identity & ethnicity are analyzed from a cultural & political perspective, exploring the historical specificity of sexual identities & the ethnic model of gay identity; also, essentialist & constructionist understandings of identity & ethnicity in general are criticized. It is concluded that, from the standpoint of a modified constructionism, it is reasonable to accept the ethnic model - both as a relatively accurate characterization of contemporary gay identity formation & as a politically defensible starting point from which gay movements can evolve progressive directions. Modified AA

88T1809

Goldfarb, Jeffrey C. (New School Social Research, New York N 10011), Tyranny of Theory? Confronting Solidarity, Sociological Forum, 1987, 2, 2, spring, 422-431.

† A review essay on Daniel Singer's The Road to Gdansk (New York: Monthly Review Press, 1981), Jadwiga Staniszkis's Poland's Self-Limiting Revolution (Princeton, NJ: Princeton U Press, 1984), Alan Touraine's, François Dubet's, Michel Wieviorka's, & Jan Strzelecki's Solidarity: The Analysis of a Social Movement, Poland 1980-81 (New York: Cambridge U Press, 1983), & Poland after Solidarity: Social Movements versus the State (Miztal, Bronislaw [Ed], New Brunswick, NJ: Transaction Books, 1985 [see listings in IRPS No. 41]). These four books attempt to make sense of the Solidarity movement in terms of contemporary social science, & in doing so reveal social science's strength & weaknesses, especially the limits of its theories as means of anticipating the emergence of new phenomena. These theories grope to explain the world beyond capitalism & socialism, they reveal the need for new theory, & the humbling of theoretical understanding before the sophistication of actual social movements. W. H. Stoddard

88T1810

Johnson, Norris R. (U Cincinnati, OH 45221), Panic and the Breakdown of Social Order: Popular Myth, Social Theory, Empirical Evidence, ♦ Sociological Focus, 1987, 20, 3, Aug, 171-183.

† Some myths concerning panic behavior in social situations are investigated, & an alternative theory of unregulated competition is advanced when the social order breaks down, behavior becomes aggressive & selfish not as a result of irrational panic, but due to emergent definitions of the situation as one in which norms of civility are no longer required, & competition for individual advantage is legitimate. Three case studies of collective behavior are presented: the 1977 Beverly Hills Supper Club fire in Ky, & the 1979 Who rock concert surge & 1985 Home State Savings Bank run in Cincinnati, Ohio. Analysis of interview & observational data from police records reveals no support for either the unregulated competition or classical panic theories. Rather, there is evidence that the social structure continued to function, & individual behavior conformed to general societal norms, any competition that did develop was regulated & aimed at group safety rather than individual gain. Thus, the fundamental sociological premise that the social order constrains individual behavior & limits competition is reaffirmed. 44 References, K. Hyatt

88T1811

Johnson, Norris R. (Dept Sociology U Cincinnati, OH 45221), Panic at "The Who Concert Stampede": An Empirical Assessment, ♦ Social Problems, 1987, 34, 4, Oct, 362-373.

† Evidence showing that panic did not cause death & injury of numerous young people prior to a concert given by a rock group, the Who, at Cincinnati's (Ohio) Riverfront Coliseum in late 1979, is presented. An analysis of transcripts of interviews (& not provided) with patrons in attendance & police who were on duty when the deaths occurred reveals that people did not stampede over others in their rush to enter the Coliseum as media accounts contend. Instead, participants tried to help others, & most competition that did occur reflected efforts to escape the crush rather than to enter the concert. It is concluded that theoretical models of panics or "crazes" within the literature on collective behavior are not very useful in explaining this type of incident. 1 Figure, 27 References. HA

88T1812

Kennamer, J. David (School Mass Communications Virginia Commonwealth U, Richmond 23284), Gender Differences in Attitude Strength, Role of News Media and Cognitions, ♦ Journalism Quarterly, 1986, 63, 4, winter, 782-788, 833.

† Data from 389 telephone interviews conducted in 1982 in Dane County, Wis., are utilized to investigate the relationship between Rs' attention to news media & the strength of their attitudes regarding topics covered gram Studies & the earlier Political Action Studies indicate that Americans are less supportive of the welfare state than Europeans. While Europeans tend to favor a security that strives for equality of condition, Americans are inclined to favor an opportunity society where some inequality is accepted as a natural consequence of the competitive process. Appendix, 19 References AA

88T1831

Taylor-Cooby, Peter (Darwin Coll, U Kent CT2 7NY England), Welfare Attitudes: Cleavage, Consensus and Citizenship, The Quarterly Journal of Social Affairs, 1987, 3, 3, July, 199-211

A series of studies of PO opinion about welfare & secondary analysis of more general surveys carried out in the mid-1980s in GB are reported. The studies cover attitudes to the level of state spending, public vs private, views on standards of service & political attitudes. National sample surveys & in-depth interviews of service users in the areas of pensions, health care, & education conducted in 1984 are described (N not given). The data shed light on recent discussions of privatization, consumption sector, "exit voice & loyalty," & show that the structure of popular consciousness is more complex than some commentators suggest. People's attitudes to the role of the state in welfare fit a mixed economy of welfare model better than a simple state/private dichotomy. 3 Tables, 35 References. Modified AA

28 communication

88T1834

Aagaard-Mogensen, Lars, Pict(s)extures: Foxtrot on Subception Hypotheses, International Studies in Visual Sociology and Visual Anthropology, 1987, 1, 56-73

A response to an article by Richard Zakia (see SA 35.4/87R7523). Several groups of illustrations are used to show how irrelevant & unfounded it can be to attribute specific sexual, political, or other meanings to such images. Zakia's theory of advertising is analyzed & refuted, based on a discussion of the conditions of reception of the advertisements. The basic assumption that advertising is effective is contested. Zakia's suggestion that advertising should be regulated is considered more hypocritical & threatening to human freedom than any advertisements. 18 Illustrations. C Waters

88T1835

Babrow, Austin S. (Purdue U, West Lafayette IN 47907), Student Motives for Watching Soap Operas, Journal of Broadcasting & Electronic Media, 1987, 31, 3, summer, 309-321

A study of student motives for watching TV soap operas utilizing 1984 questionnaire data collected from 286 undergraduates at a large mid-western U. Two questionnaires were administered, one asking for reasons for watching or not watching TV soap operas, the other requesting a list of possible outcomes of TV soap opera watching. Degree of convergence in findings of the two procedures is considered. The diversity of motives & the resultant implications for subgroup analyses are discussed. 1 Table. 41 References. Modified HA

88T1836

Balandier, Georges (Ecole hautes etudes sciences sociales, F-75006 Paris France), Images, images, images (Images, Images, Images), Cahiers Internationaux de Sociologie, 1987, 34, 82, Jan-June, 7-22 (FRE)

A discussion of the role & importance of images in society. Modernity is characterized by the increasing need for & use of communications channels in social relations, & by the rapidly developing generalization of mass media, which are creating a new environment. Two aspects of the image are investigated here: (1) "images without innocence"—the instrumental nature of the image is discussed & related to its origins in primitive societies, eg, the use of magic; & (2) "prolific images"—the unlimited capacity for reproduction & dissemination of images made possible by technical media, especially since the invention of photography, is examined. Emphasis is on the role of images in the construction of reality & visions of the world. Modified HA

88T1832

Warr, Mark (Dept Sociology U Texas, Austin 78712), Fear of Victimization and Sensitivity to Risk, Journal of Quantitative Criminology, 1987, 3, 1, Mar, 29-46

¶ Previous work on fear of crime victimization (see, eg, SA 31.5/83N5233) is extended to include the phenomenon of fear & sensitivity to risk, ie, the relationship between fear of a particular offense & the subjective probability that it will occur. A mail survey of Seattle, Wash, residents (N = 339) entailed having Rs rate their fear of victimization for 16 offenses. Results of an analysis of covariance reveal gender & age differences in the relationship between sensitivity to risk & fear of victimization, some general principles pertaining to fear of victimization by type of offense are developed. It is concluded that across offenses, fear is a multiplicative function of perceived seriousness. 2 Tables, 2 Figures, 12 References. K Hyatt

88T1833

Zaborowski, Wojciech (Instytut Filozofii i Socjologii Polskiej Akademii Nauk, PO Box 2A PI-00-901 Warsaw), Economic Inequalities and Distributive Justice: Opinions of Inhabitants of Warsaw, The Polish Sociological Bulletin, 1983, 1-4(61-64), 117-132

¶ Interview data from a random sample of Polish Ms (N = 310) collected in Warsaw, Poland, in 1979, are used to illustrate the trend of social preferences regarding the distribution of goods. Focus is on the sources of tension in Polish social structure & desired changes. The majority of Rs shared an egalitarian orientation relative to the distribution of goods, expressing the opinion that it was necessary to correct inequalities in the actual distribution. 1 Table, 23 References. I Rasmussen

88T1837

Berger, Arthur Asa (San Francisco State U, CA 94132), What's in a Sign? Decoding Magazine Advertising (A Primer), International Studies in Visual Sociology and Visual Anthropology, 1987, 1, 7-20

¶ An attempt is made to show how advertisements work, using the principles of semiotic analysis. A single magazine advertisement for "Fidji" perfume is analyzed from the viewpoint of visual sociology. This advertisement consists of a photo of part of a woman's face & hands, with certain accessories. The general aesthetic aspects of the image are examined, together with specific physical attributes of the types of people shown in advertisements. It is shown that meaning depends on a knowledge of other texts. A discussion of signs & codes in semiotic theory considers how signs are decoded & how advertisers attempt to avoid aberrant decoding. To a large extent, this depends on the self-selection of the audience. 2 Photographs, 15 References. C Waters

88T1838

Berthelot, J.-M., Barthe, J.-F. & Grossetti, M. (Institut sciences sociales U Toulouse II, F-31058 Cedex France), Les Ruses de l'abstrait (The Tricks of the Abstract), Cahiers Internationaux de Sociologie, 1987, 34, 82, Jan-June, 177-197 (FRE)

¶ An investigation of various manifestations of popular culture, including films, TV shows, advertising, rock music, & especially music videos. An attempt is made to analyze not only their concrete forms of expression but also the underlying attitude toward the world that these reveal. An attitude is identified: it is based on philosophical, ethical, & political grounds, & it combines irony, game-playing, distance, microimplications, self-expression, civic values, & legalism. These form a whole, which is not yet clearly defined, but is based on a kind of neonominalism & centered on a new relationship with the established codes. It is suggested that this may imply a form of social maturity. Modified HA

88T1839

Dempster, Douglas J., Pictorial Semantics and the Sexual Ethic or How to Pick Up a Picture's Meaning, International Studies in Visual Sociology and Visual Anthropology, 1987, 1, 40-44

¶ A response to an article by Richard Zakia (see SA 35.4/87R7523), which suggested that advertisements use hidden sexual references in order to sell products. To examine whether, in fact, there are latent sexual references in the specific advertisements referred to by Zakia, the general question of what constitutes hidden meaning in a picture is discussed. It is concluded that most of the erotic appeal in the advertisements is blatant rather than hidden, & that the possible interpretations of any given picture are virtually limitless. The fact that these include sexual interpretations proves nothing concerning the advertiser's intentions. C Waters writings of movement leaders, messages from movement leaders to the membership, & eyewitness accounts. The complex ideology associated with Maoist insurgencies is discussed, & constraints shaping the selection & use of available channels of communication in mobilizing support are analyzed. Critical aspects that cause Maoist communications to be dissimilar from other types of movements are evaluated. Applications for this method of analysis to other areas of research are discussed. Modified HA

88T1822

Williams, Dale Edward (Loyola U., New Orleans LA 70118). Morale, Markets and the English Crowd in 1766, Past and Present, 1984, 104.

Aug. 56-73

† E. P. Thompson (see SA 20.7/72F9360) asserts that crowds in eighteenth-century England acted as both symptom & agent of opposition to capitalism. The 1766 food disturbances, widely cited as exemplifying Thompson's thesis, occurred because the government allowed a law to lapse that protected grain from duties, making it profitable for merchants to export grain & thus depleting the country's supplies, & because unusual weather spoiled the crop of grain in the south, reducing the availability of grain & raising prices. The pattern of disturbances, however, was not as Thompson's theory suggests, & indicates a three-pol class system: gentry, laborers, & Mss—rather than a bipolar one. Further Thompson's treatment of history as experience prevents him from recognizing institutional factors such as the workings of markets. 1 Graph, 2 Maps. W. H. Stoddard

27 public opinion

88T1821

Abramson, Paul R. & Inglehart, Ronald (Michigan State U., East Lansing 48824). Generational Replacement and the Future of Post-Materialist Values, WM Journal of Politics, 1987, 49, 1, Feb., 231-241

† Cohort analysis & census projections are used to estimate the probable distribution of materialist/postmaterialist values among the West European public to the year 2000. Analyses of 126 national surveys carried out between 1970 & 1985 in West Germany, GB, the Netherlands, France, Belgium, & Italy demonstrate that the priorities of the West European public shifted substantially from materialist toward postmaterialist goals, & that this shift resulted from intergenerational population replacement. Building on these results, census projections of the future age distribution of these societies in 1990, 1995, & 2000 are used to project future levels of postmaterialism. It is concluded that (1) the rate of value change is likely to be slower during the remainder of the century than it was during the past 15 years, but (2) the population replacement process is likely to continue to exert a pressure increasing the level of postmaterialism during the remainder of the century. 11 References. HA

88T1824

Danielson, David A. & Mazer, Arthur (Committee National Health Program, 15 Pearl St. Cambridge MA 02139). Results of the Massachusetts Referendum for a National Health Program, Journal of Public Health Policy, 1987, 8, 1, spring, 28-35

† On 4 Nov 1986, by a vote of 1,046,000 to 510,000, Mass voters approved a ballot question "urging Congress to enact a National Health Program." The question won a majority in all 39 cities & in 307 of the 312 towns in the Commonwealth. The campaign in support of the legislative initiative was led by elder advocacy groups, organized labor, the Democratic Party, & health professional organizations; there was little organized opposition. The election campaign & results are described & evaluated, & groups concerned about public health policy are encouraged to consider seeking voter support for health system reform, using the referendum approach, in other states & municipalities. 9 References. HA

88T1825

Falardeau, Guy (Dept science politique U. Montreal, Quebec H3C 3J7). Le Poids d'une génération (The Weight of a Generation), Sociologie et Sociétés, 1987, 19, 1, Apr., 153-158. (FRE)

† In an attempt to determine whether the dominant ideas in a society are those of the dominant age group, the role of the "baby boom" generation in influencing contemporary Quebec society is investigated. The age cohort is identified as those born between 1937 & 1954. A linguistic analysis of 16 representative texts on polemical subjects—articles on Quebec society & nationalism from the 1960s through the 1980s—focuses on the construction of identity ("we," "you," & "they"). While the demographic weight of the baby boom generation has undoubtedly affected the social structure, there is no evidence that leading ideological paradigms originated with this generation. 1 Table, 2 Figures. C. Waters

88T1826

Glenn, Norval D. (U. Texas, Austin 78712). The Trend in "No Religion" Respondents to U.S. National Surveys, Late 1950s to Early 1980s, The Public Opinion Quarterly, 1987, 51, 3, fall, 293-314

† Data from 110 US national surveys are used to study the trend in "no religion" responses from the late 1950s to the early 1980s. The trend was monotonically upward, at least until the 1980s, when there were signs of leveling off or an incipient reversal of the trend. The trend came about through both changes within birth cohorts & cohort succession, & it involved Rs of all major religious backgrounds, & both Ms & Fs. Whether or not the change indicates an important degree of secularization is considered at length. Problems involved in using a dichotomous indicator to gauge change in a quantitative variable are discussed. 8 Tables, 1 Figure. 27 References. HA

88T1827

Goertzel, Ted (Rutgers U., Camden NJ 08102). Public Opinion Concerning Military Spending in the United States: 1937-1985, WM Journal of Political and Military Sociology, 1987, 15, 1, spring, 61-72

† Trends in PO concerning US military spending are analyzed using data on 14,000+ Rs collected during the 1973-1985 General Social Surveys & other survey data going back to 1937 (S not provided). The % of the population favoring an increase in military spending varies greatly over time, ranging from a high of 74% in 1939 to a low of 7% in 1969. A multiple regression analysis reveals the effects of variables such as age, gender, education, occupation, race, income, religion, party affiliation, political ideology, & region on attitudes toward military spending; profiles of those likely to favor or disapprove of increased spending are constructed. Though military spending generally decreases in times of competing fiscal demand, highly publicized national crises can lead to abrupt shifts in favor of increased spending. 4 Tables, 25 References. Modified HA

88T1828

Kirchgassner, Gebhard & Wolters, Jurgen (U. Osnabrück, D-4500 Federal Republic Germany). The Influence of Poll Results on Election Outcomes, Mathematical Social Sciences, 1987, 13, 2, Apr., 165-175

† Using a simple model of voting behavior in a two-party system, it is shown that successive polls can help voters to make rational decisions. The poll institutes have no opportunity to manipulate the election outcome in any preferred direction, provided they present the results correctly to the public. The model is extended to a system of three or more parties; the main results do not change. A discussion of the "5% rule" governing elections in the Federal Republic of Germany (ie, a party will only get seats in parliament if it has at least 5% of the votes) reveals that though institutional regulations can open the opportunity for manipulations, competition between institutes makes successful manipulations unlikely. 2 Figures, 16 References. HA

88T1829

Plutzer, Eric (Washington U., Saint Louis MO 63130). Attitudes toward Abortion: A Study of the Social and Ideological Bases of Public Opinion, Dissertation Abstracts International, A: The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 47, 12(1), June, 4514-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor MI. Order No. DA8708378.

88T1830

Smith, Tom W. (National Opinion Research Center, 1155 East 60th St. Chicago IL 60637). The Welfare State in Cross-National Perspective, The Public Opinion Quarterly, 1987, 51, 3, fall, 404-421

† Survey data obtained in the 1985/86 International Social Survey Pro-

Presidential elections is examined using data from 8 National Election studies conducted by the Survey Research Center at the U of Michigan. The importance of candidate personal qualities & traits was estimated using voter responses to open-ended questions about the candidates. Analysis shows that candidate personal qualities became more important for TV-dependent voters who relied on newspapers than for those who relied on TV. The differences did not appear to be a function of the higher level of education of newspaper readers. 2 Tables, 3 Figures, 28 References. AA

88T1850

Lozbyakov, Viktor Pavlovich, Glasnost' kak uslovie effektivnosti pravovoy propagandy (Openness as a Condition of Legal Propaganda Effectiveness), Sotsiologicheskie Issledovaniya, 1987, 14, 2, Mar-Apr, 71-73 (RUS)

¶ It is suggested that citizens lacking professional knowledge of the legal system (i.e. all those without law degrees) should receive legal education, & that judges, lawyers, & other legal professionals should update their legal knowledge by attending continuing education classes. Such education is especially important during the current economic reform efforts, when some Communist Party members have a tendency to be overzealous in implementing reforms, & occasionally ignore the due process dictated by existing laws. However, this situation does not mean that new laws have to be created instructing the public how to handle every minor situation that arises. G. Prostavov

88T1851

McKay, Jim & Rowe, David (Depts Anthropology & Sociology U Queensland, Saint Lucia 4067 Australia), Ideology, the Media, and Australian Sport, Sociology of Sport Journal, 1987, 4, 3, Sept, 258-273

Ideological relationships between the media & Australian sport are examined from a critical perspective. After outlining the contributions of political economy, structuralism, & cultural studies to the critical paradigm, it is argued that the Australian media have two main ideological effects: (1) they legitimate masculine hegemony, capitalist rationality, consensus, & militaristic nationalism, & (2) they marginalize, trivialize, & fragment alternative ideologies of sport. Topics for future research are suggested, & the politicizing of media representations of sport is affirmed as an important part of the counter-hegemonic struggle in patriarchal capitalist societies. 82 References. HA

88T1852

Minaudo, Vito (U Quebec, Montreal H3C 3P8), Media et lien social (Media and Social Link), Cahiers Internationaux de Sociologie, 1987, 34, 82, Jan-June, 205-218 (FRE)

An examination of some of the messages conveyed by the mass communications media. Various mass media projects with education aims are discussed including the activities of the French NOMIC movement (Nouvel ordre mondial de l'information et de la communication (New World Order of Information & Communication)), which attempts to re-inforce national & local culture against the rapidly increasing internationalization of media products. The organization of messages in relation to their intended context is based on a technical conception of communication, which reveals a particular idea of social behavior. Certain convictions are identified that relate to an idea of society centered on beliefs & ideals such as peace, happiness, & well-being. The mechanical & technical applications of communication are thus paradoxically combined with an idealistic, mythified vision of society. Modified HA

88T1853

Murrell, Rachel Kerys, Telling It Like It Isn't: Representations of Science in Tomorrow's World, ♦ Theory, Culture & Society, 1987, 4, 1, Feb, 89-106.

The most popular TV science program in GB at present, "Tomorrow's World" is examined as a presentation of science. Its basic image is of scientists as possessors of objective knowledge that nonscientists lack. Three items from the program broadcast on 2 Feb 1984 are examined closely. The presentation of science systematically ignores its social context. Also, the format of the program seriously limits what content it can present in ways that have much in common with news broadcasting but are even more restrictive, particularly by not recognizing the possibility of alternative views of science. The scientific process is mystified, technology is contextualized in terms of everyday life, & popular conservatism is used to justify the oppressive use of technology in capitalist society. 1 Appendix, 17 References. W. H. Stoddard

88T1854

Randall, Donna & DeFilippi, Robert (Washington State U, Pullman 99164), Media Coverage of Corporate Malfeasance in the Oil Industry, The Social Science Journal, 1987, 24, 1, Jan, 31-42

¶ Due to space, time, & resource constraints, all potential news events cannot be reported in the media. The "reasonableness" of media coverage of violations committed by the 25 largest US oil firms is explored using archival data on coverage by network TV news, in major news magazines, & in The Wall Street Journal in 1975/76. The size of firm, violation record of firm, & perceived seriousness of offense are empirically assessed as alternative explanations of media coverage. Findings suggest that the perceived seriousness of oil firm violations most adequately accounts for coverage across all media sources. However, the media source has a definite impact on the nature of the media coverage of corporate illegality. Policy implications of the media's tendency to oversample the more serious but less frequent events are discussed. 6 Tables. Modified HA

88T1855

Schröder, Kim Christian, Snapshot Fables: The True Nature of Magazine Advertisements, International Studies in Visual Sociology and Visual Anthropology, 1987, 1, 78-97

¶ An alternative is sought to the consumer perspective analyses of advertising, which are usually based on the doctrine that advertising's "manipulative" persuasive features are illegitimate. Using the study by Gunnar Andren et al of US magazine advertisements (Rhetoric and Ideology in Advertising, Stockholm: Liber Forlag, 1978) as an example, the inadequacy of this approach for understanding the cultural role of modern advertising is demonstrated. Based on an analysis of three individual advertisements from a women's magazine, the possibility of regarding advertising as fiction is examined. Expanding on Michael Schudson's approach (Advertising: The Uneasy Persuasion, New York: Basic Books, 1984), it is argued that advertisements should be seen as the commercial fables of modern popular culture. Implications of this view for the critical study of advertising are discussed. 3 Illustrations, 10 References. Modified HA

88T1856

Singer, Eleanor & Ludwig, Jacob (Center Social Sciences Columbia U, NY 10027), South Africa's Press Restrictions: Effects on Press Coverage and Public Opinion toward South Africa, ♦ The Public Opinion Quarterly, 1987, 51, 3, fall, 315-334

¶ The 2 Nov 1985 ban on photographic & sound recordings by the South African government provided an opportunity to investigate hypotheses concerning the effect of the ban on US media coverage of South Africa & on PO toward South Africa. It was hypothesized that the ban would result in (1) a decrease in coverage of protest-related stories, (2) a tapering off of the volume of coverage; & (3) a decline in the prominence of the South Africa story. Also, it was expected that these effects would be stronger for broadcast than for print media; if the press ban reduced coverage of events in South Africa, there would be less attentiveness to the South African problem among the general public in the US, & sympathy for the black population would decrease as a result of press restrictions. These hypotheses were tested via monitoring coverage of the South African story by the New York Times & three major TV networks. Results reveal that the press restrictions did not have the effects predicted, either on press coverage or on US PO. Relative to levels of political violence in South Africa, coverage levels did decline. However, the decline did not occur abruptly in Nov, but appeared as a continuation of decreases that had already begun in Sept, prior to the press restrictions. 3 Tables, 5 Figures, 12 References. Modified AA

88T1857

Stanger, Greta Guyton, The Representation of Family Change in Social Science Journals and Women's Magazines, ♦ Dissertation Abstracts International, A The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 47, 12(1), June, 4521-A-4522-A
Available from UMI, Ann Arbor MI. Order No. DA8708795.

88T1858

Sudman, Seymour (U Illinois, Urbana 61801), The People and the Press, ♦ The Public Opinion Quarterly, 1987, 51, 3, fall, 400-403.

¶ Public attitudes toward the press are examined using data from a 1985 Gallup Organization study involving face-to-face interviews with 3,100 US adults & follow-up telephone interviews with 33% of the sample. Re-

88T1840

Descamps, Christian (U. Paris XI, F-91405 Orsay Cedex France), Images de regie, images de plateau (Management Images, Screen Images) Cahiers Internationaux de Sociologie, 1987, 34, 82, Jan-June, 199-203 (FRE)

† An examination of French TV news programs focusing on the respective roles of the newscaster & the management. They are perceived as constantly negotiating for power. The possible effects for the relationship of the increasing importance of digital images are discussed. It appears that many of the functions of the newscaster are being taken over by synthetic images. The role of simulations in other fields, eg, military strategy, is discussed. It is concluded that, despite the tremendous expansion in the use of simulated images, their effectiveness remains open to question. Modified HA

88T1841

Donohew, Lewis, Palmgreen, Philip & Rayburn, J. D., II (U. Kentucky, Lexington 40506), Social and Psychological Origins of Media Use: A Lifestyle Analysis, ♦ Journal of Broadcasting & Electronic Media 1987, 41, 3, summer, 255-278

† Questionnaire data gathered from a 1983 random sample of cable TV subscribers in a midwestern city (N = 76 F & 38 M) were analyzed to examine how social & psychological factors interact to produce different lifestyles & patterns of media use. Four lifestyle types were identified: disengaged homemaker, outgoing activist, restrained activist, & We climber, whose members differed significantly on a broad range of variables, including newspaper & magazine readership & gratification sought from cable TV. Persons with a high need for activism had lifestyles involving greater exposure to media sources of public affairs information than those with less cosmopolitan lifestyles. Results suggest that the roots of media use are far deeper than previously believed. 2 Tables, 50 References. Modified HA

88T1842

Gleditsch, Nils Petter (International Peace Research Instit, Oslo Norway), National Security and Freedom of Expression: The Scandinavian Legal Battles, Journal of Media Law and Practice, 1987, 8, 1, Apr, 2-5

† A review of Scandinavian freedom of information litigation regarding the public discussion of defense issues vs the protection of national security. Two separate issues are discussed: the dissemination of opinion, & the collection & dissemination of information. The Scandinavian situation is contrasted with that of GB, where laws relating to freedom of information are quite severe. A determined news media is seen as a critical aspect in bringing about legal reform. 1. Rasmussen

88T1843

Gordon, Dane, Semiotics before Semiotics: Semiotics, Advertising and History, International Studies in Visual Sociology and Visual Anthropology, 1987, 1, 45-55

† An examination of the relationship between semiotics & the use of visual symbols, particularly those visual symbols used in advertising. Although semiotics as an academic discipline & advertising as a social phenomenon are comparatively new, their mainly unacknowledged existence has had a long history. It is shown that history, the discipline of semiotics, & advertising are interrelated, & that knowledge of one increases understanding of the other two. Reference is made to Richard Zakia's article "Advertising and the Sexual Ethic" (see SA 35 4/87R7523). Zakia's suggestion that the "hidden" sexual symbolism of advertisements persuades consumers to buy products is contested. Modified Author Summary

88T1844

Guillaume, Marc (U. Paris IX, F-75775 Cedex 16 France), Le Carnaval des spectres (The Carnival of Ghosts), Cahiers Internationaux de Sociologie, 1987, 34, 82, Jan-June, 73-81 (FRE)

† An investigation of the "imagination industry" & the way in which new images are produced in modern society. The framework in which fictional images are produced-technological innovations within an industrial cycle of production & consumption is examined. It is found that a numerical order is replacing the analogical one, resulting in simulations that do not reproduce or represent reality. Three characteristics of these new images are identified: (1) Two forms of communication previously considered dichotomous-irradiation & contagion-are now hybridizing. (2) Hybrid fictions are being developed. (3) The subject is tending to disappear or fade, taking on a fictitious form with little personality-a mere phantom. Modified HA

88T1845

Hitzler, Ronald, Zeit-Rahmen: Temporale Konstitution und kommunikative Konstruktion (Time-Frames. Temporal Constitution and Communicative Construction), Österreichische Zeitschrift für Soziologie, 1987, 12, 1, 23-33. (GER)

† A discussion of the use of time in modern society, with reference to time budgets & the mass communications media, focusing on: forms of communication, experience & designations of time, & forms of social awareness of time. The consequences of the linear concept of time, which characterizes Western industrialized society, are discussed. Time has come to be regarded as a type of goods in scarce supply. New patterns of time & communication in the information society are investigated. These include greater possibilities for the individual structuring of time but also increased external constraints on time, eg, through computer controlled work, or enforced unemployment. 65 References. C. Waters

88T1846

Jensen, Klaus Bruhn (Center Mass Communication U. Copenhagen Njalsgade 80 DK-2300 Denmark), News as Ideology: Economic Statistics and Political Ritual in Television Network News, ♦ Journal of Communication 1987, 37, 1, winter, 8-27

† Discourse analysis focuses on the textual patterns that serve as the vehicles of communication in various social contexts. Here, the particular relevance of discourse analysis for studies of the mass media is demonstrated through a close-reading of news programs on US network TV. It is shown that a specific set of linguistic choices in news serves to construct a social reality in which the political & economic sectors of society appear to be functioning in isolation from each other. The origin of this worldview is traced to a set of journalistic routines within an institutional framework. Also, the relevance of discourse analysis for research on audience perception & the social uses of TV news is outlined. 1 Table, 2 Figures, 52 References. AA

88T1847

Kats, Boris Anatol'evich & Makarenkov, Sergey Mikhaylovich, Rynok "svobodnogo knigoobmena" v 1986 godu: analiz situatsii ("Free Book-Exchange" Market in 1986: Analysis of the Situation), Sotsiologicheskie Issledovaniya, 1987, 14, 2, Mar-Apr, 55-60 (RUS)

† The problem of determining demand for fictional literature in the USSR presents considerable problems, as public taste tends to change rapidly. Leningrad bookdealers have devised a nine-point scale of popularity to help correlate the price of books with demand, while Moscow bookdealers use an eight-point scale. The market is so fluid that any sociological attempts to analyze readers' preferences for literary genres would be in vain. 3 Tables, 1 Reference. G. Proslakov

88T1848

Keen, Chris (Dept Biomathematics UNIBO, Taung Bophuthatswana South Africa), A Formal Communication Network Analysis Technique, ♦ The British Journal of Sociology, 1987, 38, 3, Sept, 373-380

† A simplified discussion of some formal mathematical techniques used for structural analysis (see Atkin, R. H., Mathematical Structure in Human Affairs, London: Heinemann Educational Books, 1974) & their application to the study of small group communication structure, ie, network analysis. The procedure is outlined & used to analyze a matrix representing a communication network & to deduce a hierarchy of groups with different link strengths, it is not restricted to symmetrical matrices but can also analyze communication flows that are not reciprocal. Some advantages over other network analysis methods are discussed & illustrated via a reanalysis of interpersonal communication data from 35 individuals in a Korean village (see Rogers, E., "Network Analysis of the Diffusion of Innovations: Family Planning in Korean Villages" in Communication Research: A Half-Century Appraisal, Lerner & Nelson (Eds) Honolulu, Hawaii: University Press of Hawaii, 1976). 6 Tables, 1 Figure. Modified HA

88T1849

Keeter, Scott (Survey Research Laboratory Virginia Commonwealth U., Richmond 23284), The Illusion of Intimacy: Television and the Role of Candidate Personal Qualities in Voter Choice, ♦ The Public Opinion Quarterly, 1987, 51, 3, fall, 344-358.

† The role of TV in the increased candidate-orientedness of voters in US

75-82 (SCR)

One key aspect of Yugoslav sociological research on tourism is the investigation of its social consequences. Most contemporary analyses stress the economic benefits of tourism. More work needs to be done on inter-cultural contact, quality of leisure time, ecological concerns, & aspects of alienation. 24 References. Modified HA

THEORY CULTURE & SOCIETY

The Journal of Cultural and Social Theory

Published by SAGE from 1987

Editor
Mike Featherstone
Teesside Polytechnic, UK

Theory Culture & Society caters for the resurgence of interest in culture within contemporary social science. It provides a forum for articles which theorise the relationship between culture and society.

TCS builds upon the heritage of the classic founders of social theory and examines the ways in which this tradition has been re-shaped by a new generation of theorists.

TCS also publishes theoretically informed analyses of everyday life, popular culture and new intellectual movements such as postmodernism.

The journal continues to feature papers by and about the work of a wide range of modern social and cultural theorists such as Foucault, Bourdieu, Baudrillard, Goffman, Bell, Parsons, Elias, Gadamer, Luhmann, Habermas and Giddens.

'TCS carries some of the liveliest and most stimulating articles currently being published in social science. The review articles contain theoretical commentary and controversy at the cutting edge of intellectual development. And the production maintains a sharpness of style, complete with multimedia illustration, that can hardly be found anywhere else' — Randall Collins, UCLA Riverside

'TCS has in a very short period of time established itself as a major new presence. Its contributors include scholars of the highest international prestige' — Anthony Giddens, Cambridge University

Theory, Culture & Society will be published quarterly in February, June (Double Issue) and November.

Subscription Rates, 1988

	Institutional	Individual
one year	£47 00($64 50)	£18 00($22 50)
two years	£93 00($127 50)	£36 00($45 00)
single copies	£12 00($16 50)	£5 00($6 00)

SAGE Publications Ltd, 28 Banner Street, London EC1Y 8QE
SAGE Publications Ltd, PO Box 5096, Newbury Park, CA 91359

sults indicate that the public is basically knowledgeable about the news business, but unaware of its more detailed business & journalistic aspects. The majority of Rs are favorable to the press & believe what the news media report, attitudes concerning government control are mixed. Results confirm findings from other fields: eg, medicine, education, advertising, & business about public awareness, cross-study comparisons are suggested. K Hyatt

88T1859

Vitouch, Peter & Schweitzer, Josef (Inst Psychologie U Wien, A-1010 Austria), Kontrollverlust am Arbeitsplatz und seine Beziehung zum Fernsehkonsumverhalten (Loss of Control at the Workplace and Its Relation to Television Consumption Behavior), Zeitschrift für Experimentelle und Angewandte Psychologie, 1986, 33, 2, 294-311 (GER)

† An empirical investigation into the relation between workplace control & TV viewing takes as its starting point the common characteristics of the concepts "heavy TV viewer" (Gerbner, G., & Gross, L., "The Scary World of TV's Heavy Viewer," Psychology Today, 9, 1976) & "learned helplessness" (Seligman, M., Erlernte Hilflosigkeit [Learned Helplessness], Munich: Urban & Schwarzenberg, 1979). A group of skilled & unskilled metalworkers in Vienna, Austria ($N = 129$ Ms) were categorized according to the degree to which they had decision-making power on the job, & were asked to report on their TV consumption. Results indicate that those who had less control over their work tended to watch more popular TV programs with recurrent structures & contents than those who had more control, irrespective of the type & length of employment. 7 Tables, 25 References. Modified HA

88T1860

Weimann, Gabriel & Gabor, Thomas (c/o Gabor, Dept Criminology U Ottawa, Ontario K1N 6N5), Placing the Blame for Crime in Press Reports, U Deviant Behavior, 1987, 8, 3, 283-297

† An examination of attributions of responsibility contained in 306 factual accounts of violent & property crimes reported in 11 leading Canadian newspapers between Aug & Nov of 1982 & 1984. Focus is on the relative amount of coverage accorded crime victims & suspects & the presence or absence of references to the victim's contribution to the offense as a function of victim/offender gender & type of crime. Analysis reveals that type of crime has more effect than gender on both offender-to-victim coverage & references to victim contribution, though the interaction of both variables has the greatest influence. In general, these media reports provide a relatively accurate portrayal of the reality of crime in contrast to claims that the media often distort such accounts. 7 Tables, 21 References. Modified HA

88T1861

Zakia, Richard, Multiple Meanings, International Studies in Visual Sociology and Visual Anthropology, 1987, 1, 74-77

† A response to criticism by Douglas J. Dempster, Dane Gordon, & Lars Aagaard-Mogensen (see abstracts in this section) of Richard Zakia's article "Advertising and the Sexual Ethic" (see SA 35 4/87R7523). The comments of all three authors support Zakia's original statement that "pictures work at multiple levels." Zakia's interpretation of several advertisements was presented only as one of various possible interpretations. It is still held to be the most probable, because it is supported by observable patterns in hundreds of other advertisements. 1 Illustration, 4 References. C Waters

88T1862

Zemach, Tamar & Cohen, Akiba A. (Israel Instit Applied Social Research, 19 George Washington St POB 7150 Jerusalem), Perception of Gender Equality on Television and in Social Reality, Journal of Broadcasting & Electronic Media, 1986, 30, 4, fall, 427-444.

† Interview & questionnaire data from a national random sample of 1,202 adult Jews in Israel are used to examine sex differences in perceptions of men & women as they appear on TV as an example of symbolic reality & the way they are perceived in social reality. Findings reveal a marked tendency to regard symbolic reality as more stereotypic than social reality in most of the traits, roles, & occupations examined, especially among heavier TV viewers, these viewers perceived a smaller gap between the two realms of reality. 2 Tables, 3 Figures, 59 References. Modified HA

29 collective behavior

No Abstracts In This Issue

42 sociology of leisure/tourism

88T1863

Deem, Rosemary (School Education Open U, Milton Keynes MK7 6AA England), Unleisured Lives: Sport in the Context of Women's Leisure, Women's Studies International Forum, 1987, 10, 4, 423-432.

† Women's participation & nonparticipation in sport are examined within the wider context of leisure. Data from interviews with women (N not provided) in Milton Keynes, England, provide some insight into the barriers that constrain women's leisure, & suggest some reasons why sport does not form a significant part of that leisure when it is available. Some ways that sport & leisure could be made more accessible & responsive to the needs & interests of women are suggested. 42 References. Modified HA

88T1864

Greenfield, S. (U Aston, Birmingham B4 7ET England), Family and Leisure: A Comparative Sociological Study of Middle Class Families and Their Leisure Patterns in France and Great Britain, Dissertation Abstracts International C European Abstracts, 1987, 48, 2, summer, 286.

Unavailable from UMI; contact the degree-granting university.

88T1865

Rubenstein, James M. (Dept Geography Miami U, Oxford OH 45056), Leisure Participation and Satisfaction in Two European Communities, Journal of Cross-Cultural Gerontology, 1987, 2, 2, Apr, 151-170.

† Participation in leisure activities in the Grand Duchy of Luxembourg & Thionville, France, are compared. Factors associated with participation in different types of leisure activities, including health, status, household structure, attitudes toward leisure, & perceptions about leisure facilities, are examined, & the contributions of participation in different activities to satisfaction in the two countries are compared. Data were collected with a questionnaire distributed to a random sample of 95 elderly individuals living in Luxembourg's Ur areas & 100 in Thionville. In general, differences in factors associated with participation are greater between the two countries than among different activities within each. It is concluded that elderly individuals derive different meaning from participation in leisure activities in the two regions. 8 Tables, 46 References. Modified HA

88T1866

Stanković, Mladen, Sociološko istraživanje turizma (Sociological Research of Tourism), Revija za Sociologiju, 1985, 15, 1-2, Jan-June.

0800 social change and economic development

50 market structures & consumer behavior

1867

Leith, Russell W. (Graduate School Business U Utah, Salt Lake City 84112), Material Values in the Comics: A Content Analysis of Comic Books Featuring Themes of Wealth, JM The Journal of Consumer Research, 1987, 14, 1, June, 26-42.

During the past forty years, four popular US comic books have emphasized themes of extreme wealth: Archie, The Fox and the Crow, Uncle X, & Little Rich. Content analyses of these four comics (N not given between 1944 & 1984) reveal primarily socially desirable but ambivalent treatments of such themes. Collectively, these comics have provided mental models of the acquisition & use of wealth, as well as models for human relationships between haves & have-nots. Whether such comic treatments shape or merely reflect US material values during this period, they necessarily inform our understanding of the significance we attach to consuming & consuming ability in our evaluations of our own wealth & that of others. 1 Table, 1 Appendix, 100 References. Modified

1868

Jennett, H. Stith & Ferrell, Jeff (c/o Ferrell Regis Coll, Denver CO 80221), Music Videos and Epistemic Socialization, JM Youth and Society, 1987, 18, 4, June, 344-362.

Content analysis, deconstruction, & cultural hermeneutics are used to examine 100 contemporary music videos randomly selected from 1,500+ aired between 1984 & 1985 from broadcasts in the Denver, Colo, metropolitan area. The most typical depictions: portrayals of social identities, relationships, & situations—are examined in depth, eg, politics, sexuality, dance, motion conversion (shifting of social identities), & personae. It is determined that they are constructed from readily available cultural resources that provide them with common epistemic features, including the central proposition that ambiguity & ambivalence are viable for action. Sociological implications of this epistemological content: videos' young audiences are explored. Comparisons are drawn between videos, as commercial popular culture, & so-called "serious" literary & artistic culture. 14 References. K Hyatt

1869

Clark, Stuart (University Coll, Singleton Park SA2 8PP Wales), French Historians and Early Modern Popular Culture, Past and Present, 1983, 100, Aug, 62-99.

Historians of popular culture have begun to recognize that their discipline has problems due not only to limitations of the empirical evidence, but to the philosophical presuppositions of the historians themselves. The jargon of ritual elements in popular culture in early modern France, as pointed in several recent works, illustrates this difficulty. A recurrent phasis in these works is on the limitations of the peasant mentality & susceptibility to superstition & magical thinking. The philosophical ideas of Ludwig Wittgenstein illuminate the conceptual problems inherent in classing such actions as manifestations of simple intellectual error. Such an analysis is only intelligible if accompanied by a description of what the same people would have done were they not committing errors, so such criteria are to be found within the history of the time. Popular culture cannot reasonably be dismissed either as instrumental action based cognitive error, nor as emotive relief for stress inherent in a society; rather interpretation impoverishes it relative to what it was in the culture where it occurred. W. H. Stoddard

1870

Ingram, Martin (Queen's U, Belfast BT7 1NN Northern Ireland), Ridings, Rough Music and the "Reform of Popular Culture" in Early Modern England, Past and Present, 1984, 105, Nov, 79-113.

The thesis that a marked split developed between elite & popular culture in GB during the fifteenth & sixteenth centuries is challenged through an examination of "charivari"—a popular custom characterized by noisy, mocking demonstration in the event of an anomalous social action or infraction of community norms. Data from court records, diaries, letters, newspapers, & imaginative literature reveal that charivaries were a well-known & widely distributed phenomenon, representing an element of plebeian culture that served both penal & festive functions. The underlying symbolism of charivari is shown to parallel aspects of elite culture. Charivaris were one of the few customs to escape serious attempts at repression that were levied against other forms of low popular culture; indeed, many elites participated in them, & they served as an important form of interclass contact. 5 Pictures. K Hyatt

88T1871

Jansen, Sue Curry (Cedar Crest Coll, Allentown PA 18104), The Electronic Bribe: Power and Knowledge in the Video Age, Theory and Society, 1987, 16, 4, July, 621-628.

¶ A discussion of John L. Caughey's Imaginary Social Worlds (Lincoln: U of Nebraska Press, 1984), Joshua Meyrowitz's No Sense of Place: The Impact of Electronic Media on Social Behavior (New York: Oxford U Press, 1985), & Neil Postman's Amusing Ourselves to Death: Public Discourse in the Age of Show Business (New York: Viking, 1985) (see listings in IRPS No. 41). Though these books examine different aspects of TV's impact on culture, they agree that electronic communication has deeply altered human knowledge of, interaction with, & construction of social reality. Meyrowitz offers a detached analysis, Postman a value-based critique, & Caughey an intermediate approach. Ultimately these books are flawed by their failure to address the issue of control of the media by postliberal capitalism, but they offer improved understanding within the liberal framework. W. H. Stoddard

88T1872

Kotarba, Joseph A. & Wells, Laura (U Houston, TX 77004), Styles of Adolescent Participation in an All-Ages, Rock 'n' Roll Nightclub: An Ethnographic Analysis, JM Youth and Society, 1987, 18, 4, June, 398-417.

¶ After a brief summary of sociological investigations into the US youth culture since WWII, results of an ethnographic study of a rock & roll nightclub in Houston, Tex, are discussed, with focus on the behavior of patrons under the legal drinking age of 18. Data collected during observations & interviews with patrons, club managers, & staff (N = 38) reveal the existence of 4 distinct styles used by these adolescents to identify self & others: "metal heads," "posers," "punks," & "yuppies." Each can be readily distinguished by musical preference, dress, interactional demeanor, life philosophy, &, to some degree, SC affiliation. It is shown how the club creates a safe environment for adolescents to experiment with different styles, interchanging them as they test & refine identities. 17 References. K Hyatt

88T1873

Snow, Robert P. (Dept Sociology Arizona State U, Tempe 85287), Youth, Rock 'n' Roll, and Electronic Media, JM Youth and Society, 1987, 18, 4, June, 326-343.

¶ As one of the more dramatic cultural developments in the past 30 years, the emergence of youth culture is depicted as a social & philosophical movement centered around a new leisure ethic & rock & roll music. In turn, this movement is tied directly to the dynamic character of media formats & electronic technology. In tracing the history of youth culture & rock & roll, several points stand out. First, the concepts of youth & rock & roll have become synonymous, & operate as a social form (following the criteria of Georg Simmel). Second, youth & rock & roll experience is largely facilitated & symbolized through electronic communication technology. Consequently, the character & experience of rock & roll is shaped by existing media technology & formats. By identifying the grammatical logic of media formats in radio & TV & observing changes in these formats since the early 1950s, it is possible to delineate corresponding changes in the youth/rock & roll experience—specifically from an auditory to a visual phenomenon. 13 References. AA

ANNOUNCING A NEW PUBLICATION IN ENGLISH:

ANNUAL REVIEW OF NICARAGUAN SOCIOLOGY

PUBLISHED BY THE INSTITUTE OF HUMAN RELATIONS
LOYOLA UNIVERSITY, NEW ORLEANS, USA

The ANNUAL REVIEW OF NICARAGUAN SOCIOLOGY is a digest of critical social thought and analysis being produced in the New Nicaragua. Published yearly, this journal seeks to make the rapidly expanding social science literature of Nicaragua available to English speaking scholars throughout the world. Articles published in the ANNUAL REVIEW OF NICARAGUAN SOCIOLOGY are selected from Cuadernos de Sociologia, Revista Nicaraguense de Ciencias Sociales, and other independent scholarly journals that have emerged as the key voices among the emerging social sciences of Nicaragua. The essential focus of the journal rests in the presentation of original research concerning such diverse issues as Agrarian Reform, the historic initiative for autonomy on the Atlantic Coast, Religion and Revolution, Mixed-Economy, mass organizations, social justice, and other topics concerning the popular consolidation of the Sandinista Revolution.

Annual subscriptions are available to all countries:

	Individuals	Libraries and institutions
United States and Canada	$25.	$35.
Europe	$30.	$42.
All other countries	$30.	$42.

To place a subscription, make your check payable in U.S dollars to:
"Institute of Human Relations" and send to:

ARNS, EDITORS
Institute of Human Relations
Loyola University, Box 12
New Orleans, LA 70118, USA

0800 mass phenomena

69 sociology of sports

T1875

Steele, Lynda I. A. & Vines, Gail (Dept Biology Open U, Milton Keynes MK7 6AA England). A Sporting Chance: The Anatomy of Destiny?, Women's Studies International Forum, 1987, 10, 4, 337-347

Both sport & science remain stereotypically masculine fields, & justify the exclusion of women by recourse to biologically deterministic arguments that women are inferior. Some of these arguments are examined to identify how they serve to limit women's participation in sport activities. Feminists, accepting that biological differences exist between Ms & have argued for gender integration or separation in sports on the basis of how important they consider such differences to be. Both viewpoints, however, see biology as fixed. It is argued that biology itself can be subject to change, & that a truly feminist understanding of women & sport must consider the possible transformation of physiology. 39 References. Modified HA

T1876

Birrell, Susan & Richter, Diana M. (Dept Physical Education & Sports Studies U Iowa, Iowa City 52242). Is a Diamond Forever? Feminist Transformations of Sport, Women's Studies International Forum, 1987, 10, 4, 395-409.

Ways by which individuals & groups overcome the hegemonic grasp of dominating ideologies to institute social practices that are personally meaningful are investigated in a study of how feminists actively construct maintain alternatives to the M preserve of sport. Data were collected from a purposive sample of women who defined themselves as feminists (not provided) via interviews & observations conducted over a four-year period of a women's summer recreational softball league. Attitudes toward the relationship between feminism & the practice of sport were revealed, along with criticism of M-defined & practiced sport. Efforts to make the sport more process-oriented, collective, inclusive, & supportive, to infuse an ethic of care are documented. Implications for other such grass-roots activism are briefly discussed. 20 References. Modified HA

T1877

Bryson, Lois (School Sociology U New South Wales, Kensington 2033 Australia). Sport and the Maintenance of Masculine Hegemony, Women's Studies International Forum, 1987, 10, 4, 349-360.

Sport constructs & supports masculine hegemony through two fundamental dimensions, one that links maleness with highly valued & visible acts & the positively sanctioned use of aggression, & another that marginalizes women & their activities. This monopolization is completed by series of concrete processes that effectively marginalize women from sport participation: definition, direct control, ignoring, & trivialization. These are examined in depth, & illustrated with examples from the Australian sporting scene. The fact that these processes must continually be invoked demonstrates that there are contradictions that can be exploited in order to develop strategies to circumvent them. 38 References. Modified HA

T1878

Curtis, James E. & Birch, Jack S. (Depts Sociology & Kinesiology U Waterloo, Ontario N2L 3G1). Size of Community of Origin and Recruitment to Professional and Olympic Hockey in North America, Sociology of Sport Journal, 1987, 4, 3, Sept, 229-244.

A conventional wisdom in the lay sociology of sport journalism is that North American professional ice hockey players are disproportionately recruited from smaller communities & rural areas. One explanation given for this is that avenues for social mobility are more limited in such communities & that sport is heavily pursued as one of the few areas of opportunity. Sections of the sociological literature would suggest, though, that an opposite relationship may occur because larger cities have better opportunity structures for developing & expressing sport skills. These alternative expectations are tested based on official statistics for 361 Canadian-born players in 3 professional leagues & for players on the last 3 Canadian & US Olympic teams (N = 65 & 76, respectively) & census data on their communities of origin. In interpreting the results, Canadian national survey data on mass participation of M youths in hockey are employed.

The findings show that the largest cities are underrepresented as birthplaces of players at each elite level, whereas small towns are overrepresented. Yet community size does not appear related to the general population of M youths' rate of participation in hockey. Interpretations concerning how amateur hockey is organized are emphasized. 4 Tables, 25 References. Modified HA

88T1879

Fastang, Karl (Norwegian Coll Physical Education & Sport, Kringsjaa 0807 Oslo 8). Sports and Women's Culture, Women's Studies International Forum, 1987, 10, 4, 361-368.

¶ The double standard concerning the way that boys & girls in Norway are socialized into sport, & the resulting failure of organized sport to assume a central role in F culture, are examined using data from various empirical studies. Three approaches to the future development of women's sport are investigated: (1) women will become more like men, (2) women will preserve & develop typical F characteristics & activities, or (3) androgyny will become the norm. Thus far, development has followed the first approach, & it is argued that this represents equality on men's terms. It is also argued that society's ideology of winning at any cost, which is also reflected in the world of sport, must be changed. Women's culture & its values could strongly influence the development of sport in a more humanistic direction. 2 Tables, 1 Figure, 21 References. Modified HA

88T1880

Fiedler, Klaus & Gebauer, Armin (Fachbereich 06 Psychology U Giessen, D-6100 Federal Republic Germany). Egozentrische Attributionen unter Fussballspielern (Egocentrically Biased Attributions among Soccer Players), Zeitschrift für Sozial Psychologie, 1986, 17, 3, 173-176 (GER).

¶ Egocentrically biased attributions among soccer players—i.e., overestimation of one's own contribution relative to that of the opponent—are examined. Players on 2 teams in Giessen, West Germany (N = 36) were given questionnaires at varying intervals after 2 games. Results show that the outcome of a match is usually attributed to one's own performance or to one's own team. The fact that egocentric bias is more pronounced immediately after the match than later & that defensive players are especially biased, indicates that bias is due more to perceptual perspective than to selective memory. The appropriateness of the term "egocentric" for this phenomenon is called into question. 1 Table, 4 References. Modified HA

88T1881

Honer, Anne, Die maschinelle Konstruktion des Körpers. Zur Leiblichkeit im Bodybuilding (The Mechanical Construction of the Body. On Corporeality in Body Building), Österreichische Zeitschrift für Soziologie, 1986, 11, 4, 44-51 (GER).

¶ The attitude toward the body expressed in the sport of bodybuilding is examined. Aspects discussed include: (1) the claims of bodybuilders to produce art with their bodies, (2) the elements of sexuality & voyeurism in contests, (3) the situation of women bodybuilders; (4) the necessary divorce of body from self, (5) the heroic ideal of the struggle of free will against the natural & social world, & (6) the implications for personal identity & the perception of others. 24 References. J. Anderson

88T1882

Klein, Alan M. (Northeastern U, Boston MA 02115). Muscle Manor: The Use of Sport Metaphor and History in Sport Sociology, Journal of Sport and Social Issues, 1985, 9, 1, winter-spring, 4-19.

¶ A historical paradigm in the study of sport is explored. Using social traits reflective of feudalism & capitalism, the sport of bodybuilding developed a set of seemingly contradictory institutions & values. Atavistic social & political relations were fused with a modern capitalist economic base. Two important traits in bodybuilding's ideology—dependency & individualism—are examined as reflective of these different epochs. It is shown that feudal ideology & social traits at times function to obscure capitalist relations & vice versa. The consequence of such interplay is to reinforce existing political & economic configurations by preventing competition & retarding cohesion within bodybuilding's rank & file. 16 References. HA

88T1874

Weis, William L. & Burke, Chauncey (Albers School Business Seattle U, WA 98122). Media Content and Tobacco Advertising: An Unhealthy Addiction. ♦ UJ Journal of Communication 1986, 36, 4, autumn, 59-69

¶ Use of unregulated mass media to convey the health hazards of smoking & to encourage smoking cessation is today severely limited because of the tobacco industry's influence over editorial content of these media. The scope of this de facto censorship is documented via an analysis of primary sources, including magazines, TV, & movies, & a review of previous studies. The effect of this censorship on the public's perception of health risks from smoking is discussed & possible remedies within tradition of a free press & an unregulated tobacco industry are suggested. 1 Figure, 29 References. Modified AA

JOURNAL OF MULTILINGUAL AND MULTICULTURAL DEVELOPMENT

Editor: Derrick Sharp

Review Editor: Colin Williams

Editorial Board

Adebisi Afolayan, H. Baetens Beardsmore, W. Butzkamm, Maurice Craft, Jim Cummins, Carl J. Dodson, Carol M. Eastman, John Edwards, Howard Giles, François Grosjean, Jagdish S. Gundara, Gottfried Kolde, Mildred L. Larson, Christer Laurén, P. H. Nelde, John Platt, Miguel Siguan, T. Skutnabb-Kangas, Alan Thomas.

This journal publishes articles on the many aspects of multilingualism and multiculturalism. From the beginning it has aimed to range widely in all ways, covering, for example, contributions to theory, reports of research studies, descriptions of educational policies and systems, and accounts of teaching or learning strategies and assessment procedures. We are most concerned about the benefits and disadvantages of learning two or more languages from early childhood, the rights and obligations of minorities and the value to a community of an interaction between cultures.

Our experience so far indicates that there is a rich vein of high quality papers in all corners of the world, and a corresponding, committed readership involved actively in the opportunities, difficulties and challenges of bilingual, multilingual and multicultural communities. It is clear that a great deal of very good work is going on in many quarters. One prime function of the Journal of Multilingual and Multicultural Development is to disseminate views and experiences as widely as possible. The articles are supported in this task by sections which give short reports of works in progress, book reviews and letters from readers.

Volume 9 (1988) 6 issues

Libraries £54.00 (US$105.00)

Individuals £18.00 (US$35.00)

Students £9.00 (US$18.00)

Payment may be made by

ACCESS/MASTERCARD/EUROCARD/AMERICAN EXPRESS/DINER'S CARD

MULTILINGUAL MATTERS LTD.
Bank House, 8a Hill Road,
Clevedon, Avon, England, BS21 7HH.

0900 political interactions

1 interaction between societies, nations, & states

1890

Shagwari, Jagdish (Columbia U, New York NY 10027), Ideology and North-South Relations, IM World Development, 1986, 14, 6, June, 767-774

North-South international relations of the modern era have been characterized by three ideological phases. The first, a long period of ideological harmony, lasted into the early 1970s. It was interrupted by the rise in power of OPEC (oil producing & exporting countries) & the period of radical Southern ferment, to be followed by another, opposed divide when the US shifted into conservative ideological posturing & actions with the first Reagan administration. The second Reagan administration's shift to the Baker Plan represents the third phase, but can also be regarded as consistent with that ideological position. 4 References. HA

8T1891

Davis, Charles H. & Laberge, Marie-Paule, Le Transfert d'un modèle d'enseignement technique supérieur du Québec au Sénégal: le cas de l'Ecole Polytechnique de Thiès (The Transfer of a Model of Higher Technical Education from Quebec to Senegal: The Case of the Thiès Polytechnical School), Revue canadienne des études africaines/Canadian Journal of African Studies, 1986, 20, 1, 57-72 (FRE)

Factors affecting the transfer of a model of engineering education from Canada to a Third World African country are described. In an innovative & extensive Canadian U assistance project, the Ecole Polytechnique de Montréal, Quebec, became the partner of the Ecole Polytechnique de Thiès (EPT), Sénégal. The EPT opened in 1973, offers a 5-year program in civil & mechanical engineering, & admits approximately 190 students annually. The transfer is analyzed as the result of interactions & constraints within a specific environment. In the case of the EPT project, major factors influencing the transfer to Sénégal of North American-style engineering education have been: (1) the difficulty experienced by Quebec academic engineers in reconciling international cooperation with career-related objectives, (2) the militarization of the Sénégalaise school, & (3) the relative marginality of Canada as a donor in the host country. 7 References. Modified HA

8T1892

DeGreene, Kenyon B. (4345 Chaumont Rd Woodland Hills CA 91364), US and USSR Adaptation to a Turbulent-Environmental Field of Forces: Avoidance of Catastrophic Flip to the Emergency State, Technological Forecasting and Social Change, 1987, 31, 2, Apr, 189-200

Field theory is used to examine some ways that technology can contribute to international conflict resolution. Focus is on two major problems associated with the use of technology in the study of evolution toward war or peace. First, autonomous technology may be generated in sociotechnical turbulent-field environments, & these emergent systems present formidable obstacles to understanding & management. Autonomous structures require new management concepts & management at a higher level. Second, iterations of even simple nonlinear, deterministic models can generate stochastic-like behaviors that may severely limit the fidelity & usefulness of model outputs. Some features of strategies adaptive or maladaptive to turbulent-field environments, & the possible emergence of a vortical environment following maladaptation are discussed. In both organic & sociotechnical evolution, adaptation during turbulent times appears to be much different from that required during "background" times. The concept of a US-USSR Cooperative Security System is extended, & additional requirements for its successful implementation are described. Two alternative scenarios are developed, with particular reference to the Mexican-Central American region: one involves US-USSR cooperation, the other continued US-USSR competition & conflict leading to a catastrophic flip to the emergency system/environment state. 26 References. Modified HA

8T1893

Kahn, Brian (School Economics U Cape Town, Rosebank 7700 South Africa), Exchange Controls and Exchange Rate Policy in the South African Economy, Social Dynamics, 1987, 13, 1, June, 21-30.

1 Foreign exchange control & exchange rate policy are of crucial importance to South Africa's balance of payments (BOP). A brief analysis of trends in the BOP structure is presented, with focus on the effects of shocks, in the form of gold price changes & political crises, on both the current & capital accounts. The recent conduct of exchange rate policy is examined, & some likely distributional effects are discussed. It is argued that the policy preference for undervalued exchange rates, designed to protect the interests of export industries (particularly mining & agriculture), has the effect of benefitting profits at the expense of wages. Exchange control policy became more relaxed in the 1980s due to pressure from companies & individuals seeking to invest abroad in times of declining profit rates & political uncertainty. It is argued that such a liberalization of foreign exchange is inappropriate for a country subject to volatile flights of capital in the wake of political crises; scarce investment funds should be kept within South Africa. 1 Table, 3 Figures, 12 References. Modified HA

88T1894

Khoury, Robert M. (Wesleyan Coll, Macon GA 31297), Capitalism → Imperialism → War: A Modest Test of an Immodest Theory, Sociological Focus, 1987, 20, 2, Apr, 123-134

1 Grounded in Marxism, the socialist theory of warfare maintains that wars occur in conformity with the following taxonomy: between capitalist states, between capitalist & socialist states, & between capitalist states & their colonies. Military engagements are construed as interactions in which invading, attacking parties are, by definition, capitalistic. These hypotheses are empirically tested in an analysis of 836 wars fought from 1948 to 1967 based on daily reports of foreign military troops engaging in armed attacks in another country gathered from 6 international periodicals by the World Data Analysis Program of Yale U (Taylor, Charles Lewis & Hudson, Michael C., World Handbook of Political and Social Indicators, New Haven, Yale U Press, 1972), & the results are weighed against those of a simple alternative chance-process explanation of modern military warfare. It is shown that a random or nearly random process is as able as socialist theory to account for modern warfare, & since the theory of randomness is much simpler & no less plausible than socialism, the latter is rejected. 2 Tables, 24 References. Modified HA

88T1895

Lamare, James W. (U Canterbury, Christchurch 1 New Zealand), International Conflict and Opinion Change in New Zealand, The Public Opinion Quarterly, 1987, 51, 3, fall, 392-399

1 The impact of an international controversy on national opinion consolidation is described based on a comparison of national survey data collected in New Zealand in 1983, 1984, & 1985. After the New Zealand government banned nuclear-capable ships from the country, the US retaliated through public denunciation of this action & mild sanctions. Poll data suggest that, as a result of this dispute, New Zealanders put aside their preexisting political & social differences on the issue of nuclear weapons & rallied behind their government. Over time, however, this consolidation effect showed signs of disintegration: social & political cleavages on the question of nuclear weapons in New Zealand eventually reemerged. 1 Table, 15 References. Modified HA

88T1896

Lipiansky, Edmond-Marc (U Paris X, F-92001 Nanterre Cedex France), Réflexions sur les rencontres interculturelles (Reflections on Intercultural Meetings), Cahiers de Sociologie Economique et Culturelle, Ethnopsychologie, 1987, 7, June, 69-76. (FRE)

1 An investigation of the aims, structures, & effects of the intercultural meetings that are organized for young people of different nationalities by various cultural organizations, such as the Franco-German Assoc. The notion of the intercultural meeting is explored, emphasizing the conditions of contact, communication, & exchange in groups where several nationalities are brought together. It is shown how the consideration of cultural identities & differences may become the starting point of a formative process, through reactions to otherness & relation to one's own identity. 5 References. Modified HA

88T1883

Kedým, Miloslav (Psychologický ústav Československa Akademie Ved, Husova 4 1110 00 Prague 1), Psychological Problems of the Selection of Sport Talents, Studia Psychologica, 1984, 26, 4, 265-270

¶ A review of theoretically oriented research that explores the psychological process of selecting youth who show talent in sport & the prediction of exceptional sporting outputs. Based on Marxist-Leninist ideology of socialist society, methodology, & theory of abilities, four principles are identified that should be used to guide the selection process: ideal character of selection, scientific character of selection, gradual selection, & increasing complexity of selection. Psychology must develop basic & applied research in the sphere of abilities within the framework of international & interdisciplinary cooperation. Modified HA

88T1884

Lewis, Jerry M. & Veneman, J. Michael (Kent State U., OH 44242), Crisis Resolution. The Bradford Fire and English Society, WM Sociological Focus, 1987, 20, 2, Apr., 155-168

¶ On 11 May 1985, a national tragedy occurred in England. Shortly before the interval (halftime) of a soccer match, a fire swept through one of the stands at Valley Parade stadium in Bradford, England, killing 56 spectators within 5 minutes & injuring 200 more. Societal reaction to this tragedy is explored, guided by a society crisis response model developed by Jeffrey Alexander ("Culture and Political Crisis: Watergate and Durkheimian Society," unpublished paper). Alexander, drawing on the work of Emile Durkheim, proposes conditions that describe how a society deals with a crisis. Societal response to the tragedy is assessed, using propositions derived from Alexander's work. In particular, the rituals of purification, including public statements, visits & pilgrimages, an official inquiry, services & memorials, & fundraising attempts, are noted. It is shown how these ritual responses created a sacred community for the purification of soccer, as well as English society. 1 Figure, 17 References HA

88T1885

Melnick, Merrill J. & Sabo, Donald F. (Dept Physical Education & Sport State U New York Coll, Brockport 14420), Analysis of Free Communications Presented at the First Seven NASSS Annual Meetings: Some Patterns and Trends, Sociology of Sport Journal, 1987, 4, 3, Sept., 289-297

¶ An analysis of 434 free communication sessions by 575 presenters at the first 7 annual meetings of the North American Society for the Sociology of Sport (1980-1986), based on program listings, reveals several important patterns & trends with respect to (1) number of free communications, (2) number of presenters, (3) presenter's sex, (4) presenter's institutional affiliation, & (5) dual & multiple authorships. A classification of the free communications by subject matter reveals which research topics are of current interest to sport sociologists. Implications of these data for understanding the current stage of development of the subfield are discussed in relation to N. Mullin's four-stage developmental model for scientific specialties (Theories and Theory in Contemporary American Sociology, New York: Harper & Row, 1973). 2 Tables, 6 References HA

88T1886

Olin, K. (Jyväskylä Yliopisto, SF-40100 Finland), Päätöksentekijöiden väiteryhmät kaupunkien liikuntapolitiikassa (Reference Groups of Decision-Makers in the Sport Politics of Cities), * Dissertation Abstracts International C: European Abstracts, 1987, 48, 2, summer, 288 (FIN)
Unavailable from UMI; published by U Jyväskylä, Seminaarinkatu

15, SF-40100 Finland.

88T1887

Porto, Brian L. (MacAlester Coll, Saint Paul MN 55101), Athletic Scholarships as Contracts of Employment: The Rensing Decision and the Future of College Sports, Journal of Sport and Social Issues, 1985, 9, 1, winter-spring, 20-37.

¶ In 1982 & 1983, the Court of Appeals & the Supreme Court, respectively, in Ind reached opposite answers to the question of whether an athletic scholarship is an employment contract that entitles an injured athlete to workers' compensation. Both decisions, in Rensing v Indiana State University, highlight the inability of narrowly drawn judicial rulings to recognize & remedy manifestations of professionalism in athletics. Judicial involvement is necessary when due process or procedural fairness are implicated, but when the athlete's "conditions of participation" (based on the scholarship agreement) are at issue, judges must permit educators to make necessary policy choices. The existing system of Coll athletics is beset by a host of problems that derive from the "employment-like" conditions under which the scholarship athlete lives. Several means of diminishing the resemblance between athletic participation & employment are suggested. 24 References Modified HA

88T1888

Varpalotal, Aniko (Dept Sociology in Education Ontario Inst Studies Education, Toronto M5S 1V6), The Hidden Curriculum of Leisure: An Analysis of a Girls' Sport Subculture, Women's Studies International Forum, 1987, 10, 4, 411-422

¶ Prior research has established that the hidden curriculum implicates both education (formal & informal) & the socialization process perpetuates sexist attitudes & practices that inhibit the participation of girls in sports. However, it is argued that there is also a hidden curriculum in sport subcultures that can positively counteract these negative social sanctions. A pilot study is described that involved a two-week period of interviews & participant observation of adolescent girls (N not provided) attending a summer camp to play Rignette—an exclusively F sport originally organized as a substitute for M ice hockey. The data reveal how these girls experienced the tensions of the apparently contradictory role of F & athlete & the pervasive influences of patriarchal hegemony. More F role models are needed if the potentials for social change inherent in girls' subcultures are to be realized. 46 References Modified HA

88T1889

Watson, Tracey (Skidmore Coll, Saratoga Springs NY 12866), Women Athletes and Athletic Women: The Dilemmas and Contradictions of Managing Incongruent Identities, ♦ WM Sociology Inquiry, 1987, 57, 4, fall, 431-446

¶ A case study in the management of contradictory essential & relational identities, using the example of US F basketball players. Questionnaire data from 36 students demonstrate member understanding of the sex identity of the F athlete, & observational data illustrate the management of incongruent identities on three stages: the F athlete on the basketball court, the athletic F attending a formal dinner, & the metamorphosis of identities in the locker room. The results indicate that even though the identity of F athlete is, by definition, deviant, it offers a positive alternative to the deviant identity of woman. However, for an actor to achieve this identity of F athlete, she must be willing & able to consistently manage the dilemmas & contradictions inherent in the role itself, i.e., F athletes must simultaneously uphold loyalty to both the essential identity of F & the relational identity of athlete. 1 Table, 13 References HA

25 political sociology

8T1905

Aarsaether, Nils (Instit samfunnsvitenskap U Tromsø, N-9001 Norway), Kommunalismen i eit sektorisert samfunn (Communalism and Sectorized Society in Norway), Tidsskrift for samfunnsforskning, 1987, 28, 1, 47-71 (NOR)

An attempt is made to reinterpret the role of local politics in modern Norwegian society, which is characterized by sectoral fragmentation. Local, cross-sectional political institutions are interpreted as myths & remedies that fulfill symbolic functions but do not have political implications. Three phases of municipal development are discussed based on case studies of several local communities & municipal activities in non-metropolitan Norway. These developmental phases differ widely in leadership challenges, but emphasis is on coordination of public services. 24 references. Modified HA

1T1906

Adam, Heribert & Moodley, Kogila (Simon Fraser U, Burnaby British Columbia V5A 1S6), The Ultraright in South Africa and Ethnic Nationalism, Canadian Review of Studies in Nationalism/Revue Canadienne des Etudes sur le Nationalisme, 1987, 14, 1, spring, 83-92

An assessment of the three principal South African ultra-Right organizations, focusing on their distinct constituencies, historical origins, & policy differences. Sociologically, the ultra-Right in South Africa reflects the increased stratification within Afrikanerdom. The constituencies of the two rightwing parties, the Herstigte Nasionale Party (HNP) & the Conservative Party (CP) can be traced to political realignments within white politics. Important interest groups (particularly white unions & farmers) were dropped from the previous state patronage in the late 1970s. In contrast to the labor racists in the HNP & the more respectable conservative ideologues of the CP, neofascists of the Afrikaner Eerstevindsbeweging (AWB) despise parliamentary democracy as a Jewish-Jewish invention. They advocate armed defense against traitors within & enemies from without. Through infiltration of the police to a lesser extent the military, the neofascists pose a physical threat in the form of semiofficial vigilante activities. The ruling technocrats are reluctant to curb the informal terrorism lest they appear soft. In a climate of heightened anxiety & white economic decline, the ultra-Right increasingly appropriates ethnic symbols. With the promise of security & a white homeland regardless of economic feasibility, the rightwing detaches the political agenda from economic priorities to status concerns. A

1T1907

Akard, Patrick J., Bringing the Economy Back in (Again): Conceptions of the Capitalist State and Their Relevance for Public Policy, Mid-American Review of Sociology, 1986, 11, 2, winter, 75-100

A central issue of debate in political sociology & public policy concerns the autonomy of the state & its economic role. This issue is discussed within the context of recent political & economic events in the US, drawing largely on the historical-comparative works of Theda Skocpol & Fred Block. Their conceptions of state autonomy are presented along with their critiques of neo-Marxist theories, particularly the instrumentalist, structuralist, & class struggle approaches. It is concluded that, while Skocpol & Block correct some of the deficiencies of these perspectives, their analyses overemphasize the independence of the political sphere from economic & societal constraints, thus seriously undermining their usefulness in explaining recent US economic policy. The greater explanatory relevance of a neo-Marxist approach for understanding the structural constraints of the modern capitalist state, particularly in locating economic policy debates both politically & ideologically, is demonstrated via analysis of the recent "reindustrialization" debate in the US. 69 References. K Hyatt

88T1908

Anderson, Alan B. (U Saskatchewan, Saskatoon S7N 0W0), Ethnic Minorities in International Frontier Areas: Recent Publications of the Institute of International Sociology of Gorizia, Canadian Review of Studies in Nationalism/Revue Canadienne des Etudes sur le Nationalisme, 1987, 14, 1, spring, 181-184.

A review essay on Cooperation and Conflict in Border Areas (Strassler do, R., & Zotti, G. Delli (Eds), Milan, Franco Angeli Editore, 1982), & Boundaries and Minorities in Western Europe (DeMarchi, B., & Boileau, A. M. (Eds), Milan, Franco Angeli Editore, 1982 (see listings in IRPS No. 41)). These two edited collections represent an eclectic range of viewpoints on ethnic minorities in frontier areas within Western Europe & some other areas. Despite their lack of unity at a theoretical level, they contain much valuable material & have an excellent editorial framework. Overall they contribute significantly to the development of social scientific theory & methodology. W H Stoddard

88T1909

Ansart, Pierre (U Paris VII, F-75221 Cedex 05 France), Nos images politiques sont-elles neuves? (Are Our Political Images New?), Cahiers Internationaux de Sociologie, 1987, 34, 82, Jan-June, 57-72. (FRE)

¶ To examine the extent to which current political images are actually new, three images that occur widely in the political writings of the nineteenth century (eg, those of Karl Marx, Alexis de Tocqueville) are reviewed: the images of (1) society as a body; (2) the individual as a citizen; & (3) the collective vampire. Both continuities & certain forms of political imagery are identified. 13 References. Modified HA

88T1910

Arbós, Xavier (U Barcelona, E-08007 Spain), Central versus Peripheral Nationalism in Building Democracy: The Case of Spain, Canadian Review of Studies in Nationalism/Revue Canadienne des Etudes sur le Nationalisme, 1987, 14, 1, spring, 143-160.

¶ While Spain's boundaries as a state are well established, they are not firmly linked to national identity, due to the presence of Catalan & Basque minorities. Current policy favors defining Spain as an association of national groups, but this idea does not reflect Spain's actual political history, rather, it represents an effort to establish the democratic process rather than Castilian ethnicity as central to Spanish identity. Review of various electoral results & published surveys reveals considerable concern over how national identity is to be defined & over the position of ethnic & regional groups. The constitutional formulas under which Spain is now governed do not fully resolve these issues. 8 Tables. W. H. Stoddard

88T1911

Ardigò, Achille (via Bellinzona 5, I-40135 Bologna Italy), The Moral Question and Legitimation, Current Sociology/La Sociologie Contemporaine, 1987, 35, 2, summer, 29-40.

¶ The relevance of moral issues to the current crisis of democracy is explored. Interpretations of morality as based on communication are incomplete, & reflect a situation in which the excessive functional differentiation of modern society prevents the recognition of any normative value center. A new moral system is emerging that is independent of economics, politics, & aesthetics, but must contend with the logic of the existing social system. Such movements as the peace, ecological, & the feminist movements reflect this morality. The growth of technologically mediated communication & knowledge appears likely to call further into question the existing social basis of morality & therefore the legitimation of the existing social order. W H Stoddard

88T1912

Aronowitz, Stanley (c/o Social Text, PO Box 1474 Old Chelsea Station New York NY 10011), Theory and Socialist Strategy, Social Text, 1986-87, 16, winter, 1-16.

¶ A review essay on Ernesto Laclau's & Chantal Mouffe's Hegemony and Socialist Strategy: Towards a Radical Democratic Politics (Verso, 1985 (see listing in IRPS No. 41)) in the context of two concurrent but separate debates of the global Left: the crisis in Marxism, & the status of socialism. This work is distinguished by a bold attempt to marshal the entire body of French poststructuralist philosophy as methodological & epistemological critique of historical materialism, & a premier effort to carry the apparatus of poststructuralism in the examination of socialism as the defining vision of a putative radical or revolutionary movement. Unlike the post-Marxism of the late 1970s, this leftist critique of Marxism tacitly accepts Marx's own attack against representative democracy & the free market as proposed by nineteenth-century liberals. F. Rasmussen

88T1897

Mauviel, Maurice (Laboratoire psychologie appliquée phénomènes culturels U. Paris V, F-75270 Cedex 06 France). La Communication interculturelle: constitution d'une nouvelle discipline (Intercultural Communication: The Creation of a New Discipline) ♦ Cahiers de Sociologie Economique et Culturelle Ethnopsychologie, 1987, 7, June, 45-68 (FRE)

¶ A review of the development of the discipline of intercultural communication, which appeared in the US in the late 1960s, when two trends relating to culture & communication overlapped. Intercultural communication is the scientific study of barriers to communication between individuals of different cultures or subcultures. The discipline relies on certain subdisciplines derived from contemporary cultural anthropology, especially cognitive anthropology & symbolics. It also accords great importance to the phenomenological alternative that inspires today's social theory, eg. ethnomethodology applied to the school sector. Intercultural communication is of particular interest to the fields of education & international management, & to all institutions concerned with improving interethnic relations. 31 References. Modified HA

88T1898

Patchen, Martin (Purdue U, West Lafayette IN 47907). The Escalation of Inter-Nation Conflicts, in Sociological Focus, 1987, 20, 2, Apr, 95-110

¶ Nations engaged in a dispute may escalate their use of coercion to raise the costs of the fight to the other side & gain concessions. As a fight continues, escalation is made more probable by changes in the motivation & the expectations of the participants. The goals of each participant may expand, & winning the dispute may become more important than it was initially. Each may come to expect the other to increase its coercion beyond previous boundaries & no longer see the prospect of a negotiated settlement. In addition, normative & other inhibitions on the use of force tend to decrease once the use of coercion has begun. The ways in which a conventional war might escalate to a nuclear war are discussed, & the conditions under which deescalation of coercion will occur are outlined. 16 References. HA

88T1899

Pfaffler, Alfred, International Employment Competition, ♦ The Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science, 1987, 492, July, 109-123

¶ As countries assume more & more the character of regions within one integrated world economy, the conditions & the level of employment in the individual nation-state become increasingly dependent on the country's competitiveness. The wealth of nations becomes a matter of securing for the country & the population that is confined to the national territory a favorable position in a worldwide spatial hierarchy of market chances. The industrialization of formerly backward, labor-abundant regions in the South threatens to displace high-wage Northern labor. This threat can perhaps be kept in check for the time being through an increasing destandardization of industrial production, which, in turn, gives rise to increasing intra-North competition. In this context, which in itself means more displacement & less job security, national employment goals are largely sacrificed to the priority goal of international competitiveness. National employment becomes the hostage of the country's success in the struggle for high-technology market shares. HA

88T1900

Solomon, John (Centre Research Ethnic Relations U Warwick, Coventry CV4 7AL England). Spielarten der marxistischen Konzepte von 'Rasse', Klasse und Staat: eine kritische Betrachtung (Varieties of Marxist Conceptions of Race, Class and the State: A Critical Analysis), ♦ Peripherie, 1986, 6, 24, spring, 7-28 (GER)

¶ A comprehensive survey of recent literature undertaken to locate the position of "race" in Marxist discourse & to assess the adequacy of various theoretical approaches to its study in capitalist societies. It is argued that Marxist theories of race are heterogeneous in approach, though it can also be argued that they are unified through a common concern with (1) the material & ideological basis of racism & racial oppression, however it may be defined; & (2) the role that racism plays in structuring the entire social, political, & economic structures of societies. In other words, the basic level of agreement between the various Marxist approaches is that there is no race relations problem as such, ie. that the problem of racism exists only within the structural features of capitalist society. The overall effect of Marxist contributions in this area has been to redefine the problem of race in capitalist society in a way that makes theoretical & political debate more open & challenging. Emphasized the need to link theoretical analysis to antiracist politics. 78 References. Modified AA

88T1901

Udwadia, Firdaus E. (School Engineering U Southern California, Los Angeles 90089-1114). International Cooperation in Space: An Assessment of Economic Risks, in Technological Forecasting and Social Change, 1987, 31, 2, Apr, 173-188

¶ A discussion of the strategies & economic risks associated with collaborative ventures between nations in space exploration. Within the context of a two-period/two-nation model, current strategies are assessed, & a new strategy of bilateral transfer of resources is suggested. Optimal strategy is shown to depend on (1) the ratio of rates of return on projects carried out jointly to those carried out individually; (2) the ratio of depreciation of knowledge gained when joint projects are undertaken as opposed to individual projects, & (3) the reliability of the partner nation in following through on their data-sharing agreements. 6 Figures, 2 References. Modified HA

88T1902

van Tubergen, G. Norman & Boyd, Douglas A. (Dept Communication U Kentucky, Lexington 40506). Third-World Image of U.S. Media Use by Jordanians, in Journalism Quarterly, 1986, 63, 3, autumn, 607-611

¶ A Q-sort completed by 30 Ms in Amman, Jordan, shows how important individual information sources were to the individual in forming his overall attitudes & images of the US & Americans. The set of sources was structured in a 3 x 2 factorial design, yielding a final set of 54 items that were translated to & administered in Arabic. Three patterns of information source usage emerged. The Type 1 Jordanian formed his images of the US & Americans almost solely on the basis of Jordanian & other Islamic interpersonal information sources, & Type 2 Jordanians displayed a balanced use of US & Jordanian media in forming images of the US while rejecting Jordanian & non-Jordanian/non-US interpersonal sources. The Type 3 Rs were the only ones to consider both US media & interpersonal sources as important in forming images of the US with some emphasis on Jordanian interpersonal sources; these Rs tended to reject non-Jordanian/non-US sources. The results suggest (1) where possible effects of media content are at issue, cultural traditions of a society must be considered as a mitigating factor to strong presence of Western media, eg. a strong oral tradition & close-knit family values appeared to act as stronger operant principles for many of these Jordanians than did the presence of US media, (2) US media were most likely to be a source (though not the sole source) for the well-educated, who may be better able to view critically the content of Western media, particularly in the presence of media diversity. 2 Tables. Modified AA

88T1903

Wagner, Karl, Die soziale Konstruktion von Frieden und Krieg: Karl Mannheims wissenssoziologischer Ansatz (The Social Construction of Peace and War: Karl Mannheim's Epistemological Approach), Österreichische Zeitschrift für Soziologie, 1987, 12, 1, 34-42 (GER)

¶ Karl Mannheim was one of surprisingly few sociologists deeply concerned with the questions of peace & war & collective aggression. This is especially evident in his studies conducted after his emigration to England in 1933 through his death in 1947. While the focus of his work was on democracy, freedom, & social planning, he also investigated the social construction of aggression, & took explicit positions, which are still very relevant in the age of nuclear weapons. His suggestions for a way out of the dilemma of international relations—in which expressions of the desire for peace are accompanied by hostile postures—involve the deliberate & planned institutionalization of peaceful relations between societies. 5 References. C. Waters

88T1904

—, Perspektivy sovetsko-finskogo sotrudnichestva (The Outlook of Soviet-Finnish Collaboration), Sotsiologicheskie Issledovaniya, 1987, 14, 2, Mar-Apr, 143-144 (RUS)

¶ At a recent symposium in Suzdal', USSR, Finnish & Soviet sociologists met to discuss long-term cooperative projects involving comparative research. Important topics include changes in family structure & prevention of alcoholism. Special attention is given to advances in the financing of cooperatively owned Finnish economic enterprises. G. Prostakov

004 interviews) demonstrates that the core electorate of the Greens is young & well educated, consisting primarily of graduates of school programs that have emerged since the reform of the educational system. This sector has a poor position in the labor market, with an attendant low level of social integration. It is inferred that the Green vote will decline when the labor market improves & the traditional party of the Left moves back to its earlier programmatic position. 6 Tables, 1 Figure, 43 References. Modified HA

88T1922

Burris, Val (Dept Sociology U Oregon, Eugene 97403), Business Support for the New Right: A Consumer's Guide to the Most Reactionary American Corporations, ♦ US Socialist Review, 1987, 17, 1(91), Jan-Feb, 33-63

† Data on the contributions of corporate political action committees are examined, revealing the extent & pattern of business support for New Right (NR) political candidates in the 1982 Congressional election. There is a tendency toward greater NR support among labor-intensive & natural resource-based firms of the South & West; however, this accounts for only a small part of the variation in business political partisanship. Strong business support for NR candidates can be found across all industries & regions. The top contributors to NR candidates in 24 consumer-oriented industries are identified & discussed. 2 Tables. AA

88T1923

Cardoso, Miguel Esteves, A autoridade democrática e o sistema de autorização política: um conceito e um modelo (Democratic Authority and the System of Political Authorization: A Concept and a Model), ♦ Análise Social, 1986, 22, 2(91), 231-257 (POR)

* Democratic authority is seen as a specific form of relations present in modern liberal democracies, which is distinguished from other forms by its persuasive, rational content. Increasingly, a whole new group of professional public relations experts has to deal with the new demands of justifying & judging key political decisions. The concepts of authority from The Sociology of Georg Simmel (see SA 14 4/66B9998) are revised to accommodate the conditional & persuasive processes of authorization. Following the definition of democratic authority, an analytical model of an authorization system is presented that clearly demarcates authority zones & their respective social sectors in a given political culture. The relationship between different types of political regimes & authorization systems is discussed. Possible courses for the evolution of democratic authority relations are examined. 7 Figures. Modified HA

88T1924

Deutch, Bogdan (c/o Dissent Foundation Study Independent Social Ideas Inc, 521 Fifth Ave New York NY 10017), Neither Bellicose nor Helpless: A Democratic Left Proposal for Defense Policy, ♦ US Dissent, 1987, 34, 2, spring, 216-222

† US defense policy can only be understood in the context of foreign policy as a whole. An approach is recommended based on three assumptions: defense policy should favor both mutual & unilateral arms cutbacks, tension between European alliances should be lowered; & a multipolar rather than a bipolar world is best for US interests. Proposals are offered for working toward these goals. A democratic-socialist foreign policy in turn needs to be based on four main elements: full employment, recognition of Third World needs, restoration of the US relationship with its allies, & realism & détente. W. H. Stoddard

88T1925

Elliott, Brian & McCrone, David (Dept Sociology Edinburgh U, EH8 9YL Scotland), Class, Culture and Morality: A Sociological Analysis of Neo-Conservatism, ♦ The Sociological Review, 1987, 35, 3, Aug, 485-515

† An examination of the emerging New Right's reactions to major changes in SC structure & culture in GB in the 1970s. Major ideological trends are explored, including those of the libertarian, neoliberal, & conservative factions, attempts by the New Right to use these concepts to produce change in economic policy & in the cultural & moral fabric of society are discussed. The New Right is seen to have been born of crisis, but it has been nurtured by a variety of resentments & discontents whose roots lie in structural & cultural changes that have developed over the greater part of the postwar period. Modified HA

88T1926

Elster, Jon (c/o Archives européennes de sociologie, 12 rue de l'Ecole de médecine F-75270 Paris Cedex 06 France), The Possibility of Rational Politics, ♦ Archives Européennes de Sociologie, 1987, 28, 1, 67-103.

† An investigation of whether the idea of rational political choice is meaningful, what limitations there are on the scope for rational political decisions, & what alternative there may be for guiding political action. A theory of rational choice at the individual level is presented, & the relevance of this model for collective action is examined. The problem of political irrationality is considered. It is argued that political rationality is unable to provide unambiguous directives, & that uncertainty is an important obstacle to rational policy choices. In conclusion, it is suggested that policy choices should be guided primarily by justice rather than rationality. 1 Figure. C. Waters

88T1927

Esquith, Stephen L. (James Madison Coll Michigan State U, East Lansing 48824), Professional Authority and State Power, Theory and Society, 1987, 16, 2, Mar, 237-262

† While less prestigious professions still struggle to establish their authority on the grounds of expert knowledge & special training, the authority of the legal & medical professions is being undermined by the commodification of legal & medical services. How these new market relations affect the legitimacy of professional authority &, indirectly, the political legitimacy of the state is discussed. AA

88T1928

Fehér, Ferenc & Heller, Agnes (New School Social Research, New York NY 10011), Eastern Left-Western Left. Part II: After 1968, ♦ US Socialist Review, 1986, 16, 6(90), Nov-Dec, 33-48

† (For Part I, see SA 35 1/87R2000) A discussion of the process of re-definition of the framework in which the Western Left could operate in the 1970s & an analysis of the resulting new Western Left, presented in the broader context of the total Western political constellation. The indifference of the Western Left toward a potential or actual Eastern partner is analyzed, & the Eastern situation is assessed. Perspectives for a dialogue between the Western & Eastern Left are discussed & obstacles to such a dialogue are defined. The republican dimension of leftist tradition could provide an underlying basis for this dialogue. F. Rasmussen

88T1929

Ferencz, Imrich (Institut Marxism-Leninism Safarik U, CS-041 80 Košice Czechoslovakia), Marxistické a buržoazné chápanie slobody a demokracie (Marxist and Bourgeois Conceptions of Freedom and Democracy), Filozofia, 1980, 35, 3, 305-319. (CZE)

† The relationship between freedom, as a manifestation of human nature, & democracy, as a system of governing, depends on which SC is in power. Where bourgeois democracy hinders real freedom, socialist democracy creates preconditions for democratization of society & dying out of the state, leading toward the real freedom of classless society. During the Czechoslovakian crisis of 1968/69, rightwing revisionists & anti-communists attacked the conditions for building up socialism. Though they claimed to seek "socialism with a human face," their actual goal was to create a bourgeois democracy where freedom would be interpreted abstractly. In their view, dictatorship of the proletariat was an obstacle & not a precondition of the attainment of freedom through socialist democracy. 10 References. Modified HA

88T1930

Ferraresi, Franco, Julius Evola: Tradition, Reaction, and the Radical Right, ♦ Archives Européennes de Sociologie, 1987, 28, 1, 107-151

† A discussion of the life & work of Julius Evola (1898-1974), an important figure of the radical Right in twentieth-century Europe. Biographical data are presented & Evola's intellectual development is traced, focusing on the bases of his traditionalist thought. Evola was a painter, poet, & for 10 years editor of a fascist newspaper in Italy; yet he never actually joined the Fascist Party, & his interests in the occult & in Oriental philosophy were hardly typical of the established Right. An attempt is made to explain his attitude to history & his political doctrine—with its elements of fascism, racism, & anti-Semitism—by analyzing the underlying philosophical conception, in which a set of dichotomies are hierarchically ordered. Evola was consistently antiliberal, antidemocratic, antipopular, & antiequalitarian. His influence on the development of the radical Right in Italy since WWII is discussed. 128 References. C. Waters

88T1913

Boechler, Jean (c/o Archives européennes de sociologie, 12 rue de l'École de médecine F-75270 Paris Cedex 06 France), Des principes aux programmes politiques (From Principles to Political Programs), in Archives Européennes de Sociologie, 1987, 28, 1, 53-66. (FRF)

¶ Classical philosophy distinguishes three domains of human activity: knowledge, creation, & action. Politics is based on action, but also requires knowledge & creation. Political knowledge refers to (1) principles, i.e., the nature of a good political regime, which can provide internal peace & external security, & (2) objectives, e.g., liberty, equality, justice, security, & prosperity. The principles can be demonstrated rationally, but there is an irreducible uncertainty about the definition & pursuit of the objectives. Political creation seeks to transform the principles into institutions, & the objectives into programs. The institutions should be legitimate, legal, & adapted to the society concerned. The programs should take into account the logic of means, including scarcity, inertia, & incompatibility. Political action aims at ends & objectives, through the uncertainties surrounding the means & the consequences, in a given historical milieu. Because these uncertainties cannot be reduced, it is impossible to conceive of political action as a science or technique: it is an art, in which the supreme virtue is prudence. AA Tr. & Modified by C. Waters

88T1914

Beilak, Robert N. (Dept. Sociology, U. California, Berkeley 94720), Legitimation Processes in Politics and Religion, Current Sociology/La Sociologie Contemporaine, 1987, 35, 2, summer, 89-99.

¶ In traditional societies, religion & politics were the central legitimizing institutions, which sometimes conflicted, but in general collaborated. In many contemporary societies, the two have been separated, whether suddenly, as in Japan, or gradually, as in the US. As a result, neither can provide legitimation for social action, & they have been replaced partly by other mechanisms & partly by cynicism. For example, the last two US presidents, Jimmy Carter & Ronald Reagan, relied on expertise & personality for legitimation, with mixed success. The effectiveness of such alternative sources of legitimacy in crisis conditions is questionable. W. H. Stoddard

88T1915

Bennett, James R. (U. Arkansas, Little Rock 72204), Pre/Face 9: Critical Pluralism and Democracy, PRF/JFAT, 1986, 7, 1-2, spring/summer, 77-89.

¶ Recognition that US schools, at all levels from elementary to doctoral programs, play a role as reinforcers of the social order leads many critics to skepticism about the ideology of liberal humanism. An alternative basis for education can be found in the ideal of radical diversity & militant pluralism, which in fact is already well-established in literary criticism. Also, the idea is presented that a text's ability to express diverse theories measures its claim to canonical status. The necessary principle & toleration need not lead to acceptance of totalitarian ideologies, as it permits vigorous criticism of & dissent from such ideologies. 78 References. W. H. Stoddard

88T1916

Berman, David R. (Arizona State U., Tempe 85287), Electoral Support for Populism in the Mountain States: Some Evidence from Arizona, The Social Science Journal, 1987, 24, 1, Jan, 43-52.

¶ The nature of electoral support for candidates of the Populist Party during the 1890s in the mountain areas of the western US is explored, with focus on Ariz. Analysis of state & county voting records for 82 precincts in 1896, & 1900 US Census data on 2,310 individuals suggests that Populist support &, more broadly, the choice of parties was affected by economic & ethnocultural factors. A key to understanding support for the Populist Party was the occupational category of the miner. It is argued that the importance of this variable had less to do with economic distress or the free silver issue than with the stressful changes in miners' occupational status that created a new class of industrial worker who, given the party situation in the 1890s, had no alternative but the Populist Party. 7 Tables. Modified HA

88T1917

Bihari, Mihály. A politikai rendszer és környezete: funkciók és strukturák rendszere (Political System and Its Environment, A System of Functions and Structures), Szociológia, 1982, 2, 215-231. (HUN)

An introduction to the functionalist-structuralist concepts of political systems within current US political science, based on three main sources: the theories of Talcott Parsons, systems theory in general, & comparative empirical studies of political systems. Structuralist-functionalist sociology looks at the political system as a subsystem of society that is functionally related to wider social & international environments. A political system is an open & adaptive one that obtains constant feedback on its effects on its environment. Depending on its input & output functions, the political system may foster or hamper society's capacity for learning & innovation. 31 References. Modified HA

88T1918

Bourricaud, François (41 rue des Martyrs, F-75009 Paris France), Legitimacy and Legitimization, Current Sociology/La Sociologie Contemporaine, 1987, 35, 2, summer, 57-67.

¶ Legitimacy in general is discussed from an ideological viewpoint that can either seek to demonstrate it or seek to refute it, but sociologists can pursue other approaches, central to which is replacement of the concept of legitimacy by that of legitimization, especially interesting in democratic societies as they characteristically have no single conception of legitimacy. Legitimization as a process results in the crystallization of fundamental beliefs & the habits that result from them. Ultimately, legitimacy is meaningful only in relation to conditions where individuals fail to act in ways morally acceptable to others & must as a result be coerced into doing so. W. H. Stoddard

88T1919

Briggs, Vernon M., Jr. (Cornell U., Ithaca NY 14853), The "Albatross" of Immigration Reform: Temporary Worker Policy in the United States, in International Migration Review, 1986, 20, 4, winter, 995-1019.

¶ Temporary worker policy in the US traditionally has been advocated as a means to meet shortages for labor, a demand problem. Over the past decade, however, there has been support for the use of such policies as a means of addressing illegal immigration, a supply problem. Despite the fact that experiences show that such endeavors actually foster illegal immigration, the drive for immigration reform in the 1980s was seriously encumbered with a variety of attempts both to expand existing programs & to add new temporary worker programs. A review of the evolution of the temporary worker problem indicates how efforts to admit more temporary workers complicated the immigration reform process. It was not until the major temporary worker proposals were finally removed from the Simpson-Rodino Act by the adoption of a highly controversial "second amnesty" program (i.e., the Schumer Amendment) that passage of legislation was achieved. Because this program functioned as a bargaining chip in the effort to establish a system of employer sanctions, it is unlikely that this expedient measure will set a precedent for future replication. Hence, it can be anticipated that efforts will eventually be made to revive temporary worker policy &, in the process, rekindle the debate over this contentious issue. 2 Tables, 38 References. HA

88T1920

Brown, Wendy (Williams Coll., Williamstown MA 01267), Where Is the Sex in Political Theory?, Women & Politics, 1987, 7, 1, spring, 3-23.

¶ In the tradition of political theory, women & sexuality are rarely mentioned. When discussed, they are almost always treated together—women become nearly synonymous with sexuality while men, regarded as political or intellectual subjects, are disassociated from sex. The implications of this phenomenon for political theory's construction of women, sex, & politics are explored. Also examined are the implications of the historical association of women with sex for contemporary feminist political thinking. Considerations are offered of the ways in which traditionally gendered sexuality needs to be recast in order to liberate both women & politics from this history. 60 References. HA

88T1921

Bürklin, Wilhelm P. (Institut Politische Wissenschaften Christian-Albrechts-U., D-2300 Kiel Federal Republic Germany), Governing Left Parties Frustrating the Radical Non-Established Left: The Rise and Inevitable Decline of the Greens, European Sociological Review, 1987, 3, 2, Sept, 109-126.

¶ The causes of the rise & disproportionate success of the Green party in West Germany are discussed. Contrary to social-structural explanations that view the Greens as a party of the new, postindustrial type, it is argued that their emergence is a result of economic development & changes in Germany's political economy. Analysis of survey data $N = 3$

in Urban Affairs Quarterly, 1987, 22, 3, Mar., 399-419

¶ Gentrification & black suburbanization represent relatively recent population shifts that are at variance with long-standing demographic trends. The political implications of these shifts are considered by exploring the factors that influence the extent to which racial newcomers become politically active. The data were obtained in a telephone survey of recent home buyers ($N = 199$). Blacks who bought homes in a suburb of Washington, DC, were considerably less politically active than whites who gentrified the central city, in spite of the fact that both groups were well educated & essentially Me in character. Personal characteristics such as age, marital status, education, & income proved to be less predictive of participation than dissatisfaction with neighborhood conditions, perception of racial relations, & previous place of residence. 2 Tables, 50 References. Modified HA

88T1940

Herring, Cedric (Texas A&M U., College Station 77843). Alienated Politics and State Legitimacy: An Assessment of Three Neo-Marxian Theories. ♦ Journal of Political and Military Sociology, 1987, 15, 1, spring, 17-31

• Neo-Marxian "alienated politics" theories generally argue that the state has experienced declines in support because of its efforts to facilitate accumulation for the capitalist class, & suggest that it can bolster its legitimacy by providing social welfare programs to citizens who have been disaffected by procapitalist policies. Three prominent variants of the alienated politics view are reviewed & used to account for changes in political alienation in the US. Some operationalizations of concepts used in such theories are provided using data from the Center for Political Studies' 1964-1980 National Election Surveys, US censuses, & various serial publications; their complementary aspects are combined into two models that are tested in a multivariate framework. Little support is found for either model regarding the simultaneous effects of alienated politics factors net of sociodemographic factors & period effects. Results suggest that alienated politics theories are of little value in explaining assessments of political institutions, particularly regarding political trust & responsiveness. 3 Tables, 22 References. Modified HA

88T1941

Herzog, Hanna (Tel-Aviv U., Ramat-Aviv 69978 Israel). The Election Campaign as a Liminal Stage—Negotiations over Meanings. Journal of The Sociological Review, 1987, 35, 3, Aug., 559-574

• A discussion of the role & significance of election campaigns through a review of the relevant literature in political science, communication, & anthropology. The current interpretation of elections as ritual & drama is altered by focusing on V. Turner's concept of liminality (eg, see The Forest of Symbols, Ithaca: Cornell U Press, 1967). As liminal periods, it is claimed, election campaigns are an active arena for social construction of political worlds. They take an active part in molding political cognition & thus produce long-term effects. Perceiving elections in this conceptual frame focuses the empirical concern on: the different actors participating in molding old or new social meanings, the way challenging alternatives are presented, negotiated, included, or excluded, & the way events as well as symbols become meaningful. It reveals the contested as well as the taken-for-granted, unquestioned, & thus reinforced political symbolic world. 59 References. HA

88T1942

Hoffman, Thomas J. (Saint Mary's U. San Antonio, TX 78284). Native Americans and Contemporary Politics: The General Social Survey 1972-1984. ♦ Free Inquiry in Creative Sociology, 1987, 15, 2, Nov., 151-155

• NM Indians are compared to Indians nationwide & non-Indians with respect to public spending attitudes, political cynicism, & confidence in public officials, using data from the 1983 National Indian Youth Council's survey of Indians in northwestern NM & the cumulative file of the 1972-1984 General Social Surveys / distributions, cross-tabulations, & chi-square statistics. Results demonstrate that Indians feel too little is spent on education, the environment, & combatting crime & drug addiction. High levels of cynicism are revealed, along with low levels of confidence in the government among Indians & non-Indians alike. Indians are more concerned than non-Indians with frugal spending on combatting crime & improving education. Indians are also more likely to distrust public officials than are non-Indians. 10 Tables, 3 References. Modified AA

88T1943

Izzo, Alberto (via Giacinto Gallini 41, I-00123 Rome Italy). Legitimation and Society: A Critical Review. Current Sociology/La Sociologie Contemporaine, 1987, 35, 2, summer, 41-56

¶ An attempt to examine the various meanings that the term "legitimation" has assumed in the history of sociological thought. If a very broad meaning is given to that term, the difficulty arises of distinguishing it from the concept of consent, understood as the set of beliefs & values that makes a society integrated. Two main trends in classical sociological theories regarding legitimation can be outlined: (1) a neutral approach to the content of social norms that places the importance of the normative system on its capacity to guarantee integration of the social system, & (2) a critical theory of society that finds its presuppositions in Marxist thought. This opposition between classical non-Marxist sociological thought & Marxist thought has not been overcome. To relativistic & formalistic conceptions, other views are opposed that seem to be based on a preoccupation with the crisis of legitimation systems in advanced industrial societies, true not only for Marxist thinkers but for thinkers close to Marxist tradition, & for sociologists who connect to the pluralistic tradition. Modified AA

88T1944

Jedwab, Jack (Concordia U., Montreal Quebec H3G 1M8). Uniting Uptowners and Downtowners: The Jewish Electorate and Quebec Provincial Politics 1927-39. ♦ Canadian Ethnic Studies/Études Ethniques au Canada, 1986, 18, 2, 7-19

¶ Several studies have suggested that Quebec's Jewish community of the 1930s was split into two groups: the "uptowners" or more established Jews, & the "downtowners" or more recent immigrants. Their views diverged on the necessary degree of Jewish integration & the implications of minority status. Possessing a broader perspective on Quebec politics, the established Jews were prepared to make greater political concessions on behalf of the community than were the downtowners. The failure to obtain a separate Jewish school commission, the quicker pace of assimilation, & the rise of anti-Semitism rendered insignificant the provincial political differences between uptowner & downtowner. 1 Appendix. HA

88T1945

Jerschinn, Jan. A Vicious Circle in Polish Life?. Archives Européennes de Sociologie, 1987, 28, 1, 171-175

¶ Andrzej Walicki's "The Paradoxes of Jaruzelski's Poland" (see SA 34:4/86Q8016) is criticized. Walicki advocated the creation of cultural values that are kept distinct from political conflict. The examples of various artists & intellectuals in modern Poland are cited as evidence that involvement can be more fruitful than distance. The continuity of tradition in Poland & the role of peasant attitudes in shaping contemporary Polish society are discussed. Current economic & political problems are analyzed. It is argued that Poland is now at a turning point in its history. C. Waters

88T1946

Józefiak, Cezary (Instytut Ekonomii Politycznej U. Łódzkiego, Narutowicza 65 Poland). Przyczyny, mechanizm i skutki stopniowania reformy (Causes, Mechanisms, and Consequences of Gradation in the Introduction of Reforms). Przegląd Socjologiczny, 1986, 36, 7-19 (POL)

¶ Delays in the implementation of recent reforms in Poland are discussed, in particular, deviations from directions stated in 1981. The reform program was a compromise between two concepts of the target economic system: (1) a model of socialized market economy corrected by state planning; & (2) a model of indirect state regulation. Between 1980 & 1983, at the start of the reforms, there were many violent controversies. Reform attempts leading toward employee self-management & independent social organizations were weakened by forces loyal to the previous system, ie, the traditional doctrine of the planned economy, the economic position of the central state administration, & its actual rank in the power structure. It is concluded that the reforms resulted in a hybridization of direct & indirect centralization. Modified HA

88T1947

Kamphausen, Georg (U. Bayreuth, D-8580 Federal Republic Germany). Robert Michels und die Frage nach einer Wissenschaft von der Politik/Roberto Michels e la questione di una scienza della politica (Roberto Michels and the Question of Political Science). Annali di Sociologia/Soziologisches Jahrbuch, 1986, 2(1), 99-112, 113-126. (MUL)

Translated by Arrigo Bott.

88T1931

Ferrarotti, Franco (via Appennini 42, 00198 Rome Italy), Legitimation, Representation and Power, Current Sociology/La Sociologie Contemporaine 1987, 35, 2, summer, 21-27

‡ Legitimation has become an issue of political thought in the present age with the breakdown of ideological formulas & the suspicion that political systems are no longer representative. The basic question of legitimation is the origins of obligations as such. Legitimacy must go beyond purely procedural issues to the ideals that democratic procedures often fail to attain. Legitimacy can be exhausted neither by formally codified legality nor by popular expectations, but must be linked to basic interests. W. H. Stoddard

88T1932

Forsythe, David P. & Welch, Susan (Dept. Political Science U. Nebraska, Lincoln 68508), Human Rights Voting in Congress, U.S. The Policy Studies Journal 1986, 15, 1, Sept., 173-187

‡ In an examination of human rights voting in the U.S. Congress, covering 1977-1984, 16 roll call votes on human rights were selected for multiple regression analysis within a path model to establish direct & indirect influences on voting. In both the House & the Senate, members' views toward national security issues are found to have a strong & direct influence on human rights voting. Those who score high on the National Security Index (NSI) also score high in voting for proconservative & antibureaucratic human rights measures that target leftist regimes; those scoring low on the NSI also score low in voting for measures targeting leftist regimes. Party identification is a second strong but indirect influence on human rights voting. Republicans tend to vote for conservative human rights measures (those providing sanctions on leftist regimes). Democrats, especially those outside the South, score high on liberal human rights measures (those targeting rightist regimes). It is concluded that party & prior national security votes are extremely good predictors of human rights voting in the U.S. Congress. 1 Table, 2 Figures, 5 References. Modified AA

88T1933

Fraser, John (via Ignazio Iacometti 2, 100061 Anguillara Sabazia (RM) Italy), Legitimacy and Political Processes, Current Sociology/La Sociologie Contemporaine 1987, 35, 2, summer, 119-126

‡ The problem of binomial legitimation legitimacy has recently been modified, if not resolved, by two conflicting approaches. One refers to procedure, rather than consensus, as institutionalizing & controlling conflict in complex society. The other hopes for a critical, universalistic discourse, which will mitigate the tendency of authority to fragment, as well as to "flatten," social structures in modern societies. It is suggested that the legitimation legitimacy relation is asymmetrical. Contractual theories which argue that contract itself can suspend or annul this asymmetry are criticized. Unless the nature of the power relation inherent in authority relations is examined with due attention to the political processes that mediate social conflict, procedure, discourse, & contract will fail to deal with the essentially political & power relations that determine the type & degree of legitimation sought & accorded. Emphasis on legitimation as a passive social process diverts attention from its true locus: the political system. AA

88T1934

Fricke, Yves (Dept. sociologie Faculté sciences économiques & sociales U. Genève, CH-1211 4 Switzerland), Le Vote ouvrier. Un réexamen méthodologique de l'impact politique de la stratification sociale (The Working Class Vote: A Methodological Reexamination of the Political Impact of Social Stratification), Schweizerische Zeitschrift für Soziologie/Revue Suisse de sociologie 1987, 13, 1, June, 85-104 (FRE)

A reexamination of the central hypothesis of political sociology that there is a connection between political behavior & SC. Particular attention is given to the differentiation between the We & non-We. A distinction is made between political polarization (ie, ideological differences, political groupings & attitudes, & the self-classification of voters) & political alignment (ie, the degree to which political party structure reflects SC divisions). The various ways of politically accommodating the We/non-We dichotomy are illustrated, & an indicator for a rigorous measurement of this phenomenon is proposed. The method is tested using data from several published studies of political structure & voter behavior in liberal, industrialized democracies (the US & 11 Western European countries) in the 1970s. 4 Tables, 4 Figures, 10 References. Modified 1A

88T1935

Frideres, James S., Goldenberg, S., DiSanto, J. & Horns, J. (Faculty Social Sciences U. Calgary, Alberta T2N 1N4), Becoming Canadian: Citizen Acquisition and National Identity, Canadian Review of Studies in Nationalism/Revue Canadienne des Etudes sur le Nationalisme 1987, 14, 1, spring, 105-121

‡ An investigation of why immigrants to Canada became Canadian citizens based on interviews conducted with a quota sample of British, US, & Italian foreign-born national groups (N = 103, 88, & 154, respectively). Bivariate & multivariate analyses indicate that both individual & structural factors were important determinants but not equally so for each group. The decision to become a citizen of Canada results from a number of factors occurring over a long period of time & not on the basis of crisis situations. The results show that the decision to become a citizen was dependent on the individual's position in Canadian society. 2 Tables, 1 Figure. AA

88T1936

Fulcher, James (Dept. Sociology The University, Leicester LE1 7RH England), Labour Movement Theory versus Corporatism: Social Democracy in Sweden, Sociology 1987, 21, 2, May, 231-252

‡ The challenge from labor movement theory to conventional corporatist interpretations of Social Democratic Sweden is assessed. A theoretical debate is outlined, & the labor movement's compromise with capitalism & the issues of redistribution, codetermination, & economic democracy are examined. It is argued that the corporatist interpretation of the period from the 1930s to the 1960s stands up well to criticism. The more radical Social Democratic policies of the later 1960s & after are more consistent with labor movement theory, but demonstrate the weakness of labor political power in a capitalist society. Corporatist theory provides a better starting point than labor movement theory, though it must be modified to include the notion of the contradictions of corporatism. The strength of the Swedish labor movement made corporatism possible, but when the discontent generated by corporatism threatened the unity of the movement, it was this same strength that produced the radicalism of the 1970s. Radical measures were, however, blocked by the state's dependence on capital & the employer counteroffensive. 1 Figure, 63 References. HA

88T1937

Furman, Dmitriy Efimovich (Soviet Academy Sciences, Leninsky Prospekt 14 Moscow V-71), Upadok amerikanskoy dvukhpartynoy sistemy i evolyutsiya massovogo soznaniya v SShA (The Decline of the American Two-Party System and the Evolution of Mass Consciousness in the USA), Voprosy filosofii 1987, 41, 6, June, 123-131 (RUS)

‡ The US two-party political system has declined considerably since the 1950s. Those belonging to the Republican or Democratic parties are now more likely to disagree with official party platforms. Moreover, the number of registered independent voters has risen from 9% in 1920 to 34% in 1980. Party affiliation is less likely to evoke a strong positive or negative response from other citizens now than in years past. As a parallel development, the once sharply defined boundaries between Protestant & Catholic subcultures are beginning to blur, with the increased acceptance of intermarriage & willingness of church members to disagree publicly with the official teachings of their denomination. These political & religious trends point to a decrease of dogmatism & in the prevalence of fixed, permanent ideas in US mass consciousness. 6 Tables. G. Prostakov

88T1938

Goertzel, Ted G. (Dept. Sociology Rutgers U., Camden NJ 08102), Authoritarianism of Personality and Political Attitudes, Journal of Social Psychology 1987, 127, 1, Feb., 7-18

‡ An approach to the measurement of personality dimensions related to political & social opinions, using adjective pairs, is presented. Factor analysis of 40 adjective pairs isolated 2 orthogonal personality dimensions: tenderness-toughness & intuitiveness-consistency. Adjective pair scales & a checklist scale of political attitudes were administered in questionnaire form to U. students & NJ residents (ΣN = 481). The two-factor theory of the relationship between personality & politics was supported. 4 Tables, 2 Figures, 28 References. Modified HA

88T1939

Henig, Jeffrey R. & Gale, Dennis E. (School Public & International Affairs George Washington U., Washington DC 20052), The Political Incorporation of Newcomers to Racially Changing Neighborhoods

Ideas Inc 521 Fifth Ave New York NY 10017), Dave the Slasher & Cap the Knife: Happy Memories of Life in Glipper's Gang, ♦ W Dissent, 1986, 33, 4, fall, 437-440

- ¶ A review essay on David A. Stockman's The Triumph of Politics: Why the Reagan Revolution Failed (New York: Harper & Row, 1986 [see listing in IRPS No. 41]). Though seriously flawed in prose style, this memoir has interest as a document of US politics. It outlines Stockman's early education & influence & follows his political career as budget director under President Ronald Reagan. It illustrates Stockman's tendency toward hero worship that usually ended in disillusionment & underscores a varied yet inadequate education, as well as giving a behind-the-scenes look at the politics of the Reagan cabinet. W. H. Stoddard

88T1972

Rossetti, Carlo (Istit. Sociology U. Parma, 43100 Italy), Colonialismo, nazionalismo e la formazione dei nuovi stati nell'Africa occidentale: la storia del Ghana e della Nigeria (Colonialism, Nationalism and the Rise of the New States in West Africa: The History of Ghana and Nigeria), Studi di Sociologia, 1986, 24, 2, Apr-June, 249-259 (ITA)

- ¶ It is argued that new states in West Africa have failed to institutionalize democratic, stable political systems because the modes of colonial incorporation & penetration gave rise to a national African political class, which came to control the administrative machinery & the network of industries supported by public funds. In this situation, there was no elite determined to bring about constitutional reforms, or bring rulers under the law. Focus is on a comparative analysis of the cases of Nigeria & Ghana. Modified HA

88T1973

Rousseau, Mark O. & Hunt, Scott (U. Nebraska, Omaha 68182), Political Decentralization in Socialist France: Alternative Theories-Alternative Struggles, ♦ W Mid-American Review of Sociology, 1986, 11, 2, winter, 45-74

- ¶ The development of the centralized French state is traced from the late Middle Ages as a backdrop to analyzing the decentralization policies advocated by the Socialist Party since its rise to power in 1981. Pluralist, elitist, & ruling class interpretations of this turn of events are offered, along with an alternative social capital perspective based on neo-Marxism. This latter is better able to explain the power struggles between the capitalist state & the West that gave rise to decentralization. Practical & analytical implications of the social capital approach are discussed. 77 References. Modified HA

88T1974

Sangwan, K. S. (Dept. Sociology Maharishi Dayanand U. Rohtak, 124001 Haryana India), Harjan Legislators: Awareness and Role Performance, ♦ Guru Nanak Journal of Sociology, 1986, 7, 2, Oct., 79-88

- ¶ A critical assessment of the awareness & role performance of the Harjan legislators from Haryana State, India, during 1977-1979, based on interviews with 17 such legislators. It was found that Rs. were generally more aware of the problems of the upper castes than of those of their own castes. Their personal experiences of discrimination had little impact on their attitudes to the problems of their own castes. Only those legislators who were not sharing power were vocal about the problems of the scheduled castes. 4 Tables, 4 References. Modified HA

88T1975

Simpson, John H. (Dept. Sociology U. Toronto, Ontario M5S 1A1), Globalization, the New Religious Right, and the Politics of the Body, ♦ The Psychohistory Review, 1986-87, 15, 2, winter, 59-75.

- ¶ A comparative analysis of the US & Canada is presented, focusing on how societal differences structure political arenas in ways that can encourage or discourage fundamentalist politics & the salience of nationalist ideologies for religious expression. Also discussed are linkages between the self & the world system that exist for some members of the New Religious Right in the US. Those linkages occur where nationalism is susceptible to religious interpretation, & may be particularly strong where nationalism & religiosity are conjoined in a politics that seeks to mobilize individuals by invoking the symbolism of the body & the containment of libidinal energy as the New Religious Right has done. 23 References. AA

88T1976

Smith, Kent W. & Kinsey, Karyl A., Implications for Research, ♦ Law and Society Review, 1987, 21, 4, winter, 639-663

- ¶ A conceptual framework for taxpaying behavior is presented, emphasizing that compliance is as problematic as noncompliance, that individuals have different opportunities for both compliance & noncompliance, & that taxpaying does not necessarily involve deliberate choices. Both the process of decision making & the context of decisions must be studied. Four clusters of factors affecting the content of compliance decisions are (1) material consequences, (2) normative expectations, (3) sociological attitudes & beliefs, & (4) expressive factors. How individuals subjectively "frame" the factors depends on their social situations. The framework has several implications for research on tax noncompliance. 2 Figures, 66 References. Modified HA

88T1977

Swyngedouw, Marc (Dept. Sociology Catholic U. Leuven, B-3000 Belgium), A Pilot Study of Portuguese Electoral Shifts: 1976-1982, Quality and Quantity, 1987, 21, 2, 153-175

- ¶ An analysis of the effects of demographic change in Lisbon, Portugal, on voting behavior & party preferences, with focus on contributing factors such as age & gender differences, socioprofessional status, & housing conditions. Panel data for the period 1976-1982 derived from a larger survey of 1,421 Rs. were submitted to a variety of statistical tests. Findings show that party affiliation varies dramatically over time according to the general residential stability of voters, & that several combinations of the variables explain preferences for left- vs right-wing parties. 10 Tables, 23 References. Modified AA

88T1978

Syrkin, Marie, The Kahane Phenomenon, W. Middle East Review, 1986, 19, 1, fall, 14-20

- ¶ A discussion of the emergence & impact of the religious militant Meir Kahane in Israel, & an assessment of his growing influence. Kahane's picaresque career is traced, & factors leading to his popularity are analyzed. Ironically, his rights as a citizen are upheld by the very system which, given the opportunity, he would destroy. F. Rasmussen

88T1979

Szelényi, Szonja, Social Inequality and Party Membership: Patterns of Recruitment into the Hungarian Socialist Workers' Party, W. American Sociological Review, 1987, 52, 5, Oct., 559-573

- ¶ A causal model of membership recruitment into the Hungarian Socialist Workers' Party is presented using data from a non-Party source—the 1977 Way of Life, Quality of Life, and Values Survey (Instit. of Sociology, Hungarian Academy of Sciences, Budapest) in which questionnaires were completed by a nationally representative sample of 1,462 Rs. The findings qualify both the official view & new SC theory by showing two roads to Party membership: the first runs through the occupational structure, where workers, professionals, & technocrats are advantaged over individuals outside socialized production, the second runs through educational institutions, providing an educated few with extra opportunities to enter the Party. Results corroborate earlier conclusions that patriarchal allocation of political privileges continues in Hungary. Despite formal guarantees to the contrary, women are significantly underrepresented in the Party. Intercohort changes in membership recruitment show that older cohorts monopolize key Party positions, suggesting that a gerontocracy has emerged in Hungarian political life. Overall, results lend further support to the contention that some crystallization in inequalities has taken place in Hungary in the "second stage" of socialist development. 6 Tables, 1 Figure, 61 References. Modified HA

88T1980

Tanaka, Hidetaka (Tokyo U., Bunkyo-ku, Japan), Title in Japanese (An Approach to the Study of Nationalism by Systems Theory: Quebec in the 1950s and Its Ideological Mutation), Shakaigaku Hyoron/Japanese Sociological Review, 1987, 38, 1(149), June, 26-41. (JPN)

- ¶ A discussion of changes in nationalism in Quebec prior to 1960 as a prelude to the quiet revolution that later transpired. The discussion is framed by the development of a more general theory of nationalism. The concept of ideology is examined from the viewpoint of control & located in systems theory. The 1950s era in Quebec is characterized as a period of the emergence of traditional nationalism, & economic & political issues related to this traditional nationalism are analyzed. Modified HA out conversion, give some support to mobilization, but emphasize the historically unique surge toward the GOP among the young since 1980. This break with the parental partisan legacy signals the prospect of a party realignment through generational replacement. 4 Tables, 1 Figure. 35 References. 11A

88T1964

O'Leary, Brendan (London School Economics & Political Science, Aldwych, WC2A 2AE, England). Why Was the GLC Abolished?, International Journal of Urban and Regional Research, 1987, 11, 2, June, 193-217.

¶ An evaluation of four possible explanatory strategies to account for the abolition of the Greater London (England) Council (GLC): administrative, political, ideological, & Marxist. Although these approaches are illuminating, they fail to account for key features of the decision to abolish the GLC. It is argued that abolition was a policy fully facilitated by the Nietzschean style of the Thatcher government. 3 Tables, 1 Figure. 58 References. Modified AA

88T1965

Perrie, Maureen (Centre Russian & East European Studies, Birmingham, B15 2TT, England). The Russian Working Class, 1905-1917, Theory and Society, 1987, 16, 3, May, 431-446.

¶ A discussion of Victoria E. Bonnell's Roots of Rebellion: Workers' Politics and Organizations in St. Petersburg and Moscow, 1900-1914 (Berkeley, U. of California Press, 1983), Laura Englestein's Moscow 1905: Working-Class Organization and Political Conflict (Stanford, Stanford U. Press, 1982), Geoffrey Swain's Russian Social Democracy and the Legal Labour Movement, 1906-14 (London: Macmillan, 1983), Rose I. Glickman's Russian Factory Women: Workplace and Society, 1880-1914 (Berkeley, U. of California Press, 1984), David Mandel's The Petrograd Workers and the Fall of the Old Regime: From the February Revolution to the July Days, 1917 (London: Macmillan, 1983), David Mandel's The Petrograd Workers and the Soviet Seizure of Power: From the July Days 1917 to July 1918 (London: Macmillan, 1984), Diane Koenker's Moscow Workers and the 1917 Revolution (Princeton: Princeton U. Press, 1981), & S. A. Smith's Red Petrograd: Revolution in the Factories, 1917-18 (Cambridge: Cambridge U. Press, 1983) [see listings in IRPS No. 41]. These works explore the nature of the process through which workers in Tsarist Russia became radicalized, a question raised originally by Leopold H. Hanson (The Problem of Social Stability in Urban Russia, 1905-1917, Soviet Review, Part 1, 1964, 23, Dec., 619-647, & Part 2, 1965, 24, Mar., 1-23). Their various interpretations reflect the continuing conflict of Mensheviks who believe in the spontaneous radicalism of new peasant recruits to industry, & Bolsheviks who believe in the leadership of the hereditary Ur-proletariat. Almost all share the Leninist model of the worker as the ideal agent of socialism, though only Smith fully recognizes the weaknesses of the organized WC & their role in determining the ephemeral character of WC support for Bolshevism. W. H. Stoddard

88T1966

Perry, Frances (Bowling Green State U., OH 43403). Epilogue, ♦ The Psychohistory Review, 1986, 87, 1S, 2, winter, 143-151.

¶ A discussion of the New Right based on articles in this special issue of The Psychohistory Review (see abstracts of various articles in SA 36.1), covering several analytical levels, ranging from the global level to family issues, & ideological stances, from partial neutrality to strong opposition. The question of what, if anything, is new in the New Right is much discussed. Implications for the future are also important, especially in the aftermath of the Iran/C contra hearings. Particularly crucial are the questions of how central feminist issues must be for opponents to the New Right, & how real the threat to the New Right is. W. H. Stoddard

88T1967

Pfost, Donald R. (Sociology Dept. Western Carolina U., Cullowhee, NC 28723). Reagan's Nicaraguan Policy: A Case Study of Political Deviance and Crime, ♦ UM Crime and Social Justice, 1987, 27-28, 66-87.

¶ To place the policies of the Reagan administration toward Nicaragua in historical context, background is provided on the Sandinista revolution, focusing on major social changes implemented since the 1979 overthrow of the US-backed Somoza dictatorship. Specific policies by the Reagan administration aimed at overthrowing the government of Nicaragua, as well as the human & economic costs of these actions, are also described. The ways in which these policies violate international & domestic laws, & therefore constitute political crimes, are analyzed. The evidence suggests that a least twelve international laws & treaties & eleven domestic laws have been violated. Two issues that provide a broader interpretation of the policies of the Reagan administration toward Nicaragua are discussed: (1) The administration has used the ideology of anticommunism, which posits a communist threat to Central America, to both mystify & justify its actions; (2) It is suggested that the policies of the Reagan administration toward Nicaragua are part of a historical pattern of interventionism by ruling elites of the US aimed at protecting their economic & political interests throughout Latin America. Nicaragua poses a particular threat, for, should its revolution succeed at creating a new social order, this would provide a model other developing countries might emulate, thereby threatening further the hegemony of the US in Central America. 77 References. Modified AA

88T1968

Ranaga, Thomas K. (Dept. Sociology & Anthropology, Southern Massachusetts U., North Dartmouth 02747). Frantz Fanon and Black Consciousness in Azania (South Africa), Phylon, 1986, 47, 3, Sept., 182-191.

¶ The rising tide of black militancy in Azania (South Africa) can be better understood & appreciated if it is traced back to its ideological sources: the uniquely inspiring & galvanizing ideas of Frantz Fanon & the black nationalist Steve Biko, regarding the critical role of the decolonized mind in the liberation struggle. It is not an accident of history that, since 16 June 1976, the resistance to the apartheid system has been so persistently militant & uncompromising. At the root of this uprising is the power of ideology, specifically the militant philosophy of black consciousness. The original writings of Biko (I Write What I Like, Stubbs, Alfred [Ed.], London, 1978) & Fanon (eg, see Black Skin, White Masks, New York, 1967) are critically analyzed & evaluated & related to the role of the oppressed masses, the contribution of liberals, & the overriding question of total liberation. Modified AA

88T1969

Roche, Maurice (Dept. Sociological Studies, U. Sheffield, S10 2TN, England). Citizenship, Social Theory, and Social Change, Theory and Society, 1987, 16, 3, May, 363-399.

¶ A discussion of the concept of citizenship & its application in contemporary history. T. H. Marshall's seminal analysis of citizenship (Sociology at the Crossroads, New York: Doubleday, 1964) [subsequently published as Class, Citizenship, and Social Development], see SA 13.3.4/65B6184) is discussed & its contemporary relevance assessed & criticized, drawing on social liberal political theory & the social theory of A. Schutz & Jurgen Habermas. Marshall's analysis is argued to be based too much on British history, the nation state, on industrial society, & a depoliticized concept of humanity. It is suggested that any future social theory of citizenship will need to incorporate a more adequate & appropriate analysis of world history (eg, emergence of the global economy & the postindustrial economy) & of humanity (eg, the lifeworld & human interests in politics, communication, & work). Modified AA

88T1970

Roller, Edeltraud & Westle, Bettina (U. Mannheim, D-6800 Federal Republic Germany). Zur Politisierung und Depolitization von Wohlfahrtsansprüchen (On the Politicization and Depoliticization of Welfare Claims), Soziale Welt, 1987, 38, 2, 227-250. (GER)

¶ The assumption of a necessary consistent increase in citizen expectations of the modern democratic welfare state, which is seen as the basis for theories of nongovernability & legitimation crisis in the 1970s, is critically examined by means of a 1984 survey of West German citizens (N = 2,066). Rs were asked to what extent the state is responsible for 15 specific policy areas & whether the degree of responsibility should be altered. Rs were categorized according to education, income, SC, & party affiliation. Analyses support previous findings of a widespread general acceptance of the present-day welfare state, with little evidence for a desire to extend or reduce it. Some small but important population strata are found to favor less state intervention in specific areas, but this is not interpreted as a loss of legitimacy. 7 Tables, 42 References. Modified HA

88T1971

Rosenberg, Bernard (Dissent, Foundation Study, Independent Social

search has focused on doctrinal beliefs. It is suggested that the groups identified by these 2 strategies are different in demographic characteristics, political beliefs, & political behaviors. Using data from the 1980 CPS National Election Study ($N = 299$), it is shown that the fundamentalists identified by the doctrinal definition differ from those identified by the denominational definition in that they are less Southern & R., more conservative on women's issues & economic issues, & more politically active & Republican. The analysis suggests that attempts to integrate literature that has employed these different operational definitions should be made cautiously. 3 Tables, 24 References. HA

88T1991

Winant, Howard (Dept Sociology Temple U, Philadelphia PA 19122). Fragile "Democracies". ♦ US Socialist Review, 1987, 17, 3-4(93-94), May-Aug, 167-174

† An analysis of two primary problems facing Brazil & the Southern Cone countries of South America (Argentina, Uruguay, & Chile). (1) the economic challenge of increased indebtedness & financial stagnation, & (2) the political challenge of how to establish a viable democracy against a climate of mistrust, cynicism, & political paranoia, accompanying a history of military dictatorships. The situation in each country is explored in depth, with focus on how they are dealing with continued military dictatorship (Chile) or decisions involving the treatment of the perpetrators of past dictatorships via punto final laws (Argentina & Uruguay). The view that democracy is impossible in these countries without substantial economic development is questioned. It is argued that they will be able to overcome the effects of regimes dominated by torture & barbarism primarily because of their peoples' desire for peace, a retreat from democracy will benefit no one. 2 References. K. Hyatt

88T1992

Woolfolk, Alan (Dept Sociology & Anthropology U Southern Mississippi, Hattiesburg 39406). Hannah Arendt: The Burden of Anticreedal Culture. Human Studies, 1987, 10, 2, 247-261

* A review essay on George Kateb's Hannah Arendt: Politics, Conscience, Evil (Totowa, NJ Rowman & Allanheld, 1984). Bhikhu Parekh's Hannah Arendt and the Search for a New Political Philosophy (Atlantic Highlands, NJ Humanities Press, 1981), Gordon J. Tolle's Human Nature under Fire: The Political Philosophy of Hannah Arendt (Washington, DC: University Press of America, 1982), Stephen J. Whitfield's Into the Dark: Hannah Arendt and Totalitarianism (Philadelphia: Temple U Press, 1980), & Elisabeth Young-Bruehl's Hannah Arendt: For Love of the World (New Haven & London: Yale U Press, 1982 [see listings in IRPS No. 41]). Of the five works reviewed, Kateb's finely written & deeply respectful meditation most directly recognizes the spiritual strain of Arendt's burden of insight. Young-Bruehl's eminently readable biography makes a good complement by providing a fascinating account of the Socratic life incarnate among some of the best minds of the twentieth century. Parekh's work offers a tightly argued summary & reconstruction of Arendt's political wisdom, & Whitfield's focus is on a review of the concept of totalitarianism, tracing the fate of this idea & recovering its lost dimensions. Tolle's work focuses on Arendt's authoritative conception of human nature hidden in her concept of the human condition that secures the integrity of her thought; however, his study is poorly argued. 29 References. F. Rasmussen

88T1993

Zingerle, Arnold (U Bayreuth, D-8580 Federal Republic Germany). Einleitende Bemerkungen zur deutschen Michels-Rezeption/Nota introduttiva sulla ricezione di Roberto Michels in Germania (Introductory Remarks on the Reaction to Roberto Michels's Work in Germany). Annali di Sociologia/Sociologisches Jahrbuch, 1986, 2(1), 65-68, 69-72. (MUL)
Translated by Arnold Zingerle.

‡ Some reflections on the work of Roberto Michels, intended as an introduction to Georg Kamphausen's article (see abstract in this section). Reactions in Germany to Michels's work can only be understood in the context of national culture. It is not accurate to rank Michels among the "classic" general theorists in sociology, although his work had important implications for a theory of SCs. Michels's focus was on the role of political parties in democracy, & specific aspects of party organization. His ideas are linked with those of leading thinkers on dominance, elites, & mass psychology. However, interpretations of his work were frequently simplistic & one-sided, eg. Frieder Naschold (Organisation und Demokratie [Organization and Democracy], Stuttgart, 1969) reduced his ideas to hypotheses of the incompetence of the masses & the functional pressure toward oligarchy through bureaucracy. Among more recent studies, that of Wilfried Rohrich (Roberto Michels: Vom sozialistischen-syndikalistischen zum faschistischen Credo [Roberto Michels: From a Socialist-Trade Unionist to a Fascist Credo], Berlin, 1972), though somewhat politically slanted, is the most thorough. C. Waters

88T1994

----, Liberalism and the Crisis of Authority: New Shapes of American Politics. ♦ US Dissent, 1987, 34, 2, spring, 202-211

‡ Reprinted from New Perspectives Quarterly (no reference information provided) is a discussion by Daniel Bell, Walter Dean Burnham, & Michael Sandel on the breakup of the former liberal establishment & the question of what will replace it. US politics at present has two independent axes: economic & cultural. Cultural issues currently are unusually influential in politics. The most fundamental cultural change has been in the status of women, a development with which the Republican Party has not yet come to terms. Issues such as sexual preference & abortion create political tensions that cut across traditional Left-Right alignments & are undermining the major parties' constituencies. The lack of consensus on a national purpose has brought forward a concept of the neutral state, but this may not be an adequate public philosophy. At the same time, caution must be exercised in proposing ideas of common good in order to avoid using state power to impose moral or religious beliefs. The predicament of liberalism is to find a way to give positive content to the idea of tolerance. W. H. Stoddard

88T1981

Tanaka, Toyoji. Title appears in Japanese. (The Dynamics of Organizational Change in Local Governments: Oppositional Interrelations of Driving Forces and Resistance Forces). Shakagaku Hyoron/ Japanese Sociological Review, 1987, 37, 4(148), Mar., 426-442 (JPN)

1 Problem of change in the Japanese bureaucratic system are analyzed to develop a general theory of organizational change. It is demonstrated that public administrative organizations in local governments have a planned methodology & explicit direction for their own evolution. Problems concerning the adaptation of management systems to the processes of change are discussed, with focus on the mechanisms of organizational revolution that arise, persist, & dissolve. The dynamics of forces of change include driving forces (growth & development), resistance forces (interference & obstruction), & stable forces (the status quo & equilibrium). 2 Tables, 47 References. Modified HA

88T1982

Telo, Mario (U Salerno, I-84100 Italy). The Greening of Social Democracy: The SPD Rethinks Economics. WM Socialist Review, 1987, 17, 1091, Jan-Feb, 83-95

Translated by Michael Sexton.

1 A discussion of the transformation of the West German Social Democratic Party (SPD) analyzing the impact of the Greens on this reform. The economic impact of environmental policies proposed by groups within the SPD are reviewed. SPD political prospects are evaluated within the context of European socialism & strategies for upcoming elections are assessed. SPD's potential success creates new possibilities for the entire European Left. 1 Rasmussen

88T1983

Tenbruck, Friedrich H. (U Tübingen, D-7400) 1 Federal Republic (Germany). Schlussbemerkungen/Considerazioni finali (Concluding Remarks). Annali di Sociologia/Sociologisches Jahrbuch, 1986, 2(1), 238-240, 241-243 (MUI)

Translated by Adriana Maurina Rossi & Bernhard Ple.

1 Concluding remarks on the conference honoring the fiftieth anniversary of the death of Roberto Michels, held in June 1986 in Trento, Italy. Many contributions have been reproduced in this volume of Annali di Sociologia/Sociologisches Jahrbuch (see abstracts in SA 36:1). Here, brief references are made to the remainder, & the main points of the conference, especially those that throw new light on Michels's work, are summed up. C. Waters

88T1984

Vance, Joan (Carleton U, Ottawa Ontario K1S 5B6). Canadian State Lotteries: 1970-1984. * Dissertation Abstracts International, A: The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 47, 11, May, 4205-A. Unavailable from UMI; contact the degree-granting university.

88T1985

Vrcan, Srdjan (Mrduljeva 18, 58000 Split Yugoslavia). A Different Historical Perspective on Legitimation. Current Sociology/La Sociologie Contemporaine, 1987, 35, 2, summer, 127-134

1 The recent historical experience of Yugoslavia is used as a basis for a discussion of legitimation connected exclusively to the sociocultural background of the late capitalistic societies. Its relevance lies in the fact that it contains the still vivid memories of the crushing of a social system by external blows & internal exhaustion of legitimacy, attempts to establish different social systems claiming legitimacy of a rather different nature, defeats of such attempts through the action of a mass popular insurrectional movement, establishment of a new social system with legitimation claims of an unconventional nature, & the subsequent crisis of the new system with evident legitimation crises. In the context of such historical experience, the problem of legitimation has been essentially connected with power & domination. Modified AA

88T1986

Wallerstein, Immanuel (Fernand Braudel Center State U New York, Binghamton 13901). The Construction of Peoplehood: Racism, Nationalism, Ethnicity. Sociological Forum, 1987, 2, 2, spring, 173-188

1 An account of a recent debate about one particular people leads into an examination of the nature of peoplehood. In June 1984, Alex La Guma, a South African officially classified as Coloured, wrote a letter to Sechaba, the official journal of the African National Congress, questioning the term "so-called Coloureds." The ensuing debate raised significant issues regarding the ethnic identity, if any, of the Coloured. These issues are explored in an examination of three major concepts roughly equivalent to people, race, nation, & ethnic group. Each of these relates to a key dimension of the capitalist world economy: race to the core-periphery axis, nation to the political superstructure, & ethnic group to the formation of household structures through which nonmarket economies subsidize the market & capital. Peoplehood is thus closely linked to historical capitalism's survival, & displays certain correlations with SC, however imperfect these are. 2 References. W. H. Stoddard

88T1987

Woode, Erich (Forschungsinstitut Soziologie U Köln, D-5000 41 Federal Republic Germany). Some New Evidence on Correlates of Political Violence: Income Inequality, Regime Repressiveness, and Economic Development. European Sociological Review, 1987, 3, 2, Sept., 97-108

1 Sociological research on political protest & violence attempts to explain violence by absolute or relative deprivation or by rational action, resource mobilization, & political power (or by some combination of these factors). Although the connection between these theoretical approaches & cross-national studies rests on little more than considerations of plausibility, monotonic linkages between the level of economic development or income inequality & violence seem to fit with deprivation approaches, & a curvilinear relationship between regime repressiveness & violence fits easily with a national action or political power explanation. Taking the disagreement between previous cross-national studies as a starting point, but analyzing a new compilation of data that covers up to 47 nations in the mid-1960s, the following conclusions are reached: (1) inequality does not contribute to violence; (2) the level of economic development does not affect violence, & (3) there is a rather weak curvilinear relationship between regime repressiveness & violence. Thus, while deprivation explanations of violence receive no support at all in this study, there is at least some weak support for rational action or political power explanations. 3 Tables, 47 References. HA

88T1988

Weisberg, Herbert F. (Dept Political Science Ohio State U, Columbus 43210). The Demographics of a New Voting Gap: Marital Differences in American Voting. The Public Opinion Quarterly, 1987, 51, 3, fall, 335-343

1 Analysis of data obtained in the American National Election Studies & via media exit polls (N not provided) reveal a marriage gap in presidential voting in the US. Results show that married people vote about 10%-15% more Republican than do unmarried people. This voting difference developed in the 1972 election, & is also evident in party identification. This cleavage is important, especially today, because the proportion of unmarried people has doubled since 1964. The gap can be explained statistically in terms of race & income, however, it still may give politicians the opportunity to gain votes by appealing to voters on the basis of family issues. 4 Tables, 11 References. Modified AA

88T1989

Whitby, Kenny J. (U South Carolina, Columbia 29208). Southern Legislator Responsiveness to Blacks: The Conditioning Effect of Urbanization. The Social Science Journal, 1986, 23, 4, Oct., 449-457.

1 The impact of black voter participation since the passage of the Voting Rights Act of 1965 has received much attention. Although researchers have generally concluded that blacks have had some impact on inducing southern state representatives to the US Congress to be more responsive to their needs, they are less sure about the relationship. The possibility that urbanization may be conditioning the effect of race as a cause of legislator responsiveness is explored via compilation of voting records of the Ninety-First through the Ninety-Seventh Congresses. An essential finding is that race is a predictor of responsiveness only when a significant number of blacks reside in Ur districts. 2 Tables, 18 References. Modified HA

88T1990

Wilcox, Clyde. Fundamentalists and Politics: An Analysis of the Effects of Differing Operational Definitions. WM Journal of Politics, 1986, 48, 4, Nov., 1041-1051

1 Research that explores the political beliefs & behaviors of fundamentalist Christians has increased over the past decade, but has suffered from a diversity of operational strategies. Early research operationalized fundamentalists by their denominational affiliation, while most later re-

1000 social differentiation

19 social stratification/mobility

88T1995

Abbott, Pamela (Dept Social & Political Studies Plymouth Polytechnic, Devon PL4 8AA England). Women's Social Class Identification: Does Husband's Occupation Make a Difference?, ♦ Sociology, 1987, 21, 1, Feb, 91-103

† Research into social stratification has tended to concentrate on Wc Ms, there has been little on the Mc, & even less on Fs. The SC position & SC images of 342 married Fs working in routine nonmanual jobs in GB, drawn from a 1981-1984 national survey, are examined to assess the extent to which these Fs' SC identification is determined by the occupation of their husbands & the way in which the Mc & Wc are perceived by Fs in same- & cross-class marriages. It is concluded that a F's SC identification is determined at least in part by her own characteristics, rather than her husband's, with education being a particularly important variable. 9 Tables, 32 References. HA

88T1996

Andorka, Rudolf & Kulcsár, Rózsa. Az anya társadalmi helyzetének és iskolai végzettségének hatása a gyermekek társadalmi mobilitására (The Impact of the Social Position and Schooling of Mothers on the Social Mobility of Children), Szociológia, 1982, 4, 577-588 (HUN)

† Abstract not currently available.

88T1997

Arriaza, Armand (U Iowa, Iowa City 52242). Mousnier and Barber: The Theoretical Underpinning of the "Society of Orders" in Early Modern Europe, Past and Present, 1980, 89, Nov, 39-57

† An examination of the social structure of preindustrial Europe as presented in the sociohistorical theory of Roland Mousnier, primarily in Les Hierarchies sociales de 1450 à nos jours (Paris, 1969, translated by Peter Evans as Social Hierarchies, 1450 to the Present, New York, 1973). Mousnier's extensive borrowing from Bernard Barber's Social Stratification: A Comparative Analysis of Structure and Process (see SA 6 3/584729), which, in turn, was largely based on the writings of Talcott Parsons, is examined. Mousnier reconstructed Barber's views to achieve a radically different sociological theory. This adaptation of Barber's theory ignored advances in sociological theory & lapsed into the less sophisticated sociology of the pre-Mertonian period, ostensibly to support a preconceived hypothesis, i.e., that the present age is slipping back toward a society of orders. K. Hyatt

88T1998

Athreya, Venkatesh, Boklin, Gustav, Djurfeldt, Goran & Lindberg, Staffan (c/o Lindberg-Dept Sociology Lund U, S-221 00 Sweden). Identification of Agrarian Classes: A Methodological Essay with Empirical Material from South India, ♦ The Journal of Peasant Studies, 1987, 14, 2, Jan, 147-190

† Part of a wider study of production relations in parts of Tiruchy District in Tamil Nadu, India, & the impact of these relations on agrarian change, based on household interviews regarding farm operations conducted in 1979/80. The concept of agrarian SC is discussed, & an attempt is made to develop a method for SC analysis (i.e., identifying the SC status of individual households) & thereby to develop a tool for assessing the numerical strength of various SCs. Two methods of classification are discussed & evaluated. Utsa Patnaik's exploitation index ("Class Differentiation within the Peasantry: Analysis of Cost Escalation and Delay in Completion" Economic & Political Weekly, 1982, 11, 39, A 34-43) & the surplus criterion (Djurfeldt, Goran, & Lindberg, Staffan, Behind Poverty. The Social Formation in a Tamil Village, London Curzon Press, 1975). 10 Tables, 2 Figures, 1 Diagram, 25 References. Modified HA

88T1999

Babics, László & Dénes, Tamás. A társadalmi mobilitás volumenének elosztásáról. Empirikus adatok egy kombinatorikai modell tükrében (On the Distribution of the Volume of Social Mobility), Szociológia, 1982, 1, 83-93 (HUN)

† Abstract not currently available.

88T2000

Balog, Andreas & Cyba, Eva. Ungleichheit und soziale Schichtung (Inequality and Social Stratification), Österreichische Zeitschrift für Soziologie, 1987, 12, 2, 100-109 (GER)

† A review essay on (1) Neue alte Ungleichheiten. Berichte zur sozialen Lage in der Bundesrepublik ([The New Old Inequalities. Reports on the Social Situation in the Federal Republic of Germany], Franz, Hans-Werner, Kruse, Wilfried, Rolff, Hans-Gunter [Eds], Opladen, Federal Republic of Germany Westdeutscher Verlag, 1986), (2) Soziale Schichtung und Lebenschancen in der Bundesrepublik Deutschland ([Social Stratification and Life Chances in the German Federal Republic], Geissler, Rainer [Ed], Stuttgart, Federal Republic of Germany Ferdinand Enke Verlag, 1987), (3) Die Analyse sozialer Ungleichheit. Kontinuität, Erneuerung, Innovation ([The Analysis of Social Inequality. Continuity, Renewal, Innovation], Strasser, Hermann, Goldthorpe, John H [Eds], Opladen, Federal Republic of Germany Westdeutscher Verlag, 1985), & (4) Stefan Hradil, Sozialstrukturanalyse in einer fortgeschrittenen Gesellschaft ([Analysis of the Social Structure in an Advanced Society], Leverkusen, Federal Republic of Germany: Leske Verlag & Budrich, 1987 (see listings in IRPS No 41)). All these works deal with social stratification & social inequality. The collections of essays edited by Franz et al & by Geissler both give an overview of empirical findings concerning the unequal distribution of life chances. In Franz et al, twenty contributions report on current social problems & their effects on social inequality. The essays in Geissler deal with various specific aspects of life, e.g., working conditions, education, health, old age, & political participation. The general tendencies revealed by these two collections of empirical studies are discussed. The essays in Strasser et al focus on SC, approaching the subject of inequality from a different angle: that of classical SC theory which at the same time is criticized. Various interesting contributions develop models of different manifestations & causes of social inequality & incorporate them in a broader theoretical framework. Hradil attempts to sum up the criticisms of traditional SC theory in order to develop a new approach to measuring & understanding social inequality. His constructive suggestions are discussed. C. Waters

88T2001

Breen, Richard (Economic & Social Research Instit, 4 Burlington Rd Dublin 4 Ireland). Sources of Cross-National Variation in Mobility Regimes: English, French, and Swedish Data Reanalysed, ♦ Sociology, 1987, 21, 1, Feb, 75-90

† In "Intergenerational Class Mobility in Three Western European Societies: England, France, and Sweden" (see SA 28:3/80K7643), R. Erickson, J H Goldthorpe, & L. Portocararo attempted to compare the openness of England & Wales, France, & Sweden to intergenerational social mobility; test the theses of S M Lipset & H Zetterberg ("Social Mobility in Industrial Societies," in Lipset, Seymour M., & Bendix, R. [Eds], Social Mobility in Industrial Society, London Heinemann, 1959, 11-75) & D L Featherman, F Lancaster-Jones, & R M Hauser (see SA 35:4/87R7730), & assess the relative importance of vertical & non-vertical mobility. Here, a new model is used to reanalyze the data in a new test of these same ideas. The sources of differences between the three societies are examined. 5 Tables, 22 References. Modified HA

88T2002

Brodsky, Jodi Ellen (Columbia U, New York NY 10027). Intellectual Snobbery: A Socio-Historical Perspective, * Dissertation Abstracts International, A The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 1, July, 220-A

Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8710175.

88T2003

Conley, James Robert (Carleton U, Ottawa Ontario K1S 5B6). Class Conflict and Collective Action in the Working Class of Vancouver, British Columbia, 1900-1919, * Dissertation Abstracts International, A The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 47, 11, May, 4201-A.

Unavailable from UMI; contact the degree-granting university.

INTERNATIONAL MIGRATION
MIGRATIONS INTERNATIONALES
MIGRACIONES INTERNACIONALES

The ICM quarterly academic journal on the role of migration in today's world as analysed by well-known scholars.

Book reviews and an index of recent literature in the migration field are also included.

1988 Subscription price:

Individuals: US$ 20.- (postage and handling included)

Institutions: US$ 25.- (postage and handling included)

INTERGOVERNMENTAL COMMITTEE FOR MIGRATION (ICM)
POB 71 — 1200 GENEVA 19 — SWITZERLAND

•

88T2015

Jackman, Mary R. & Jackman, Robert W. (Center Advanced Study Behavioral Sciences, 202 Junipero Serra Blvd Stanford CA 94305). Comment on Hodge on Class Awareness, AM American Journal of Sociology, 1987, 93, 2, Sept, 444-448.
Reply, 448-450.

* Comments are addressed to Robert W. Hodge's review (see IRPS No. 36/87j46714) of Mary R. Jackman's & Robert W. Jackman's Class Awareness in the United States (see IRPS No. 36/87c00760). Hodge's offering reflects a long-standing disagreement on substantive & methodological issues. Unfortunately, he fails to address this disagreement directly, relying instead on innuendoes that often misrepresent the actual content of the book. In Class Identification One More Time: Reply to Jackman and Jackman, Robert W. Hodge (U of Southern California, Los Angeles) replies to four specific points made by Jackman & Jackman. 4 References. W. H. Stoddard

88T2016

Kappelhoff, Peter & Teckenber, Wolfgang (Instt Soziologie Christian-Albrechts-U Kiel, 23001 Federal Republic Germany). Intergenerationen- und Karrieremobilität in der Bundesrepublik Deutschland und in den Vereinigten Staaten (Intergenerational and Career Mobility in West Germany and the United States), Kolner Zeitschrift für Soziologie und Sozialpsychologie, 1987, 39, 2, June, 302-329 (GER)

* In order to compare career mobility in West Germany & the US, data from several German surveys were combined & recoded according to the occupational classification used by David L. Featherman & Robert M. Hauser (Opportunity and Change, New York & London, 1978) & then compared with their findings. A multidimensional scaling of mobility distances shows that SES & the entrepreneurial/bureaucratic dimension are the fundamental axes of the mobility space in both countries. The total amount of intergenerational mobility is moderately higher in the US. An important difference in relative mobility structures is the larger mobility distance between manual & nonmanual groups in West Germany. The findings are discussed with reference to different institutional arrangements in the educational & occupational systems. 7 Tables, 2 Figures. 51 References. Modified HA

88T2017

Koller, Peter (Instt Rechtsphilosophie U Graz, A-8010 Austria). Die Rechtfertigung und Kritik sozialer Ungleichheit (Justification and Criticism of Social Inequality), Österreichische Zeitschrift für Soziologie, 1987, 12, 2, 4-26 (GER)

* An attempt is made to understand the various forms of social inequality from the viewpoints of philosophy & sociology. The origins of the idea of human equality, which took root after the decline of feudalism, are examined. Modern concepts of legal equality, equal freedom, democratic participation, & social justice are discussed. The possibilities & limits of the justification of social inequality are investigated. In conclusion, John Rawls's concept of social justice (A Theory of Justice, Cambridge, Mass, 1971) is analyzed. 84 References. C. Waters

88T2018

Kosaka, Kenji (U Pittsburgh, PA 15260). Images of Stratification and the Problem of Self-Placement, * Dissertation Abstracts International, 4 The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 47, 12(1), June, 4525-A

Available from UMI, Ann Arbor MI. Order No. DA8708476.

88T2019

Krymkowski, Daniel H. (U Wisconsin, Madison 53706). The Process of Stratification in Comparative Perspective, * Dissertation Abstracts International, 4 The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 47, 12(1), June, 4513-A

Available from UMI, Ann Arbor MI. Order No. DA8701844

88T2020

Krymkowski, Daniel H. & Middleton, Russell (Dept Sociology Dartmouth Coll, Hanover New Hampshire 03755). Social Stratification in East Africa: Bases of Respect among Kipsigis and Kikuyu Men in Rural Kenya, UM Rural Sociology, 1987, 52, 3, fall, 379-388

* The social stratification systems among Ms in Ru Kipsigis & Kikuyu villages in Kenya are examined, comparing historical & ethnographic accounts of the past with contemporary processes. Using a dependent variable that measures the respect & influence Ms attribute to other Ms in the villages, the effects of a variety of independent variables are assessed via results of interviews conducted with 492 adult Ms in 60 villages. Certain historically important variables continue to be important, primarily age among the Kipsigis & landownership among the Kikuyu. The effects of newer social & economic changes are primarily manifest in the importance of occupational prestige of nonfarm jobs. Farmers in both ethnic groups have high occupational prestige, though this does not translate into high levels of respect. An examination of age interactions & age groups suggests that a new stratification system emerged some decades ago. 1 Table, 15 References. Modified HA

88T2021

Lane, Christel (Social & Technology Policy Division Aston U, Birmingham B4 7ET England). The Impact of the Economic and Political System on Social Stratification and Social Mobility: Soviet Lower White-Collar Workers in Comparative Perspective, ♦ Sociology, 1987, 21, 2, May, 171-198

† A detailed study of lower-level white-collar workers in Soviet society, tracing historical development of this social category & giving a general social profile of the stratum in the Soviet system of social stratification. Emphasis is given to statistical data for years from 1940 on. Comparisons are made with equivalent strata in Western society, & both divergences & commonalities are identified. The former are explained by reference to the different economic, political/ideological, & cultural factors that have shaped the system of social stratification & movement within it. Similarities are seen to be a consequence of the fact that the same DoFL characterizes both types of society. 10 Tables, 1 Figure, 1 Appendix, 69 References. Modified HA

88T2022

Linton, Derek S. (Dept History Hobart & William Smith Colls, Geneva NY 14456). Industrialization and Intergenerational Social Mobility in a Rhenish Textile Town, ♦ UM The Journal of Interdisciplinary History, 1987, 18, 1, summer, 107-126.

† Most historians & sociologists have negatively assessed the opportunities for social mobility in nineteenth-century Germany, especially the prospects for the upward mobility of laborers. Using the occupational listings from military registers in Lobberich, a Rhenish silk manufacturing town, & the mathematical models of social mobility developed by Raymond Boudon (Mathematical Structures of Social Mobility, Amsterdam, 1973), it is demonstrated that rates of intergenerational social mobility in industrializing Catholic towns of the Rhineland in the late nineteenth century were comparable to those in other western industrial nations & higher than those in large German cities. Moreover, barriers between the We & the Me were regularly surmountable. Several hypotheses to explain these findings are suggested, including deficiencies of sources used in previous mobility studies, the lack of a differentiated educational system in small towns, which would impede mobility, & the importance of kinship networks for job placement in such towns. 9 Tables. AA

88T2023

Meisenhelder, Tom (California State U, San Bernardino 92407). The Class Position of College and University Faculty, The Social Science Journal, 1986, 23, 4, Oct, 375-389

† As mental workers, Coll & U faculty collectively inhabit a contradictory location in the SC system of advanced capitalism. Within this common social position, however, they are internally stratified (ie, as elite, middle, lower, & reserve). Both characteristics of the social position of faculty have significant sociological consequences, which are manifest in the current politics surrounding unionization on campus & in the theoretical controversies over the sociohistorical importance of the new SC in contemporary society. 3 Figures, 29 References. HA

88T2024

Mensen, Theo & Guldemond, Henk. Groepseffecten op individuele leerprestaties: Een vergelijking van drie modellen voor multi-level analyse (Contextual Effects on Individual Achievement: A Comparison of Three Models for Multilevel Analysis), UM Mens en Maatschappij, 1987, 62, 2, May, 176-199. (DUT)

† A central question of the social sciences is the degree to which individual behavior-achievement is a product of interaction between individual & structural factors. Theoretical aspects of this question are explored, & three multilevel models are compared through secondary analysis of longitudinal data from 364 pupils in 24 school classes: a covariance model, a contextual model, & an endogenous feedback model. Evidence is found

88T2004

Creese, Gillian Laura (Carleton U, Ottawa Ontario K1S 5B6). Working Class Politics, Racism and Sexism: The Making of a Politically Divided Working Class in Vancouver, 1900-1939. * Dissertation Abstracts International, A: The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 47, 11, May, 4201-A 4202-A.
 † Available from UMI; contact the degree-granting university.

88T2005

Dollu, Venkateswarlu (Dept Sociology Sri Venkateswara U, Tirupati 517502 Andhra Pradesh India). Psychological Conflict between Harijans and Upper Class/Middle Class Caste Hindus: A Study in Andhra Pradesh (India). ♦ Sociological Bulletin, 1987, 36, 1, Mar, 77-98.
 † An examination of the conflict between the Harijans ("scheduled castes" in official parlance) & the U.C. & M.C. categories of caste Hindus. Historico-social background factors to this conflict are discussed, along with the psychological dimension, focusing on social, economic, political, & ritual tensions. Analysis is based on fieldwork conducted in 6 villages in the state of Andhra Pradesh in 1977, including questionnaires administered to 396 village residents. 5 Tables, 63 References. Modified AA

88T2006

Durant, Thomas J., Jr. & Loudon, Joyce S. (Dept Sociology Louisiana State U, Baton Rouge 70803). The Black Middle Class in America: Historical and Contemporary Perspectives. Phylon, 1986, 47, 4, Dec, 253-263.
 † A discussion of factors that have influenced growth & change in the SS of the black M.C. (BMC) between 1899 & 1981. The contributions of theoretical perspectives on the BMC are discussed, & a community perspective for studying the BMC in the black community & as a part of the larger society is elaborated. New directions for research on the BMC are delineated. Based on occupational classification, it is estimated that 40% of the total black population fall into the M.C. Described is how, in slightly more than 100 years, the BMC went from a few "free Negroes" to a sizeable stratum of the US M.C. 1 Table. Modified AA

88T2007

Erikson, Robert & Goldthorpe, John H. (Instit Social Research U Stockholm, S-106 91 Sweden). Commonality and Variation in Social Fluidity in Industrial Nations. Part II: The Model of Core Social Fluidity Applied. European Sociological Review, 1987, 3, 2, Sept, 145-166.
 † (For Part I see SA 35 4/87R7729.) A model of core social fluidity in industrial societies, proposed as a basis for evaluating the hypothesis that relative rates of social mobility are basically similar in all societies with a market economy & a nuclear family system (see SA 35 4/87R7730), is reviewed & applied to intergenerational mobility tables for 9 European nations. Significant deviations from the model are apparent in most cases, but partial support may be claimed for a weaker version of the hypothesis. For those nations where the core model does not fit satisfactorily, variant hypotheses are proposed. It is argued that such variation in fluidity is more damaging to the hypothesis when it can be accounted for in terms of macrosociological variables the most important of which would be political intervention rather than in terms of nation-specific variables. 4 Tables, 81 References. Modified HA

88T2008

Green, Penny Anthon (U Texas, Austin 78712). A Biocultural Analysis of Variation in the Rate of Circulation between Governing and Subject Classes. * Dissertation Abstracts International, A: The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 47, 12(1), June, 4527-A.
 Available from UMI, Ann Arbor MI. Order No. DA8706014.

88T2009

Grenko, Matevž. Razredna teorija družbene strukture in slovenski (tradicionalni) katolicizem (Class Theory of Social Structure in Slovene [Traditional] Catholicism). ♦ Anthropos, Časopis za sodelovanje humanističnih in naravoslovnih ved za psihologijo in filozofijo, 1986, 5-6, 206-217. (SLO)
 † A historical sketch of Slovene Catholic sociological thought, from its founding at the turn of the century, through a prewar flourishing & isolated postwar theoretical attempts, to the class theory of social structure. Slovene Catholic sociology does not accept the radicalness of SC conflict in the Marxist sense, since it defines class in terms different from economic production relationships. Moreover, it rejects the necessity of class struggle, often introducing terminology specific to the Catholic vision of the harmonious society. Modified HA

88T2010

Gribaudo, Maurizio (Ecole hautes études sciences sociales, 75006 Paris France). Espace ouvrier et parcours sociaux: Turin dans la première moitié du siècle (Worker Space and Social Trajectory: Turin during the First Half of the Century). Annales, 1987, 42, 2, Mar-Apr, 243-263. (FRE)
 † The development of the Ur Wc in Italy in the first half of the twentieth century is investigated. The population has remained stable; geographical & professional mobility & turnover have shaped its development & determined the frames of reference existing within worker communities. The analysis is based on 2 archival studies & 2 sets of interviews. (1) The complete genealogies of 90 families from the Ru community of Valdoria, near Turin, are reconstructed from 1858 to 1930, examining their families & professional choices & their trajectories of emigration & return. For those families who settled in Turin between 1900 & 1920, their careers are traced up to 1961. (2) The histories of a second sample of 48 families, who were registered at one address in a Wc quarter of Turin in 1936, are retraced from their arrival in the city. (3) & (4) Interviews were conducted with 12 descendants of the families studied, & with 60 elderly residents of Wc neighborhoods of Turin. Modified HA

88T2011

Hakvoort, J. L. M., Kers, W. C. & Gaspersz, J. B., Er is meer tussen hemel en aarde dan de puntenwolk: Reactie op H. J. M. Huttner (There is More between Heaven and Earth than the Point Cloud. Reaction to H. J. M. Huttner). ♦ Sociologische Gids, 1987, 34, 2, Mar-Apr, 134-138. (DUT)
 † A reply to H. J. M. Huttner's critique (see SA 35 4/87R7611) of Hakvoort's, Kers's, & Gaspersz's analysis (see SA 35 4/87R7606) of Werner Sombart's classic sociological study, Warum gibt es in den Vereinigten Staaten keinen Sozialismus? (Tubingen, 1906, English translation by Hocking, P. M., & Husbands, C. T., Why Is There No Socialism in the United States?, London: Macmillan Press, 1976). Huttner's comments are refuted point by point, & his alternative multilevel model is argued to be a regression in the development of models to explain the absence of socialism in the US. 13 References. M. Barker

88T2012

Heuzé, Gérard (Ecole hautes études sciences sociales-CEIAS, 75006 Paris France). Les Deux Classes ouvrières du "Pays d'entre les deux rivières" (The Two Working Classes of the "Country between the Two Rivers"). Annales, 1987, 42, 2, Mar-Apr, 265-281. (FRE)
 † Some findings of field research on Wc social groups in the district of Dhanbad, Bihar State, India, are discussed. This Ru zone, located at the edge of the largest Indian mining basin, is characterized by an archaic & stagnant economy. Conventional dualistic analyses of Third World social situations are shown to be inappropriate here. There are many marked & differentiated social groups, & the opposition between permanent, salaried workers & others workers seems fundamental. An evaluation of the links among various groups of producers, & an analysis of the ideologies underlying behavior demonstrate the ambiguity & complexity of social relations. Modified HA

88T2013

Hošek, Anika & Momirović, Konstantin (Instit kineziologiju fakulteta fizičku kulturu sveučilišta U Zagrebu, YU-41000 Yugoslavia). Neki metodološki problemi u ispitivanjima socijalne diferencijacije (Some Methodological Problems in the Research of Social Differentiation). Revija za Sociologiju, 1985, 15, 1-2, Jan-June, 37-51. (SCR)
 † Various methods of collecting & processing data in the investigation of social differentiation are discussed, showing that, in general, status variables are not sufficient for the measurement of the real position of the status variables & for membership in a status classification. Standard taxonomy & factor methods have limitations in the sociologically relevant models of social differentiation & stratification. A model is proposed to test social differentiation, measuring all status-relevant anthropological characteristics & testing a hypothesis on the generation of differentiation by the method of covariant structure analysis. 30 References. Modified HA

88T2014

Ishida, Hiroshi (Harvard U, Cambridge MA 02138). Educational Credentials, Class, and the Labor Market: A Comparative Study of Social Mobility in Japan and the United States. * Dissertation Abstracts International, A: The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 47, 11, May, 4204-A.
 Available from UMI, Ann Arbor MI. Order No. DA8704412.

88T2034

Śloneczynski, Kazimierz M. & Krauze, Tadeusz K. (c/o Krauze-Dept Sociology & Anthropology Hofstra U, Hempstead NY 11550). Cross-National Similarity in Social Mobility Patterns: A Direct Test of the Featherman-Jones-Hauser Hypothesis, Am. Sociological Review 1987, 52, 5, Oct, 598-611

* After exploring some of the concepts underlying the FJH hypothesis (Featherman, David L., Jones, F. Lancaster, & Hauser, Robert M., "Assumptions of Social Mobility Research in the U.S.: A Case of Occupational Status," Social Science Research, 1975, 4, 329-360) that national patterns of circulation mobility are basically the same, while national patterns of observed mobility differ, theoretical arguments for & against it are summarized. Previous tests have generally confirmed the hypothesis but they have been indirect because the relationship of the circulation-mobility pattern to the underlying circulation-mobility frequencies remained unspecified. Here, the linear programming approach is used to determine circulation-mobility frequencies, & patterns for both observed & circulation mobility are expressed in terms of proportions, rates, & odds ratios. A reanalysis of data for 16 countries demonstrates that, across countries, the patterns of circulation mobility are less similar than the patterns of observed mobility. An additional analysis of data from 22 countries collected between 1962 & 1978 shows that odds ratios computed from circulation-mobility frequencies correlate with macrostructural characteristics of societies. Results strongly contradict the FJH hypothesis. 6 Tables, 2 Figures, 45 References. Modified HA

88T2035

Subramaniam, V. (Dept Political Science Carleton U, Ottawa Ontario K1S 5B6). The Status and Function of Intellectuals in State and Society in India and China: Some Critical Comparisons, International Sociology 1987, 2, 3, Sept, 301-314

* Max Weber's comparative studies of the great non-European civilizations of India & China, & of Islam, were, in spite of their breadth of content, limited by their focus on the problem of the nonevolution of modern capitalism; here a more interesting topic of comparison is presented: the totally different relation that evolved between the intellectuals & the state in China & India. A collaborative relation of the literati in the service of the state was evolved in China by the Han dynasty by a clever distortion of the Confucian ethic, lasting, with minor discontinuities, until the early twentieth century. By contrast, the Indian Brahmin intellectuals gave only conditional support to the state, treating dharma or universal law as supreme, & gave up hope of the imperial integration of India by the seventh century. Instead, they built a flexible pattern of cultural integration based on bhakti for contact with the masses & an all-India cultural elite for leadership. 15 References. Modified HA

88T2036

Toth, Olga. Státushierarchia és származás összefüggése (Social Status and Family Background), Szociológia, 1982, 1, 13-22 (HUN).

* Structural changes in Hungarian society since WWII are examined, with particular reference to the chances of workers' & peasants' children to join the white-collar stratum. A study of the careers of a sample of engineers & other intellectuals of the same level of qualifications employed in companies & industrial & academic research institutes within a single industry in the Hungarian economy reveals inequalities of opportunity & a status hierarchy within each line of occupation. Intellectuals of WC background are overrepresented among company employees but underrepresented in both types of research institute. Comparing five different age groups within the sample, the inequality of opportunities seems to be increasing, both as regards joining the white-collar stratum & climbing the office hierarchy. This situation is explained by a lack of certain skills & attitudes among first-generation intellectuals, as well as the discriminative functions of elements within the social environment. 2 Tables, 1

Figure Modified HA

88T2037

Vallas, Steven Peter, The Labor Process as a Source of Class Consciousness: A Critical Examination, Sociological Forum, 1987, 2, 2, spring, 237-256

* An examination of the relation between aspects of workers' jobs & their levels of class consciousness, using data gathered from a 1984 questionnaire survey of workers in the communications industry in NJ & NY (N = 802 usable responses). Contrary to the prevailing view, the results indicate that extrinsic job characteristics (eg, job security, patterns of supervision, & working conditions) have much stronger effects on class consciousness than do intrinsic characteristics. The implication is that analyses of the labor process may have focused too narrowly on the work itself, at the expense of other critical aspects of the wage-labor relation. Models of the determination of class consciousness will need to consider the expectations that workers bring to their jobs. Managerial violation of the workers' expectations may have more to do with the development of class consciousness than does the content of work alone. 66 References. Modified HA

88T2038

Watson, Wilbur H. (Dept Sociology Atlanta U, GA 30314). Sitting Location as an Indicator of Status of Older Blacks in the Church: A Comparative Analysis of Protestants and Catholics in the Rural South, Phylon 1986, 47, 4, Dec, 264-275

* Sitting is ordinary activity in everyday life. However, it is not merely motor behavior, rather, it is microecological activity that is highly organized, & is symbolic of Ss, sex-related roles, & other aspects of society. Here, the social importance of the organization of sitting location among the black aged in Protestant & Catholic churches in the Ru southern US is examined, based on questionnaire data (N = 1,639 Rs aged 60+). Suggestions for further research on this traditional form of status differentiation & social arrangements are provided. 2 Tables, 1 Appendix. AA

88T2039

Wicks, Malcolm, The Decade of Inequality, Am. New Society, 1987, 79, 1258, 6 Feb, 10-12

* Under the Thatcher administration, GB has experienced a tendency toward increased inequality. An analysis of previously published data reveals that two factors have brought about this trend: earnings changes & income tax changes. The numbers of the poor have increased considerably, largely as a result of sustained unemployment. These differences in income substantially affect health & education. The evidence shows GB to be a highly unequal society. 4 Tables, 3 Figures. W. H. Stoddard

88T2040

---, Prevention and Intervention in Childhood and Adolescence, Sonderforschungsbereich 227, Universität Bielefeld, Osterreichische Zeitschrift für Soziologie, 1986, 11, 4, 87-89

* A research unit of ten projects at the U of Bielefeld, in West Germany, organized & funded by the German Research Assoc, devoted to the investigation of developmental problems during childhood & adolescence, is described. The three main project areas are (1) prevention & intervention in the family, nursery school, & school, (2) prevention & intervention in youth counseling & youth service, & (3) preventive destigmatization & crisis intervention in the area of social control. Goals of the research unit are to promote exchange between theorists & practitioners & to systematically combine practical experience from different fields, including family work, psychology, education, rehabilitation, police work, & legal work. It is hoped that new & more effective measures for prevention & intervention will develop from such interdisciplinary cooperation. J. Anderson for substantial effects of social interaction with classmates on individual achievement. The endogenous feedback model is evaluated as a powerful tool for analysis of contextual effects on individual achievement. 4 Tables, 2 Figures, 42 References. Modified HA

88T2015

Meulemann, Heiner (Geschichts- und Gesellschaftswissenschaftliche Fakultät Katholische U. Eichstätt, D-8078 Federal Republic Germany). Bildung, Generationen und die Konjunkturen des Werts Leistung. Über die Vielschichtigkeit eines Wertwandels (Education, Generations, and the Cycle of the Value "Achievement": On the Multidimensionality of Value Change). Zeitschrift für Soziologie 1987, 16, 4, Aug., 272-287. (GfR)

† The commonly perceived decline in the value of or need for "success" or "achievement" in West Germany is examined by analyzing the results of 3 longitudinal studies (N = approximately 15,000). The cycle of increase & decline over time is analyzed according to age group & educational level. Education & achievement correlated positively between 1956 & 1968, but negatively between 1972 & 1981. Analysis by age group is used to test the hypothesis that this reversal is due to an expansion, & consequent devaluation, of higher education. Results disprove the hypothesis, since the reversal in r occurs earlier than predicted, & the youngest group shows a positive r between education & achievement. It is concluded that achievement in more highly educated groups has its own cycle, which is a function of cultural developments. 2 Tables, 7 Figures, 20 References. Modified HA

88T2026

Montenegro, Ana Maria (U. Paris I, F-75231 Cedex 05 France). Marginaux ou dominés? (Marginal or Dominated?). ♦ Cahiers de Sociologie Économique et Culturelle-Ethnopsychologie 1987, 7, June, 109-114. (FR)

† The concept of marginality as applied in Latin America & elsewhere in the Third World is discussed. It has been used to refer to fringe groups living outside the law, but also to the majority of the population: the working poor. Empirical research concerning the latter segment of the population, especially in Brazil, is reviewed, & different possible interpretations of the situation are examined. The central question is whether the consumption patterns, cultural practices, & labor relations of the Ur poor define a situation of marginality in relation to the global society, or whether, on the contrary, they reveal a diversity of forms of economic & social interaction. 4 References. Modified HA

88T2027

Purpart, June L. (Dalhousie U., Halifax Nova Scotia B3H 3J5). The Household and the Mine Shaft: Gender and Class Struggles on the Zambian Copperbelt, 1962-64. Journal of Southern African Studies 1986, 13, 1, Oct., 36-56.

† An examination of the role of women & children in the labor union struggles in the Zambia Copperbelt from 1926 to 1964. Corporate attempts to control women's presence in the compounds are explored, & the notion that miners' wives simply adopted the attitudes of their M partners is rejected. Although the interests of reproductive & productive labor frequently coincided, leading to cooperation against capital, the nature of this cooperation was affected by gender struggles within worker households as well as by common concerns vis-a-vis capital. The need to examine both gender & SC in order to fully understand labor-capital relations in the Copperbelt & elsewhere is asserted. Modified AA

88T2028

Rinaudo, Yves (U. Avignon, 84000 France). Un travail en plus: les paysans d'un métier à l'autre (vers 1830-vers 1950) (Yet Another Job: Peasants Moving from Skill to Skill [ca. 1830-ca. 1950]). Annales 1987, 42, 2, Mar.-Apr., 283-307. (FR)

† The enduring & omnipresent phenomenon of pluriactivity among peasant is investigated, drawing on documentary sources, including census & survey data, for France from 1830 to 1950. Different types of pluriactivity & different cycles are distinguished. These are influenced by an area's resources & constraints, workers' capacities, & time choices. It is shown how pluriactivity functioned as a formula for adaptation to the modern world. Modified HA

88T2029

Roniger, Luis (Dept. Sociology, Social Anthropology Hebrew U. Jerusalem, Mount Scopus 91905 Israel). Coronelismo, Caciquismo, and Oyabun-kobun Bonds: Divergent Implications of Hierarchical Trust in Brazil, Mexico and Japan. U. The British Journal of Sociology 1987, 38, 3, Sept., 310-330.

† An analysis of the character of hierarchical relations of personal dependence in Brazil, Mexico, & Japan, noting their differences, exploring their implications, & indirectly, attempting to explain the lack of recourse to such relationships for purposes of modernization in the Latin American settings, in contradistinction to Japan. The detailed analysis shows that, whereas in Japan, hierarchical personalized trust contributed to societal trust, in Latin America, it recreated existing uncertainties & weakened broader institutional trust. The combined perspectives of macro- & microanalysis shed light on the comparative brittleness of hierarchical trust in Latin America. It appears that the interpersonal tendencies characteristic of each setting are related both to institutional frameworks & to images of self-fulfillment peculiar to the societies in question. It is argued that the fragility of hierarchical trust in Mexico & Brazil has contributed to the reformulation of patron-client relations following processes of change, i.e., industrialization, capitalistic penetration, & political modernization. HA

88T2030

Roos, J. P. (Dept. Social Policy U. Helsinki, 00500 Finland). From Farm to Office: Family, Self-Confidence and the New Middle Class. Life Stories/Recits de vie 1987, 3, 7-20.

† The social transformation of Finland over the past 30 years & the problems of its new Mc are examined, based on 300 autobiographies collected from white-collar workers in 1985. Three autobiographies are examined in detail, all narrate the lives of individuals from peasant or artisan backgrounds who with difficulty achieved an education & professional position that has not brought the satisfaction expected. In each case, the relationship with the father illustrates the pressures & expectations of societal values. A conflict between two SC habituses is revealed, in which the first habitus dominates the second. This conflict explains the dissatisfaction experienced by the authors: the new Mc does not feel at home in its new position. 2 photographs, 17 References. Modified AA

88T2031

Runciman, W. G. (Trinity Coll., Cambridge CB2 1TJ England). Accelerating Social Mobility. The Case of Anglo-Saxon England, Past and Present. 1984, 104, Aug., 3-30.

† Historians have described the repeated upheavals & turmoil of Anglo-Saxon society, but have not examined what this instability meant for social mobility. A model is proposed in which mobility has three distinguishable dimensions: the economic, the cultural/ideological, & the political/military. Despite problems of interpretation, historical sources indicate that mobility was possible at all levels of the social scale, & evidence also suggests that social mobility increased throughout the history of Anglo-Saxon England. While the Norman invasion restricted mobility in several ways, mobility had already approached a point where it could not be further enhanced, making late Anglo-Saxon England a relatively high point in the development of English social mobility. W. H. Stoddard

88T2032

Savells, Jerry (Wright State U., Dayton OH 45435). Who Are the "Yuppies"? A Popular View. International Journal of Comparative Sociology 1986, 27, 3-4, Sept.-Dec., 234-241.

† Yuppies (young Ur professionals) have been the focus group of the media & the marketers in the 1980s. From a sociological perspective, they are a minority, but as trendsetters & risk-takers with more political clout, education, & affluence than other groups, they may be considered the aspiring "new elites" of the post-WWII generation. A lifestyle profile of the Yuppies is developed that describes their social & behavioral attributes, values, & goals. Their potential effects on existing social institutions & the US family, LF, & political scene are examined. 15 References. Modified HA

88T2033

Šekulić, Duško. Neki problemi empirijske identifikacije slojne strukture društva (Some Problems of the Empirical Identification of the Social Structure of Society). Revija za Sociologiju 1985, 15, 1-2, Jan.-June, 31-36. (SCR)

† The implications of using different empirical approaches to investigate social stratification are noted. Normally research projects have a certain vision of a concrete social structure to be tested, using values & opinions as different indicators. It is proposed that more inductive approaches be used, e.g., taxonomic or factor analysis, resulting in more reliable evaluations of objective structures. The assumption will always remain, however, that new clusters of indicators will give rise to new concepts of social structure. 7 References. Modified HA

A response to Alan Goldman's challenge (see The Moral Foundations of Professional Ethics, Totowa, NJ: Rowman & Littlefield, 1980) to the premise that professionals are bound by special moral duties that do not bind others. A case is made for the existence of a distinctive moral foundation for professional ethics in three areas: moral uncertainty, autonomy, & special moral relations (eg. parent-child, friends, community members). In Response, Harold Lewis (School Social Work, Hunter Coll, New York, NY) explores the nature of professional ethics from the perspective of the social work client. A professional code of ethics is argued to be necessary to ensure their privacy & trust. In Response, Allen Bennett (Beth Israel Medical Center, New York, NY) summarizes the teachings of the Jewish law, the Halacha, on the subject of medical ethics & professional social work. K Hyatt

88T2050

Cocozzelli, Carmelo (School Social Work U Hawaii Manoa, Honolulu 96822). A Psychometric Study of the Theoretical Orientations of Clinical Social Workers, Journal of Social Service Research, 1985-86, 9, 2-3, winter-spring, 47-70

* An attempt is made to assess the psychometric properties of a range of theoretical orientation measures on a sample of clinical social workers & determine how much of the variation in these measures is explained by (1) professed theoretical orientation, & (2) the problems for which specific in-session behaviors are used. These issues were investigated with analogues of clinical interviews & attitude scales that indicate theoretical orientations administered to 199 currently practicing MSW & doctoral clinical social workers. Findings supported the validity & reliability of the scales & revealed that professed theoretical orientation explains approximately 5%-20% of the variance in beliefs about the helping process, while approximately 40%-60% of the variance in hypothetical in-session behavior is explained by the problems for which those behaviors are intended. 5 Tables, 36 References. Modified HA

88T2051

Collins, Randall (Dept Sociology U California, Riverside 92521). Schliessungsprozesse und die Konflikttheorie der Professionen (Market Closure and the Conflict Theory of the Professions), Osterreichische Zeitschrift für Soziologie, 1987, 12, 2, 46-60 (GER)

Translated by Eva Cyba.

* Market closure is a much broader phenomenon than occupations, its more fundamental form is monopolization among capitalist businesses. There are a variety of market economies, ranging much farther than the conventional notion of modern capitalism. From this perspective the closure of occupations on the market is part of a larger structural pattern. The ideal-typical professions do not merely monopolize but also transform their work into status honor. To understand this, it is useful to broaden Weberian theory by bringing in neo-Durkheimian theory of social rituals & the production of sacred symbols. It is suggested that professions are specialists in ritual. The importance of education in forming the professions reflects the fact that education is the peculiarly modern & secular form of ritual. Contemporary malaise about the professions is itself a product of what has happened to the production of sacred symbols in modern society. 30 References. AA

88T2052

Cornwall, Jeffrey R. & Grimes, Andrew J. (Coll Business Administration U Wisconsin, Oshkosh 54901). Cosmopolitan-Local: A Cross-Lagged Correlation of the Relationship between Professional Role Orientations and Behaviors in an Academic Organization, Human Relations, 1987, 40, 5, May, 281-297

* Questionnaire data from 219 faculty & administrators in a large, prestigious, research-oriented US U are analyzed to examine the development of professional role orientations. The assumptions of A. W. Gouldner presented in "Cosmopolitans and Locals: Toward an Analysis of Latent Social Roles" (see SA 9.2/619558) are discussed, & the direction of influence between professional role orientations & professional behaviors is examined. Analysis of cross-lagged correlations of 5 scales of professional role orientation with 4 measures of professional behavior does not indicate a causal relationship between professional behavior & role orientation in the theoretical model of the cosmopolitan-local construct. 4 Tables, 1 Figure, 29 References. F Rasmussen

88T2053

Dale, Angela (Dept Sociology U Surrey, Guildford GU2 5XH England). Occupational Inequality, Gender and Life-Cycle, ♦

Work, Employment and Society, 1987, 1, 3, Sept, 326-351

* Theories of labor market segmentation are used to analyze occupational inequalities based on gender & life cycle. It is argued that the labor market forms the arena where negotiation over occupational position takes place, but that the bargaining power that men & women bring to the labor market depends not only on experience & qualifications, but also on the conditions under which labor is supplied. The way in which supply conditions, as well as demand factors, are important in segmenting the labor market, & the way in which these act to the disadvantage of women during the course of family formation are explored, using national LF statistics from GB. 6 Tables, 1 Appendix, 58 References. HA

88T2054

Danzig, Rifka Ausubel, Religious Values vs. Professional Values: Dichotomy or Dialectic?, ♦ The Jewish Social Work Forum, 1986, 22, spring, 41-53

* An exploration of the dichotomy between religious values & professional values for social work practitioners with a focus on how personal & professional values can be integrated. Three strategies of negotiation are presented. (1) identification with one's religious commitment, (2) identification with & accommodation to both one's religious & social work commitments, & (3) identification with social work as the dominant culture. Five strategies of conflict resolution are also generated: (A) integration or synthesis of multiple values, (B) incorporation or scheduling of values, (C) compartmentalization of values, (D) assumption of a value-free stance, & (E) tailoring of the strategy to the individual situation. Various options available to religious social workers that are helpful in dealing with these conflicts are discussed. Modified HA

88T2055

Dingwall, Robert (Centre Socio-Legal Studies Wolfson Coll U Oxford, OX1 2JD England). The Certification of Competence: Assessment in Occupational Socialization, Urban Life, 1986-87, 15, 3-4, Oct-Jan, 367-393.

* The process of assessment & certification in occupational socialization is examined within a theoretical framework proposed by Robert Dingwall & P. M. Strong ("The Interactional Study of Organizations. A Critique and a Reformulation," Urban Life, 1985, 14, 205-231). It argues that assessment is not an individualized & decontextualized assay of students, but a part of an interlocking set of contracts between a training organization, an occupation, & the rest of society. Participant observation of a British training program for public health visitors, registered nurses certified for public health work focusing on three topics in the assessment process: examination question formulation & contradictory results resolution illustrates the contractual nature of occupational certification. More research is needed on how teachers justify their certification of students. 1 Figure, 20 References. Modified HA

88T2056

Domanaki, Henryk, Authority and Social Class as Occupational Prestige Correlates. An Analysis of the Causes for Differences between Occupational Prestige Hierarchies, ♦ The Polish Sociological Bulletin, 1983, 1-4(61-64), 143-157.

* An examination of sources of differences between occupational prestige hierarchies in different countries. Analysis of official data on 14 countries indicates that intercountry divergencies between occupational prestige hierarchies are determined by such factors as authority & SC. 5 Tables, 41 References. F Rasmussen

88T2057

Dressel, Paula (Dept Sociology Georgia State U, Atlanta 30303-3083). Patriarchy and Social Welfare Work, Social Problems, 1987, 34, 3, June, 294-309.

* A discussion of Heidi Hartmann's analysis of sex-based occupational segregation ("Capitalism, Patriarchy, and Job Segregation by Sex" in Blaxall, Martha, & Reagan, Barbara (Eds), Women and the Workplace: The Implications of Occupational Segregation, Chicago: U of Chicago Press, 1976) & Harry Braverman's analysis of the transformation of the labor process under monopoly capitalism (Labor and Monopoly Capital, New York: Monthly Review Press, 1974) focusing on how patriarchy operates within social welfare work. US census data (1920-1984) are used to show how deskilling in this F-intensive occupation furthered the subordination of women in the social welfare labor process; a review of the literature demonstrates how the action of women themselves operates to reproduce patriarchal relations on the job. Implications are drawn for building toward a more complete understanding of how workplace inequalities are produced & reproduced, regardless of the specific features of the occupation or its work force. 2 Tables, 95 References. HA

20 sociology of occupations & professions

88T2041

Abrahamson, Mark & Sigelman, Lee (Dept Sociology U Connecticut, Storrs 06268). Occupational Sex Segregation in Metropolitan Areas. In American Sociological Review 1987, 52, 5, Oct, 588-597.

¶ Census data are used to examine sexual segregation across 42 occupational categories in 304 SMSAs in 1980. Analysis indicates that variations in metropolitan area segregation are strongly related to local distributions of occupations, e., "structural propensities" to segregate. Net of structural propensities & of considerable explanatory importance, however, are a number of metropolitan characteristics, e.g., population size, economic vitality, & women's competitiveness. It is argued that organizations must be viewed within metropolitan area environments, & a single model combining variables pertaining to both be employed in organizational analyses. 1 Table, 1 Appendix, 36 References. Modified HA.

88T2042

Aguirre, Adalberto, Jr. (Dept Sociology U California, Riverside 92521). An Interpretative Analysis of Chicano Faculty in Academia. The Social Science Journal, 1987, 24, 1, Jan, 71-81.

¶ The participation of Chicano faculty at postsecondary educational institutions in the southwestern US in minority-related activities within academia is investigated using data from mail questionnaires completed by 159 Chicano faculty drawn from the 1981 National List of Chicano Contacts in Higher Education. Results suggest that Chicano faculty participate in minority-related service activities in response to an organizational logic that transforms their participation into personal expectation while channelling them into a limited opportunity structure. However, the number of faculty who participate in such activities is too small to serve as an effective sponsoring agent for other Chicano faculty. This participation is considered a necessary condition for the social relationships that Chicano faculty establish with the postsecondary institution. Future research should involve an autobiographical examination of the educational experiences of these faculty. 4 Tables. Modified HA.

88T2043

Allison, Paul D. & Long, J. Scott (Dept Sociology U Pennsylvania, Philadelphia 19104 6299). Interuniversity Mobility of Academic Scientists. In American Sociological Review, 1987, 52, 5, Oct, 643-652.

¶ Previous longitudinal studies of scientists' movements in academic jobs found no evidence that research productivity affects prestige attainments. Career history data are used to analyze 274 job changes made between 1961 & 1975 by physicists, chemists, mathematicians, & biologists (2N = 2,248), who held faculty positions in US U graduate departments, revealing weak, but significant effect of productivity on prestige of the destination department. Major determinants of destination prestige are prestige of prior job, prestige of doctoral department, & number of articles published in the 6 years prior to the move. Measures of citation / have no detectable effect, however. For promotion in rank at the occurrence of a job change, the major determinants are origin rank, professional age, & citation / Possible reasons for the disparity between these results & previous findings are explored, & suggestions provided for further research. 5 Tables, 32 References. HA.

88T2044

Audenino, Patrizia (U Turin, I-10124 Italy). The Paths of the Trade: Italian Stonemasons in the United States. In International Migration Review, 1986, 20, 4, winter, 779-795.

¶ The history of Italian stonemasons from Valle Cervo, an alpine village in Piedmont, Italy, is examined. These migrants comprised a wave of temporary emigration to the US between 1879 & 1915. The migration paths followed by these artisans demonstrates the close connection among their various migrations, settlements, & opportunities for employment in the eastern US. The reconstruction of the histories of individual emigrants, utilizing Italian & US sources, census records, trade-union press, & private documents, provides some insight into the experiences of these stonemasons & their social networks. HA.

88T2045

Baer, Hans A (Dept Sociology & Anthropology U Arkansas, Little Rock 72204). The Divergent Evolution of Osteopathy in America and Britain. Research in the Sociology of Health Care, 1987, 5, 63-99.

¶ A discussion of the divergent evolution of an alternative health system, namely osteopathy, in the US & GB. This divergence is accounted for in large measure by differences in the sociopolitical context of these countries, as well as their respective plural medical systems. The development of osteopathy in GB & the parallels between British osteopathy, US chiropractic are discussed. In attempting to account for this divergent evolution, four factors are considered: (1) the existence or nonexistence of licensing regulations for various types of health practitioners, (2) the relative presence of regular MDs in osteopathy, (3) the organization of medical care, & (4) the relative size of chiropractic. Whereas osteopathy in the US functions as a parallel health system to regular medicine, British osteopathy, which is characterized by considerable organizational factionalism, tends to focus on the treatment of musculoskeletal problems. 2 Tables, 60 References. Modified AA.

88T2046

Bailly, Lotte (Sloan School Management Massachusetts Instit Tech, Cambridge 02139). Experiencing Technical Work: A Comparison of Male and Female Engineers. Human Relations, 1987, 40, 5, May, 299-312.

¶ Questionnaire data from 51 matched pairs of M & F engineers are used to evaluate Fs' experience as technical employees. Although analysis revealed no statistically significant difference between the M & F R in their perceived success either at work or in their lives outside of work, differences did exist in 2 areas relevant to the experience of technical work. F engineers expressed lower self-confidence, & they reported less concern with having a job that allows the development of technical expertise. Subjective differences in the experience of technical work are discussed & related to gender differences. 5 Tables, 31 References. F. Rasmussen.

88T2047

Blochet-Bardet, Anne, Gillioz, Lucienne, Goerg, Danielle & Gognalons-Nicolet, Maryvonne (Unités investigation clinique & sociologique Instit universitaires psychiatrie, 6 rue du 31 decembre CH 1207 Geneva Switzerland). Les Femmes cadres en Suisse: un défi à l'égalité professionnelle (Women in Leading Positions in Switzerland: A Challenge to Job Equality). Schweizerische Zeitschrift für Soziologie/Revue Suisse de sociologie, 1987, 13, 1, June 29-46. (FRF).

¶ An investigation of Fs' opportunities for attaining leadership or management positions in Switzerland, using data drawn from the 1980 Swiss census & a 1986 survey of 821 Geneva residents aged 40-65, among whom 20 were F managers (Gognalons-Nicolet, Maryvonne, 'Ages, cycle de vie et période dite du milieu de la vie' [Age, Life Cycle, and the Midlife Period], Document No. 3972 082, Fonds National Suisse de la Recherche Scientifique, Geneva, 1986). It is found that the attitude toward Fs in Switzerland is essentially conservative. Fs have unequal access to management positions, & for the few who succeed, sexual inequality persists within the management stratum. The highest price paid by Fs for access to prestigious positions is the sacrifice of family life. 5 Tables, 1 Appendix, 22 References. Modified HA.

88T2048

Breuer, François (Erasmus U Rotterdam, NL-3062 PA Netherlands). Samenwerking tussen professionals: voorbeelden uit de eerstelijnsgezondheidszorg (Cooperation between Professionals, Examples from the Primary Health Care System), M&O, 1987, 41, 4 July-Aug, 202-218. (DUT).

¶ The thesis is advanced that cooperation between professionals can be built on the step-by-step solution of the problems of autonomy & interdependence. This is illustrated with examples from the primary health care system of the Netherlands. The tension between autonomy & interdependence can be solved by giving attention to the degree of interdependence between professionals & to the provisions that are made to regulate the potential conflicts it causes. Analysis of cooperation along these lines reveals four basic aspects of organization: process, form, exchange & culture. Recommendations are made for improving cooperation by developing flexible networks. 5 Figures. Modified HA.

88T2049

Caplan, Arthur, Professional Ethics: Virtue or Vice, In The Jewish Social Work Forum, 1986, 22, spring, 1-14, Comments, 15-22.

88T2067
 Rosenberg, Mark B. (U Houston, University Park TX 77004), Contradictions in the Role of Professor as Activist, U Sociological Focus, 1987, 20, 2, Apr., 111-122.

* presentation of case studies of involvement in political activities to illustrate issues about the social roles of intellectuals as raised by Michel Foucault (Power/Knowledge: Selected Interviews and Writings, 1972-1977, Gordon, C. [Tr & Ed], New York: Pantheon Books, 1980), Antonio Gramsci ("The Intellectuals" in Selections from the Prison Notebooks, New York: International Publishers, 1971). Contradictions identified & clarifications for how the professoriate should conceptualize & act within this state of affairs are offered. The professoriate is urged to become activist to avoid assimilation & conquest as intellectuals & in the interest of elites. 10 References. Modified HA

88T2068

Glenn, Grace G. (U Texas, Austin 78712), Female Entrepreneurs: Social and Psychological Variables as Related to Business Characteristics, * Dissertation Abstracts International, A The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 47, 12(1), June, 4519-A-4520-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor MI. Order No. DA8706008.

88T2069

Gredler, Gilbert R. (Dept Psychology U South Carolina, Columbia 29208), School Psychology: Failure and Promise, ♦ Journal of School Psychology, 1986, 24, 3, fall, 207-219

* A discussion of school psychology in the US. Opportunities offered the practitioner to aid parents, teachers, & children in the educational process are described based on personal experience. Observing that modern school psychology is showing signs of strain & stress, current issues facing the field are described, including the trend to increase the qualification for entry level jobs to the doctorate degree, the lack of an established battery of assessment instruments, the definition of the role of the school psychologist, & general anxiety about the acceptance of support services, such as the school psychologist, within the school system. 33 References. Modified HA

88T2070

Greendorfer, Susan L. (Dept Physical Education U Illinois, Urbana 61801), NASSS Then and Now, Sociology of Sport Journal, 1987, 4, 3, Sept., 298-303

* A brief overview is presented of the growth & development of the North American Society for the Sociology of Sport, beginning with its formation at the Second Committee on Instructional Cooperation Symposium on Sociology of Sport at Minneapolis, Minn., in 1978. Although the organization's maturation & success may not be highly correlated with the development of the subdiscipline itself, consistent interest in sport sociology topics & the absence of a forum for exchange are viewed as important factors that led to its formation. Historically, the organization consisted of diverse perspectives, which have been viewed as an organizational strength. Recently, however, a form of subtle intolerance seems to be promoting a separate identification for various scholarly perspectives. A cautionary warning is issued against the possible rise of elitism that could evolve from the creation of false cleavages. 11 References. HA

88T2071

Groepper, Richard Cameron (Coll Education Georgia State U, Atlanta 30303), A Study of the Influences of Career Development, Roles, and Lifestyle of Managers on Intervention with Subordinates with Personal Problems Affecting Work Performance, * Dissertation Abstracts International, A The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 47, 11, May, 4202-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor MI. Order No. DA8703956.

88T2072

Halbur, Bernice (U Alabama, Birmingham 35294), Managing Nursing Personnel Turnover Rates: Strategies for Nursing Home Professionals, Journal of Applied Gerontology, 1986, 5, 1, July, 64-75.

* The major findings of a 1978 study of annual turnover rates for nursing personnel & a 1979 follow-up study of aggregate resident outcomes for 22 NC nursing homes (see Halbur, Bernice, Turnover among Nursing Personnel in Nursing Homes, Ann Arbor, MI, UMI Research Press, 1982 & SA32.1/84N6189) are used as a base to identify strategies that nursing home professionals might use to document & manage such rates. The potential positive effects of some degree of turnover on quality of residential care are suggested, since 67% of all turnovers are considered to be the inevitable result of structural conditions. 1 Table, 34 References. Modified HA

88T2073

Heacock, Diane & Spicer, Christopher H. (School Education Pacific Lutheran U, Tacoma WA 98447), Communication and the Dual-Career: A Literature Assessment, U The Southern Speech Communication Journal, 1986, 51, 3, spring, 260-266

† An assessment of the role of communication in dual-career relationships based on a content analysis of 105 journal articles published 1977-1983. Only 1 of the 105 articles reviewed empirically examined the ways in which couples talked to each other during the decision-making process; only 2 articles probed how the partners in a dual-career couple perceived their communication or interaction. F Rasmussen

88T2074

Hommerich, Christoph & Werle, Raymund (Forschung Praxis, Hohenweg 7 D-5060 Bergisch-Gladbach 2 Federal Republic Germany), Die Anwaltschaft zwischen Expansionsdruck und Modernisierungszwang-Wandlungstendenzen einer klassischen Profession (The Legal Profession between Pressures of Expansion and Modernization Tendencies of Change in a Classical Profession), Zeitschrift für Rechtssoziologie, 1987, 8, 1, June, 1-22 (GER)

† The causes & effects of a steady & rapid increase in the number of lawyers in private practice in West Germany (100% in the past fifteen years) are examined. Some consequences indicated for the legal profession include increasing differentiation & specialization, as well as intensified competition, still nascent in West Germany because of relatively stable institutional structures, these developments are elaborated on the basis of the experience of the US, where they have become an established fact. Alterations & increases in the demand for legal services are examined & are claimed to accelerate the trend toward a new form of service structure incorporating market factors alongside professional ones. The question of whether this tendency will deprofessionalize or reprofessionalize the occupation remains open because of a lack of sufficient empirical data. 2 Tables, 98 References. Modified HA

88T2075

House, James S. (Dept Sociology U Michigan, Ann Arbor 48106), Chronic Stress and Chronic Disease in Life and Work: Conceptual and Methodological Issues, Work & Stress, 1987, 1, 2, Apr-June, 129-134

† It is argued that the lack of strong prospective evidence linking occupational & social stress to chronic disease stems from the failure of research designs to attend sufficiently to the etiological chronicity of such diseases. Studies of both supposedly acute stress (life events) & chronic stress in life or work must increasingly be designed to distinguish between stress that is sustained or chronic over a period of years or even decades, & hence capable of causing a serious chronic disease, & brief or transient stress, which may produce transient or brief psychological or physiological disturbances but cannot generate major chronic disease. Prospective studies are needed that collect measures of both stress & health or disease at multiple points over an extended period of time. Measures of stress should focus on affect (eg, feelings of pressure & tension) rather than on cognition (eg, feelings of satisfaction). Limited existing evidence is consistent with these ideals. 24 References. HA

88T2076

Huijgen, Fred & Lammers, Jan (Faculteit Sociale Wetenschappen Katholieke U Nijmegen, Netherlands), Het verband tussen opleiding en beroepshoogte voor mannen en vrouwen in 1977 en 1979 (The Effect of Educational Attainment on Level of Occupation for Men and Women in 1977 and 1979), U Mens en Maatschappij, 1987, 62, 3, Aug., 246-256 (DUT)

† Secondary analysis by R. Luijckx et al of the 1979 Dutch I.F. survey (see SA 35 3/87R5999) is replicated for the year 1977. After controlling for education, virtually the same gender differences in average level of occupational prestige are found. However, the effect of education on the level of job requirements appears to be somewhat higher than on the level of occupational prestige. Modified HA

88T2077

Humphrys, Peter & O'Brien, Gordon E. (Flinders U, Bedford Park South Australia 5042), The Relationship between Skill Utilization, Professional Orientation and Job Satisfaction for Pharmacists, ♦

88T2058

Falck, Hans S. (School Social Work & Medical Coll Virginia Commonwealth U, Richmond 23284). The Membership Model of Social Work. In Social Work, 1984, 29, 2, Mar-Apr, 155-160

¶ A discussion of the individualism vs the membership model in the context of social work. The individualist perspective offers little that is by definition social & psychological or that is useful for social work. The membership concept (1) makes an important statement about fundamental aspects of the human condition, (2) integrates most of social work practice, (3) solves the dilemma of generic vs specialized practice, (4) lays the logical & scientific foundation for the integration of social work methods, & (5) unifies the psycho- & socio-aspects of social work assessment & intervention. Modified HA

88T2059

Ferenczy, Agnes, Kalló, Éva, Kelemen, Maria, Strobl, Mária & Tardos, Anna. Nehány adat a budapesti bolcsődekben dolgozó csecsemő- és gyermekgondozónők helyzetéről (Facts and Figures on Nurses in Budapest Nurseries and Infant Schools). Szociológia, 1982, 1, 447-457 (HU/N)

* Abstract not currently available

88T2060

Ferri, Anthony J. & Keller, Jo E. (Dept Communication U Nevada, Las Vegas 89154). Perceived Career Barriers for Female Television News Anchors. In Journalism Quarterly, 1986, 63, 3, autumn, 461-467

¶ An attempt to identify the forces that F TV news anchors perceived as obstacles to their own career advancement & development, based on the responses of 78 full-time TV station news anchors to a 1984 mail questionnaire survey that included questions on demographic & professional attributes (eg, years on job), & on perceived barriers to career advancement. The results demonstrate that some stereotypical barriers eg, adverse influence from past setbacks, lack of personal confidence, & inadequate professional training are actually not perceived as impediments to career development for F news anchors. Rs did see overemphasis on physical appearance, sex-based differences in hiring practices, & problems overcoming stereotypical attitudes about women's appropriate roles in society as some of the barriers to their careers, which are the same barriers encountered by women entering any professional field that hitherto had small numbers of Fs. 2 Tables. Modified AA

88T2061

Fuller, Rex D. (U Wisconsin, La Crosse 54601). Occupational Prestige and Changing Higher Educational Policy. The Social Science Journal, 1987, 24, 1, Jan, 17-30

¶ The impact of higher education policy changes & family background on occupational prestige is investigated using data from the twelfth wave of the Panel Study of Income Dynamics, a sample of 762 white M heads of household in 1972. The sample was subdivided into 3 cohorts by age, & each cohort corresponded to a particular period in US higher education policy: pre-WWII, post-WWII, & the era following passage of the National Defense Education Act. Results indicate that educational attainment had a smaller effect on occupational prestige for the youngest cohort, suggesting that education per se is relatively less important when a larger share of the LF has acquired more years of schooling. Family background factors also tend to affect occupational prestige via educational attainment, & have important subsequent effects on labor market success. 5 Tables, 1 Appendix, 27 References. Modified HA

88T2062

Ganist, Frederick C. (Dept Anthropology U Massachusetts, Boston 02125). Women as Operating and Clerical Railroaders: Some Considerations of Enculturation and Intrinsic and External Barriers. In Urban Anthropology, 1986, 15, 3-4, fall-winter, 245-320

¶ An investigation of the reasons for the dearth of women in the US in on-train operating crafts, & their concentration in office crafts, using 1969-1986 Assoc of American Railroad statistics & information from the literature on occupational sex roles & railroading. This segregation is effected by barriers of individual orientations, structural external institutional factors, & structural job-intrinsic matters. Women's individual orientations, through enculturation, foster role conflicts, negative role expectations, & lack of self-confidence in taking the unfamiliar traditionally men's jobs. For the few women surmounting the barriers for entry into an operating craft, on-the-job intrinsic barriers remain, including the problem of obtaining sponsorship & work information, physically strenuous manipulations, night & day tasks in all kinds of weather, & very regular & lengthy work times. For a number of orientational & intrinsic reasons, women generally desire the railroads' clerical over their industrial operating jobs. 1 Table, 204 References. Modified HA

88T2063

Ganzeboom, Harry, de Graaf, Paul & Kalmijn, Matthijs (Heidelberglaan 2 Postbus 80108, 3508 TC Utrecht Netherlands). De culturele en de economische dimensie van beroepsstatus (The Cultural and the Economic Dimensions of Occupational Status). In Maatschappij, 1987, 62, 2, May, 153-175 (DUT)

¶ Research on social stratification largely assumes that occupational status is the most important indicator of social position, an assumption not borne out by empirical data on lifestyles & life chances. The effects of occupational status indicators persistently tend to diminish or vary once such factors as age, education, & income are controlled for. Proposed here is a new quantification of occupational position, based on Pierre Bourdieu's (Distinction: A Social Critique of the Judgement of Taste, London: Routledge & Kegan Paul, 1984 [see IRPS N 30/85c00542]) hypothesis that SS can be partitioned in Western societies into cultural & economic dimensions. Measures are proposed for these two dimensions & are applied to the effects of occupation on a number of dependent variables. Results show several cases where cultural & economic dimensions of occupational status have divergent effects. 2 Tables, 1 Figure, 35 References. Modified HA

88T2064

George, Janet & Koch, Ursula (Dept Social Work U Sydney, New South Wales 2006 Australia). Do the 'Twain' Meet after All? Attitudes of Social Workers in Europe and Asia. International Social Work, 1986, 29, 1, Jan, 29-42

¶ A cross cultural study of social workers & their adaptation to practice based on research conducted in Hong Kong & West Germany, countries of different cultural, sociopolitical, & economic contexts, with differing social welfare systems, training, roles, & expectations of social workers. The research methodologies employed were very different: a small-scale qualitative study in the Hong Kong case, a large longitudinal study of the first 5 years of practice in the German case. The purpose of drawing the two together was to show the similarities & differences in the perspectives of new graduates & their adaptation to practice & in doing so to explore the problem of cross cultural generalization in comparative studies. 18 References. Modified HA

88T2065

Gerhards, Jürgen & Anheier, Helmut K. (Forschungsinstitut Soziologie U Köln, D-5000 41 Federal Republic Germany). Zur Sozialposition und Netzwerkstruktur von Schriftstellern (The Network Structure and Social Position of Writers). Zeitschrift für Soziologie, 1987, 16, 5, Oct, 385-394 (GER)

¶ Central aspects of the social structure of literary production are analyzed, based on data obtained on 227 writers (authors of fiction published since 1970) living in Köln, West Germany. Among these, 149 were interviewed using a standardized questionnaire, & information on the remainder was gathered from secondary sources. Focusing on the multiple social networks among writers, & applying block model techniques of analysis, a summary picture of the social structure is derived, identifying four subgroups of writers: elite, junior elite, periphery, & established periphery. The determinants of the social structure are then analyzed by relating the network positions of the writers with their demographic & SE positions as well as the central aspects of literary production. The results show that the four groups are affected differently by economic & aesthetic instability & by the instability of their positions in the network. 5 Tables, 2 Schemas, 18 References. Modified HA

88T2066

Geltman, Dawn & Peña, Devon G. (c/o Peña, Dept Sociology Colorado Coll, Colorado Springs 80903). Women, Mental Health, and the Workplace in a Transnational Setting. In Social Work, 1986, 31, 1, Jan-Feb, 5-11

¶ A discussion of occupational social work in the US-Mexico border region in terms of the gender, cross-cultural, & systemic factors that affect workers' mental health. The Border Industry Program (BIP) is discussed & implications of the maquiladora program for the LF are described. Three major challenges for social workers in this setting are identified: (1) raising sensitivity to the bilingual-bicultural character of the population, (2) gaining access to industrial settings without losing autonomy, & (3) networking with other health professionals on both sides of the border. An important concern is knowing when to challenge the very structure of the industrial organization to promote health in the workplace. F. Rasmussen

88T2084

Kremer-Hayon, Lya & Ben-Peretz, Miriam (Centre Educational Administration Evaluation U Haifa, Mount Carmel Israel). Becoming a Teacher: The Transition from Teachers' College to Classroom Life. International Review of Education/Internationale Zeitschrift für Erziehungswissenschaft/Revue Internationale de pédagogie. 1986, 32, 4, 413-422

- * Beginning teachers' concerns & how these concerns relate to school environments & the teaching profession are examined, based on data from in-depth interviews with 12 beginning public & private school teachers in Israel. Findings indicate common concerns inherent in the teaching profession, but distinctive ones pertaining to school environments. The latter seem to be an influential factor in the professional socialization of beginning teachers. Practical implications are drawn for teacher educators, school advisers, & inspectors. 1 Table, 15 References. Modified HA

88T2085

Kunz, Kathryn. The Effects of Client Social Class and Job Rewards on Social Workers' Job Preference. ♦ Smith College Studies in Social Work. 1986, 56, 3, June, 224-233

- * Questionnaire data from 115 Mass clinical social workers are analyzed to assess the impact of clientele SC on job preferences. Job descriptions were manipulated with respect to both job rewards & client SC, & Rs were asked to rate a hypothetical job's desirability. Results indicate that extrinsic job rewards influence clinical social workers' job preference regardless of client SC. The only measure of job preference influenced by client SC was the rating afforded to the prestige of the agency. 2 Tables, 7 References. F. Rasmussen

88T2086

Lamont, Michele (Dept Sociology Princeton U, NJ 08544). How to Become a Dominant French Philosopher: The Case of Jacques Derrida. American Journal of Sociology. 1987, 93, 3, Nov, 584-622

- * The intellectual, cultural, institutional, & social conditions of legitimization of Jacques Derrida's work in France & the US are examined, & hypotheses are developed about the process of legitimization of interpretive theories. The legitimization of Derrida's work resulted from a fit between a & highly structured cultural & institutional systems. In France, Derrida capitalized on the structure of the intellectual market by targeting his work to a large cultural public rather than to a shrinking group of academic philosophers. His work appealed to the intellectual public as a status symbol & as a novel & sophisticated way to deal with late 1960s politics. In the US, Derrida & a group of prestigious literary critics reframed his theory & disseminated it in U literature departments. His work was imported concurrently with the work of other French scholars with whom he shared a market. Derrida's support is more concentrated & stronger in one discipline than the support for other French intellectuals. In the US, professional institutions & journals played a central role in the diffusion of his work, while cultural media were more central in France. 2 Tables, 3 Figures, 1 Appendix, 95 References. HA

88T2087

Laurier, Claudine, Archambault, Andre & Contandriopoulos, Andre-Pierre (School Pharmacy Laval U, Sainte-Foy Quebec G1K 7P4). Differences between the Practices of Men and Women Pharmacists: A Brief Review and a Study of Behaviour among Young Community Practitioners. ♦ Journal of Social and Administrative Pharmacy. 1986, 3, 4, 136-143

- * Studies comparing men & women pharmacists have emphasized differences in structural aspects of practice (practice settings, position level, hours of work, income, etc) as well as differences in attitude & interest, while practice behaviors have received less attention. Here, the practice behaviors of a sample of 600 young community pharmacists in Quebec were investigated via questionnaire, with focus on gender differences. For the behaviors analyzed, very few differences were found & it is suggested that the feminization of pharmacy, per se, is not likely to bring about changes in the content of practice. 3 Tables, 32 References. Modified HA

88T2088

Lin, Nan & Dumin, Mary (Dept Sociology State U New York, Albany 12222). Access to Occupations through Social Ties. Social Networks. 1986, 8, 4, Dec, 365-385

- * An examination of the theory linking social resources to instrumental action, focusing on the effects of access to & use of social resources on the success of instrumental action (Lin, Nan, "Social Resources and Instrumental Action," in Social Structure and Network Analysis, Marsden, Peter, & Nan, Lin (Eds). Beverly Hills, Calif. Sage, 1982). A study designed to examine access to occupations through social ties based on 1975 interview data (N not given) is reported. Two major propositions in the theory are supported: the strength of positions (as indicated by father's occupation) & the strength of social ties (as indicated by the nature of the tie being a relative, friend, or acquaintance) affect both one's access to high-prestige occupations & the range of occupations assessed. Higher original positions & weaker ties (friends & acquaintances, rather than relatives) provide better access to white-collar or more prestigious occupations, & as a consequence, provide access to a wider range of occupations. Weaker ties provide better access to social resources than do stronger ones, especially for those whose original positions are relatively low. 6 Tables, 1 Figure, 13 References. Modified HA

88T2089

Lindblad, Sverker (Dept Education U Uppsala, S-750 02 Sweden). Teachers and Social Class Orientation: An Empirical Note Based on Comparisons with Different Social Classes in Sweden. WM Scandinavian Journal of Educational Research. 1986, 30, 4, Dec, 181-192

- * An exploratory reanalysis of a 1980 questionnaire survey of a random probability sample (N = 1,170) drawn from the economically active population in Sweden. The SC orientations of teachers in the sample were compared with those of Rs of different SCs. The results showed that SC orientation of teachers concerning economic contradictions & political preferences were closest to that of employers & most distant from that of workers. In addition, the teachers were the most negative toward a vertical DoFI & advocated more liberal socialization norms. These results are empirically related to the social origin of teachers. 3 Tables, 42 References. Modified HA

88T2090

Lindquist, Charles A. & Whitehead, John T. (Dept Criminal Justice U Alabama, Birmingham 35294). Burnout, Job Stress and Job Satisfaction among Southern Correctional Officers: Perceptions and Causal Factors. Journal of Offender Counseling, Services and Rehabilitation. 1986, 10, 4, summer, 5-26

- * An analysis of perceptions & causes of burnout, job stress, & job satisfaction among a representative sample (N = 241) of Ala correctional officers responding to a 1984 questionnaire survey. After examining reported levels of burnout, stress, & job satisfaction, findings were compared to those from other studies. Multiple regression procedures were utilized to identify significant predictors. Results indicate that a number of potentially alterable, organizational factors had a significant impact on officer perceptions. Several intervention strategies are offered for consideration. 5 Tables, 1 Appendix, 30 References. HA

88T2091

Lončarić, Nevenka. Jedinstvena nomenklatura zanimanja kao osnova za uspostavljanje sistema zanimanja (The Unified Classification of Jobs as a Basis for the Classification System of Professions). Revija za Sociologiju. 1984, 14, 3-4, July-Dec, 352-362. (SCR)

- * A historical sketch of professional classification systems in Yugoslavia reveals that the number of recognized job categories has increased from 500 in 1936 to 13,000 in 1971. The organizational, technological, & personal dimensions of job classification are discussed. It is argued that greater systematization is needed before a unified classification scheme can be developed for the professions. Modified HA

88T2092

Maimiero, Lisa A. (School Business Fairfield U, CT 06430). Early Career Factors that Differentiate Technical Management Careers from Technical Professional Careers. ♦ WM Journal of Management. 1986, 12, 4, winter, 561-575

- * The early career factors that affect the decision to move from a technical professional job to a technical management position are investigated based on interview data from scientists & engineers (N = 60) from 2 research & development divisions in the chemical industry. Rs were categorized into 3 groups: career technical professionals by choice, career technical professionals by default, & technical managers. Results indicate that favorable job structure, access to mentors/sponsors, & entrepreneurial initiative characterize technical managers & technical professionals by choice, whereas technical professionals by default are characterized by the absence of these factors. The implications of these findings for management research & practice are discussed. 2 Tables, 1 Appendix, 14 References. Modified HA

Journal of Occupational Psychology, 1986, 59, 4, Dec, 315-326

¶ An examination of the consequences of technological changes in the manufacture of drugs for pharmacists' perceptions of their skill utilization, job influence, & job satisfaction. It was predicted that the job satisfaction-job attribute relationship for pharmacists would be moderated by their professional orientation, the degree to which they wanted to use their specialized skill, & have influence over drug distribution. Questionnaire survey data from a sample of 396 South Australian pharmacists indicate that community, but not hospital, pharmacists had significantly lower levels of skill utilization & job satisfaction than that found for other professional occupations. Professional role orientation was not a significant moderator of the relationship between skill utilization, job influence, & job satisfaction. Skill utilization was the major predictor of job satisfaction & accounted for up to 32% of unique variance in job satisfaction. 3 Tables, 48 References. Modified HA

88T2078

Hilsley, Raymond (U Bath, Claverton Down BA2 7AY England). Occupational Class, Selection and Inequalities in Health: Rejoinder to Richard Wilkinson's Reply. The Quarterly Journal of Social Affairs, 1987, 3, 1, July, 213-223. Reply, 225-228.

¶ A response to Richard Wilkinson (see SA 35 4/87R7805) refuting his claims regarding changes in the death rates of British adults between 1921-1923, 1930-1932, & 1970-1972. His use of various sophisticated statistics to reduce the effect of changing SC size on trends in death rate inequality is challenged, with focus on 3 major problems: (1) the use of age-specific death rate vs survival (life expectancy) data; (2) the disadvantages of using occupational SC as a measure of changing living conditions, & relating it to changes in death rate inequality over time; & (3) the potential effect of selective SC recruitment & loss, through which health & death rates are kept constantly apart. Data from the Oxford Mobility Study (1972, no further publication information provided) are rejected in favor of census data for 1921-1971 (excluding 1941), & used to refute the contention that effective redistributive policies should have a rapid impact on SC death rates. Rather, it is argued that social experiences over the lifetime are of greater importance & unlike SC death rates, are only partially susceptible to short-term changes. Thus, only the methods of measurement are responsible for the conclusion that differentials between SE-group death rates have widened, in reality, they have been reduced. In A Rejoinder to Hilsley, Richard G. Wilkinson (U of Sussex, England) offers a point-by-point contradiction of Hilsley's interpretation of health & death rate inequalities. The robustness of the way that mortality differentials have changed is emphasized, & the statistical methods used are defended. 3 Tables, 2 Figures, 3 References. K. Hyatt

88T2079

Jackson, Pamela Irving & Clark, Roger D. (Dept Sociology Rhode Island Coll, Providence 02908). Collective Bargaining and Faculty Compensation: Faculty as a New Working Class. U Sociology of Education, 1987, 60, 4, Oct, 242-256.

An assessment of the impact of the unionization of faculties on the average salary & compensation of faculty members in four-year Colls & U's generally, & in public & private institutions separately. A multivariate model that included other institutional characteristics apt to affect the association between unionization & faculty remuneration was tested with 1985/86 data on 1,194 4-year Colls & U's from the American Assoc of U Professors' records. It was found that collective bargaining has been more effective in public than in private institutions, as predicted by recent discussions of public sector unionization & the new We. It was also found that differences in the missions of institutions, the institutions' ability to pay, & regional values had significant effects on faculty remuneration. How organizational structure & institutional environment affect the economic worth of faculties is discussed. 3 Tables, 34 References. HA

88T2080

Jagacinski, Carolyn M., LeBold, William K., & Linden, Kathryn W. (Dept Psychological Sciences Purdue U, West Lafayette IN 47907). The Relative Career Advancement of Men and Women Engineers in the United States. Work & Stress, 1987, 1, 3, July-Sept, 235-247.

Despite the fact that F engineering students perform as well as their M classmates during Coll, F engineers report lower salaries & supervisory responsibility levels after about 5 years in the LF. Several hypotheses concerning reasons for these differences in career advancement were investigated using data from a 1981 mail survey (see LeBold, W. K., et al Report on National Engineering Career Development Study: Engineers' Profile for the Eighties. West Lafayette, Ind: Purdue U, 1983) of 2,250 US engineers (37% F & 63% M) who were employed & had received their Bachelor's degrees 0-5, 6-10, 11-15, or 16-20 years previously. Gender differences in career advancement could not be explained by differences in education level or self-perceptions of ability, & were still apparent even after controlling for the fact that many women had taken career breaks that had decreased their salaries & supervisory levels. Conflicts arising from multiple roles of worker, spouse, & parent affected both Ms & Fs' careers, although many F engineers avoided this tension by remaining single & childless. Results challenge several popular explanations for gender differences in career advancement, but leave the actual causes unknown. 8 Tables, 22 References. Modified HA

88T2081

Kahane, Reuven & Starr, Laura (Dept Sociology & Social Anthropology Hebrew U Jerusalem, Mount Scopus 91905 Israel). Technological Knowledge, Curriculum and Occupational Role Potential. U The Sociological Review, 1987, 35, 3, Aug, 537-558.

¶ An examination of technological curricula in terms of their potential to be realized in occupational roles. The more the curriculum is oriented toward roles (as opposed to skills or pure knowledge), the greater the probability that it will be articulated in the labor market & the greater its efficacy & legitimacy. The concept of role has been analytically divided into six components: value commitment, normative, communicative, interactive, role intelligence, & proficiency components. Theoretically, the more components are present in a given curriculum, the higher the probability that a given occupational role will be effectively articulated. However, their presence is a necessary but insufficient condition for effective role performance; their integration is of equal, if not greater importance, & the latter is meaningful only when the social context of the articulation is taken into account. In an investigation of technological curricula in Israel, examined via content analysis of 20 textbooks, it was found that the role components do not appear in a balanced manner, & some hardly receive any attention, those that are present are weakly linked to actual economic contexts. Thus, it appears that students in technological education are socialized to minimal role articulation, ie they are more likely to implement decontextualized tasks than to assume integral occupational roles. 3 Tables, 1 Appendix, 54 References. HA

88T2082

Kanhere, Usha (School Social Sciences Gujarat U, Navrangpura Ahmedabad 380009 India). White Collar Trade Unionism: Bank Officers' Trade Unions in Ahmedabad, Gujarat. Sociological Bulletin, 1986, 35, 2, Sept, 73-93.

¶ An examination of the significant characteristics of white-collar trade unionism on the basis of a study of 4 officers' trade unions at 3 nationalized commercial banks in Ahmedabad, Gujarat State, India. Detailed field data were gathered 1977-1979 via interviews with leaders & members (N = 35 & 92, respectively) & observations of union meetings & various other activities. Findings pertaining to the emergence & development of the bank officers' trade union movement & significant characteristics of the structure, functions, leaders, & members of these unions are presented. It is shown that officers' unions have evolved an informal loosely knit democratic structure, & have developed various job-related & other activities. 2 Appendixes, 10 References. Modified AA

88T2083

Karabel, Jerome & McClelland, Katherine (U California, Berkeley 94720). Occupational Advantage and the Impact of College Rank on Labor Market Outcomes. U Sociological Inquiry, 1987, 57, 4, fall, 323-347.

¶ Data from the 1973 US Occupational Changes in a Generation Survey (N = 3,144) are used to test three hypotheses suggesting that occupational advantage as measured either by family of origin or current position is a significant determinant of capacity to convert increments in Coll prestige into labor market success. The findings suggest that where one went to Coll is especially consequential for (1) occupational status of individuals from professional families, (2) earnings of individuals from both professional & managerial families, & (3) earnings of individuals in both professional & managerial positions. Overall, these findings tend to confirm the underlying hypothesis that aggregate analyses of Coll rank may be misleading when applied across subpopulations & employment situations. 4 Tables, 3 Appendixes, 50 References. Modified HA

2104

Leachmeyer, Dietrich (Brown U, Providence RI 02912). On the Power of Knowledge, in Contemporary Sociology, 1987, 16, 4, July, 61-663

Review of Eliot Friedson's Professional Powers: A Study of the Institutionalization of Formal Knowledge (Chicago: U of Chicago Press, 1986 [see listing in IRPS No 41]). Friedson presents a new analysis of professions based on the power of knowledge & knowledge experts, grounded in the everyday routines of professional work & the institutions that surround them. This book develops the critical approach to the professions that has emerged in recent decades, while integrating the earlier functionalist themes & analyses with it. It grows out of & builds on Friedson's earlier analyses of medicine & health care. At the same time the book has three problems: its lack of a general theory of power in society, its neglect of comparative analysis, & its underestimation of the cultural hegemony of the professions though it lays a foundation for future work that could resolve these problems. 5 References. W. H. Stoddard

T2105

Sage, George H. (Dept Kinesiology U Northern Colorado, Greeley 80639). The Social World of High School Athletic Coaches: Multiple Role Demands and Their Consequences, Sociology of Sport Journal, 1987, 4, 3, Sept, 213-228

A field study of US high school teacher-coaches was undertaken in 6 high schools over a 5-month period in 1985. Qualitative data were drawn from naturally occurring observations & conversations with teacher-coaches, noncoaching teachers, & school administrators, & from formal interviews with 50 teacher-coaches. Focus is on teacher-coaches' feelings, attitudes about their profession & the multiple role demands they face. The complexity & pervasiveness of role overload & interrole conflict in this occupation is demonstrated & the role strain that results described. Coping & resolution strategies used by teacher-coaches are discussed. 1 Figure, 63 References. Modified HA

T2106

Schadee, H. M. A. & Schizzerotto, A. (Dept Politica Sociale U Studi Trento, I-38100 Italy). The Collective Perception of Occupational Inequalities in Contemporary Italy: Multidimensional Evaluations and One-Dimensional Scales, European Sociological Review, 1987, 3, 2, Sept, 127-144

Popular images of occupational structure in contemporary Italy are investigated using data derived from interviews conducted in several cities (N = 180 Rs). Free sorts & similarity judgments are multidimensional; show that the results are socially without structured variation. Images of occupational stratification, obtained from rankings, collapse the spontaneous images onto a single dimension. The occupational orderings vary, however, by region. This result may be attributed to Italy's dual economy. The impact of economic structure on perceptions of occupational stratification render the use of reputational scales problematic. 2 Tables, 3 Figures, 52 References. Modified HA

T2107

Scheck, Dennis C. (San Diego State U, CA 92182). High Technology: Job Skill Requirements and Job Opportunities, Humanity and Society, 1987, 11, 2, May, 152-164

An analysis of the impact of the microcomputer & other high technology innovations on unemployment. The widespread belief that the attainment of education & training in skills used in high technology industries, such as knowledge of computers & computer-related skills, will guarantee most present & future job seekers well-paying jobs is critically examined. A theoretical framework together with historical evidence on changes in occupational skill levels & government statistics are used to evaluate this assumption. Results indicate that the fundamental theory of stratification that underlies such beliefs is not supported by historical contemporary data. High technology will not provide employment for most of the LF, nor will it offer higher skills & income for most high tech workers. 2 Tables, 21 References. F. Rasmussen

T2108

Sethi, Amarjit S. (Faculty Administration U Ottawa, Ontario K1N 6N5). Stress Coping: Guidelines for Negotiators, Guru Nanak Journal of Sociology, 1986, 7, 2, Oct, 53-77

The significance of psychological stress in psychosomatic illness, intensified due to rapid organizational & technological change, is emphasized. Negotiators must learn to utilize stress in a constructive manner to increase their efficiency & effectiveness. A conceptual framework for stress management strategies is proposed & a model of stress coping for negotiators is presented, emphasizing sources of stress at work, individual characteristics, & symptoms of occupational ill health. Personal coping strategies, including various meditation methods & other stress reduction techniques, are also presented as well as various system coping strategies. 5 Figures, 31 References. Modified AA

88T2109

Sethi, Amarjit Singh (Faculty Administration U Ottawa, Ontario K1N 6N5). Stress Coping: Guidelines for Executives, Journal of Comparative Sociology and Religion/Bulletin de sociologie et de religion comparées, 1979-80, 6-7, 87-129

A theory of stress is presented, existing research on stress is reviewed, & it is pointed out that not all stress is harmful. An approach to coping with stress is outlined for business executives. Individual strategies of meditation, gestalt, biofeedback, & transactional analysis, along with organizational strategies of organizational development & life career planning, are recommended. 5 Figures. W. H. Stoddard

88T2110

Shapiro, Susan P. (Dept Sociology Northwestern U, Evanston IL 60201). The Social Control of Impersonal Trust, American Journal of Sociology, 1987, 93, 3, Nov, 623-658

In examining how societies control trust relationships that are not embedded in structures of personal relations, it is shown that in the quest for agent fidelity, new problems are created. The resulting collection of procedural norms, structural constraints, entry restrictions, policing mechanisms, social-control specialists, & insurance-like arrangements increases the opportunities for abuse, while it encourages less acceptable trustee performance. Moreover, this system sometimes leads people to throw good money after bad, they protect trust & respond to its failures by conferring even more trust. The sources & consequences of the paradox that the guardians of trust are themselves trustees are explored. 120 References. HA

88T2111

Simons, Ronald L. (Dept Sociology & Anthropology Iowa State U, Ames 50010). Strategies for Exercising Influence, Social Work, 1982, 27, 3, May, 268-274

Social workers in all practice settings need to exercise influence. Research on attitude formation & change is used to derive strategies for achieving influence: giving both sides of an issue, stressing the need for consistency, identifying self-defeating behavior, & using role reversal. HA

88T2112

Sorensen, Ellen Westh (Dept Pharmaceutics Royal Danish School Pharmacy, Copenhagen). The Pharmacist's Professional Self-Perception: A Model for the Pharmacist's Professional Self-Perception and an Evaluation of the Pharmacist's Possibilities to Initiate Tasks in the Primary Health Care, Journal of Social and Administrative Pharmacy, 1986, 3, 4, 144-156

Based on qualitative interviews with 9 pharmacy pharmacists in 2 Danish communities, an ideal typical model for the pharmacist's professional self-perception is developed. Four different types of perception are identified: technical, business conforming, & holistic & illustrated via pharmacists' descriptions of the importance of their working tasks in the pharmacy & their role perceptions. The ideal types are discussed in relation to a number of social factors & pharmacists' conception of science. The importance of the ideal types for development of tasks in primary health care is evaluated. 3 Tables, 2 Figures, 28 References. Modified HA

88T2113

Specht, Harry (School Social Welfare U California, Berkeley 94720). Managing Professional Interpersonal Interactions, Social Work, 1985, 30, 3, May-June, 225-230

A framework for analysis of the interpersonal interactions of professional social workers is presented. The concepts introduced are: qualities of interactions (durations, intensity, disposition), professional needs (eg, for self-esteem), & the resources exchanged in interaction. Four types of others with whom professional social workers interact are identified: clinical, collateral, collegial, & sociopolitical others. The use of the concepts mentioned above to analyze the professional interactions of social workers with these others is discussed, it is concluded that ego-psychological theories are most useful to analyze clinical interaction, & theories that take account of context are more useful to analyze nonclinical interactions. 1 Figure. AA

88T2093

Manga, Pran. Some Interrelationships between Occupational Stress and Occupational Health and Safety. ♦ Journal of Comparative Sociology and Religion/Bulletin de sociologie et de religion comparees 1979-80, 6-7, 130-154

¶ A review of existing research on occupational stress & its impact on occupational safety & health. The substantial economic impact of occupational stress is emphasized. W. H. Stoddard

88T2094

McDiarmid, G. Williamson & Kleinfeld, Judith S. (Center Cross-Cultural Studies U Alaska, Fairbanks 99701). Occupational Values of Rural Eskimo. ♦ Journal of American Indian Education, 1986, 25, 3, May, 22-29

¶ An exploration of adolescents' work values & job aspirations based on a 1982 questionnaire survey of 323 Yup'ik Eskimo students in the Lower Yukon region of Alaska & 117 white high school students in Fairbanks. Responses were analyzed by race, gender, & place of residence using Chi-square tests. No difference was found by race on aspirations for postsecondary education or for the professions. Small differences were found in some work values. Ur whites prefer jobs that offer leadership responsibility, autonomy, & challenge more than do Ru Eskimo students. Both groups prefer jobs that offer advancement & security over those offering only higher pay. It is concluded that Ru Eskimo students seem as interested in Coll & in preparing for professional careers as Ur whites. While Eskimo & white students may differ slightly in the kinds of rewards they want from their jobs, similarities in values outweigh differences. Finally, Eskimo students may eventually take seasonal, part-time jobs not because they prefer them but because they have no alternatives. 1 Table, 10 References. Modified AA

88T2095

Metcalfe, Beverly Alban (Nuffield Instit Health Services U Leeds, LS2 9PL England). Male and Female Managers: An Analysis of Biographical and Self-Concept Data. Work & Stress, 1987, 1, 3, July-Sept, 207-219

¶ A comparison of biographical & self-concept data collected from 1,497 M & 805 F managers in GB who responded to a mailed Career Development Survey. After controlling for significant age differences between the M & F samples, important differences were still found in the marital & family statuses & educational/professional qualifications of Ms & Fs, as well as in both their general & work-related self-concepts. The data reveal the difficulties women face in choosing between marriage & family & career, as well as the various sources of stress they confront if they pursue the latter course. The data also challenge many of the existing stereotypes held regarding Fs' inherent unsuitability for managerial careers. 3 Tables, 5 Figures, 25 References. Modified HA

88T2096

Miller, Paul W. (Brunel U, Uxbridge Middlesex UB8 3PH England). Aspects of Occupational Mobility and Attainment among Immigrants in Australia. ♦ International Migration Review, 1987, 21, 1, spring, 96-109

¶ Analysis of data from the 1981 Australian Census indicates that there are considerable differences between the occupational distributions of the native & foreign born. Immigrants from non-English speaking countries are at a far greater disadvantage than their counterparts from English-speaking countries. Estimates of probability models of occupational attainment suggest that the inferior labor market position of immigrants from non-English speaking countries results from the relatively poor minor occupational gains they derive from additional years of education. 7 Tables, 20 References. HA

88T2097

Muller, Johan & Cloete, Nico (Dept Education U Witwatersrand, Johannesburg 2001 South Africa). The White Hands: Academic Social Scientists, Engagement and Struggle in South Africa. Social Epistemology, 1987, 1, 2, Apr-June, 141-154.

¶ The structural position of South African academic social scientists as mental labor shaped in large measure by struggle is considered. The stake for mental labor is to gain autonomy from, or power over, the constellation of SC & political forces composing the social domain through the instrument of knowledge/power. Two mechanisms of knowledge/power—ie, knowledge generation & knowledge accreditation—are examined & two alternative approaches currently available to academics: participatory research & intervention sociology—are critically evaluated. The implications of the frequent failure of these approaches are explored. 58 References. Modified AA

88T2098

Otaduy Guerra, J. (U Navarra, Pamplona Spain). La extinción del contrato de trabajo del profesor de un centro docente privado, por razones ideológicas (Ending of Work Contract of a Teacher in a Private Educational Center, for Ideological Reasons). ♦ Dissertation Abstracts International C: European Abstracts, 1987, 48, 2, summer, 287 (SPA)

Unavailable from UMI; reference copy at Facultad de Derecho Canonico, U of Navarra.

88T2099

Pecora, Peter J. & Austin, Michael J. (Graduate School Social Work U Utah, Salt Lake City 84112). Declassification of Social Service Jobs: Issues and Strategies. Journal of Social Work, 1983, 28, 6, Nov-Dec, 421-426

¶ Declassification of public social service jobs, a policy that reduces the educational & work-related experience required, is a national trend that has a significant impact on administrative planning & utilization of personnel. The factors contributing to the declassification of social work positions are described, & a set of strategies for future action presented. HA

88T2100

Pelle, János. Az értelmiség autonómiája vagy egy illúzió realizálása (The Autonomy of Intellectuals, or the Reality of an Illusion). Szociológia, 1982, 3, 417-435 (HUN)

¶ Abstract not currently available

88T2101

Pickard, Ruth Breece. Divided Medical Labor: Physician Assistants Assessed in Light of the Soviet Feldsher Experience. Research in Sociology of Health Care, 1987, 5, 137-199.

¶ An examination of the debate surrounding the continued viability of the MD assistant profession in the US in light of new development health care delivery systems. The history & current status of the MD assistant movement are examined & compared to the experience of a similar mid-level practitioner group in the USSR—the feldsher. Context analysis of each group reveals many similarities as well as different detailed comparisons are offered of their controlling interests, competition, occupational identity, & provider competition. The long endurance of the feldsher profession is due to their adaptation to the sociopolitical conditions of the Soviet medical systems. Recent shifts in power relationships in the US, combined with economic & social changes, have created a climate favorable to the full institutionalization of MD assistants & the creation of a two-level medical care system. 179 References. K. F. alt

88T2102

Preisendorfer, Peter (Institut Soziologie U Munchen, D-8000 40 Feral Republic Germany). Organisationale Determinanten beruflicher Karrieremuster: Theorieansätze, methodische Zugangswege und empirische Befunde (Organizational Determinants of Occupational Career Patterns: Theoretical Positions, Methodological Approaches & Empirical Findings). Soziale Welt, 1987, 38, 2, 211-226. (GER)

¶ An overview is provided of the current discussion about the role of organizations as actors in decisions about organizational careers. Theoretical career models that try to incorporate organizational factors or processes are described, with emphasis on the confrontation between the structuralists & forms of the human-capital & status-attainment models. Systematic methods, particularly via questionnaires, of gathering career data as well as data about organizational attributes are discussed. Empirical findings from studies of career choice originating from different theoretical models are reviewed. It is concluded that research about organizational determinants of career patterns can be a useful supplement to theories & studies about the general process of social attainment. 71 References. Modified HA

88T2103

Roach, Sharyn Leanne (U Connecticut, Storrs 06268). The Recruitment of Men and Women Lawyers to Inhouse Legal Departments: The Interplay of Environmental, Organizational and Individual Properties. ♦ Dissertation Abstracts International, A: The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 1, July, 227-A.

Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8710273.

ng role & role-cycling dilemmas) & changes in circumstances, & careers. This analysis underscores the formative, generative of communication as a primary means by which humans create, n, & modify definitions of themselves & their bonds with others.

23 ni, Bruna (U Bologna, I-40126 Italy), *The Psychiatric Nurse: A
:ial Psychological Study of a Profession Facing Institutional*

Changes, Social Behaviour, 1987, 2, 2, June, 87-98.

1 The decentralization of psychiatric services in Italy has demanded substantial changes in the role of psychiatric nurses. It was predicted that the response to change would vary according to the degree of involvement in the process of change, a factor that would influence social representations of their profession & subsequent threat to a distinctive social identity. Observations were made, interviews conducted, & questionnaires administered in a 1980 study of 558 nurses in Bologna, Italy. It is concluded that the strategy adopted to maintain group distinctiveness varies principally according to work role & context, rather than length of service. 4 Tables. HA

JOURNAL OF

LANGUAGE AND SOCIAL PSYCHOLOGY

Editor: Howard Giles

Review Editor: John Edwards

Editorial Board:

Michael Argyle, Charles Berger, Richard Bourhis, James Bradac, Roger Brown, Stanley Feldstein, Robert C. Gardner, E. Tory Higgins, Robert Hopper, Wallace E. Lambert, Gerald Miller, W. Peter Robinson, Ragnar Rommetveit, Ellen B. Ryan, Klaus Scherer, Donald M. Taylor.

Established in 1982 as a much-needed bridge between social psychological and other approaches to the study of language, the JLSP, with its energetic and impressive editorial board, is recognised as an important refereed forum in this regard. To date, influential articles have appeared covering (i) methodology with regard to language attitudes and conversational exchange (ii) empirical aspects of cognitive factors mediating production and second language learning, and (iii) the theoretical factors in the relationships between language, individual differences and social situations, to name but a few. Wide-ranging in its pursuit of qualitative and quantitative data, the Journal also prides itself on constructively critical reviews and review essays of books across the language and communication sciences as well as initiating a section on applied research agenda. The ability to be highly selective in the articles we publish and the rapidly growing number of subscribers is indicative of its impact not only in social psychology as a valued language outlet but also beyond that particular discipline as a cumulative resource of social psychological analyses.

Volume 7 (1988) 4 issues
Individuals £16.00 (US$31.00)

Libraries £48.00 (US$94.00)
Students £8.00 (US$16.00)

Payment may be made by
ACCESS/MasterCard/EuroCard/AMERICAN EXPRESS/DINER'S CARD

MULTILINGUAL MATTERS LTD.
Bank House, 8a Hill Road,
Clevedon, Avon, England, BS21 7HH.

88T2114

Spicer, Christopher H. (Pacific Lutheran U, Tacoma WA 98447), Careers and Relationships: The Interpersonal Intricacies of Maintaining a Dual-Career Relationship, in The Southern Speech Communication Journal, 1986, 51, 3, spring, 256-259

¶ An introduction to a special report on careers & relationships that outlines the problems facing dual-career households & highlights the importance of the role of communication in these relationships. (See abstracts in this section of papers by Diane Heacock & Christopher H. Spicer, & Julia L. Wood presented as part of this report.) F. Rasmussen

88T2115

Starkey, K. (U Aston, Birmingham B4 7ET England), Time and Professional Work in Public Sector Organizations: An Examination of Four Occupational Groups in Education and Medicine, Dissertation Abstracts International C: European Abstracts, 1987, 48, 1, spring, 62

Unavailable from UMI; contact the degree-granting university.

88T2116

Strum, Franz (Zugspitzstr 30, D-8024 Oberbiberg Federal Republic Germany), Lucidität im Traum (Lucidity in Dreams), Zeitschrift für Klinische Psychologie und Psychotherapie, 1986, 34, 3, 234-248 (GfR)

¶ Recent investigations into the phenomenon of lucid dreams are reviewed. Typical characteristics of the phenomenon, including an awareness of dreaming, a doubling of consciousness, & the exercise of control, are described. The contents of lucid dreams are discussed. Environmental, personality, & physiological factors are considered. Four basic techniques of inducing lucid dreams are examined & the nature of dream control is discussed. A critical evaluation of the phenomenon & its possible applications concludes with the observation that more research is needed before the subject of lucid dreaming can be treated with scientific rigor. 92 References. Modified HA

88T2117

Swoboda, Debra, Delaney, Kevin & Eckstein, Rick (Psychology Dept State U New York, Stony Brook 11794), A Theoretical Exploration of White Collar Organizing: Graduate Student Employees and the Future of Unions in Academia, Humanity and Society, 1987, 11, 2, May, 165-174

¶ Organizing graduate student employees (ie, teaching, graduate, & research assistants) at the State U of NY reflect a changing conception of the workplace by white collar/professional workers. An emphasis on traditional wage & benefit issues does not succeed because graduate student employees see themselves as professionals & do not readily identify lines of supervision & control. The organization of public-sector employees illustrates the biases of labor legislation & legal procedures against workers. This will become increasingly important as the government continually employs a larger % of the LF. Severe funding cutbacks for education have precipitated the corporatization of the academe, where decisions are likely to be justified more in terms of what is best for the educational goals of the U. These factors necessitate alternative strategies for organizing graduate student employees into unions or other agents of social change. AA

88T2118

Varl-Szilagyi, Ibolya (Inst Psychol Hungarian Academy Sciences, Budapest), A Study of Professional Attitudes amongst Architects, in European Journal of Social Psychology, 1987, 17, 1, Jan-Mar, 33-43

¶ It was hypothesized that young professionals' attitudes might change depending on their degree of professional identification, a higher degree of which would inspire a more self-reliant & independent approach to professional work & thinking. Differences & changes in 58 young Hungarian architects' images of the ideal architect were explored based on longitudinal scale data. Results support the hypothesis concerning the role of professional identification, & are in agreement with H. Tajfel's analysis of manifold social functions of stereotypes ("Social Stereotypes and Social Groups" in Intergroup Behavior, Turner, J. C., & Giles, H. [Eds], Oxford: Blackwell, 1981). 4 Tables. Modified HA

88T2119

Veriz, Laura L. (Dept Political Science North Texas State U, Denton 76203-5338), Pay Inequalities between Women and Men in State and Local Government: An Examination of the Political Context of the

Comparable Worth Controversy, Women & Politics, 1987, 7, 2, summer, 43-57

¶ The political context of comparable worth is described through analysis of pay inequalities between M & F employees of state & local governments, using US Equal Employment Opportunity Commission data, 1983. It is concluded that more comparable worth activities occur in states with larger pay inequalities. Furthermore, larger pay inequalities are associated with a political subculture that emphasizes "good government" & a larger resource capacity. These contextual factors are associated with median salary for women, indicating higher absolute status for women in states with larger pay inequalities. The findings suggest that eliminating gender-based salary inequalities may have the dual effect of decreasing intrastate & increasing interstate salary differences. 4 Tables. 7 References. HA

88T2120

Weisman, Carol S. & Teitelbaum, Martha A. (School Hygiene & Public Health Johns Hopkins U, Baltimore MD 21205), The Work-Family Role System and Physician Productivity, in Journal of Health and Social Behavior, 1987, 28, 3, Sept, 247-257

¶ Gender differences in married MDs' productivity, measured as total hours devoted to all professional activities per week, are analyzed based on 1984 telephone interview data from a national sample of young obstetrician-gynecologists (N = 1,420). Attributes of the MDs' families (including number of children, work role of spouse, & involvement in household responsibilities) are considered in relation to professional productivity. Married men work 7.54 hours more per week than married women although both men & women work 60+ hours per week on average. Accounting for family role variables & practice characteristics does not eliminate the effect of gender on hours worked. Family variables are more predictive of women's hours worked than of men's. Decomposition of the mean gender difference in hours worked shows that the largest component of the sex difference is attributable to the different effects of family variables on men & women, rather than to the different distributions of men & women on the family variables. 4 Tables, 1 Figure, 3 References. HA

88T2121

Wilcox, Jerry & Margavio, Anthony V. (U New Orleans, LA 70148), Occupational Representation by Race, Ethnicity, and Residence in Turn-of-the-Century New Orleans, The Social Science Journal, 1987, 24, 1, Jan, 1-16

¶ H. Gilmore's study of the history, culture, & ecology of New Orleans, La. ("The Old New Orleans and the New: A Case for Ecology," American Sociological Review, 1944, 9, 385-394) is expanded by investigating the manner in which cultural & developmental factors affect competition for residential location. Analysis of ethnic & spatial variations in occupational structure underscores the utility of considering traditional & modern aspects of spatial differentiation within a single city. A sample of 1,611 M household heads drawn from microfilmed copies of the 1900 manuscript census of New Orleans Parish is divided into 5 subpopulations: black Creoles, black non-Creoles, native whites of native parentage, native whites of foreign parentage, & foreign-born whites. & their differing occupational structures & residential patterns are analyzed. Results support the contention that the emerging capitalistic economy was spatially segregated from the traditional craft-guild economy since self-employed craftsmen predominated in the Creole city & skilled wage workers were overrepresented in the white sector. Race & ethnicity combined with sector to affect the occupational structure, & the modernization combined with cultural factors to create & maintain these occupational niches. 2 Tables, 21 References. Modified HA

88T2122

Wood, Julia T. (U North Carolina, Chapel Hill 27514), Maintaining Dual-Career Bonds: Communicative Dimensions of Internally Structured Relationships, in The Southern Speech Communication Journal, 1986, 51, 3, spring, 267-273

¶ Dual-career relationships operate largely bereft of external support & structure &, thus, must generate internally a viable structure for the bond. Four ways in which communication assists in generating & maintaining an internal structure are examined. (1) It defines preliminary structure & legitimizes the relationship as a focus for talk. (2) It promotes trust & flexibility that allow partners to cope with changes & revise the bond's structure. (3) It fosters affirmation of & pride in a non-traditional relationship. (4) It enhances partners' willingness & capacity to redefine the structure of their relationship in response to problems. (16

1100 rural sociology and agriculture

16 rural sociology (village, agriculture)

IT2124

Baboo, Balgovind (Indian Instit Technology Delhi, 110016 India), Understanding Economic Exchanges in Rural India: Towards a Framework, ♦ Sociological Bulletin, 1987, 36, 1, Mar, 21-53

An application of the concepts & categories of market economy to a primitive peasant economy-Ru India. An eight-fold typology of economic exchange is developed that considers the nature of the exchange relation-cooperative or exploitative-& the items of exchange-land, labor, credit, & market. Prior works on Indian village economy tend to assume either a structural-functionalist or Marxist-historical approach. Limitations of both are revealed. A mixed approach is advocated that considers the interactional & attributional dimensions of agrarian classes. A taxonomy of Indian villages-tribal, peasant, & suburban-is developed to highlight the differences in their economic organization. 3 Charts, 1 diagram, 85 References. K Hyatt

IT2125

Bakx, Keith Stanley (U Liverpool, L69 3BX England), Peasant Formation and Capitalist Development: The Case of Acre, South-West Amazonia, ♦ Dissertation Abstracts International, 4 The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 1, July, 229-A

Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8708625.

IT2126

Bartra, Roger & Otero, Gerardo (Instit Investigaciones Sociales Ciudad U, Mexico DF), Agrarian Crisis and Social Differentiation in Mexico, ♦ The Journal of Peasant Studies, 1987, 14, 3, Apr, 334-362

The double crisis of Mexican agriculture-one part relating to the capitalist sector, the other to the peasant economy-is explored. An analysis of cash crops in contrast with subsistence crops is provided, using census data & other official statistics on production & prices during 1940-1983. Based on the 1970 census, a spectrum of social differentiation of agrarian producers in Mexico is presented, which reflects the extent to which the peasant economy had been eroded by that year. Contrasting these data with those of 1960 illustrates the tendency of the middle units of the peasant economy to dissolve. 4 Tables, 10 Charts, 38 References. Modified HA

IT2127

Binswanger, Hans P. & Rosenzweig, Mark R., Behavioural and Material Determinants of Production Relations in Agriculture, ♦ The Journal of Development Studies, 1986, 22, 3, Apr, 503-539.

A framework is developed for analyzing the major institutions governing the production & exchange of output & the primary behavioral & technological factors determining production relations in Ru areas. Incorporating general considerations of risk & information constraints along with the principal material attributes of agriculture & of agricultural production factors, the framework is used to analyze barriers to the existence of the major intertemporal & factor markets. It is applied specifically to land-scarce environments for which it provides an internally consistent explanation for many of the well-documented institutional features of such settings. In addition, the analysis provides new implications for, among other phenomena: the interrelationships among ownership holdings, operational scale, family size, & factor productivity, the scarcity of animal rental markets & use of animals as collateral, the renting of land by small landowners; & the existence of plantations for certain crops. 6 Tables, 23 References. Modified HA

IT2128

Crummett de los Angeles, Maria (Dept Economics New School Social Research, 65 Fifth Ave New York NY 10003), Class, Household Structure, and the Peasantry: An Empirical Approach, ♦ The Journal of Peasant Studies, 1987, 14, 3, Apr, 363-379.

Based on a sample survey of 211 households in the state of Aguascalientes, Mexico, it is argued that an analysis of Ru SC structure must focus not only on access to the means of production & the extent of participation in the labor market, but also on key structural features of domestic units such as household size, generational composition, & the DoFL by gender & age. Statistical tests strongly support the thesis that considerations of household structure sharpen & enrich the concept of class. The results also define & distinguish three main class types in the survey-commercial, subsistence, & landless households. 4 Tables, 3 Figures, 19 References. Modified HA

88T2129

Davis, John Roland (U Wisconsin, Madison 53706), Class Structure & Mode of Production in Javanese Agriculture, ♦ Dissertation Abstracts International, 4 The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 1, July, 229-A

Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8702300.

88T2130

Elégoët, Fanch (U Rennes I, 35000 France), Stratégies paysannes en Bretagne. L'Action d'un leader: Alexis Gourvennec (Peasant Strategies in Brittany. The Life History of a Leader: Alexis Gourvennec), Life Stories/Récits de vie, 1987, 3, 31-42. (FRE)

¶ An investigation of the development of Brittany, France, from a poor & peripheral region in 1950 to one of Europe's principal agricultural regions today. Information was obtained via a series of interviews with peasant leader Alexis Gourvennec, & an analysis of his personal career is presented. Born in 1936 to a poor peasant family, Gourvennec soon became active in the peasants' union, whose goals are Ru modernization & economic regionalism. Three key strategies for achieving these goals are identified: (1) organized, collective opposition to the central state; (2) collective self-help, eg, the organization of markets & transportation; & (3) individual initiative. Gourvennec is now a big producer, with 50 skilled employees, but of greater importance is his career as a mobilizer of collective economic action. 1 Photograph, 5 References. AA Tr & Modified by C Waters

88T2131

Evtseva, Natal'ya Veniaminovna (Instit Sociological Research, ul Krzhizhanovskogo 24/35 korpus 5 11729 Moscow USSR), Kto i pochemu vozvrashchaetsya v selo (Who Returns to a Village and Why), Sotsiologicheskie Issledovaniya, 1987, 14, 2, Mar-Apr, 61-64. (RUS)

¶ One new trend in USSR demographics is the return of many citizens from the cities to the villages. To determine the motives for this shift, questionnaire data were obtained from 508 young adults, aged 20 or under, in Kuybyshev in 1984. Factors influencing a return to the village are determined to be largely nonprofessional & have little to do with the level of career satisfaction enjoyed in the city. Some have difficulty, however, in making a final decision about whether to settle in the city or the village due to lack of infrastructure in the latter. 5 References. G Prostavkov

88T2132

Foster, Gary, Hummel, Richard & Whittenbarger, Robert (Eastern Illinois U, Charleston 61920), Ethnic Echoes through 100 Years of Midwestern Agriculture, WM Rural Sociology, 1987, 52, 3, fall, 365-378.

¶ An examination of the historical context of ethnic influences on agricultural patterns in the Midwest Plains area, using data from applications submitted to the Ill Centennial Farm Program by a random sample of 1,091 German, British, & Yankee centennial farms in 21 counties. Hypotheses concerning both current & initial agricultural patterns are tested. Though differences in the patterns between the ethnic groups are often small, they are typically in the direction predicted. Thus, over the last 100 years or more, many of the differing ethnic patterns in agriculture, though dissipating, have persisted, casting doubt on assumptions of the homogenization of US agriculture. 6 Tables, 9 References. Modified HA

88T2133

Gaunt, David (U Umeå, Stockholm S-901 87 Sweden), Rural Household Organization and Inheritance in Northern Europe, WM Journal of

Measuring International Migration: Theory and Practice

Introduction

Hanna Zlotnick

Part I: Concepts, Developments and Policy

The Concept of International Migration as Reflected in Data Collection Systems

Hanna Zlotnick

The Concept of Migration and Policy Context

Mary M. Kritz

Part II: Multilateral Efforts for the Measurement of International Migration

Efforts to Improve International Migration Statistics: A Historical Perspective

Ellen Percy Kravitz and K. S. Gnanasekaran

The United Nations Recommendations and Data Efforts

Alan H. Simmons

Improving the Comparability of International Migration Statistics: Contributions of the Conference of European Statisticians from 1971 to Date

John J. Kelly

The Canada-United States Joint Immigration Study: Issues in Data Comparability

Edward J. Pryor and John F. Long

RESEARCH NOTES

The SOPEMI Experience: Genesis, Aims and Achievements

John Salt

Migration and the Population Census in Asia and the Pacific: Issues, Questions and Debate

Ronald Skeldon

Research on International Migration and Census Data: Co-operation in Latin America

Carmen Arce

Part III: National Statistical Systems: Case Studies

The Measurement of International Migration in Belgium

Michel Poulain

United Kingdom Statistics on Immigration: Development and Limitations

David A. Coleman

National Recording Systems and the Measurement of International Migration in Canada: An Assessment

J. J. Samuel, P. M. White and J. Perreault

Using National Recording Systems for the Measurement and Analysis of Immigration to the United States

Guillermina Jasso and Mark R. Rosenzweig

RESEARCH NOTES

International Migration Data in Mexico

Manuel Garcia y Griego

The Nature and Scope of International Migration Data in Nigeria

Paulina Makinua Adebayo

The Philippine National Recording Systems on International Migration

Benjamin V. Carino

International Migration Data: Their Problems and Usefulness in Venezuela

Ricardo Torrealba

Part IV: Methodological Approaches

New Approaches to the Estimation of Migration Flows from Census and Administrative Data Sources

Kenneth Hill

Change in the Undocumented Alien Population in the United States, 1979-1983

Jeffrey S. Passel and Karen A. Woodrow

Consistent Correction of International Migration Data for Sri Lanka, 1971-1981

Norman Y. Luther, K. H. W. Gananaratne, Soma de Silva and Robert D. Ketherford

Using Census Data to Study Elderly Migration: Problems and Possibilities

Gracine Hugo

The Indirect Estimation of Migration: A Critical Review

Baso Zaba

Comparison of Two Methods for Estimating the Number of Undocumented Mexican Adults in Los Angeles County

David M. Heer and Jeffrey S. Passel

Conventional Numbers in Immigration Research: The Case of the Mixing Dominicans

Eric M. Larson and Teresa A. Sullivan

The Ethnosurvey in Theory and Practice

Douglas S. Massey

The Role of Surveys in the Study of International Migration: An Appraisal

James L. Fawcett and Fred Arnold

BOOK REVIEWS • INTERNATIONAL NEWSLETTER ON MIGRATION • BOOKS RECEIVED

Subscription Rates: 1 Year $41.25 (Institutions), $27.50 (Individuals); Single copy of double issue $14.95

Order from: Center for Migration Studies, 209 Flagg Place, Staten Island, N.Y. 10304-1148 Tel. (718) 351-8800

tempts to assess the conditions of the nation's Ru elderly have included oversights that affect the development of policies intended to provide these needed services. The use of aggregate characteristics tends to color these perceptions of Ru life. Policy formulation needs to adopt a realistic picture of Ru senior citizens' conditions, which are essentially similar to U seniors. 2 Tables. Modified HA

88T2143

Pfeffer, Max John (U Wisconsin, Madison 53706), Rationalization and the Family Organization of Production: Part-Time Farming in the Federal Republic of Germany, * Dissertation Abstracts International, 4 The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 1, July, 230-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8703850.

88T2144

Ralston, Penny A. (Iowa State U, Ames 50010), Senior Centers in Rural Communities: A Qualitative Study, Journal of Applied Gerontology, 1986, 5, 1, July, 76-92.

* Factors that contribute to or hinder the development of senior centers are investigated using participant observation & interview data gathered from 19 Ru Iowa centers in 1979. Analysis indicates that contributing factors include elder leadership, organizational sponsorship, & community support while inhibiting factors include the image of senior centers, populations underserved by senior centers, & conflict among senior centers in a community. Implications for practice & further research are discussed. 2 Tables, 34 References. Modified HA

88T2145

Sanou, Saidou (Michigan State U, East Lansing 48824), Land Tenure Structures in the Agricultural Sector of Houede, Burkina Faso: A Study in Rural Social Change and Development, * Dissertation Abstracts International, 4 The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 47, 11, May, 4205-A.

Available from UMI, Ann Arbor MI. Order No. DA8700519.

88T2146

Santos Filho, Jose dos Reis & Mello, Maria Tereza Leopardi (Dept Sociologia Instit Letras Ciências Sociais e Educação U Estadual Paulista, 14800 Araraquara São Paulo Brazil), Da omissão da legislação às práticas de fabricação de "verdades": notas de denúncia sobre a previdência social rural (Between Gaps in the Law and the Production of "Truth": The Claims of Rural Syndicalism), Perspectivas, 1985, 8, 75-83. (POR)

* The Brazilian social security system provides inferior quality services & benefits to Ru workers. Ur workers are eligible for 20 types of benefits while Ru workers are eligible for only 8 types. Ru workers may retire at age 65 & receive a pension of 50% of the minimum wage, however, since the life expectancy of Ru workers is only 54, most of them never live long enough to collect this benefit. Many Ru residents must travel long distances to file in person for their benefits, only to face long bureaucratic delays. Not only is the delivery of the service poor, but also the basic structure of the social security laws needs to be changed to accommodate the needs of the Ru population. M Meeks

88T2147

Schutzenhofer, B. (U Graz, A-8010 Austria), Das bauerliche Dienstbotenwesen in der Oststeiermark im Wandel der Agrarstruktur (Modes of Living and Working of Farmhands in Eastern Styria in Changing Agricultural Structures), * Dissertation Abstracts International, 4 European Abstracts, 1987, 48, 1, spring, 63 (GER). Unavailable from UMI; reference copy at Österreichische Nationalbibliothek, Vienna, Austria.

88T2148

Scott, James C. (Yale U, New Haven CT 06520), Resistance without Protest and without Organization: Peasant Opposition to the Islamic Zakat and the Christian Tithe, ♦ Comparative Studies in Society and History, 1987, 29, 3, July, 417-452.

* Much of what should be counted as peasant resistance does not involve overt protest nor require formal organization. This is demonstrated through comparative historical case studies of Malay peasant resistance to the Islamic zakat now in Malaysia, & of French peasant resistance to the Christian tithe in the eighteenth century. Malay villagers see no benefits to themselves from paying the zakat raja, in contrast to the zakat peribadi, which is generously & voluntarily supported, an extensive pattern of noncompliance with the zakat raja has emerged. Virtually the entire pattern is replicated in the compulsory tithe of prerevolutionary France, although enforcement was more rigorous & strategies of resistance more varied. Two basic strategic principles common to both, though, are safety in numbers & safety in small gains. The basic intention of peasants in such situations is typically inerrable to be survival & persistence. 3 Tables. W. H. Stoddard

88T2149

Sigaud, Lygia (Antropologia Social Museu Nacional U Federal Rio de Janeiro, Brazil), A luta de classes em dois atos: notas sobre um ciclo de greves camponesas (The Class Struggle in Two Acts. Notes on a Cycle of Peasant Strikes), Dados, 1986, 29, 3, 319-343 (POR)

† An analysis of a cycle of peasant strikes involving 240,000 workers on large sugar cane plantations in the Zona da Mata section of Pernambuco State in northeastern Brazil. Focus is on the big strikes of 1979, 1980, & 1982, & on the attempts to resolve disputes between the strikes. The importance of the strikes for the peasants lies not only in the specific concessions gained, but also in the establishment of a set of rules serving as a parameter for peasant-planter relations that are activated when the peasants' interests are threatened. Modified HA

88T2150

Silva, Maria Aparecida Moraes, Ferrante, Vera Lucia Silveira Botta, Bizelli, José Luis & Moraes e Araujo, Carlos Augusto (Dept Sociologia Instit Letras Ciências Sociais e Educação U Estadual Paulista, 14800 Araraquara São Paulo Brazil), Queimando-lata: sem elra, nem beira ("Queimando-lata": No Way Out), Perspectivas, 1985, 8, 41-73. (POR)

† An analysis of the exploitation of agricultural workers, the queimando-latas, in the state of São Paulo, Brazil. A shortage of farm laborers, especially in the farm areas near Ribeirão Preto, São Paulo, have attracted workers from the impoverished communities of Calcutá, Bahia, & Minas Novas, Minas Gerais. Based on 1985 interviews with migrant workers & census data, an overview of their SE background is given & their working conditions are described. Although the home towns of these workers lack amenities such as running water, sewers, & electricity, the conditions in their new communities are not much better. Wages are low, & savings are often spent on a return trip home. These workers are also subjected to many types of economic & legal injustice. 4 Tables, 1 Figure, 21 References. M Meeks

88T2151

Tigges, Leann M. & Rosenfeld, Rachel A. (Dept Sociology U Georgia, Athens 30602), Independent Farming: Correlates and Consequences for Women and Men, U Rural Sociology, 1987, 52, 3, fall, 345-364.

† Data from the national 1980 Farm Women Survey, involving telephone interviews with 2,509 Fs & 569 Ms involved in farm operations, are used to determine whether independent farmers differ from other farmers in their economic well-being & whether the effects of independence reflect SC & family characteristics. Independent farmers are defined as women or men with managerial responsibility for the farm operation who do not have a spouse regularly performing farm labor. Men without the direct farm labor of a wife did not appear worse off economically than men who had this help. Independent women farmers were worse off than women on other farms. SC position explained only some of this difference, while family & demographic characteristics explained the remaining effect of women's independent farming. The data indicate that women's independent operation of farms is more likely a response to family life-cycle stage & labor conditions than a deliberate choice to enter M domains. 5 Tables, 24 References. Modified HA van Es, J. C. & Tsoukalas, Theodore (Dept Agricultural Economics U Illinois, Urbana 61801), Kinship Arrangements and Innovativeness: A Comparison of Palouse and Prairie Findings, U Rural Sociology, 1987, 52, 3, fall, 389-397.

88T2152

† A revised version of SA 33 3/S16929/RSS/1985/1777.

Family History, 1987, 12, 1-3, Jan-July, 121-141

¶ By focusing on morphological continuity, family historians may be neglecting long-term changes within the family that are documented in nonnumerical sources. Evidence from Finland suggests that researchers need to reexamine the history of the suurperhe (large family). Similarly, evidence from the Scandinavian peninsula suggests that the early modern centuries witnessed the growth of privacy in generational relations, the emergence of the father-son dyad as the preferred method of land transfer, the separation of landownership from household authority, & the use of the courts to solve family problems. Thus, there may have been transformations in family life in the long term that unchanging measures of mean size do not capture. 3 Figures, 54 References. HA

88T2134

Gill, Lesley. Frontier Expansion and Settlement in Lowland Bolivia. ♦ The Journal of Peasant Studies, 1987, 14, 3, Apr., 380-398

¶ The expansion of cash crop production into the lowland Bolivian frontier from 1952 to the 1970s is examined & the dynamics of SC formation that shaped peasant political consciousness are explored based on official statistics & secondary data. The factors that molded local-level response to the conditions created by capitalist development, the process of social differentiation that affected settlers & the relationship between subsistence agriculture & wage labor, the tensions between settlers & large scale entrepreneurs, & changing state policies & economic conditions are discussed. It is concluded that rigid analytic distinctions between peasants & proletarians ignore the historical development of production relations in Bolivia. 1 Map, 46 References. HA

88T2135

Griffith, David (Instit Coastal & Marine Resources East Carolina U, Greenville NC 27834). Peasants in Reserve: Temporary West Indian Labor in the U.S. Farm Labor Market. ♦ International Migration Review, 1986, 20, 4, winter, 875-898

¶ In the past ten years, the British West Indies Temporary Alien Labor Program has received widespread judicial & legislative support, as well as criticism. While sugar & apple producers who import West Indians argue that domestic labor is insufficient to harvest their crops, labor organizations & their supporters maintain that domestic labor is adequate. The resulting legal disputes focus primarily on the issue of whether or not West Indians are displacing US workers or undermining wage rates & working conditions. The relationships among legal issues surrounding the program, the US farm labor market, & the Jamaican peasantry are examined. It is argued that continued imports of foreign labor during times of high domestic unemployment, as well as the varied factors that underlie the continued willingness & ability of Jamaican peasant households to supply workers to US producers, can be understood from an international & historical perspective, rather than focusing on the needs & problems of any one nation. 1 Table, 66 References. HA

88T2136

Hutton, John (Dept Sociology & Social Anthropology University Coll, Swansea SA2 8PP England). Fathers and Sons: Family Farms, Family Businesses and the Farming Industry. ♦ Sociology, 1987, 21, 2, May, 215-229

¶ An examination of changes in relationships between parents & children in family farming businesses under contemporary relations of production in GB. The family farm is more effective as a management unit than as a labor unit. Farmers seek to expand the family business through the incorporation of children into an extended family. To this extent, family form & relationships between close kin are clearly articulated with market forces, however, the increasing capitalization & commercialization of family farming do not necessarily mean a lessening significance of kinship links. Rather, such processes redistribute kin ties in new concentrations so that they have become more important in the management of a viable business & less significant between farmers in an agricultural industry. 7 References. HA

88T2137

Kincaid, A. Douglas (Florida International U, Miami 33199). Peasants into Rebels: Community and Class in Rural El Salvador. ♦ Comparative Studies in Society and History, 1987, 29, 3, July, 466-494

¶ An examination of the role of peasant communities as sources of rebellions & social revolution, based on a historical case study of peasant rebellions in El Salvador. Three specific cases are examined in detail: the Nonualco rebellion of 1833, the communist-led uprising of 1932, & the contemporary conflicts. Certain common patterns are evident in all three cases: the strong role of community solidarity &, at the same time, the linkage of such solidarity to external solidarities of ethnicity, religion &/or SC. 1 Figure. Modified AA

88T2138

Lichter, Daniel T. & Costanzo, Janice A. (Dept Sociology & Population Issues Research Center Pennsylvania State U, University Park 16802). Nonmetropolitan Underemployment and Labor-Force Composition. ♦ Rural Sociology, 1987, 52, 3, fall, 329-344.

¶ The major compositional sources of underemployment in the nonmetropolitan US are identified, focusing on the roles of (1) demographic composition, (2) education, & (3) industrial mix in explaining metro-nonmetro differences in underemployment, as measured by Clifford Clogg's & Teresa A. Sullivan's labor utilization framework (see 87-324/84O2137). Using data from the Mar annual demographic file of the 1980 Current Population Survey (involving approximately 147,000 workers aged 14+), higher prevalence of discouraged workers, underemployment, & underemployment by low hours & low income in nonmetropolitan areas are documented. Demographic standardization & decomposition methods are used to show that composition alone accounts for about 40% of the difference in underemployment between metropolitan & nonmetropolitan areas. Educational composition is the single most important component accounting for this differential, demographic composition, however, contributes nothing & industrial mix only modestly to the metro-nonmetro differential in underemployment. Implications for economic development programs are discussed. 3 Tables, 39 References. Modified HA

88T2139

Marcotte, Paul L. (U Kentucky, Lexington 40506). Farming System Research as a Method for Introducing Sorghum in the Dominican Republic: A Synthesis of the Positivist and Critical Paradigms. ♦ Dissertation Abstracts International, A: The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 47, 11, May, 4204-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor MI. Order No. DA8705279.

88T2140

Mohr, Hamid (U Wisconsin, Milwaukee 53201). Rural Stratification, Rural to Urban Migration, and Urban Inequality: Evidence from Iran. ♦ World Development, 1986, 14, 6, June, 713-725

¶ Recent findings on India have pointed to the importance of the caste structure to Ru-Ur migration, & the creation of (partially) segmented Ur labor markets. Here, using cross-sectional analysis of 1966 & 1976 Iranian census data, & viewing differential access to land, instead of castes, as the determinants of the migrants' background, the implications of this view for the impact of migration on Ur inequality in Iran are examined. It is found that where migrants are from a landless group, Ur inequality increases, & where they are from a landed group, it declines. Ur inequality is measured by the construction of an Ur housing share index from the census data. 2 Tables, 1 Appendix, 25 References. Modified HA

88T2141

Moore, Keith M. (Dept Sociology Oklahoma State U, Stillwater 74078). Oklahoma Farmer, Endangered Species: Changing Rural Social Structure. ♦ Free Inquiry in Creative Sociology, 1987, 15, 3, Nov., 225-229

¶ The current farm crisis is just another phase in the historical evolution of Ru Okla. Two issues in the process of that evolution are considered: the structure of agriculture & the extent to which family farming has been a significant component of that structure. US Census data (1920-1980) are used to explore the social, as well as the economic, meaning of family farming in Okla. It is concluded that the family farm in Okla has been a rarity & that the current structure of agriculture in Okla is characterized by agribusiness & part-time farming. These changes constitute part of the overall transformation of all social space, & have important implications for traditional conceptions concerning Ru & Ur phenomena. 4 Tables, 8 References. Modified AA

88T2142

Nofz, Michael P., Social Services for Older Rural Americans: Some Policy Concerns. ♦ Social Work, 1986, 31, 2, Mar-Apr., 85-91

¶ An exploration of problems relating to social services for older Ru Americans who remain largely underserved because the majority of social service delivery systems are established in Ur areas. Even recent at-

1200 urban sociology

18 urban sociology

88T2153

AlSayyad, Nezar. Space in an Islamic City: Some Urban Design Patterns. Journal of Architectural and Planning Research, 1987, 4, 2, June, 108-119

† An examination of past & present roles of space in the Islamic city design, using Cairo, Egypt, as a typical example. Ur space is analyzed using solid-void relationships, focusing on the factors that affected the exterior shape of buildings & the spatial formation of public spaces. Utilizing factors based on Egyptian cultural criteria rather than Western-generated norms, it is shown that the structure of space in this Islamic city reflects the builder's awareness of Ur design concepts. 4 Figures, 10 References. Modified HA

88T2154

Amatore, Enrica, Costagliola, Simonetta & Ragone, Gerardo (U Naples, 80100 Italy). Furnishing and Status Attributes: A Sociological Study of the Living Room. U Environment and Behavior, 1987, 19, 2, Mar, 228-249

† In a society in which leisure & consumption have become increasingly central in the lives of individuals, the interior of a person's home may facilitate the pursuit of social goals & symbolize his or her status. Two dimensions are identified that characterize the style of interior decoration found in the living rooms of 100 homes in Naples, Italy, based on photographs of the rooms & interviews with the head of the family. Findings indicate that the choice of a style of decor is not entirely dependent on income, but is also related to the degree of status consistency & social mobility of the individuals. 1 Table, 2 Figures, 25 References. Modified HA

88T2155

Amin, Ruhul & Mariam, A. G. (Instit Social Research Morgan State U, Baltimore MD 21239). Racial Differences in Housing: An Analysis of Trends and Differentials, 1960-1978. U Urban Affairs Quarterly, 1987, 22, 3, Mar, 363-376

† Changes & differences in housing quality for blacks & whites in the US between 1960 & 1978 were examined using data from the Annual Housing Surveys for the years 1974 & 1978, & from the 1/1,000 sample Public Use File from the 1960 Census. There were substantial improvements in housing quality between 1960 & 1978. However, racial differences in housing quality, as measured by structural deficiency, crowding, & age of housing unit, persisted over the two decades regardless of SES, family composition, & geographic regions. The data do not reveal substantial declines in racial disparity in housing over the two decades. 2 Tables, 35 References. HA

88T2156

Aulette, Judy & Aulette, Albert (Dept Sociology & Anthropology U North Carolina, Charlotte 28223). Police Harassment of the Homeless: The Political Purpose of the Criminalization of Homelessness. Humanity and Society, 1987, 11, 2, May, 244-256.

† An examination of the problem of police harassment of homeless people based on a participant observation study conducted in 1985 in Tucson, Ariz. The so-called crimes of homeless people are described, including activities such as sleeping in the park-squatting- & carrying a cardboard cutter to make a shelter-carrying a concealed weapon. These activities are compared to the problems of poverty, unemployment, & lack of housing, & it is argued that these constitute a much more serious "crime." It is concluded that homeless people are not just victims of the economic & criminal justice system but are also actively organizing to effect change. 32 References. AA

88T2157

Bairoch, Paul & Goertz, Gary (U Geneva, CH-1211 4 Switzerland). Factors of Urbanization in the Nineteenth Century Developed Countries: A Descriptive and Econometric Analysis. Urban Studies, 1986, 23, 4, Aug, 285-305.

† An overview is presented of the situation from the beginning of the Industrial Revolution, when levels of urbanization were dependent on geography & the historical situation, & when the general level of urbanization was low, through the nineteenth century, in which agricultural productivity & industrialization determined the levels of urbanization. This period saw a dramatic increase in levels of urbanization, during which the present Ur structures were put into place. A comparative econometric analysis, based on historical statistical data, finds that economic growth pushed urbanization, with industrialization being the most important factor for Europe & agricultural productivity being important for the European settled countries. Other important factors are found to be trade, total population, topography, & form of industrialization. Railroad networks were not found to be influential. 9 Tables, 3 Appendixes, 28 References. HA

88T2158

Ball, Michael & Connolly, Priscilla (Dept Economics Birkbeck Coll, London WC1E 7HX England). Capital Accumulation in the Mexican Construction Industry, 1930-82. International Journal of Urban and Regional Research, 1987, 11, 2, June, 153-171.

† The construction industry in Mexico has grown rapidly & has taken a prominent place in the national economy over the last fifty years. Public expenditures on civil engineering have made large contributions to this growth. Surprisingly, there has been no centralization of construction capital, nor have foreign firms played any large role in the industry. Subcontracting & labor agents play a large part in the organization of labor & in maintaining the hierarchy of firm sizes. The very large supply of cheap labor power & the support of construction labor by noncapitalist relations of production are crucial conditions for the existence of a labor-intensive construction industry. New technology has not significantly changed the character of this industry. The role of the public sector & the nature of labor relations are unusual characteristics of Mexican construction that shape most of the industry's other characteristics. 2 Tables, 1 Figure, 33 References. W H Stoddard

88T2159

Barras, Richard (CFS, 5 Tavistock Pl London WC1H 9SS England). Technical Change and the Urban Development Cycle. Urban Studies, 1987, 24, 1, Feb, 5-30

† The pronounced "long swings" or Ur development cycles of 20-30 years duration that have created successive waves of urbanization in the British economy since the industrial revolution, & which can be related to successive long waves of technological development within the economy as a whole, are described. A more detailed examination of the post-WWII period shows that in each sector of building two types of shorter cycles, causing pronounced building booms & slumps, are superimposed on the dominant long swing of post-WWII Ur development. Prospects for the next Ur development cycle in GB related to the new wave of microelectronic & information technologies are examined, along with some policy implications. 5 Tables, 8 Figures, 48 References. HA

88T2160

Berman, Marshall (Dissent, Foundation Study Independent Social Ideas Inc 521 Fifth Ave New York NY 10017). Take It to the Streets: Conflict and Community in Public Space. U Dissent, 1986, 33, 4, fall, 476-485.

† Karl Marx's description of bourgeois life as divided into two spheres-the private & the public-implies a need for space to accommodate both. In "Pleasures & Costs of Urbanity," Michael Walzer (see abstract in this section) offers a vision of public space whose only major flaw is its limited definition of the needs that can be met by public space. Examples of the wider range of needs that public space can meet are offered, including Cyndi Lauper's popular song Girls Just Want to Have Fun & the Plaza Mayor in Madrid, Spain-both of which reveal public space as a realm for liberal individualism, & pleasure & self-expression. A problem for such Ur spaces is the presence of the underclasses, but in defining them as deviants rather than simply as different, Walzer denies one of the major values of Ur life. Recent efforts to restore public space have been flawed by their exclusion of the underclasses & of the opportunities for encounters among people of different backgrounds that come with them. W. H. Stoddard

SOCIOLOGIA DEL LAVORO/28

ALTRE ORGANIZZAZIONI

Contesti e dinamiche organizzative nella società post-industriale

Dahrendorf/Offe/Battistoni

Finney Botti/Scarpitti Brocchieri

Bronzo/Cepollaro/Ciampi/Cinti

Lisena/Mollame/Morelli

Natoli/Vaselli/Zingarelli

a cura di Delia Zingarelli

tion. Here it is argued that, in fact, municipalization hinders the possibilities of expression & territorial organization of the inhabitants, because the municipalities are merely local branches of the central, hierarchical, dictatorial government. Municipalization thus tends to erode the community base, which under more democratic conditions could offer people the possibility of political participation & local development. The obstacles & possibilities for achieving genuine local government in Chile today are investigated. 1 Table. C. Waters.

88T2171

Fadda Cori, Gimlietta (Facultad de Arquitectura y Urbanismo U Central Venezuela, Caracas 1051), Crisis urbana en el area metropolitana de Caracas (Urban Crisis in the Metropolitan Area of Caracas), UM Revista Mexicana de Sociologia, 1986, 48, 4, Oct-Dec, 87-108 (SPA).

* An analysis of the Ur crisis in the metropolitan area of Caracas, Venezuela, examining the roles of the Ur social movements & of the state & the relationship between local government & citizens. The characteristics of the crisis are described, drawing on municipal government statistics concerning Ur population growth, standard of living, housing, levels of employment & education, & services for health, transportation, & recreation. The development of various Ur social movements since 1970 is outlined. The movements are classified into three different types according to their mode of confronting the state &/or the dominant sectors. The role of the local government is investigated, & the prospects for achieving decentralization & democratization via citizen participation are discussed. 5 Tables, 25 References. C. Waters.

88T2172

Farley, John E. (Dept Sociology & Social Work Southern Illinois U, Edwardsville 62006-1455), Suburbanization and Central-City Crime Rates: New Evidence and a Reinterpretation, UM American Journal of Sociology, 1987, 93, 3, Nov, 688-700.

* Previous studies have reported a positive relationship between the degree of suburbanization of a metropolitan area & central-city crime rates. Two competing explanations of this relationship—one based on relative deprivation in cities as compared with suburbs, & the other attributing the relationship to suburb-to-city movements of crime participants have been offered. Based on regression analysis of 1980 census data, a relative deprivation effect is found on two crimes in cities as compared with suburbs, but, even when relative deprivation is controlled, the suburbanization-crime relationship persists. The participant-movement explanation, on the other hand, is found to involve unrealistic assumptions about the movements of offenders. It is proposed that the unexplained part of the relationship between suburbanization & central-city crime is an arbitrary product of the effect of the city-suburb boundary location on the denominator of the crime rate. It is demonstrated that such an effect can occur even in the absence of any movement of offenders between suburb & city. 1 Figure, 30 References. HA.

88T2173

Feagin, Joe R. (U Texas, Austin 78712), Bringing Space Back into Urban Social Science: The Work of David Harvey, Sociological Forum, 1987, 2, 2, spring, 417-422.

* A review essay on David Harvey's The Urbanization of Capital: Studies in the History and Theory of Capitalist Urbanization & Consciousness and the Urban Experience. Studies in the History and Theory of Capitalist Urbanization (both published in Baltimore, MD: Johns Hopkins Press, 1985 (see listings in IRPS No. 41)). These are the latest in a series of books that have brought theoretical issues generally & neo-Marxist ideas specifically to the attention of urbanists in the US. While these books seem loosely structured, Harvey regards them as parts of a single whole. Despite the diversity of their concerns, they develop numerous stimulating ideas that merit deeper theoretical exploration. 5 References. W. H. Stoddard.

88T2174

Feagin, Joe R. (Dept Sociology U Texas, Austin 78712), The Secondary Circuit of Capital: Office Construction in Houston, Texas, International Journal of Urban and Regional Research, 1987, 11, 2, June, 172-192.

* Like other major cities in the US Sunbelt, Houston, Tex., has provided in its fixed-capital real estate sector a major outlet for surplus capital of all types. This secondary circuit of capital has absorbed large amounts of surplus capital, not just from US financial institutions, but also from foreign investors. Overaccumulation of capital in the primary circuit & elsewhere is a recurring problem for capitalism & fuels a broad array of investment ventures. Given the significance of capital investment in creating the geographical topology of cities, it is important for Ur analysis, & particularly main-stream ecological analysis, to examine the velocity of capital flows from primary to secondary circuits, & from one part of the secondary circuit to another, as well as the "how" & the "why" of those flows. From 1983 to 1985, Houston's first significant economic downturn tarnished the image of prosperity sufficiently to stem the flow of new outside capital to the city's commercial real estate sector. Economic data suggest that the flow of surplus capital into or out of the secondary circuit of real estate in Houston has often been guided by the "feel" investors have about whether Houston is a "hot" place to invest. 3 Tables, 40 References.

88T2175

Fiala, Robert & Kamens, David (U New Mexico, Albuquerque 87131), Urban Growth and the World Polity in the Nineteenth and Twentieth Centuries: A Research Agenda, UM Studies in Comparative International Development, 1986, 21, 1, spring, 23-35.

* An analysis of how the dynamics of the state system & world polity have affected the character of the Ur system of countries during the nineteenth & twentieth centuries. The role of political power for the growth & character of Ur systems is outlined. It is argued that the rise of national states & the institutionalization of the state as a world polity have implications for Ur growth. Variations in the character of the world polity & state system between the nineteenth & twentieth centuries & their impact on urbanization are considered. Cross-national data from previous research on core-periphery size distribution are presented to support the hypotheses. More extensive cross-national data are needed for further study. 1 Table, 35 References. F. Rasmussen.

88T2176

Gilderbloom, John I. & Appelbaum, Richard P. (Dept Sociology U Houston, TX 77004), Toward a Sociology of Rent: Are Rental Housing Markets Competitive?, UM Social Problems, 1987, 34, 3, June, 261-276.

* Conventional economic models which assume that Ur rental markets are competitive & that rent levels are determined solely by the supply & demand for housing are critically examined. A review of previous research on local housing markets indicates that social factors—eg, the high degree of organization among professional landlords restrict competition & affect the price of rental housing. A regression analysis of 1980 median rents in 140 Ur markets using US census data is presented, revealing that demand variables & the professionalization of the rental housing industry are more important determinants of rent levels than are supply variables. It is concluded that a sociological approach is necessary to understand such problems as a lack of affordable housing in Ur areas & structured inequality in the tenant-landlord relationship. 1 Table, 89 References. HA.

88T2177

Giuliani, Maria Vittoria (Inst Psychology National Research Council Italy, via Monti Tiburtini 509 I-00157 Rome), Naming the Rooms: Implications of a Change in the Home Model, UM Environment and Behavior, 1987, 19, 2, Mar, 180-203.

* An exploration of the lexical behavior of a sample of Italians regarding the name given to the social space in their homes. It is argued that differences in labeling the rooms can be accounted for by differences in the reference models adopted by the inhabitants. Using interview data from a previous study in Rome, Italy (N = 50), this hypothesis is developed analyzing physical properties, activity patterns, & values expressed by the Ss in the framework of three different dwelling models related to recent changes in the structure of Italian society. 5 Figures, 25 References. HA.

88T2178

Hanagan, Michael (Columbia U, New York NY 10027), Industrialization and Urban Society in Nineteenth-Century France, Journal of Urban History, 1987, 13, 2, Feb, 218-229.

* A review essay on Lenard R. Berlanstein's The Working People of Paris, 1871-1919 (Baltimore: Johns Hopkins, 1984); Jill Harstin's Policing Prostitution in Nineteenth-Century Paris (Princeton: Princeton U Press, 1985); William M. Reddy's The Rise of Market Culture: The Textile Trade and French Society, 1750-1900 (Cambridge: Cambridge U Press, 1984); William H. Sewell, Jr.'s Structure and Mobility: The Men and Women of Marseille, 1820-1870 (Cambridge: Cambridge U Press, 1985); & Ann-Louise Shapiro's Housing the Poor of Paris,

88T2161

Bonnes, Mirilla, Giuliani, Maria Vittoria, Amoni, Flora & Bernard, Yvonne (I. Rome, 00100 Italy). Cross-Cultural Rules for the Optimization of the Living Room. In Environment and Behavior, 1987, 19, 2, Mar., 204-227.

† The hypothesis is proposed that the arrangement of a specific domestic environment such as the living room has an internally coherent & organized character & that the different modes of implementing it can be interpreted as implicit, culture-specific rules that people apply to satisfy a set of environmental needs. In particular, differences & similarities between two different national contexts are discussed based on a content analysis of photographs of living rooms or dining rooms in Paris, France & Rome, Italy ($n = 53$ & 55 , respectively). Focus is on the need to ensure, by means of living room arrangement, a certain degree of aesthetic enjoyment by the inhabitants & a suitable setting for interpersonal relationships. 4 Tables, 25 References. Modified HA.

88T2162

Brown, John C. (Virginia Commonwealth U., Richmond 23284). Citywide Implications of Virginia's Festival Marketplaces: Norfolk's Waterside and Richmond's 6th Street Marketplace. Journal of Architectural and Planning Research, 1986, 3, 1, Feb., 79-85.

† The interest of cities such as Norfolk & Richmond, Va., in downtown revitalization & its potential for increased public revenue is discussed. Such schemes appeal to even the skeptical, but are not without problems. Issues such as the investment of public funds, the attempt of city powers to protect their investment, & the participation of minority groups must be resolved in the development planning for Ur marketplaces. 17 References. HA.

88T2163

Bunya, Toshiko (Tokyo Metropolitan U., Meguro-ku 152 Japan). Title appears in Japanese (Metropolitan Growth and Outer City Urbanization: A Changing Community in the Outskirts of Great Tokyo). Shakaigaku Hyoron/Japanese Sociological Review, 1987, 37, 4(148), Mar., 443-460. (JPN)

† Recent metropolitan expansion in Japan has been characterized by the movement of a large volume of the Ur population to traditional agricultural communities outside the boundaries of the large cities. Effects of this are examined, including (1) changes in population composition, (2) disruptions in the agricultural industry, (3) occupational changes for farmers, & (4) lack of satisfaction among former city dwellers with their new residential conditions. Serious conflicts over economic & residential issues have resulted. Social & structural changes in these communities are examined using social network analysis, & illustrated via a case example of a chokai community in Ichihara, Chiba. 2 Tables, 3 Figures. Modified HA.

88T2164

Burr, Jeffrey Allan (U. Texas, Austin 78712). Urbanization, Fertility and Social Change: A Demographic Response to Social and Economic Conditions. * Dissertation Abstracts International, A: The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 47, 12(1), June, 4516-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor MI. Order No. DA8705966.

88T2165

Carrión M., Fernando, La política del municipio en Quito (Municipal Policy in Quito). ♦ Revista Mexicana de Sociología, 1986, 48, 4, Oct-Dec, 141-162. (SPA)

† The transformation of the municipality of Quito, Ecuador, is described, based primarily on official statistical evidence. Processes of modernization & urbanization in the 1960s radically altered the relations between the city & Ur areas as well as the agro-export structure of production. This change was accentuated by the increase in petroleum exports after 1972. Between 1970 & 1980, Quito's population more than doubled, & its area quadrupled. The basic elements of Quito's municipal policy are analyzed, with reference to the social interests that have manifested themselves in this process of transformation. Particular attention is given to the municipality's financial policy, the generation of physical capital, the municipal deficit & sources of credit, & the problem of the water supply. Ur planning is also discussed. It is concluded that a situation of financial crisis has been reached. 7 Tables. C. Waters.

88T2166

Chan, Kwok B. (Dept Applied Social Science Concordia U., Montreal Quebec H3G 1M8). Ethnic Urban Space, Urban Displacement and

Forced Relocation: The Case of Chinatown in Montreal. ♦ Canadian Ethnic Studies/Etudes Ethniques au Canada, 1986, 18, 2, 65-78.

† The changing functional significance of Chinatown in Montreal, Quebec, as an ethnocultural district for the Chinese community is reviewed. In coping with structural discrimination, the Chinese in Montreal have turned to Chinatown for support & cultural continuity. Ur displacement by the government & gentrification have done much in delimiting Chinatown in the past two decades & will continue to force out those who cannot afford to stay in the area. With its institutional infrastructure eroded, the Montreal Chinese community is undergoing a crisis, which is worsened by government authorities who have chosen to deal with the conflict between commercial development & the rights of citizens by siding with the former. 2 Figures, 5 Photographs, 33 References. HA.

88T2167

Chang, Ying-Hwa (Inst. Ethnology Chinese Academy Sciences Nankang Taipei). Title appears in Chinese (A Study of Urban Ecological Structure in Taiwan: The Comparison of Taipei, Taichung and Kaohsiung). Kuo Li Tai-wan Ta Hsueh She Hui Hsueh Kan/National Taiwan University Journal of Sociology, 1986, 18, Nov., 25-50. (CHI)

† Census data from 1980 for the Taiwanese cities of Taipei, Taichung & Kaohsiung are used to test the hypothesis that Ur ecological structure is a function of both city size & level of economic development. The largest city's spatial pattern resembles the modern model, & the second largest city's spatial pattern is relatively close to it. The third city, however, is closer to the preindustrial model. None of the three cities fully corresponds to the modern model. The Ucs of the two largest cities are in the central zones of the central sectors. Mainlanders reside centrally in Taipei, the capital, but in fringe areas of the other two cities. Family characteristics also vary with location within the city. 7 Tables, 6 Figures, 25 References. Modified HA.

88T2168

Damais, Jean-Philippe (Centre études populations & activités urbaines U. Paris I, F-75231 Cedex 05 France). Sao Paulo: I: de la ville à la mégapole (São Paulo I: From Town to Megalopolis). ♦ Cahiers de Sociologie Économique et Culturelle Ethnopsychologie, 1987, 7, June, 86-108. (FRE)

† Some aspects of the growth of São Paulo, Brazil, since the late nineteenth century are investigated, based on statistical evidence. Geographical expansion, especially since 1960, has transformed the city from a residential center into a metropolis, even a megalopolis. In less than half a century, many disorganized & badly planned suburban areas have been incorporated. Economic development & a population boom made São Paulo Brazil's first industrial area & resulted in one of the most important financial markets in the world. In less than a century, the population grew from 150,000 to 15 million, primarily through immigration later compounded by an increased birthrate. An analysis of some demographic characteristics shows that there is a wide variety of populations & great social differentiation, which tends to be reinforced by intra-Ur residential mobility. 1 Table, 2 Figures, 3 Charts, 4 Photographs. Modified HA.

88T2169

Ebner, Michael H. (Dept History Lake Forest Coll., IL 60045). The Comparative Tradition in American Urban History. ♦ The Journal of Interdisciplinary History, 1987, 17, 3, winter, 639-643.

† A review essay on Andrew Lees's Cities Perceived: Urban Society in European and American Thought, 1820-1940 (New York: Columbia U. Press, 1985 [see listing in IRPS No. 41]). Lees extends the comparative approach to US history to a new area, Ur history, drawing on a variety of available publications not previously assessed as a whole. Lees gives particular attention to the influence of Max Weber's comparative Ur history in the US. This work is a significant contribution to intellectual history, especially in its treatment of pro- & anti-Ur views in the US & Europe. W. H. Stoddard.

88T2170

Espejoza, Vicente, Rodríguez, Alfredo & Rosenfeld, Alex. Poder local, pobladores y democracia (Local Power, People, and Democracy). ♦ Revista Mexicana de Sociología, 1986, 48, 4, Oct-Dec, 123-140. (SPA)

† Local politics in Chile are discussed. Over the past ten years, the official policy of municipalization has been touted as a form of decentraliza-

88T2187

Morris, Earl W. (Iowa State U, Ames 50010). Comment on Castles in the Sky by Anne B. Shlay. U Environment and Behavior 1987, 19, 1, Jan, 115-119.
Reply, 121-136

* On the basis of a factorial survey analysis, Anne B. Shlay (see SA 84 2 85Q5471) concludes that US housing preferences are not normatively determined. However, her methods do not appear well-suited to her goal; their results often reflect constraints on the attainability of ideals rather than showing that the ideals are not held. Her findings appear to derive more from dissatisfaction with the US cultural norm favoring homeownership than from evidence actually showing that that norm is not held. In Who Governs Housing Preferences? Comment on Morris, Anne B. Shlay (Dept of Sociology, Johns Hopkins U, Baltimore, Md) replies that the data originally reported do reflect preferences independent of constraints, & that they demonstrate a readiness to trade off homeownership & single-family housing for numerous other housing & neighborhood attributes. Morris's critical comments on a number of points are refuted. W. H. Stoddard

88T2188

Nash, Gary B. (U California, Los Angeles 90024). The Social Evolution of Preindustrial American Cities, 1700-1820: Reflections and New Directions. Journal of Urban History, 1987, 13, 2, Feb, 115-145

* In the course of the eighteenth century, the populations of major US cities increased many times. eg. New York City grew from 5,000 to 60,000 residents. The social & political impact of this growth is examined, based on evidence obtained from tax lists & other official records. One major development was a lessening of homogeneity & an increasing tolerance of minority populations, particularly blacks. Also, a new Ur wealth emerged side by side with severe poverty. Later in the century, the spatial gap between different groups increased, encouraged by rising land values & rents. The less wealthy members of the population supported movements for democratization, though these long remained politically ineffective. Voluntary associations gained prominence & created communities within the larger Ur communities. Thus, while cities experienced rapid change, they also displayed remarkable resiliency. 3 Tables. W. H. Stoddard

88T2189

Normandeau, Andre (U Montreal, Quebec H3C 3J7). Crime on the Montreal Metro. U Sociology and Social Research, 1987, 71, 4, July, 289-293

* A presentation of descriptive statistics regarding crime trends, 1975-1985, & crime patterns for 1985 for the Montreal (Quebec) Metro or subway, based on offenses recorded by the Montreal Police. Relatively few Metro stations account for a large proportion of property & personal victimizations; the majority of these stations are in the downtown section. 2 Tables, 1 Figure, 1 Reference. Modified HA

88T2190

Nunes, Edison (Centro Estudos Cultura Contemporânea, Brazil). Movimentos y practicas urbanas en el Brasil. Problemas sobre la democratización del poder local dentro de una transición inconclusa (Urban Movements and Practices in Brazil: Problems of the Democratization of Local Power within an Unfinished Transition). U Revista Mexicana de Sociología, 1986, 48, 4, Oct-Dec, 73-86 (SPA)

Translated by Graciela Salazar.

* The recent history of Brazil has been characterized by new Ur practices, as part of the reorganization of political institutions & the process of democratization, especially as regards local power, eg. in 1982, state governors were elected by popular vote for the first time. The development of the Ur struggles through which the working masses in Brazil's large cities seek to improve their lives is traced here, drawing on press reports & various studies. These popular movements originated in opposition to the military dictatorship; their tactics included strikes & the occupation of Ur territories. The 1983 elections opened up the possibility of political pluralism. The different activities of various popular movements since then are discussed. It is found that unity has been lost, & acts of violent protest have continued. The need to move from a logic of resistance to the construction of a new democratic order has raised new problems, as yet unsolved. 1 Chart. C. Waters

88T2191

Petralva, Susana. Espacio urbano y sociedad en América Latina: la

problemática local, emergente en un contexto de crisis (Urban Space and Society in Latin America: Local Problems Emerging in a Context of Crisis). U Revista Mexicana de Sociología, 1986, 48, 4, Oct-Dec, 163-173. (SPA)

† The new relations among Ur space, society, & the state in Latin America over the past twenty-five years are discussed. Ur problems & the responses of Ur planning & development are reviewed. Capitalist development has resulted in a deterioration of material living conditions in peripheral countries resulting in state of multidimensional, structural (not merely economic) crisis. Interpretations of the problem from the perspective of historical processes are examined, with particular reference to Manuel Castells's theory of dependent urbanization (eg. 'La urbanización dependiente en América Latina' (Dependent Urbanization in Latin America), Espaces & société, 1971, 3, July). Despite the many differences among the countries of Latin America, in all of them the state political organization seems increasingly incapable of achieving a balanced distribution of resources or of guaranteeing social reproduction. C. Waters

88T2192

Rivera P., Alberto. Municipio y problemas urbanos en Bolivia (Municipality and Urban Problems in Bolivia). U Revista Mexicana de Sociología, 1986, 48, 4, Oct-Dec, 109-121 (SPA)

† The political situation of the municipalities in Bolivia is discussed. Three phases of Ur development since the 1952 revolution are outlined: (1) 1952-1964, a period of popular government by the Movimiento Nacionalista Revolucionario (Revolutionary Nationalist Movement); (2) 1964-1980, a period of militarist control & reactionary policies; & (3) post-1980, the beginning of the transition toward democracy. The rapid Ur growth & current Ur problems are discussed. The present phase is one of transition, in which the reactionary policies formerly dictated by the central government must give way to more flexible, decentralized, democratic approaches. However, democracy is so recent that the Ur masses have not yet been able to make use of its mechanisms to combat the inefficacy of local government institutions. 1 Table, 9 References. C. Waters

88T2193

Roberts, Ron E. & Keefe, Thomas (Dept Sociology U Northern Iowa, Cedar Falls 50614). Homelessness: Residual, Institutional and Communal Solutions. U Journal of Sociology and Social Welfare, 1986, 13, 2, June, 400-417

† A discussion of choices available to the homeless in the US, based on 37 ethnographic interviews conducted in 1984 & demographic data collected from the Rs. Five kinds of homeless people are identified & the political, policy, & social sources of homelessness are identified. Residual & institutional policy solutions are discussed, & efforts of the homeless people themselves to advance a collective solution to their problem are explored & analyzed. 24 References. Modified HA

88T2194

Rodriguez, Nestor P. & Feagin, Joe R. (Dept Sociology U Houston, University Park TX 77004). Urban Specialization in the World-System: An Investigation of Historical Cases. U Urban Affairs Quarterly, 1986, 22, 2, Dec, 187-220.

† The Ur development of many major cities can be attributed to the specific function they serve in the capital-accumulation circuits of the world system, ie. as producers or as financial markets. Here, the concept of Ur specialization is elaborated, based on case studies of Ur growth in the Netherlands (1625-1671), England (1815-1873), & the US (1945-1967). The development of specialization is compared at three stages of capitalist development (mercantile, industrial, & monopoly) in which the cases are situated. 45 References. Modified HA

88T2195

Russell, Christine H. (Boston U, MA 02215). Does School Desegregation Policy Stimulate Residential Integration? A Critique of the Research. U Urban Education, 1987, 21, 4, Jan, 403-420

† A critique of research on the impact of school desegregation on residential integration focusing on the methodology employed. The two systematic studies available are analyzed in detail & six major problem areas are identified: (1) small sample size, (2) inappropriate statistical measures, (3) limited dependent variables, (4) inadequate plan descriptions, (5) incorrect geographic boundaries, & (6) problems with lagging variables. Because of the flawed research it is impossible to determine the effect of desegregation on residential integration, & well-designed additional research is required. 50 References. F. Rasmussen

1850-1902 (Madison: U of Wisconsin Press, 1985 [see listings in IRPS No. 41]). These works share an Ur & regional perspective on French history that allows a more detailed grasp of political & economic forces than is attainable at the national level. This approach is especially suited to France, where national politics were weakly developed. The city & region occupied a strategic position as terrain for social & political contexts, which makes them of special interest to historians. Case studies such as these works are effective in revealing the shape of such contexts. W. H. Stoddard

88T2179

Hatvani, Daniel, Lakotelek, Telepinkok. (Housing Estates and Their Dwellers), Sociologia, 1987, 1, 23-50. (HUN)

† Abstract not currently available

88T2180

Heiler, Barbara S. & Hoffman, Lily M. (Dept Sociology Cleveland State U OH 44115), Keeping a Home: Changing Mortgage Markets and Regional Economic Distress, in Sociological Focus, 1987, 20, 3, Aug, 227-241

† In the relatively affluent post-WWII period, homeownership in the US has risen steadily to include an increasing segment of the Wc, helping to attenuate some SC inequalities & integrate the Wc into the social & political mainstream. However, recent economic & political events are threatening this trend, primarily through structural changes in the home finance system that exacerbate the effects of recession, unemployment, & the deregulation of financial institutions, particularly in older industrial areas. A case study of the situation in Lorain County, Ohio, between 1979 & 1983 is presented to illustrate how such changes have affected mortgage lending & restructured local mortgage markets, with dire effects for unemployed, blue collar homeowners. 1 Table, 1 Graph, 40 References. Modified HA

88T2181

Lindberg, Erik, Carlén, Tommy, Montgomery, Henry & Waara, Rolf (Dept Psychology U Göteborg, S-411 24 Sweden), Preferences for Housing Aspects: A Study of Underlying Beliefs and Values, in United Psychological Reports, 1986, 184, 2-29

† It was hypothesized that the evaluation of different housing aspects (size, cost, neighborhood facilities, etc.) is determined by beliefs about their consequences for the performance of everyday activities, attainment of various life values, & acquisition of material & personal resources, as well as by the evaluation of these perceived consequences. Data in support of the hypothesis were obtained from a questionnaire administered to a heterogeneous sample of 203 Swedish adults. The strongest predictive relationship was found between the evaluations of the housing aspects & their perceived consequences for the performance of everyday activities. The evaluations of the latter were, in turn, highly correlated with beliefs about their role in the attainment of important life values. The evaluations of the housing aspects & their consequences, as well as the beliefs about what these consequences might be, were found to vary substantially depending on the age, sex, & marital status of Rs. They also differed for Rs living in cities of different sizes. Despite these differences, however, the evaluations of the housing aspects could be about equally well predicted in all subgroups. The belief structure found to underlie the evaluations of the housing aspects was, at least partly, validated by correlations obtained between Rs' ratings of their own housing conditions & ratings of actual performance of activities, possession of resources, & attainment of life values. 9 Tables, 4 Figures, 21 References. HA

88T2182

Magri, Susanna & Topalov, Christian (Centre sociologie urbaine Centre national recherche scientifique, F-75017 Paris France), De la cite-jardin a la ville rationalisee. Un Tournant du projet reformateur, 1905-1925. Etude comparative France, Grande-Bretagne, Italie, Etats-Unis (From Garden-City to Rationalized Town: A Turning Point in Reformist Planning, 1905-1925. A Comparative Study of France, Great Britain, Italy, and the United States), Revue française de Sociologie, 1987, 28, 3, July-Sept, 417-451. (FRE)

† A comparative analysis of the international turning point in the reformist approach to city planning & Wc housing in the early twentieth century. Three basic changes are identified, all of which accelerated immediately after WWI: (1) Utopianism declined, & emphasis shifted from the production of experimental Ur communities to development policies for residential suburbs, changing the object of reform from Wc housing to city planning in general & Ur growth. (2) Urbanism was born. (3) Rationality became dominant, leading to a change of method. Scientific knowledge, including sociology, became the guide for action. Policy itself—the tool of implementation—was reformed through the rationalization of administration, the importance accorded to experts, & new management techniques. 112 References. Modified HA

88T2183

Martínez Assad, Carlos & Ziccardi, Alicia (Instit Investigaciones Sociales U Nacional Autónoma México, 04510 México 20 DF), El municipio entre la sociedad y el Estado (The Municipality between Society and the State), in Revista Mexicana de Sociología, 1986, 48, 4, Oct-Dec, 7-49. (SPA)

† Some characteristics of local power in Mexico are described, with specific reference to recent emphasis on the importance of the municipality. The reform of Article 115 of the Mexican Constitution & the process of decentralization are examined: these directly affect the role of the municipality & make its insertion in the Mexican political system more balanced. Aspects of the decentralized services in the municipalities & data on population, political parties, & electoral results are also discussed. Information is drawn from official documents & numerous studies. 4 Tables, 2 Appendixes, 34 References. AA Tr & Modified by C. Waters

88T2184

Menke, Terri (Dept Economics U California, Riverside 92521), Economic Welfare and Urban Amenities across Race-Sex Groups, Urban Studies, 1987, 24, 2, Apr, 151-161

† An application of the W. Nordhaus & J. Tobin technique ("Is Growth Obsolete?" Economic Growth, New York: National Bureau of Economic Research, 1972) to estimate how valuations of Ur site amenities affect gaps in economic welfare across four race-sex groups: white Ms, white Fs, black Ms, & black Fs. Data from the May 1978 Current Population Survey reveal statistically significant differences between blacks & whites within each gender category in many of the amenities' effects on earnings. It is concluded that welfare gaps among the race-sex groups may be quite different from actual earnings gaps. 6 Tables, 35 References. F. Rasmussen

88T2185

Monwad, Galal Abdalla (Faculty Economics & Political Science U Cairo, Egypt), Urbanization and Labor Migration in the Arab Countries of the Gulf, in Journal of the Gulf and Arabian Peninsula Studies, 1987, 13, 51, July, 189-214. (ARA)

† The Arab countries of the Persian Gulf are witnessing the emergence of nation-city states, since their capitals comprise more than 70% of the population. Kuwait, Qatar, Bahrain, the United Arab Emirates, Saudi Arabia, & Oman, in particular, are gaining urbanizational momentum from the steady flow of Arab & non-Arab migrants seeking work or economic fortune. In some Gulf cities, these expatriate laborers constitute over 50% of the population. The cultural & SE impacts of this labor migration are explored. Problems include: (1) increased pressure on Ur services, particularly housing; (2) conflicts between migrants & indigenous population & between different ethnic communities of workers; (3) limitations on the productive activities of indigenous workers, particularly Fs; & (4) social & political threats to native Arab culture & identity. Suggestions are offered to guide the governments of the Gulf countries in developing an effective strategy to deal with these problems, particularly that of Asian laborers. Modified HA

88T2186

Mohl, Raymond A. (Dept History Florida Atlantic U, Boca Raton 33431), The Politics of Ethnicity in Contemporary Miami, in Migration World Magazine, 1986, 14, 3, 7-11

† The arrival of Cuban & other exile groups in Miami, Fla, since 1959 has dramatically altered the demography of the metropolitan area. Changing population patterns, in turn, have had a powerful impact on Ur politics. Cubans & other ethnic groups have been thrown together in Miami in a struggle for jobs, residential space, & political power. Active participation in the political system has provided one means for the achievement of group goals, while the participation itself has stimulated the sense of ethnic identification & political power. The expression of ethnic politics in Miami is traced at the levels of exile, electoral, structural, & administrative politics, & of public policy. It is concluded that political participation has stimulated the persistence of ethnic identity. Modified AA

Hui Hsueh K'an/National Taiwan University Journal of Sociology, 1986, 18, Nov, 163-190

- * In a comparative analysis of the modernization process in the People's Republic of China (PRC), Taiwan, Hong Kong, & Singapore, a three-stage model is applied in which industrialization leads to economic growth, which leads to modernization. Contrasts are described between Taiwan's mixture of planning & private enterprise, the PRC's socialism, Singapore's mix of socialism & capitalism, & Hong Kong's market economy. The PRC has experienced faster economic growth, but has not succeeded in modernizing itself to the same degree. Contrasts are also traced in the spheres of education, urbanization, & health care & life expectancy, while the PRC lags behind the other three nations, its current modernization campaign may make it one of the leaders among Third World nations. Structural organization & the Confucian ethic are considered as influences on modernization. Lessons for other Third World nations aiming at more rapid modernization are identified. 2 Figures, 39 References. W. H. Stoddard

88T2206

Vivescas M., Fernando (Facultad Arquitecturas U Nacional Colombia, Bogota), Identidad municipal y cultura urbana (Municipal Identity and Urban Culture). ♦ Revista Mexicana de Sociología, 1986, 48, 4, Oct-Dec, 51-71 (SPA)

- * It is argued that, in Colombia, Ur architecture is providing a new basis & new perspectives for social & political modernization, based on the growing popular awareness of the need to consider the qualitative aspects of Ur space. The ideological conception & repressive politics of recent Ur development as collaborative factors in Ur deculturalization are analyzed. The process of Ur political representation in Colombia is criticized & the way new forms of effective political participation can be developed among Ur dwellers is outlined. It is proposed that Ur architecture, the ultimate expression of spatial quality & an integral part of cultural development, is of critical importance in this process. Modified AA

88T2207

Walzer, Michael (Dissent, Foundation Study Independent Social Ideas Inc 521 Fifth Ave New York NY 10017), Pleasures & Costs of Urbanity. ♦ U Dissent, 1986, 33, 4, fall, 470-475

- * A perspective is advanced on US cities, focusing on their relevance to idealist-republican politics. A distinction is drawn between two kinds of public space: single-minded & open-minded. Open-minded space is the key setting for urbanity & civic traditions. However, the contemporary city is shaped more by private space, which is the real end to which single-minded public space is the means. Reasons for this include: the cultural rise of liberal individualism, new technologies for housework, communication, & transportation, modernist architecture, overcrowding, & lost safety, & the loss of public subsidy. But the lack of open-minded space has been felt, & experiments have been made in restoring it, it is necessary to make such arrangements work in more ordinary neighborhoods. W. H. Stoddard

88T2208

Wood, Charles H. & McCracken, Stephen D. (Dept Sociology U Florida, Gainesville 32611), Underdevelopment, Urban Growth and

Collective Social Action in Sao Paulo, Brazil, Studies in Third World Societies, 1984, 29, Sept, 101-140

- ¶ A study of social change in metropolitan São Paulo, Brazil. First, a structural perspective is used to show how social change unequally affects different Ur SCs, using 1970 census data, other official statistics, & data from previous research to derive indexes of employment, income, childhood mortality rates, & access to city services. Second, a behavioral approach is used to examine the way in which people respond to Ur underdevelopment based on recent studies focusing on household sustenance strategies, union militancy, community action, & collective violence. It is concluded that an understanding of Ur underdevelopment requires both structural & behavioral perspectives on social change. 6 Tables, 55 References. Modified AA

88T2209

Young, Frank W. & Nolan, Timothy (Dept Ru Sociology Cornell U, Ithaca NY 14853), Exports and Urban Centres in Sub-Saharan Africa: Subnational Comparisons for 1900 Data. ♦ African Urban Quarterly, 1986, 1, 3-4, Aug-Nov, 166-175

- ¶ Detailed maps of African countries as of 1980 are used to test the hypothesis that export activity, specifically mining & agriculture, impacts negatively on Ur growth. The latter is measured by the number of cities (20,000 + population) &, separately, by the number of towns in each of 250 subnational regions of 40 sub-Saharan countries. The correlations between the number of export activities & Ur centers are generally positive, & these results hold, with minor exceptions, across coastal, hinterland, & landlocked zones, & in enclave regions, as defined by the combination of some type of mining & cotton growing. On the basis of this analysis, export base theory is supported, & dependency theory rejected, in the African context. 5 Tables. Modified HA

88T2210

----, Construcción de la ciudadanía en el Brasil, sindicalismo y movimiento obrero (The Construction of Citizenship in Brazil, Trade Unionism, and the Workers' Movement). ♦ Revista Mexicana de Sociología, 1986, 48, 4, Oct-Dec, 337-358. (SPA)

- ¶ Four contributions to a debate organized by the Instituto Universitário de Pesquisas do Rio de Janeiro (IUPERJ), Brazil, are presented. Maria Herminia Tavares de Almeida reviews the major changes that have taken place during the first 100 days of the "New Republic" in Brazil: changes in institutions, political structure & party system, & political coalitions & policies. Luis Jorge Werneck Vianna compares the situation of the workers' movement & the labor laws today with earlier turning points in Brazilian history, notably 1945 & 1964, when opportunities were lost. Wanderly Guilherme Dos Santos is optimistic about the changes Brazil is undergoing. As a result of the great changes in the occupational structure over the past 20 years, many more industrial workers than ever before are organized in unions, & new forms of unionism have emerged. Bolivar Lamounier discusses the actions of the Ministry of Labor, & projected changes to the constitutional & legal restrictions affecting labor. The debate ends with a discussion of questions on the following subjects: (1) the means of achieving greater autonomy for the unions; (2) the existence of conditions for a resurgence of neopopulism; (3) the possibility of raising workers' salaries; & (4) regional & municipal problems & the possibility of decentralization. C. Waters

88T2196

Rossi, Peter H., Wright, James D., Fisher, Gene A. & Willis, Georgianna (Social & Demographic Research Instit U Massachusetts, Amherst 01003), The Urban Homeless: Estimating Composition and Size, U Science, 1987, 235, 4794, 13 Mar, 1336-1341

¶ Although homelessness has been recognized as a serious & growing Ur social problem, scientifically acceptable methods for estimating the composition & size of the homeless population have been lacking. A new research approach to estimating the size & composition of undomiciled Ur populations is presented, & its utility is illustrated through a description of the literal homeless in Chicago, Ill. Interviews conducted with shelter & street people ($N = 722$) in 1985/86 reveal that the homeless are unfiliated persons living in extreme poverty, with high levels of physical & mental disability. Homelessness is interpreted as a manifestation of extreme poverty among persons without families in housing markets with declining stocks of inexpensive dwelling units suitable for single persons. 6 Tables. Modified HA

88T2197

Rullo, Giuseppina (Instit Psychology National Research Council Italy, via Monti Tiburtini 509 I-00157 Rome), People and Home Interiors: A Bibliography of Recent Psychological Research, U Environment and Behavior, 1987, 19, 2, Mar, 250-259

¶ An annotated bibliography is presented concerning psychological research of people-home relationships, with focus on the role of the home interior in human experience of dwelling. HA

88T2198

Rustin, Michael (North East London Polytechnic, Stratford E15 4L Z, England), The Fall and Rise of Public Space: A Postcapitalist Prospect, U Divert, 1986, 33, 4, fall, 486-494

¶ An exploration of the qualitative & aesthetic dimensions of some issues raised by Michael Walzer's "Pleasures & Costs of Urbanity" (see abstract in this section) from a longer historical perspective. The idea of public space is precapitalist in origin, as are its most influential manifestations. The partial failure of modernism can be explained as a result of its envisioning socialist alternatives to the industrial cities of nineteenth-century capitalism as compromises or ameliorations rather than as genuine alternatives. The spatial forms of late or postcapitalism—eg, those being created in GB that draw on its precapitalist heritage—are perhaps a more promising alternative. W. H. Stoddard

88T2199

Shlay, Anne B. (Johns Hopkins U, Baltimore MD 21218), Taking Apart the American Dream: The Influence of Income and Family Composition on Residential Evaluations, Urban Studies, 1986, 23, 4, Aug, 253-270

¶ Americans' overwhelming desires for single family homeownership have been so well documented that they have been termed the "American dream." Government & financial incentives for homeownership are believed to allow the fulfillment of uniformly accepted housing norms that drive people to buy their own homes. Here, the American dream is taken apart by examining the preferences of different income & family life cycle groups for housing & neighborhood characteristics associated with the housing bundle. Based on data from a factorial survey of Syracuse, NY, residents ($N = 177$ Rs, who were questioned regarding 20 housing & 20 neighborhood vignettes), variations in housing preferences are assessed by SES & family composition. Findings show that all Rs were indifferent to housing tenure, & all desired single family housing, but the intensity of preferences for single family homes over other types of housing varied among subgroups. Strong desires were expressed not to live among blacks nor lower income households, although Rs expressed no desires for either suburban locations or physically homogeneous neighborhoods. These findings suggest that surface desires for homeownership may proxy for desires to control local racial & SE composition. 3 Tables, 32 References. Modified HA

88T2200

Silverman, Carol J. (Dept Sociology U California, Berkeley 94720), Neighboring and Urbanism: Commonality versus Friendship, U Urban Affairs Quarterly, 1986, 22, 2, Dec, 312-328

¶ A large number of studies have found that there is a residual r between urbanism & neighboring, however, such r can be explained as an artifact of how neighboring is defined. When the more typically used model that defines the neighbor relationship as a subcategory of friendship is replaced by a more limited one that assumes only a sense of connection, the residual r disappears. Data from the 1977/78 Northern California Community Survey ($N = 1,050$ Rs) are used to show that neighboring is better explained by the local ecological factors of housing & population heterogeneity. 3 Tables, 39 References. Modified HA

88T2201

Smith, David A. (School Social Sciences U California, Irvine 92717), Dependent Urbanization in Colonial America: The Case of Charleston, South Carolina, U Social Forces, 1987, 66, 1, Sept 1-28

¶ The form, function, & ultimate decline of Charleston, South Carolina in the late eighteenth & early nineteenth centuries is described as a case of dependent urbanization. The needs of British mercantilism dictated that the southern colonies play a peripheral role as a supplier of agricultural products. As the main link between the plantation economy & London, Charleston was financially & commercially dominated by the British. A quantitative analysis of US government data on trade flows immediately prior to the American Revolution shows that Charleston was more closely tied to England & more loosely integrated into intracolony trade than the other major ports of Boston (Mass), New York City, & Philadelphia (Pa). This external dependence had an impact on Charleston's internal SC structure, which led to the political dominance of an underdevelopmental elite & ultimately to economic stagnation. 4 Tables, 40 References. Modified HA

88T2202

Sofsky, Wolfgang (Soziologisches Seminar U Gottingen, D-3400 Federal Republic Germany), Die Kultur der Stadt (The Urban Culture), Soziologische Revue, 1987, 10, 2, Apr, 160-167 (GER)

¶ A review of fourteen recent studies in Ur sociology (see individual listings of titles in IRPS No. 41). Some of these books attempt to capture cities through pictures, topographies, maps, street scenes, etc. Others deal with the evolution of city government from the polis to the modern Ur crisis; city spaces are discussed as 'fields of action' (streets, apartments, squares). The definition of the concept of the Ur remains unclear & some authors reject the concept entirely. Older Ur areas are in decline losing their function as economic & political centers, which leaves only cultural services as their last means for legitimation. It is argued that the city is the last refuge for social heterogeneity. M. Maxfield

88T2203

Spain, Daphne (U Virginia, Charlottesville 22903), Racial Differences in Housing, Neighborhoods, and Political Participation: A Comment, U Urban Affairs Quarterly, 1987, 22, 3, Mar, 421-424

¶ A comment on articles by Rural Amin & A. G. Mariam, Craig St. John, & Jeffrey R. Henig & Dennis E. Gale in this issue of Urban Affairs Quarterly (see abstracts in SA 36.1) that document the physical & social components of racial stratification in US cities. While verifying current knowledge of Ur conditions for blacks, these articles also indicate areas for future research, including gains in housing quality by blacks in neighborhoods where blacks are in the majority, the influence of black majority or minority status within neighborhoods on black opinions of those neighborhoods, & reasons underlying levels of black political activity. 2 References. F. Rasmussen

88T2204

St. John, Craig (U Oklahoma, Norman 73019), Racial Differences in Neighborhood Evaluation Standards, U Urban Affairs Quarterly, 1987, 22, 3, Mar, 377-398

¶ It is implicit in the literature on neighborhood satisfaction that individuals or groups of people have different standards for evaluating the quality of their neighborhoods, different standards being the result of differences in past experiences or adaptations to present circumstances. However, to date, there has been no research testing for differences in evaluation standards. Here random sample interview data collected by the U of Oklahoma Sociology Dept ($N = 412$ cases for 1984) are used to test the hypothesis that blacks & whites have different standards for evaluating the environmental quality of their neighborhoods. The data seem to support the hypothesis, & it is argued that this difference is a result of blacks having much more restricted access to the housing market than whites. 2 Tables, 3 Figures, 37 References. Modified HA

88T2205

Tsai, Wen-hui (Dept Sociology & Anthropology Indiana U, Fort Wayne 46805), The Modernization of Four Chinese Societies: China, Taiwan, Hong Kong, and Singapore, Kuo Li Tai-wan Ta Hsueh She

1300 sociology of language and the arts

30 sociology of language/sociolinguistics

88T2211

Achard, Pierre (Maison Sciences Homme, 54 Blvd Raspail F-75270 Paris Cedex 06 France), $2 + 2 = 5$ ou la raison d'état ($2 + 2 = 5$ or State Reasoning), Sociolinguistics, 1986, 16, 2, Dec, 5-6, 24 (FRE)

* In 1984 (1949), George Orwell characterized "official truth" as an arbitrary lie symbolized by the phrase " $2 + 2 = 5$ ". In Notes from the Underground (1864), Fyodor Dostoevsky argues that whereas reason dictates that $2 \times 2 = 4$, sometimes it may equal 5. In both cases, the issue is one of personal freedom based not on natural laws but on representation. Orwell's formulation underlies the basic relativity of the power of the state, whereas Dostoevsky only outlines the totalitarian nature of the state. 4 References. B. Annesser Murray.

88T2212

Boelens, Krine, Child Language Acquisition as an Indicator of Language Change in the Community: Frisian Breaking, International Journal of the Sociology of Language, 1987, 64, 95-106.

* An investigation of the question of why Frisian-speaking children often do not apply breaking, i.e. the morphologically conditioned process of substituting a rising diphthong for a corresponding falling one, in cases where adults do. The plural & diminutive forms of 8 nonabstract Ns were elicited from Frisian-speaking school children ($N = 783$, aged 3-6; 110) in informal individual interviews. Overall, breaking was found to increase with age. From the second grade onward, there is a gradual but steady movement toward the standard (with the first 5 words of the set), which is achieved by the fifth or sixth grade. This regularity suggests an ordinary process of lang acquisition. To varying degrees, the last 3 words continue to remain unbroken in the speech of even the older children. It is noted that, although the word f of the plural & diminutive forms may influence breaking, various factors are involved. Several sociolinguistic variables, e.g. sex, SES, & home lang, are discussed. It is concluded that the apparent recession of breaking may indicate the beginning stages of lang change. 1 Table, 23 References. P. Farrell.

88T2213

Chumak-Horbatsch, Roma (Ontario Instit Studies Education, Toronto M5S 1V6), Language Use in the Ukrainian Home: A Toronto Sample, International Journal of the Sociology of Language, 1987, 63, 99-117.

* Drawing on G. C. Wells's social interactive theory of first-lang acquisition (e.g. Learning Through Interaction: The Study of Language Development, Cambridge: Cambridge U Press, 1981), lang behavior in the Ukrainian minority-lang home in the Eng-dominant Toronto community is studied from a culture-specific perspective. A macro background description of the status of the Ukrainian lang in Toronto provides a contextual matrix for a micro investigation documenting the linguistic interaction of 10 Toronto Ukrainian mother-child dyads (children aged 3). It was hypothesized that (1) the lang-maintenance philosophy of the mothers would be reflected in their behaviors, & (2) the "Ukrainian only" home would show various Eng influences. Each dyad was recorded twice in sessions of spontaneous interaction lasting between 2.5 & 3.5 hours. Furthermore, interviews concerning lang use, school performance, & the Ukrainian community were conducted with the mothers after each recording session. Mother-child conversations were analyzed for conceptual-semantic & linguistic meaning match & mismatch & mothers' response strategies to linguistic meaning mismatches. Results only partially support the first hypothesis, although the effort spent providing contact with the Ukrainian lang & sharing Ukrainian customs & traditions is consistent with the mothers' lang-maintenance philosophy. Their marked tendency to neither attend to nor correct linguistic meaning mismatches is inconsistent with that philosophy. Eng was found to play an important role in the children's lives, in spite of the mothers' convictions that their homes are "Ukrainian only". 1 Table, 13 References. P. Farrell.

88T2214

Cohen, Erik (Hebrew U Jerusalem, Mount Scopus Israel), 'Phut Thai dai': Acquisition of Hosts' Language among Expatriates in Bangkok, International Journal of the Sociology of Language, 1987, 63, 5-19.

* Based on a longitudinal study of expatriates in Bangkok, the question of how strangers acquire the host lang (HL) of their foreign setting is addressed. A. Schuetz's scheme for describing the transitional process of acculturation ("The Stranger: An Essay in Social Psychology," American Journal of Sociology, 1944, 49, 499-507) is more fully developed by formulating, within the framework of sociolinguistic second-lang acquisition theory, two differentiating parameters in the lang-acquisition process: (1) motivation for HL acquisition, & (2) manner of HL acquisition. Two types of motivation, practical need & cultural interest, & two manners of acquisition, formal study & informal learning, are distinguished, yielding a four-fold typology of HL acquisition styles. Observation of the expatriates' experiences with Thai suggests that each of these styles influences the stranger's HL competence in different ways. 1 Table, 26 References. P. Farrell.

88T2215

Dolitsky, Marlene (U Paris VII, F-75221 Cedex 05 France), Languages in Combat, Sociolinguistics, 1986, 16, 2, Dec, 2-4.

* Focusing on the events that took place during a 1984 French/Eng bilingual symposium on sociolinguistics at the Ecole normale supérieure, Paris ("1984: Orwell et la question du langage/1984: Orwell and the Language Question"), the issues of Eng dominance & linguistic conflict at scientific symposia are discussed. 7 References. P. Farrell.

88T2216

Evans, M. D. R. (Dept Sociology Australian National U, Canberra ACT 2601), Language Skill, Language Usage and Opportunity: Immigrants in the Australian Labour Market, Sociology, 1987, 21, 2, May, 253-274.

* An examination of how immigrants' proficiency in speaking Eng & preference for retaining their native tongue as the lang of the home affect their occupational attainment in the Australian labor market. Data from the 1981 Australian Census on 4,635 M immigrants from non-Anglophone countries are used to investigate how well three approaches—assimilationist, neo-Marxist, & ethnic enclaves—account for differences among groups in how important lang usage & skill are in occupational mobility. The findings show that monolingual Eng usage is of no benefit in the labor market & that weak Eng skills harm the occupational opportunities of some groups much more than others, a finding that is consistent with the ethnic enclaves approach. Generalizing from the differences among Australian immigrant groups, hypotheses are provided about lang effects among immigrants to industrialized societies more generally. Hypotheses are also developed about conditions fostering development of ethnic enclaves in such societies. 5 Tables, 1 Appendix, 56 References. HA.

88T2217

Feitsma, Tony, van der Geest, Els, van der Kulp, Frits & Meekma, Irenke (Vrije U, NL-1007 MC Amsterdam Netherlands), Variations and Development in Frisian Sandhi Phenomena, International Journal of the Sociology of Language, 1987, 64, 81-94.

* Presented are results of the research project "Changes in the Pronunciation of Frisian under the Influence of Dutch," which deals with certain sandhi phenomena in Frisian & in Dutch as manifested by Frisians who are native speakers of Frisian & live in the heart of the Frisian countryside. Informal speech (Frisian & Dutch) drawn from recorded material of farmers, nonfarmers with higher education, & nonfarmers with lower education ($N = 36$ Ms) is examined. Analysis of variance shows that, on the whole, the youngest generation of informants appears to have a more Frisian pronunciation than the oldest generation. With respect to syllabification, however, the youngest generation has a more Frisian pronunciation in Frisian & a less Frisian one in Dutch. The speech of the group of nonfarmers with higher education is consistently less Frisian than that of both the group of nonfarmers with lower education & the group of farmers. Results are compared with information provided by several publications on the development of pronunciation elsewhere, & on the linguistic usage of younger people in speech communities. The results are discussed with respect to the special position of the Frisian lang. 2 Figures, 16 References. Modified AA.

LINGUISTICS

an interdisciplinary journal of the language sciences

Editor in Chief Wolfgang Klein, Max Planck-Institut, Nijmegen, The Netherlands

LINGUISTICS publishes articles and short notices in the traditional disciplines of linguistics: pragmatics, semantics, syntax, morphology and phonology. In addition it accepts articles and notices from neighboring disciplines that are engaged in the study of natural language: experimental phonetics, psycholinguistics and neuro linguistics, and first and second language acquisition. Prospective authors are invited to consult the journal's inside covers for guidance in preparing and submitting manuscripts.

LINGUISTICS has recently published the following special issues:

24-1 Studies on Morphological and Syntactic Development edited by Jürgen Weissenborn and Jürgen Meisel

24-3 Modular Approaches to Morphology edited by Geert E. Booij and Jaap van Marle

24-5 German Syntax in GPSG

edited by Arnold M. Zwicky

25-1 Variation and Discourse

edited by Norbert Dittmar

25-5 French Phonetics and Phonology

edited by Brian Wenk, Jacques Durand, and Catherine Slater

Special topics to be featured in forthcoming issues include, for example, linguistic and psychological approaches to morphology, modality, Chinese syntax, and syntax and semantics in noun phrases.

Subscriptions may be ordered through your local bookseller or directly from the publishers: MOUTON DE GRUYTER, a division of Walter de Gruyter & Co., Postfach 110240, D-1000 Berlin 11, for North America please place your order with Walter de Gruyter Inc., 200 Saw Mill River Rd., Hawthorne, NY 10532.

LINGUISTICS

order form

Please enter my subscription beginning with Volume 19

Subscription rates for Vol. 26 (1988), 6 issues

☐ Institutions DM 438 or U.S. $ 200 ☐ please invoice
☐ Individuals (prepaid)* DM 104 or U.S. $ 58 ☐ payment enclosed

Add postage of DM 12 within the FRG or DM 16.80 (U.S. $ 7.65) for all other destinations.

Please charge my MasterCard (Access)/Eurocard/American Express VISA

No. / Expires

Please print your full name and mailing address, including postal code

NAME/INSTITUTION

ADDRESS

DATE

SIGNATURE

✍ (not valid without signature)

* The individual rate applies for personal use only and should be ordered directly from the Publishers. The individual rate is not applicable for residents of the FRG, Switzerland or Austria.

 Not applicable in North America.

mouton de gruyter

berlin new york amsterdam

88T2226

Ide, Sochiko (Japan Women's U, Bunkyo-ku Tokyo 112), Introduction: The Background of Japanese Sociolinguistics, Journal of Pragmatics, 1986, 10, 3, June, 281-286.

¶ Features of Japanese sociolinguistics are described for the non-Japanese audience. Japanese sociolinguistics is the study of genjo seikaku, i.e. speech behavior in daily life. Its aim is to provide a total description of the speech behavior of people in a speech community. Questions asked include: What is the status of speech behavior of the people of multi-regional origins in big cities? Has the use of honorifics decreased? How has lang use changed parallel with the modernization of society? Findings of surveys, using large samples, are assumed to serve as the academic foundations for making practical lang policies, among which the most important is that of lang standardization. Analyses of data are directed toward producing pictures of the complex realities of speech behavior. Statistical analyses, including analyses of variance & multivariate, are applied to visualize the immanent patterns of complex phenomena in the form of numbers, figures, graphs, & maps. In addition to such standard packages as the SPSS or the BMD, several computer programs developed for sociolinguistic analysis are used. Japanese sociolinguistics is characterized by its assumption that lang is different from individual to individual, rather than from group to group, & by its atheoretical orientation. 5 References. Modified AA

88T2227

Iinoue, Fumio (Tokyo U Foreign Studies, Kita-ku 117 Japan), Sociopsychological Characteristics of Users of 'New Dialect Forms', Journal of Pragmatics, 1986, 10, 3, June, 327-345.

• A characterization of users of new dialect forms among pupils in metropolitan Tokyo, Japan, is attempted. Application of computational techniques, including two multivariate analyses, to massive sociolinguistic research data proved to be quite useful. It was found that new dialect forms are used mainly by active pupils, whereas standard Japanese forms are used by pupils with leadership. Unserious pupils are inclined to use older, "incorrect" words. The new dialect forms are found to have universal value in a sociolinguistic study of lang change. 1 Table, 7 Figures, 28 References. HA

88T2228

Jansma, Lammert G. & Jelsma, Gjalit H. (Fryske Akademy, Doelstrjitte 8 NL-8911 DX Ljouwert/Leeuwarden Netherlands), Language, Language Borders, and Social Strata, International Journal of the Sociology of Language, 1987, 64, 21-35.

• Examined is the relation between social strata & lang use in a region of the province of Groningen, situated close to the border of that province with the province of Frisia. In this region, not only a Groningen dialect is spoken but also Dutch & Frisian. Information about the lang frontier of Frisian was gathered by means of a survey. Lang use is observed in a few domains, eg. the neighborhood, the village shop, & higher circles (the lang spoken with notables). Data show that people belonging to the higher social strata use Dutch more often than Frisian or the Groningen dialect. They are also more likely to have a Dutch linguistic background. Two lang borders for Frisian were drawn: one that bordered the area where 50% or more of the households spoke Frisian & one that bordered the area where less than 20% of the households spoke Frisian. Three lang zones were formed with the two lang borders: a Frisian zone made up of areas where more than 50% of the households spoke Frisian, a transition zone with areas where less than 50%, but more than 20% of the households spoke Frisian, & a Groningen zone, with areas where less than 20% of the households spoke Frisian. The relation between lang use & social strata in the three zones has been investigated as well. Research shows that the conclusions reached still hold on the level of the zones. 6 Tables, 2 Maps, 6 References. Modified AA

88T2229

Kachru, Braj B. (U Illinois, Urbana 61801), Indian English: A Sociolinguistic Profile of a Transplanted Language, Studies in Language Learning, 1976, 1, 2, spring, 139-189.

• A study in lang acculturation with special reference to the Indianization of the Eng lang. The history of the diffusion of bilingualism on the culturally & linguistically pluralistic Indian subcontinent is traced. The functional roles of Eng are discussed & the formal influences of Indian cultural & linguistic contexts are illustrated from the sound system, grammar, lexis, & semantics of Indian Eng. These formal characteristics manifest themselves in what may be termed the Indianness in this variety of Eng. The crucial questions of "intelligibility" & "variation" are examined with reference to the functions of Eng in India. The development of, & attitudes toward, Indian writing in Eng is briefly discussed. The role of Eng in India's lang planning is related to various linguistic & political pressure groups in pre- & post-Independence India. A sociolinguistic profile of a nonnative lang in a multilingual non-Western context is provided. 83 References. HA

88T2230

Khubchandani, Lachman M. (Centre Communication Studies, Pune India), Language Communication Filtered through Technology, Sociolinguistics, 1986, 16, 2, Dec, 66-72.

¶ Communication as a human process draws on the vast richness & flexibility of lang. The communicative act is less a mechanistic transfer of information than a synergistic process in which verbal & nonverbal cues, interlocutor role & identity, conscious & unconscious attitudes, value structures, etc., are intricately involved in the creation & perception of messages. Communication technology & the use of state power threaten not only the integrity of human communication but cultural uniqueness as well. Modernization processes, particularly in the area of mass media, have been undermining the growing acceptance of cultural & linguistic pluralism. The pressures of global communication technology need to be integrated with an organic communication ethos. 20 References. P. Farrell.

88T2231

Loveday, Leo J. (Doshisha U, Kamikyo-ku Kyoto 602 Japan), Japanese Sociolinguistics: An Introductory Survey, Journal of Pragmatics, 1986, 10, 3, June, 287-326.

¶ The Japanese lang has developed, & is embedded in, a particular social & cultural system, an attempt is made to relate the two in a comprehensive yet succinct & accessible manner for those unfamiliar with either. Due to the difficulties of approaching the matter in this way, certain simplifications & overgeneralizations are made. The majority of research reviewed has been selected because it has been conducted by non-Japanese researchers &, therefore, fuller explanations are usually available in Eng (or German), however, the work of Japanese investigators is mentioned when their work is in Eng or is particularly relevant & significant. Western researchers frequently offer different insights & follow different approaches from native scholars. It is encouraging to observe the contemporary increase in studies by non-Japanese, which reflects the growing internationalization of the field of Japanese sociolinguistics. 1 Figure, 131 References. HA di Luzio, Aldo & Auer, J. C. P. (U Konstanz, D-7750 1 Federal Republic Germany), Identitätskonstitution in der Migration: konversationsanalytische und linguistische Aspekte ethnischer Stereotypisierungen (Identity Formation in Migration: Conversation-Analytical and Linguistic Aspects of Ethnic Stereotyping), Linguistische Berichte, 1986, 104, Aug, 327-351. (GFR)

88T2232

¶ Identity problems & cultural/ethnic identification of migrant workers' children are discussed with special reference to Italian guest workers' children in the Federal Republic of Germany. A traditional identity concept is adopted whose sociological tradition is argued to be traceable to Cooley (no bibliographical reference) & G. H. Mead (Mind, Self and Society, Chicago, 1934) & elaborated in modern studies by Peter L. Berger & Thomas Luckmann (The Social Construction of Reality, New York, 1966 [see SA 15 3/67C4755 & 16.6/68O3781]). It is argued that identity formation is a permanent interactively anchored process & task observable & analyzable in face-to-face situations & verbal dialogues. Humans are equipped in childhood with a number of membership categories that imply certain expectations of ethnically native & foreign behavior. Collections of such categories are prepared in a society & transferred to the individual. A conversation by 4 Italian adolescents aged 13 & 14 on the topic "Differences between Germans & Italians" was tape-recorded, transcribed, & analyzed linguistically for stereotyped judgments about native & foreign societies & cultures. The phenomena of self-representation, generalization, facts-myths distinction, ascription of values, & stereotyping are examined. 33 References. Z. Dubiel.

88T2233

Meestringa, Theun, English as a Foreign Language in Frisian Bilingual Primary Schools, International Journal of the Sociology of Language, 1987, 64, 59-70.

¶ Primary schools in Friesland have been required since 1980 to teach both Dutch & Frisian. From 1986 onward, Eng will be a third required

88T2218

Fishman, Joshua A. (Yeshiva U, New York NY 10033). The Spread of English as a New Perspective for the Study of "Language Maintenance and Language Shift". Studies in Language Learning, 1976, 1, 2, spring, 59-104

¶ A fresh look is taken at lang maintenance & lang shift from the viewpoint of spreading "langs of wider communication" in general, & from the viewpoint of the spread of Eng in particular. Relative to the 1960s, when intensive study in this area began, the most progress has been made in measurement of habitual lang use, & the least in the study of sociocultural processes. Apparently, the more societally embedded a topic is, the less progress has been made. The social sciences have not reached the level of precision of scholarly work with lang, partly because they focus on behavior that is more complex & less systematic than lang or lang use per se. 2 Tables, 58 References. Modified HA

88T2219

Grimshaw, Allen D. (Indiana U, Bloomington 47405). Can a Language Like Newspeak Serve the Purposes It Explicitly Intends? Now? Never? Not Yet?. Sociolinguistics, 1986, 16, 2, Dec, 25-34, 24

¶ Noting the similarity between Basil Bernstein's concept of symbol control as a means of generating class dominance (Class, Codes and Control Volume 3: Towards a Theory of Educational Transmission, London: Routledge & Kegan Paul, 1975) & the notions of lang use found in George Orwell's novel 1984 (1949), the question addressed is that of whether a lang could actually be used for purposes of social control in the way that Orwell's "Newspeak" is. Implications of a successful Newspeak are examined, focusing on (1) a very strong version of the Sapir-Whorf hypothesis, (2) the view that meaning is not preserved throughout transformations, & (3) the "lang deficit" interpretation of Bernstein's notion of restricted & elaborated codes. It is argued that it would not be possible to design a linguistic code that could subject the members of a society to the sort of total cognitive constraint that Orwell associates with Newspeak. Moreover, sociological considerations are argued to render unlikely the possibility of an Orwellian dystopia. 22 References. P. Farrell

88T2220

Hill, Beverly, Ide, Sachiko, Ikuta, Shoko, Kawasaki, Akiho & Ogino, Tsunao (Japan Women's U, Bunkyo-ku Tokyo 112). Universals of Linguistic Politeness. Quantitative Evidence from Japanese and American English. Journal of Pragmatics, 1986, 10, 3, June, 347-371

¶ A comparative study of the systems of sociolinguistic politeness involved in making requests in Japanese & American Eng. Coll students (Rs = 525 Japanese & 490 Americans) responded to a questionnaire designed to measure the relative politeness of request forms, the relative perceived distance of categories of addressee, & the relative f with which various request forms are used, in given situations, toward specific categories of addressee. Results provide empirical evidence for a common cross-cultural factor, discernment, which is hypothesized to operate in all sociolinguistic systems of politeness. It is suggested that differences in the weighting of discernment & volition provide a means of characterizing the politeness systems of different langs. Moreover, support is adduced for the theories of Penelope Brown & Stephen Levinson ("Universals in Language Usage: Politeness Phenomena" in Questions and Politeness, Goody, Esther N. [Ed], Cambridge: Cambridge U Press, 1978), & Geoffrey N. Leech (Principles of Pragmatics, London: Longman, 1983). 6 Figures, 2 Appendixes, 7 References. Modified HA

88T2221

Hock, Hans Henrich & Pandharipande, Rajeshwari (U Illinois, Urbana 61801). The Sociolinguistic Position of Sanskrit in Pre-Muslim South Asia. Studies in Language Learning, 1976, 1, 2, spring, 105-138

¶ The present-day sociolinguistic stratification of the langs of South Asia has long-standing antecedents. As early as Rig-Vedic times, there is evidence for diglossia, with Sanskrit holding the position of highest prestige. The evidence is even stronger in the classical period, in drama, & in the writings of grammarians & poets. During the classical period, Sanskrit became increasingly removed from the vernacular langs. Under these circumstances, Sanskrit being the only supraregional & supra-"communal" lang became the logical choice as a link lang for South Asia, a development responsible for the so-called Sanskrit renaissance. In addition to diglossia, there is evidence also for the sociolinguistic "markedness" of some of the regional dialects of Old Indo-Aryan, & for the profound sociolinguistic influence of the grammarians on lang, literature, & style. There is evidence for linguistically distinct genres & styles that find their counterparts in modern South Asia. 73 References. HA

88T2222

Hodge, Bob (Murdoch U, Western Australia 6150). Cliché and Reality-Control: The Modality of Duckspeak. Sociolinguistics, 1986, 16, 2, Dec, 35-44

¶ George Orwell's concept of "duckspeak" in his novel 1984 (1949) is examined. It is argued that although Orwell's understanding of the phenomena underlying duckspeak is weak & incomplete, the basic Orwellian framework provides the tools for a necessary retheorization of the notion. Orwell's "Two Minute Hate" is analyzed with the aid of a model based on the dynamic principles of triads & the concept of the hero of a discourse. Drawing on Gregory Bateson's double-bind theory of schizophrenia (Steps towards an Ecology of Mind, London: Paladin, 1973), an explanation of duckspeak is proposed in terms of an account of modality & the effects of modality on discourse structures & social relations. 17 References. P. Farrell

88T2223

Holmquist, Jonathan (Temple U, Philadelphia PA 19122). Style Choice in a Bilingual Spanish Village. International Journal of the Sociology of Language, 1987, 63, 21-30

¶ A study of dialect use in the Spanish town of Ucieida (Cantabria Province, northern Spain), which, by combining statistical & linguistic data with anthropological & sociological interpretation, attempts to provide a holistic analysis. Phonological characteristics of the traditional local speech are contrasted with those of Standard Castilian. A questionnaire (N = 40 Rs) that elicited information concerning which style (local or standard) is used with whom shows that, whereas all Rs make a clear distinction between speech appropriate with community members & speech appropriate with professionals who, because of their specialized training are likely to have come from elsewhere, there is considerable gender- & age-based variation concerning choice of speech style with particular types of community members. The attitudes expressed by individuals & results of statistical analyses of variation in the pronunciation of u (ie Castilian o) in speech samples based on interviews with Ucieida residents (N = 50) provide corroborating evidence for conclusions derived from the questionnaire. 2 Tables, 1 Figure, 9 References. P. Farrell

88T2224

Hori, Motoko (Josai U Women's Junior Coll, Saitama-ken 350-02 Japan). A Sociolinguistic Analysis of the Japanese Honorifics. Journal of Pragmatics, 1986, 10, 3, June, 373-386

¶ According to Penelope Brown ("How and Why Are Women More Polite: Some Evidence from a Mayan Community" in Women and Language in Literature and Society, McConnell-Ginet, S., Borker, R., & Furman, N. [Eds], New York: Praeger, 1980), choice of linguistic forms is not only determined by the interlocutors' sex as such, but also to a high degree by social networks & social motivations. In an effort to fill in some of the gaps in current sociolinguistic research, linguistic & sociological data are correlated along a politeness scale that is not exclusively sex-oriented. Data obtained from a questionnaire (Rs = 256 M & 271 F Japanese adults) eliciting information about the use of honorific V forms support the hypothesis that role-relations in society, rather than sex differences, underlie linguistic variation in the use of politeness forms. 5 Tables, 10 References. Modified HA

88T2225

Hudson, Richard (University Coll London, WC1E 6TB England). Sociolinguistics and the Theory of Grammar. U Linguistics, 1986, 24, 6(286), 1053-1078

¶ Sociolinguists have discovered a great deal about the social distribution of particular expressions, & the question arises as to what, if anything structural linguists should do with these findings. It is argued that the development of a theory of lang structure in which the findings can be accommodated should be attempted, although sociolinguistic observations of speech will be reflected only indirectly in the structural linguist's grammar of competence. It is suggested that facts about social distribution are similar to facts about word meaning & can be described most satisfactorily in terms of participant relations such as "actor" & a hierarchy of process types. On the other hand, social distribution cannot be taken as a part of semantics, because the objects under analysis are not meanings but the linguistic expressions themselves. This seems to point to a theory of lang structure in which boundaries between components are relatively unimportant, such as word grammar. 2 Figures, 53 References. HA

88T2241

Smith, Jim, Review Article: Taal yn Fryslân, ♦IM International Journal of the Sociology of Language, 1987, 64, 121-124.

† The lang situation in Friesland, a province of the Netherlands where Frisian, Dutch, & various nonstandard dialects related to Frisian & Dutch are used, is described in Taal yn Fryslân (Language in Friesland), Gorter, Durk, Jellisma, G. H., van der Plank, P. H., & de Vos, K., Ljouwert: Fryske Akademy, 1984. Although written in Frisian, it should be useful to a wide range of researchers, since it provides a 17-page summary in Eng of its findings. Drawing on data collected in 1,126 personal interviews conducted between Sept 1980 & Jan 1981, it addresses various important issues related to lang use & trends of change, including geographical diversity, social stratification, lang competence, lang transmission, religion & media, & lang maintenance. P. Farrell

88T2242

Sridhar, Kamal K., English in the Socio-Cultural Context of India, Studies in Language Learning 1979, 2, 2, spring, 63-79.

† Some specific aspects of the use of Eng as a lang of wider communication in India are examined, including its use in broadcasting, journalism, administration, the legal system, education, & creative writing. The role of Eng as a lang of wider communication is a reality in all these fields today. Some possible reasons for the continued widespread use of Eng, despite strong positive support for the use of Hindi by the central government, are considered. 3 Tables, 17 References. B. Annesser Murray

88T2243

State Board Education, Victoria (Australia) (Melbourne, Victoria Australia), Report to the Minister for Education, July 1985: The Place of Languages Other Than English in Victorian Schools, ♦IM International Journal of the Sociology of Language, 1987, 63, 119-157.

† A lang-teaching policy proposal for schools in Victoria, Australia, is presented. Arguments are advanced in favor of teaching both Eng & langs other than Eng. Political, economic, social/psychological, cognitive, & linguistic advantages of learning langs are noted. The lang needs of students, particularly students from non-Eng-speaking backgrounds, are examined. It is concluded that educational success can be enhanced by maintaining & developing students' first langs & that the multicultural & multilingual nature of contemporary Victorian society motivates extending lang education. The policy is characterized by three principles: (1) all children should develop competence in Eng, (2) children for whom Eng is a second lang should have the opportunity to maintain & develop their native lang, & (3) all children should be provided the opportunity to learn a second lang. Specific recommendations concerning the implementation of such a policy are detailed. 12 Tables, 1 Map, 3 Appendixes, 135 References. P. Farrell

88T2244

Tabory, Ephraim & Tabory, Mala (Bar-Ilan U., Ramat-Gan 52100 Israel), Berber Unrest in Algeria: Lessons for Language Policy, ♦IM International Journal of the Sociology of Language, 1987, 63, 63-79.

† Many states face a conflict between the desire of cultural groups to maintain their ethnic identity, & hence their native lang, & the need for linguistic unification. The Algerian lang situation is a paradigm case. Not only are there tensions between French, the colonial lang, & the new national lang Arabic, but also between classical & colloq Arabic, & Arabic & the various dialects of Berber spoken by the masses. Algerian lang policy is analyzed, focusing on the following factors: (1) the place of French, (2) the problem of identifying a national lang, (3) the choice of a lang of government & administration, (4) the effect of Arabization on science pedagogy, (5) the status of regional dialects & the impact of rapid Arabization on local cultural diversity, & (6) the role of implementation speed in political, social, & economic adjustment to the lang policy. Certain lessons that can be learned from the Algerian experience are discussed. 28 References. P. Farrell

88T2245

Torode, Brian (Dept Sociology Trinity Coll, Dublin 2 Republic Ireland), Orwellian Linguistics/Hobbesian Linguistics, Sociolinguistics, 1986, 16, 2, Dec, 7-24.

† George Orwell's political novels satirizing modern totalitarianism—Animal Farm (1945) & 1984 (1949)—are compared with his essays setting out a methodology for effective political writing (eg. see "Politics and the English Language" in Collected Essays, London: Secker & Warburg, 1961 [1946]). Orwell's criterion for effective writing is derived from Thomas Hobbes's Leviathan (1651), which is also an outstanding account of totalitarianism. Hobbes described thinking as a succession of images, Orwell described good writing as the communication of visual images, while bad writing is the mere repetition of verbal clichés. Yet, Orwell also shows that the verbal representation of the visual image is problematic both Animal Farm & 1984 obsessively explore a single picture: the 1943 press photograph of Joseph Stalin, Franklin Roosevelt, & Winston Churchill at the Teheran conference which threatens to derange its viewer rather than to clarify his mind, however, its meaning for Orwell is shaped by his elaborate verbal repetitions in the texts that precede & follow it. Thus, visualization does not guarantee clear thought, but rather gives an appearance of coherence. To remember the visual image depicted by a text is, therefore, not a sufficient analysis of the way the text makes meaning, an adequate analysis of the text must reveal the rival verbal discourses. It is suggested that Hobbes's Leviathan offers a more comprehensive form of discourse analysis than Orwell himself realized. 28 References. Modified AA van der Plank, Pieter H., Frisian Language Use and Ethnic Identity, ♦IM International Journal of the Sociology of Language, 1987, 64, 9-20.

88T2246

† The geolinguistic & sociolinguistic evolution from 1950 to 1980 of Frisian, the lang of the Netherlands province of Friesland, is studied in light of SC & Ur/Ru distinctions. Industrialization was accompanied by considerable migration of Ru inhabitants to the towns & cities. However, the Ur lang, Dutch, has been neither replaced nor significantly influenced by Frisian. Rather, Frisian is actually losing ground to Dutch in Ru Friesland. An influx of allochthons from higher social categories has served to reinforce the inequality between Frisian & Dutch. On the whole, the Dutch-speaking community, although generally at least passively bilingual, does not consider it necessary to learn Frisian. Frisian speakers, on the other hand, tend to accommodate their Dutch-speaking coinhabitants: for many, Dutch is virtually the only lang used in public communication. 4 Tables, 2 Figures, 8 References. P. Farrell van Dijk, Klaas J., Language Policy in Fryslân: Diverging Concepts, ♦IM International Journal of the Sociology of Language, 1987, 64, 37-45.

88T2247

† The question of whether there is a basic consensus between the central government & the provincial authorities on minority lang planning in Fryslân is addressed. A review of the central & provincial policies shows them to be based on essentially divergent views. Whereas the lang & cultural policy of the provincial authorities is based on equal appreciation & equal rights, the central government subsumes the Frisian issue within the national policy. Thus, the necessary fundamental consensus has not been achieved. 14 References. P. Farrell van Rijn, Gerard & Sieben, Cees (Fryske Akademy, Doelestrjitte 8 NL-8911 DX Ljouwert/Leeuwarden Netherlands), The Effects of Regionalist Ideas on Public Policy. Some Developments in Language Policy in Wales, Brittany, and Friesland, ♦IM International Journal of the Sociology of Language, 1987, 64, 47-57.

88T2248

† In various West European states, national minorities have, since WWII, shown a revival of the awareness of their own identity. Focus is on the question of the extent to which the policies of central governments take into account the desires of national minorities. Attention is directed to three European regions whose identity is based on a lang of their own: Wales in the UK, Friesland in the Netherlands, & Brittany in France. Presented is a model in which the policy process is treated as a sequence of five stages: (1) wishes arise; (2) demands are formulated on the basis of wishes; (3) demands are included in the policy agenda as issues; (4) policy formulation takes place; & (5) policy is carried out. Consequently, a distinction is drawn between wishes, demands (politicized wishes), & issues (demands that have been incorporated in the policy agenda). Furthermore, it is assumed that there are factors at work that can hamper the transition to each following stage. The model is applied to the lang policy of the central governments of the UK, the Netherlands, & France. It is concluded that lang policies have brought about an improvement in the position of minority langs, in education as well as in administrative & judicial matters, but that in the implementation stage there are many factors that stand in the way of a full utilization of possibilities created by legislation. 20 References. AA lang in the curriculum of the upper grades. The bilingual education situation is sketched to provide a basis for assessing the potential impact of the introduction of Eng. Three different reactions to the Eng issue are noted: (1) since three langs are too many, Eng should replace Frisian, (2) Frisian instruction should be incorporated into Eng instruction, (3) Frisian instruction should not suffer. W. Lambert's hypothesis of additive vs subtractive bilingualism (eg, "The Two Faces of Bilingual Education," Focus, 1980, 3, 1-4) is shown to provide insight into the problem. The addition of Eng to the lang curriculum threatens Frisian, which becomes a doubly dominated lang. Frisian education therefore needs to be stimulated. It is argued that Eng lang education in Frisian schools can in fact be helpful to students who speak Frisian at home, provided that it stimulates the teaching of Frisian. 4 Tables, 16 References. P. Farrell

88T2234

Oldenhof, Bouke. The Didactics of Frisian. ♦♦ International Journal of the Sociology of Language 1987, 64, 125-128.

¶ T. Meestringa's Naar een schoolwerkplan Fries ([Toward a School Curriculum for Frisian], Enschede: SLO, 1985), which shows how to use teaching materials in the bilingual curriculum, is an important contribution to Frisian pedagogy. Although its core is written in Frisian, each of the 10 chapters includes an introduction in Dutch & there is a Dutch summary of the topics that need to be included in the curriculum. Among the issues addressed are (1) the pedagogical, social, & cultural motives for teaching Frisian, (2) the circumstances influencing bilingual education, (3) the relevance of the learning/acquisition distinction for school policy on teaching Frisian, & (4) lang activities & testing, particularly in relation to Frisian. Interviews with elementary teachers ($N = 8$) in diverse educational situations are presented & discussed. 1 Reference. P. Farrell

88T2235

Orlandi, Eni Pulcinelli. (U Estadual Campinas, CP 6045 São Paulo Brazil). Une Rhetorique de l'opprimé. (A Rhetoric of the Oppressed). Sociolinguistics 1986, 16, 2, Dec, 56-65 (FRF).

¶ An analysis of the discourse of leaders of the indigenous communities of Brazil in different lang situations that arise out of cultural interchanges utilizing the Portuguese lang, specifically: (1) speeches presented by Indians in official ceremonies & assemblies, (2) official documents sent by Indians to governmental agencies, (3) reports sent to representative entities of Brazilian society, & (4) conversations between Indian representatives & representatives of the National Foundation for Aid to the Indians. With a view to providing data for studies of the history of contact between tribal & white cultures, the specificity of the dialogue established between Indians & whites in recent years is considered. Indian leaders are found to have adequate mastery of linguistic, pragmatic, & rhetorical aspects of Portuguese. Nevertheless, significant obstacles continue to hinder communication. It is suggested that this difficulty is due to the involvement of cultural identity in discourse. 9 References. AA Tr. & Modified by P. Farrell

88T2236

Outhwaite, William. (Dept Sociology U Sussex, Falmer Brighton BN1 9QN England). Newsppeak est-ouest. (Newsppeak East-West). Sociolinguistics 1986, 16, 2, Dec, 45-50 (FRF).

¶ George Orwell saw the political sphere as the domain par excellence of a general pathology of contemporary lang use, expressed in particular in "staleness of imagery" & "lack of precision." In his novel 1984 (1949), he expressed these ideas in a fictional form in the invented lang "Newspeak" & the related concepts of "duckspeak" & "crimestop." Linguists have generally been skeptical about the applicability of these concepts, but it is argued here that they do help to illustrate certain aspects of linguistic practice in advanced capitalist & socialist societies, notably the stipulative redefinition of terms such as "freedom" & "democracy," the use of hackneyed phrases, & the rejection of information coming from alien sources. An examination of the explicit lang policy of existing socialist societies, & the less systematic but no less insidious practices in the liberal democracies, suggests the possibility of a critique of alienation in the political sphere along lines suggested by Karl Marx's essay On the Jewish Question (in Karl Marx: Early Writings, Baltimore, Thomas B. [Ed. & Tr.], New York: McGraw-Hill, 1964 [1843]), the work of Régis Debray (Critique de la raison politique [Critique of Political Reason], publication information not provided), & Pierre Bourdieu (La Distinction, critique sociale du jugement [Distinction: A Social Critique of the Judgment of Taste], Paris: Minuit, 1979 [see IRPS No 30/85C00542]). AA

88T2237

Psaltis, Christina Bratt. (U Pittsburgh, PA 15260). Catalan and Occitan: Comparative Test Cases for a Theory of Language Maintenance and Shift. ♦♦ International Journal of the Sociology of Language 1987, 63, 31-62.

¶ A study of the social factors underlying the differences concerning lang maintenance & shift between two closely related ethnic minority langs, Catalan & Occitan. The proposed analytical framework distinguishes four types of social mobilization: ethnicity, ethnic movements, ethnic nationalism, & geographic nationalism. The central hypothesis is that whereas adoption of the dominant lang is more likely to occur with subordinate groups whose social mobilization is primarily based on ethnicity, maintenance of the minority lang is more likely with groups whose basic social focus is nationalism. Catalonia, which has maintained its lang in spite of long-standing political repression, is argued to be a case of nationalism. Occitania, on the other hand, whose lang is giving way to French, is argued to be essentially a case of ethnicity. 1 Figure, 3 Maps, 1 Appendix, 130 References. P. Farrell

88T2238

Psathas, George. (Boston U, MA 02215). The Organization of Directions in Interaction. ♦♦ Word 1986, 37, 1-2, Apr-Aug, 83-91.

¶ Examined are the ways in which a particular kind of conversation—that of providing directions from one place to another—is structured. In this kind of interaction, the direction-giver is assumed to be more knowledgeable & the direction-receiver less knowledgeable. Ways in which a set of verbal directional instructions might achieve their meaning are examined, & ways in which a sequential structure is established are outlined based on excerpts from recorded conversations. Although Vs of movement & action are important to the description of the pathway, actual movements & actions are described in relation to particular points or places (eg, turn left at the next stop light), the naming of which is a necessary part of the sequence. The destination itself also provides a main organizing component. 1 Appendix, 4 References. B. Annesser Murray

88T2239

Ramirez, Carlos M. (Inter-American U Puerto Rico, San Juan 00936). Developmental Linguistic Interdependence and Bilingual Education: Cummins and Beyond. ♦♦ International Journal of the Sociology of Language 1987, 63, 81-98.

¶ J. Cummins's bilingual interdependence hypothesis (Linguistic Interdependence and the Educational Development of Bilingual Children, Los Angeles: National Dissemination & Assessment Center, 1979)—ie, the hypothesis that second-lang attainment is, in part, a function of native-lang competence—is investigated in a longitudinal study of first- & second-lang development in bilingual Hispanic children ($N = 75$). The core variables were the Spanish Comprehensive Test of Basic Skills, the Eng Maculaitis Assessment Program, & the Language Assessment Battery, which were administered at various points between grades 1 & 3. The core variables, IQ scores, & various background variables, eg, SES, parents' schooling & occupation, child's bilingual lang exposure, were subjected to factor analysis & multiple linear regression analysis. Results show that the high-proficiency Spanish group achieved greater Eng lang competency, thus suggesting, in support of Cummins's hypothesis, a longitudinal dimension of linguistic interdependence. However, a downward trend in both Spanish & Eng mean test scores also reveals a developmentally regressive interlinguistic profile. 10 Tables, 22 References. P. Farrell

88T2240

Silliman, Elaine R. & Lamanna, Mary Lyon. (School Health Sciences Hunter Coll, New York NY 10021). Interactional Dynamics of Turn Disruption: Group and Individual Effects. ♦♦ Topics in Language Disorders 1986, 6, 2, Mar, 28-43.

¶ Two special education classes were videotaped during their sharing times, & two styles of interaction were noted: "overlap" & "interruption." Overlap is characterized by its presence at a possible completion point & its brevity; interruption is characterized by its placement in the middle of a phrase & its negative effect. In one class (mean age 10:0, mean IQ 85.0), the teacher used structured participation where each pupil received a turn & the only significant interruption came from the teacher, this tended to cause a situation where group attentiveness was decreased in favor of group management. In the second class (mean age 11:1, mean IQ 89.5), supportive participation was allowed, ie, nonspeakers were allowed to corroborate narratives; this increased group attentiveness at the expense of those pupils who did not have well-developed lang skills. 2 Tables, 4 Diagrams, 1 Appendix, 26 References. E. Eberle cology. ♦ Revue canadienne des études africaines/Canadian Journal of African Studies, 1986, 20, 1, 36-56

- The development of the systematic study of African music by Westerners is traced. Since the beginnings of such study in the early twentieth century, when recordings were first analyzed by musicologists, Western perspectives on African music have progressively broadened. Historical studies based on African oral traditions & ethnographic sources have focused on aspects of acculturation, performance, style, organology, & modes of communication. Practical problems still to be resolved include those of cognitive ethnocentricity, the applicability of ethnomusicological research for African cultural development, the changing role of the African in ethnomusicological research, & the need to establish a dialog with African musicians & scholars. 50 References. HA Tr & Modified by C. Waters

88T2258

Okbovnikov, Aleksandr Vladimirovich & Petrov, Igor' Grigor'evich. Sanketoy v mir iskusstva (Into the Art World with a Questionnaire). Sotsiologicheskie Issledovaniya, 1987, 14, 2, Mar-Apr, 69-71. (RUS)

- USSR sociological journals abound with studies on how much time citizens spend on cultural & artistic pursuits, while questions about the reasons behind particular preferences remain unanswered. It is suggested that a typology of art may be developed by distinguishing between the educational, communicational, & hedonistic elements of artistic culture. More theoretical refinement is needed in this area before empirical studies can begin. 4 References. G. Prostavkov

88T2259

Ost, Mae, Mary Wigman (Mary Wigman). Österreichische Zeitschrift für Soziologie, 1986, 11, 4, 40-43. (GER)

- A biographical sketch of the German expressionist dancer Mary Wigman (1886-1973). Her career is traced from the relatively late start at age 24, through training, initial success in 1924, & public acclaim after WWI. Her critical reactions to classical ballet are noted. Her initial enthusiasm for & cooperation with the Nazis are discussed, & contrasted with the individualism inherent in her style of dance, particularly as she used it later to express the tragedy of Germany. 2 References. J. Anderson

88T2260

Pearson, Anthony. The Grateful Dead Phenomenon: An Ethnomethodological Approach. YM Youth and Society, 1987, 18, 4, June, 418-432

- An ethnomethodological investigation of the Grateful Dead phenomenon, with focus on characteristics of the subculture ("Deadheads") that has continued to surround the band since its emergence in the mid-1960s. Data collected during 16 months of participant observation within this subculture between 1985 & 1987 are used to explore how Deadheads construct & maintain their personal realities. The ability to "tune in" to the Grateful Dead phenomenon is not learned rationally nor absorbed simply through membership in a general youth culture. Rather, it is attributable to a willingness to experience nontraditionally structured or fractured social realities that breach everyday life realities & transcend normal sociocultural relationships. The role of drugs in this mystical experience remains to be explored in more depth. Modified HA

88T2261

Primsky, Lorraine E. & Rosenbaum, Jill Leslie (California State U., Fullerton 92634). "Leer-ics" or Lyrics: Teenage Impressions of Rock 'n' Roll. YM Youth and Society, 1987, 18, 4, June, 384-397

- While some parents' groups believe that messages about sex, violence, drugs, & satanic worship are clearly stated in popular music, a questionnaire survey of 266 southern Calif youths suggests that such messages are not as evident to the teenagers. Rs provided descriptions of lyrics to their favorite songs, which were compared to descriptions obtained from discerned parents' groups ($N = 85$), revealing varying interpretations of lyrics. The youths' discussions of lyrics appeared to reflect the interests of young people & were characterized by literal rather than metaphorical interpretations. These findings are discussed in terms of research on the intellectual & social development of adolescents. 28 References. AA

88T2262

Restivo, Sal. Sociological Talk about Art and Science. YM Journal of the History of the Behavioral Sciences, 1987, 23, 4, Oct, 368-376. Response, 376

- † A review essay on Remi Clignet's The Structure of Artistic Revolutions (Philadelphia: U of Pennsylvania Press, 1985 [see listing in IRPS No. 41]). Clignet attempts to extend Thomas S. Kuhn's concept of scientific revolution to the arts. At the same time, he draws a number of contrasts between the two types of revolutions, not all of which appear well-founded. His major strength is the explanatory framework of his book & its tight organization. His knowledge of art is considerable, & his sociological analysis of it skillful, regrettably, he combines it with an outmoded sociology of science that prevents him from recognizing important parallels between science & art. In Professor Clignet Responds, Remi Clignet notes two dilemmas underlying the study of revolutions: subjective vs objective accounts & short-term vs long-term time frames. W. H. Stoddard

88T2263

Rowe, D. (U Essex, Wivenhoe Park Colchester CO4 3SQ England). Independent Cultural Production: The Case of Rock. Dissertation Abstracts International C European Abstracts, 1987, 48, 1, spring, 60

Unavailable from UMI; contact the degree-granting university.

88T2264

Sherman, Daniel J. (History/Literature/Social Studies Programs Harvard U, Cambridge MA 02138). The Bourgeoisie, Cultural Appropriation, and the Art Museum in Nineteenth-Century France. ♦ Radical History Review, 1987, 38, Apr, 38-58

- † An attempt is made to demonstrate that the apparent internal coherence of the art museum in nineteenth-century France was actually carefully constructed, the result of a complex historical evolution shaped as much by contingency as by system. Museums invested their constituent elements: art, buildings, administrators, & the public, with new cultural significances via ideological sanctions, material assistance, & aesthetic justification. Beginning with the designation of the Louvre as Europe's first national art museum in 1793, the state's role in the development & internal operation of museums, particularly provincial ones, is examined. It is demonstrated that both in their external appearances & internal rules of conduct, art museums reflected the model of bourgeois culture that they helped to create. 3 Figures. K. Hyatt

88T2265

Smudits, Alfred. Die Wiederkehr des Körpers in der Musik als Ergebnis neuer Produktionsmittel-der elektronischen Medien (The Return of the Body in Music as the Result of New Means of Production: Electronic Media). Österreichische Zeitschrift für Soziologie, 1986, 11, 4, 7-23. (GER)

- † The changes caused by electronic media in the production & reception of music are considered. It is argued that the media through which music is produced determine its structures &, in turn, its relationship with the body. The relationship of the body to communications media in general is discussed, with special attention to the organizational principles of visual vs acoustic media. Electronic media are said to obscure this distinction, since TV, although visual, is not subject to the principles of a culture based on writing. The disappearance of the body from classical music is described & attributed to the role of the church in its production. The return of the body (in singing, clapping, dancing) to culturally dominant music is attributed to electronic media, which make music part of a program or an accompaniment to activity, rather than a work in itself. 74 References. J. Anderson

88T2266

Zettl, Herbert. The Anatomy of a Television Commercial: A Media Aesthetic Analysis. International Studies in Visual Sociology and Visual Anthropology, 1987, 1, 99-115

- † A single 30-second TV commercial for a Honda car is analyzed in detail. Focus is on the basic structures of the video & audio images, the visual composition, & the vectors or directional forces that lead the viewer's eyes to certain points inside or outside the screen picture. The analysis examines the use of screen space, screen time, & motion, as well as the use of light, color, & sound: both music & narration. The power of aesthetic elements in communicating meaning is demonstrated. It is argued that these aesthetic elements constitute the ultimate message, rather than being merely carriers of a message. 1 Figure, 19 References. C. Waters

88T2249

Walker, Alastair G. H. & Wille, Ommo (Christian-Albrechts U. Kiel, D-2300 Federal Republic (Germany)). Who Writes a North Frisian Dictionary for Whom and Why?, Journal of the International Association of the Sociology of Language, 1987, 64, 107-120

¶ The lexicographers who have worked on North Frisian are examined, as are the reasons behind their work & the audience for which it was intended. The North Frisian dictionaries, from the first, produced in 1743, to those published in the 1980s, are listed with information about the authors' occupations, place & dates of birth, etc. Several motives for writing a Frisian dictionary are noted: (1) lang preservation/promotion/documentation, (2) the Romantic movement's interest in vernacular langs, (3) assisting communication across Frisian dialects, & (4) expanding the Frisian vocabulary. Lay lexicographers have typically pursued their work either for themselves or friends or for the benefit of scholarly research, although more recently some have contributed to the production of user-oriented dictionaries for common people. Professional lexicographers, in general, write their dictionaries for the benefit of fellow academics. It is suggested that, given the limited market & the broad range of needs (from philologists to nonnative learners of the lang), Frisian dictionaries need to be diversified. 2 Tables, 34 References. P. Farrell

88T2250

Wyborski, Roman (Silesian U., PL 40-007 Katowice Poland), Je, on d'eux: une approche pronominale orwellienne (Je on d'eux: An Orwellian Approach to Pronouns), Sociolinguistics, 1986, 16, 2, Dec., 51-55 (FR)

¶ The significance of personal pronouns is shown to be poorly clarified by formal approaches to grammar. It is argued, based on French data, that a discourse-based pragmatic account is required. The analysis developed employs the hypothesis that the pronominal system is a vector product with a sliding scale. P. Farrell

88T2251

Zamir, Jan, U.S. Suburban Middle Class Attitudes toward Foreign

Language Learning, Studies in Language Learning, 1981, 3, 2, fall, 42-77

¶ Presented are results of a survey concerning lang attitudes toward the foreign langs commonly taught in the US—French, German, Spanish, & Latin. Ss were high school & junior high school students (N = 621), most of whom had studied a foreign lang for at least 1 year, but a subgroup of whom (N = 82) had not. Along with lang attitude data, the questionnaire obtained information about grades in lang courses, parents' lang background, parental education level, students' prior knowledge of foreign langs, & parental knowledge of foreign langs. Sex was found to be a significant factor in choice of studying foreign langs (more Fs than Ms) as well as in the particular lang chosen (more Fs chose French & Spanish, more Ms chose German). Overall attitudes reflected a feeling that foreign langs were studied because of educational or parental requirements rather than students' personal choice. Implications for foreign-lang educators are considered. 22 Tables, 2 Appendixes, 14 References. B. Annesser Murray

88T2252

Zondag, Koen, 'This Morning the Church Presents Comedy': Some Aspects of Frisian in the Religious Domain, Journal of the International Association of the Sociology of Language, 1987, 64, 71-80

¶ The evolution & present status of Frisian as a lang of religion are examined. After the Reformation, Protestant church activities in Friesland were conducted almost exclusively in Dutch. It was not until the early twentieth century that church services began to be held in Frisian. Progress in introducing Frisian into the religious domain has been constant but slow. A 1984 survey (Gorter, D., Jelsma, G. H., van der Plank, P. H., & de Vos, K., Taal yn Fryslân [Language in Friesland], Ljouwert: Fryske Akademy) shows that, although younger people show less resistance, only 20% of churchgoers prefer Frisian in religious services. In an experiment designed to determine whether there is a discrepancy between the vernacular & the standard Frisian used in prayers & sermons, regular churchgoers (N = 5 native Frisian speakers) were asked to listen to a taped sermon & note words that were either unknown or recognizable only from the context. In general, results suggest that the literary lang of sermons may present significant comprehension problems. 3 Tables, 23 References. P. Farrell

31 sociology of art (creative & performing)

88T2253

Collins, Charles D., Ad Images and Iconography, International Studies in Visual Sociology and Visual Anthropology, 1987, 1, 21-39

¶ A discussion of some of the relationships between the oil painting tradition & photography indicates some values & motifs that appear to be common. This leads to a consideration of a magazine advertisement for "Edje" perfume (see abstract of Arthur Asa Berger's article, also in this section), using a traditional art history method. Some historical insights are given into certain precedents & meanings that the components of the advertisement have. This broadens or offers an alternative to the semiotic interpretation of this advertisement. 3 Illustrations. Modified Author Summary

88T2254

Dimmel, Nikolaus (Inst. Rechtssoziologie U. Salzburg, A-5020 Austria), Anlässlich des Hollabrunner Jazzfestivals: Kapitalverwertung, Hegemonie und Jazz (On the Occasion of the Hollabrunn Jazz Festival: Capital Utilization, Hegemony and Jazz), Österreichische Zeitschrift für Soziologie, 1986, 11, 4, 74-78 (GER)

¶ A jazz festival held in Hollabrunn, Austria, led to several reflections on how the marketing of jazz has affected its integrity. It is argued that jazz has traditionally been the expressive form of the experience of repression in the US, ie, an original black resistance music. The various ways in which the structure of jazz is a critical response to the system of social power are described. The economic dilemma faced by the jazz musician who wishes to maintain integrity is noted. The conversion of jazz into a commodity form, dependent on stars who faithfully reproduce popular hits, is traced to conditions of economic crisis & is said to have destroyed the antihegemonial essence of jazz; the commercialization of European jazz festivals has deprived jazz of its last refuge. J. Anderson

88T2255

Macho, Thomas H. (U. Bildungswissenschaften Klagenfurt, A-9020 Austria), Musik und Körper. Fragmentarische Notizen (Music and Body: Fragmentary Notes), Österreichische Zeitschrift für Soziologie, 1986, 11, 4, 24-30 (GER)

¶ Some reflections are offered on certain physical aspects of music, including: (1) the paradox of music that can either cause the body to dance or free the mind from the body, (2) the significance of prenatal hearing for later listening, (3) the mythical dual role of music as protection & danger, (4) the musicality of war & the militarism of music, & (5) the regressive ear's potential for humanity in the context-neutrality of music. 28 References. J. Anderson

88T2256

Melchers, Christoph & Ahren, Yizhak, Der 'Dialog' mit dem Medium als Überzeugungsstrategie im Film (The Dialogue with the Medium: Persuasion Strategies in Commercials), International Studies in Visual Sociology and Visual Anthropology, 1987, 1, 116-125 (GER)

¶ A short TV commercial for perfume is analyzed in detail, in order to refute the thesis of the "passive observer." It is argued that observers constantly react to the pictures that are presented; thus one can speak of a dialogue with the medium. Although even a critical spectator does not notice the strategies used, it is possible for a psychologist to reconstruct such a dialogue step by step. This is demonstrated here by a reconstruction of the argumentation of the commercial & the reactions of a hypothetical viewer. Other research concerning the effects of one-sided & two-sided presentations of information is also discussed. It is concluded that a film that is intended to influence people in a certain way will be most effective if it has taken counterarguments into consideration & answers them via the film itself. 4 References. Modified HA

88T2257

Nketia, J. H. Kwabena (U. Pittsburgh, PA 15260), African Music and Western Praxis: A Review of Western Perspectives on African Musi-

1400 sociology of education

32 sociology of education

88T2271

Aittola, Tapio (Kasvatustieteiden tutkimuslaitos, Seminaarink 15 40100 Jyväskylä Finland), Kasvatustieteiden paradigmat kasvatukseen tutkimuksessa (Paradigms of Educational Sociology in Educational Research), ♦ Kasvatus, 1986, 17, 2, 89-96 (FIN)

* An examination of some of the most important theoreticians & sociological paradigms influencing the present debate & research in educational sociology. An attempt is made to identify the connections that exist between various paradigms & the basic processes of educational reality in order to find some theoretical grounds for selecting an appropriate paradigm for educational-sociological research. 2 Figures, 36 References. Modified HA

88T2272

Alexander, Karl L., Entwistle, Doris R., Cadigan, Doris & Pallas, Aaron (Dept Sociology Johns Hopkins U, Baltimore MD 21218), Getting Ready for First Grade: Standards of Deportment in Home and School, ♦ U Social Forces, 1987, 66, 1, Sept, 57-84

* Standards of deportment held by parents & classroom teachers are examined, & whether similarity of behavior standards in the two settings promotes positive school adjustment is evaluated using school records & parent & teacher interview data (N = 800 & 50, respectively) from a panel study of 825 beginning first graders attending Baltimore, Md, schools in 1982. Teacher's deportment standards exercise strong influence on year-end performance, but parent's standards are largely ineffective in influencing student academic performance, nor does teacher-parent agreement on behavior standards affect academic success. 4 Tables, 50 References. Modified HA

88T2273

Alexander, Karl L., Entwistle, Doris R. & Thompson, Maxine S. (Dept Sociology Johns Hopkins U, Baltimore MD 21218), School Performance, Status Relations, and the Structure of Sentiment: Bringing the Teacher Back In, U American Sociological Review, 1987, 52, 5, Oct, 665-682

* Research has failed to support the assumption that the academic difficulties of many minority & low-SES youth are due to their "outsider" standing relative to the MC culture that dominates schools. It is suggested that this proposition exaggerates the cultural hegemony of educational operations. Data from the 1982 Beginning School Study in Baltimore, Md, involving 2 waves of interviews with 800 parents, questionnaire data from 50 teachers, & analysis of school records of 825 first graders in 20 Ur public schools show that not all teachers are given to status-related biases. Rather, teachers' own social origins exercise a strong influence on how they react to the status attributes of their students. In particular, low status & minority pupils experience their greatest difficulties in the classrooms of high-status teachers, who evaluate these pupils as less mature & less capable, these teachers score exceptionally low on perceived school climate measures. Moreover, year-end marks & standardized-test scores of such pupils apparently are depressed by these indicators of pupil-teacher social distance & teacher disaffection. A model of pupil-teacher background congruence is proposed as an alternative to the cultural hegemony framework, & the implications of such fit for the interpersonal dynamics of the classroom are discussed. 4 Tables, 52 References. Modified HA

88T2274

Andrushchak, N. V., Obrazovanie i mobil'nost' naseleniya (Education and Population Mobility), Sotsiologicheskie Issledovaniya, 1987, 14, 2, Mar-Apr, 137-138 (RUS)

* In Oct 1985 the Instit of Sociological Research, Soviet Academy Sciences, Moscow, sponsored a conference on "Education and Mobility Part III." Opening remarks were given by V. A. Mansurov & K. Doktor. F. R. Filippov addressed problems of educational & economic restructuring. V. Adamski emphasized necessity for reforms in Poland. I. Steiner analyzed the educational situation in the German Democratic Republic, & A. Matejovsky assessed the situation in Czechoslovakia. B. Ermenov spoke on the need to upgrade technical education in Bulgaria. I. Hrubosz described the long-term interest in educational mobility in Hungary. G.

Prostakov

88T2275

Anthony, Kathryn H. (School Architecture U Illinois, Urbana 61801), Environment-Behavior Research Applied to Design: The Case of Rosemead High School, Journal of Architectural and Planning Research, 1987, 4, 2, June, 91-107

† A description of the application of environmental-behavior research to the redesign of a high school campus in Rosemead, Calif. Multiple research methods—including observation, examination of physical traces, review of school archives, interviews (N = 19 Rs), a questionnaire survey (N = 209 Rs), & student cognitive maps—were used to generate a list of priorities & design recommendations. Suggestions for economical methods of implementation are presented. 5 Figures, 58 References. Modified HA

88T2276

Barber, Elinor G., Research Access: Scholarship versus National Interest, ♦ U The Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science, 1987, 491, May, 63-72.

† Research access to foreign countries has become increasingly problematic. Because research is seen as potentially damaging to national interests or the interests of local researchers, foreigners' access to research sites may be restricted. Claims to rights to carry out scientific endeavors come into conflict with claims to rights to make access conditional or to deny access. The following issues have provoked conflicting interpretations of rights where, within a foreign country, research may be done: what topics may be studied; what types of research are acceptable; who shall study a given problem, who shall be supporting the research; & who shall benefit from it. In the absence of clear-cut agreement about rights, access has to be negotiated, by governments, or organizations, or individual researchers. Different kinds of reciprocal concessions are necessary, depending on the relationships between the countries involved, for example, between the US & the USSR between the US & Third World countries. HA

88T2277

Barber, Elinor G. & Morgan, Robert P. (Instit International Education, New York NY 10017), The Impact of Foreign Graduate Students on Engineering Education in the United States, U Science, 1987, 236, 4797, 3 Apr, 33-37.

† Surveys of chairpersons & faculty members of engineering departments of US Us were conducted in fall 1985 to examine the relation between the high proportion of foreign graduate students & the operation & quality of engineering education in the US. Information was obtained on admissions criteria & policies, financial aid, & the performance of US & foreign students as teaching & research assistants. Overall, the survey Rs believed that foreign students are an asset & that without them, training & research would suffer. Language & communications were the problems most frequently mentioned as adversely affecting the performance of foreign students. 7 Tables. HA

88T2278

Basu, Asoke (Dept Sociology California State U, Hayward 94542), Education, Social Structure and Culture, ♦ Sociological Bulletin, 1986, 35, 2, Sept, 55-71

† A revised version of SA 32 3/S16159/ISASERS/1984/0006.

88T2279

Bauer, Annemarie (Erziehungswissenschaft Instit U Heidelberg, 6900 Federal Republic Germany), Diskrepanzen und Kongruenzen: Das Dilemma des afrikanischen Kindes zwischen Familie und Schule (Discrepancies and Congruencies: The Dilemma of the African Child between Family and School), International Review of Education/Internationale Zeitschrift fur Erziehungswissenschaft/Revue Internationale de pedagogie, 1986, 32, 1, 33-53. (GER)

† The hypothesis that the failure of schooling in Africa is due to the incompatibility of the school's educational goals & traditional upbringing

75 sociology of literature

88T2267

Armstrong, Nancy (Wayne State U, Detroit MI 48202). History in the Home of Culture: Social Disorder and Domestic Fiction in Early Victorian England. ♦ Poetics Today, 1986, 7, 4, 641-671

¶ The history of the domestic novel in GB has significant gaps, eg, that which appears between Jane Austen & the Brontës. During this period, the novel-reading public was preoccupied with the impact of machinery on society. The aristocracy, the laboring SC's, & much of the MC opposed mechanization, yet mechanization succeeded. The Luddite rebellions represented a significant transformation of long-established forms of popular violence, to which the authorities responded with disproportionate violence of their own. This prospect of civil strife created public readiness to accept a new social order founded on the machine, in which the machine came to provide a symbol of rational order. The containing of disorder & violence became a central theme of the Victorian domestic novel, & the family & household were the agents that were expected to contain them. 22 References. W. H. Stoddard

88T2268

Clerks, Lily E. (Cornelis van der Lindenstr 11, 1071 TF Amsterdam Netherlands). Family Relationships in Fairy-Tales: A Historical Sociological Approach. The Netherlands Journal of Sociology/Sociologia Neerlandica, 1987, 23, 2, Oct, 79-91

Translated by Mira Yamnoka.

¶ The numerous & often contradictory scientific interpretations of European fairy tales appear to be largely pure speculation, reflecting the historical gap between present culture & that where they originated. An alternative approach is proposed in which fairy tales are seen as reflecting the experience, wishes, & anxieties of their tellers & listeners in premodern society. Examination of an extensive sample of fairy tales (N not given) indicates that family relationships are a predominant theme. Analysis of the relationships portrayed (eg, those between siblings & between stepsiblings) reveals striking correspondences to the facts of family structure as presented by family history, & also yields information about conflicts arising from structural conflicts in family life & about wishes to overcome such difficulties. 34 References. Modified HA

88T2269

Schwimmer, Erik (Laval U, Quebec G1K 7P4). The Polysemic Analysis of Oral Literature. ♦ WM Style, 1985, 19, 2, summer, 213-226

¶ The oral literature of Papua New Guinea is examined. Papuan art in all media is principally concerned with bringing spirits to life & making them visible or perceivable. At the same time, there is much emphasis on mimesis, ie, accurately copying the appearance & behavior of entities that to the Western mind are nonexistent, & that to the Papuan are normally invisible. It is suggested that the ambiguous organization of messages, systematically pursued, may lead to the illusion that spirits are present. Such ambiguity is a literary device elaborated by initiatory societies so as to create cathartic effects consistent with the cognitive constraints placed on the literary medium. 34 References. Modified HA

88T2270

Watson, Betty & Smith, William (Coll Notre Dame, Baltimore MD 21006). Freeing the Spirit: Black Revolutionary Literature of the Sixties. Social Epistemology, 1987, 1, 2, Apr-June, 131-140

¶ During the 1960s, black writers attempted to make visible in their literary works the sociocultural sources of racial oppression. US society held a distinctive worldview based on the concept of natural laws. While some black writers' works had content & methods reflecting this ultimately European worldview, others attempted to base their work on an alternative worldview. The conflict of those two visions is traced through literary works of the period. The literature of oppressed peoples continues to reflect many of the values of the dominant culture, which are so pervasive as to make it surprising that any literature can bypass them. 8 References. W. H. Stoddard ple evidenced both groups as demonstrating similar apathy levels. In applying sex/race dichotomies, however, black Ms showed significantly less apathy than black Fs or heterogeneous U Ms. Black juniors & incoming heterogeneous freshmen displayed greater apathy behaviors than did other academic classes. Potential explanations are offered for the differential behavior noted, though data & related implications leave unresolved issues. 1 Table, 7 References. HA

88T2288

Cromwell, Adelaide M. (Boston U., MA 02215). The Fulbright Program in Africa, 1946 to 1986. ♦ The Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science, 1987, 491, May, 92-103.

* The history of the Fulbright international educational exchange program in Africa is one of slowly growing political & economic interest in the continent & an ongoing adjustment to radical political & social changes. The program has followed the directive of avoiding all appearances of cultural imperialism & keeping apart from political or bureaucratic interference. Responding to the growth of Us in Africa & the expanding interest & expertise of US students & scholars, the program grew rapidly in the 1970s & was strengthened in 1978 with the addition of the Hubert H. Humphrey North/South Fellowships for midcareer civil servants & in 1980 by the University Affiliation Program & the African-American Issues Center Program. The Fulbright has been largest in the largest countries or those of greatest interest geopolitically to the US: Nigeria, South Africa, Kenya, Tanzania, & Liberia. The Republic of South Africa presents the greatest challenge to an exchange program founded on academic excellence & free intellectual inquiry. HA

88T2289

Delhaye, Guy (Institut supérieur industriel catholique, Hainaut Belgium). Scolarité, formation technique et/ou scientifique (identités et projets d'acteurs potentiels) (Schooling Technical and/or Scientific Training [Self-Definition and Projection of Society's Potential Actors]). ♦ Réseaux, 1985, 46-49, 179-194 (FRE)

* The manner in which potential industrial workers define, affirm, & project themselves on the social horizon was studied by administering anitudinal questionnaire to Belgian students (N not given) at 6 different levels of technical training in the fields of mechanics or electronics. The results indicate that these future industrial actors, from laborers to technicians to industrial & civil engineers, are preoccupied with their working lives & the amount of control & autonomy they are allowed. 15 References. D. Graves

88T2290

Dieuzeide, Henri. Reinventer la technologie de l'éducation (Reinventing the Technology of Education). International Review of Education: Internationale Zeitschrift für Erziehungswissenschaft/Revue Internationale de pédagogie, 1986, 32, 3, 285-293 (FRE)

* A review of developments in the uses of mass communication in education over the past 25 years. The optimistic approach of the 1960s has not been confirmed for reasons that are internal to the educational systems, or linked with the evolution of technological changes in society. Some guidelines are derived from the best of the educational technology of the period, & it is argued that a more global & cultural approach should be taken in the realms of communication & education. There is a future for educational technology, provided enough resources are invested in the creation & exploration of new configurations. Modified HA

88T2291

Elliot, Jane & Powell, Chris (49 Queens Rd, Sketty Swansea West Glamorgan SA2 0SB England). Young Women and Science: Do We Need More Science? British Journal of Sociology of Education, 1987, 8, 3, Sept, 277-286.

* Women in GB are absent from scientific & technological fields at all levels of the educational system. The question of whether women's greater participation in these fields would significantly influence their social position is explored in the context of the "needs of the economy." It is questioned whether there is an economic need for a workforce with a high level of scientific & technological training, & it is suggested that feminists who focus on the issue of young women & science may be legitimizing the inappropriately high status of scientific knowledge. 30 References. Modified HA

88T2292

Ferguson, Joyce A., Roller, Louis & Wertheimer, Albert I. (U Toronto, Ontario M5S 1A1). Social Factors Motivating Students toward a

Career in Pharmacy: An International Study. ♦ Journal of Social and Administrative Pharmacy, 1986, 3, 4, 127-135

* Career aspirations & factors influencing them were measured via a questionnaire administered to first-year pharmacy students in Australia, Canada, & the US (Σ N = 315). The effects of gender, country of birth, generation status, & U factors were examined. FRs felt that pharmacy was a good point of entry into the professional LF due to its institutional positions (government & hospital), employee categories, & part-time potential employment opportunities. Medicine was favored over pharmacy by foreign-born students, as were research & administrative/government positions. These students were not motivated by financial rewards, employment opportunities in pharmacy, pharmacy as an intellectual course, or pharmacy as preparation for a vocation. Foreign-born students experienced parental pressure to enter pharmacy, & were attracted by the self-employment potential. Of these students, 75% were born in Third World countries, & all foreign-borns aspiring to research & government careers were from the Third World. Third World students were less aware of employment opportunities than foreign-borns in general. Implications for the future composition of pharmacy programs are discussed. 1 Table, 2 Figures, 33 References. Modified HA

88T2293

Finn, Chester E., Jr. (US Dept Education, Washington DC 20202). The High School Dropout Puzzle. The Public Interest, 1987, 87, spring, 3-22.

* The problem of dropouts has emerged lately in the US as one of the major public concerns about the educational system & young people, second only to the drug problem. However, it is difficult simply to define which young people should count as dropouts. National statistics for the last fifty years show a steady upward trend in proportion of the adult population who have completed high school, & a more rapid such trend for young adults. Further, the gap between the 75% on-time high school graduation rate & the 86% completion rate reported by young adults is due largely to such alternative channels to educational completion as return after dropping out & high school equivalency credentials. Further, no state requires completion of high school legally, which means that dropouts are receiving ambiguous signals about the importance of completing high school. Two strategies are available for reducing the dropout rate, short of legally compelling school completion or penalizing noncompletion in some way to keep access routes open & let the young realize that finishing high school is to their advantage, or to make staying in school more attractive to students. Ultimately the most necessary policies for dropout prevention are increasing the rigor of high school education & giving closer attention to individual students. W. H. Stoddard

88T2294

Forray, R. Katalin. Iskolázási tendenciák Budapesten (Trends in Schooling in Budapest). Szociológia, 1982, 3, 399-415. (HUN)

* Abstract not currently available

88T2295

Funk, Richard B. & Willis, Fern K. (Penn State U, University Park 16802). College Attendance and Attitude Change: A Panel Study, 1970-81. Sociology of Education, 1987, 60, 4, Oct, 224-231.

* The impact of Coll attendance on individual attitudes toward traditional sex-role definitions & toward God & religion is assessed, utilizing 10-year follow-up questionnaire data for a sample of people from Pa (N = 549) who were first surveyed when they were high school sophomores in 1970 & restudied in 1981. Analysis of covariance was used to assess the relationship of education to changes in attitudes by controlling for gender, migrant status, & initial attitude scores. Overall, sex-role attitudes shifted away from the traditional modes & religious attitudes changed from sacred to secular. Change was greatest for those who graduated from Coll, intermediate for those who attended Coll but did not graduate, & least for those who did not continue their formal schooling beyond high school. Sex-role attitudes changed more than did attitudes toward God & religion. The impact of higher education on changes in attitudes was similar for Ms & Fs & for migrants & nonmigrants. 4 Tables, 35 References. HA

88T2296

Gauder, James P. (Dept Economics U Utah, Salt Lake City 84112). University/Industry Research Linkages and Knowledge Transfers: A General Equilibrium Approach. Technological Forecasting and Social Change, 1987, 31, 2, Apr, 117-130.

* Presented is a control theory model of dynamic behavior of the firm (or is examined. This hypothesis is based on a psychoanalytical model of child development. A reinterpretation of the available ethno-psychanalytical materials indicates that neither the conventional evaluation of childhood in Africa as frustration-free nor the theory that school introduces wholly new expectations of behavior can be maintained. The following factors are suggested to be significant: the cultural & linguistic gap between school & the home environment, economic problems, e.g., inadequate school buildings, lack of teaching materials, & class size of 60-100 students, inappropriate curricula, especially for an agricultural population, & low level of education & lack of motivation among teachers. 2 Tables. Modified HA.

88T2280

Benner, Dietrich & Gontemeyer, Karl-Franz (Inst. Allgemeine und Historische Erziehungswissenschaft U. Münster, D-4400 Federal Republic Germany). Postmoderne Pädagogik: Analyse oder Affirmation eines gesellschaftlichen Wandels? (Postmodernist Education: Analysis of Affirmation of Societal Change?). Zeitschrift für Pädagogik, 1987, 33, 1, Feb., 61-82. (GER)

† The current postmodernist discussion in West Germany of an end to pedagogy, drawing from Helmut Schelsky's prediction of an end to politics resulting from modern technological development (see 'Der Mensch in der wissenschaftlichen Zivilisation' [Man in a Scientific Civilization], in Auf der Suche nach der Wirklichkeit: Gesammelte Aufsätze zur Soziologie der Bundesrepublik [In Search of Reality: Collected Essays on the Sociology of the Federal Republic of Germany], Munich, 1979, 449-486) is reviewed. The birth of modern pedagogy after the Enlightenment is described, with its emphasis on educating people to be autonomous rational agents rather than subjects of the traditional order. Distinctions between traditional & bourgeois pedagogy, as developed from Jean-Jacques Rousseau to J. F. Herbart, & the inherent contradictions of the latter, are described. The basis of modern pedagogy is compared & contrasted with the concepts of postmodernism of Michel Foucault, J. F. Lyotard, & J. Baudrillard. Several theses on the end of pedagogy are described & their debt to an affirmation of the dialectic of the Enlightenment is examined. 32 References. Modified HA.

88T2281

Birenbaum, Arnold, Bologh, Roslyn & Lesieur, Henry (Dept. Sociology & Anthropology Saint John's U., Jamaica NY 11439). Reforms in Pharmacy Education and Opportunity to Practice Clinical Pharmacy. Sociology of Health and Illness, 1987, 9, 3, Sept., 286-301.

† Questionnaire data from newly licensed New York City pharmacists ($N = 157$) are analyzed to determine perceptions & expectations about work, differences in consulting practices, relationships between practice & attitudes, & the presence or absence of an identifiable general value orientation. Results indicated that hospital practice was more likely to be associated with clinical pharmacy, & clinical pharmacy practice was more likely to meet the expectations of recently graduated pharmacists. 18 References. Modified HA.

88T2282

Brede, Richard M. & Camp, Henry J. (Dept. Sociology Kansas State U., Manhattan 66506). The Education of College Student-Athletes. Sociology of Sport Journal, 1987, 4, 3, Sept., 245-257.

† Educational performances of various types of M student-athletes ($N = 167$) participating in football & basketball at an NCAA Division I school are compared for each enrollment period during the 1982/83 academic year. These comparisons indicate three basic patterns of educational performance, patterns that involve the differential use among these student-athlete types of extra semesters as well as letter grade & credit hour changes in order to meet eligibility requirements. Meeting eligibility requirements is a year-round struggle for 25% of the student-athletes studied. Suggestions are made for additional research on student-athlete education. 2 Tables, 28 References. HA.

88T2283

Brožová, Dagmar (Inst. Philosophy & Sociology Czechoslovak Academy Sciences, Narodní Tr. 3 111 42 Prague 1). Ke kritice konceptu "učení se společnosti" (Critical Remarks on the Conception of the "Learning Society"). Sociologický časopis, 1987, 23, 4, 346-357. (CZE)

† A critical examination of the concept of the "learning society" (Hutchins, R., The Learning Society, London: Pall Mall Press, 1968; Husen, T., The Learning Society, London: Methuen, 1974). This is among the theories of postindustrial society that are now being advanced in bourgeois societies, it offers theoretical solutions to the problems of advanced capitalism by means of education. In reality this solution leads to a hypertrophy of education based on principles of abstract idealism, since it lacks a real basis in revolutionary transformation of the forces & relations of production. Only an advanced socialist or communist society can make education fully human. 19 References. Modified HA.

88T2284

Bunzel, John H. & Au, Jeffrey K. D. (Hoover Inst. Stanford U., CA 94305). Diversity or Discrimination? Asian Americans in College. The Public Interest, 1987, 87, spring, 49-62.

† An examination of undergraduate admissions procedures at four elite U.S. universities: Princeton (NJ), Harvard (Cambridge, Mass.), Stanford (Calif.), & Brown (Providence, RI). The key statistic used is the Asian-American admission rate, i.e., the number of Asian Americans offered admission divided by the number that actually applies. Caucasian admissions data provide a useful comparative basis. Official data suggest that Asian Americans are not academically less qualified than Caucasian applicants. In considering nonacademic qualifications (e.g., participation rates in sports & extracurricular activities, character & personality traits), there is no evidence that Asian Americans have lower ratings than Caucasians, yet Asian Americans have consistently had low Coll admission rates. It is concluded that Asian-American admission rates are determined more by the policies, preferences, & practices of Coll admissions officers than by the qualifications of Asian-American applicants. Modified AA.

88T2285

Chadwick, Bruce A., Albrecht, Stan L. & Bahr, Howard M. (Dept. Sociology Brigham Young U., Provo UT 84602). Evaluation of an Indian Student Placement Program. U. Social Casework, 1986, 67, Nov., 515-524.

† The educational, economic, social, & psychological consequences of the Indian Student Placement Program (ISPP) sponsored by the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints in the southwestern US are reported. The short- & long-range effects of the program on former participants, their natural family, & their white foster family are addressed based on 1982 interview data from 249 participants who had entered the program between 1955 & 1982, their natural parents, & a control group of nonparticipants; questionnaire survey data were also obtained from foster parents & foster siblings. Analysis shows that ISPP clearly enhanced the educational achievement of participants, but this advantage has not translated into economic success. The program had little impact on social adjustment & the severe psychological trauma alleged by some observers was absent. It appears that ISPP participation has fostered assimilation into white society but has not contributed to the participants' disinterest in their Indian heritage. 10 Tables. Modified AA.

88T2286

Chaykovskaya, Olga Georgievna. Vospitanie "novoy porody" lyudei (ob odnom sotsial'nom eksperimente XVIII veka) (The Upbringing of a "New Sort" of Human Being [About a Social Experiment of the Eighteenth Century]). Sotsiologicheskie Issledovaniya, 1987, 14, Mar-Apr., 121-134. (RUS)

† The eighteenth century is often called the Age of Reason, a time when moderation & toleration were important social values. Unfortunately, in most cases these values did not apply to elementary education, where children were often intimidated into learning & were often physically & emotionally abused. The Russian pedagogue Ivan Ivanovich Betskii, under the patronage of the empress Catharine II, took the lead in promoting a more positive emotional atmosphere for children's education, considering individual talents, abilities, & interests. Special attention is given to Betskii's efforts to promote the education of women, particularly his founding of the Smolny Inst., which admitted not only young noble women but also a limited number of talented women from the Lcs. 8 References. G. Prosiakov.

88T2287

Coffield, K. E. & Buckalew, L. W. (Dept. Psychology School Arts & Humanities/Social Sciences U. Alabama, Huntsville 35899). University Student Apathy: Sex, Race, and Academic Class Variables. The Psychological Record, 1985, 35, 4, fall, 459-463.

† The apathy of black U. students ($N = 200$) is examined, using J. C. Crumbaugh & L. T. Maholick's Purpose-in-Life Test ("An Experimental Study in Existentialism: The Psychometric Approach to Frankl's Concept of Noogenic Neurosis," Journal of Clinical Psychology, 1964, 20, 200-207). Comparison of data with those of a heterogeneous U. sam-

May, 48-62

¶ A major aspect of the Third World's higher education scene in the post-1945 period has been the expansion of the number & size of US. Often approaching a tenfold growth, this development has been marked by a remarkable worldwide similarity of curriculum & structures of governance. A factor in the growth & character of these institutions has been the Fulbright program—an international educational exchange program in concert with the role of the US as the educator of choice for Third World academic personnel. The contributions of the Fulbright program have been both direct & programmatic, & indirect & incidental, to the process of academic exchange. 4 Tables, 6 Figures. HA

88T2306

James, William A., A Promising Future: The Fulbright Program with the USSR. ♦ The Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science, 1987, 491, May, 118-125

¶ A brief overview of the Fulbright international educational exchange program with the USSR is presented by looking at the context in which this exchange of lecturers developed, its purpose, its achievements, some of the current critical issues facing it, & possible directions for future progress. Since its establishment during the 1973/74 academic year, this exchange has grown in size, range of academic disciplines, & geographic dispersion in the USSR. From the outset, this exchange has been a beneficiary of good US-USSR relations. Its current vigorous condition & future development are also dependent on these relations. HA

88T2307

Jarvis, Peter (Dept Educational Studies U Surrey, GU2 5XH England), Notions of Development and Their Implication for Adult Education, International Review of Education/Internationale Zeitschrift für Erziehungswissenschaft/Revue Internationale de pédagogie, 1986, 32, 1, 85-95

¶ The concepts of development & adult education are clarified & the relations between development & four ideological perspectives in education conservative, liberal, reformative, & radical are explored. Whereas the first two of these approaches are initiated from the higher echelons of the power structure, the other two models of development are postulated. It is shown that there is a r between ideological approaches to education & notions of development, & that neither can be politically neutral or value-free. 17 References. Modified HA

88T2308

Jobes, Patrick C. (Dept Sociology Coll Letters & Science Montana State U, Bozeman 59717), The Reconstruction of Social Reality: Curriculum Counseling and Satisfaction in a Sample of College Educated Women, ♦ Free Inquiry in Creative Sociology, 1987, 15, 2, Nov, 207-211

¶ An exploration of several reasons for the relationship between client satisfaction & Coll curriculum counseling received decades earlier. Whether counseling has been received, whether the counseled fields were innovative or conventional, & how the clients interpret their former counseling are explored via 1980 mailed questionnaire responses from 402 Fs who attended a US public agricultural & engineering Coll between 1946 & 1965. Satisfaction is measured for important role-related activities, including being a parent, marriage, employment, & sexuality. Results indicate that traditional women generally report higher satisfaction, also, women who were counseled report lower satisfaction than those who were not. The tentative conclusion is that negative retrospect evaluation of counseling may occur because of relatively low satisfaction. 3 Tables, 21 References. Modified AA

88T2309

Khoopa, Bennie A. (Case Western Reserve U, Cleveland OH 44106), Brain-Drain and Study Abroad: Factors Influencing Emigration Plans of Third World Students in the United States, ♦ Dissertation Abstracts International, A The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 1, July, 221-A.

Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8710079.

88T2310

King, Ronald (School Education U Exeter, Devon EX1 2LU England), Sex and Social Class Inequalities in Education: A Re-Examination, British Journal of Sociology of Education, 1987, 8, 3, Sept, 287-303.

¶ A reexamination after 15 years of the issues raised in one of the first studies of the relationship between sex & SC differences in education

(King, R. A., "Unequal Access in Education Sex and Social Class," Social & Economic Administration, 1971, 5, 3). The original theoretical propositions concerning these differences are expanded in a neo-Weberian analysis of the work/marriage-class/status-education complex. The available empirical data on this subject are reviewed. The alternative feminist-Marxist approaches are found to be incompatible with the evidence of sex & SC differences in noncapitalist societies. 2 Tables, 1 Figure, 121 References. Modified HA

88T2311

Kisdarjono (U Wisconsin, Madison 53706), An Institutionalization of Higher Learning in Indonesia, ♦ Dissertation Abstracts International, A The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 1, July, 230-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8703838.

88T2312

Kostakis, Anastasia (Center Planning & Economic Research Office 211, Hippokratous 22 GR 10680 Athens Greece), Differences among School Outputs and Educational Production Functions, ♦ Sociology of Education, 1987, 60, 4, Oct, 232-241

¶ A study of the differences between student achievement in two academic subjects & the consequences of this differentiation for educational production functions is presented. In examining the achievement of 1,712 Greek ninth-grade students in physics & literature on the 1981 National Entrance Examinations to the General Lyceum in conjunction with survey data from these students & data on 350 teachers, it was found that the influence of their backgrounds & of the inputs of the schools differed systematically as the achievement context changed, & that it conformed to hypotheses on salient epistemic & exogenous differences between academic subjects. Particular features of Greek society & of the Greek educational system that are pertinent to the observed results are included. 3 Tables, 1 Figure, 64 References. Modified HA

88T2313

Kozma, Tamás, Az iskolarendszer fejlesztési stratégiája (Development Strategy for the Education System), Szociológia, 1982, 1, 95-108. (HUN)

¶ Abstract not currently available

88T2314

Lambert, Richard D. (c/o The Annals Sage Publications Inc, 211 W Hillcrest Dr Newbury Park CA 91320), Durable Academic Linkages Overseas: A National Agenda, ♦ The Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science, 1987, 491, May, 140-153

¶ As a nation the US spends about $1 billion annually on a bewildering potpourri of international exchange & training programs. Some attention to the cross-sectional profile of exchanges resulting from the many individual programs is needed. The current mix of programs is unbalanced as to sponsor, clientele, countries covered, & purpose. Four functions of exchange & training programs are identified: (1) the export of US technology & skills, (2) familiarization with another society; (3) transnational sharing of science & technology, & (4) research about other countries. It is argued that the overwhelming emphasis on the first two purposes must be balanced by greater emphasis on the latter two. In particular, in the social sciences & the humanities, the provision of opportunities to build an interacting network of scholars similar to those in the natural sciences is called for. There is also a need for an increase in the opportunities for international affairs specialists to conduct their research abroad. HA

88T2315

Lavin, Bebe, Haug, Marie, Belgrave, Linda Liska & Breslau, Naomi (Dept Sociology & Anthropology Kent State U, OH 44242), Change in Student Physicians' Views on Authority Relationships with Patients, ♦ Journal of Health and Social Behavior, 1987, 28, 3, Sept, 258-272

¶ Evidence that the public is currently challenging the authority of MDs in both attitudes & behavior raises the question of whether medical schools are socializing students through medical education to deal with the new consumerist patients. Questionnaire & interview data collected 1978-1983 from the class of 1982 in 2 midwestern US medical schools, one focusing on community practice & the other more committed to specialization, reveals that during their training students tend to become more egalitarian in their attitudes toward relationships with patients. This shift occurs between school entry & the end of the 2 preclinical years, at graduation, & again after the first year of internship/residency. The type of medical school partly explains the attitude changes, certain structural & attitudinal variables also have an effect. 5 Tables, 1 Appendix, 45 References. HA industry) & the U, intricately linked together in their respective research efforts by research personnel & faculty exchanges to each other's organization. One of the novel features of the model is the development of what is called the Fletcher rule (or hypothesis), i.e., a top-rate U (or firm by implication) will always have 10% of its research faculty (personnel) away (at various sites) on leave from the campus (firm). This rule is related to knowledge transfer & personnel & faculty exchanges & turnovers. The model also differentiates between produced knowledge & transferred knowledge & describes their values & increment/decline rates. The Fletcher rule is illustrated via an empirical pilot study conducted during 1984/85 at the U. of Utah, in which chairpersons from 14 science & engineering departments completed questionnaires on faculty leaves & campus personnel visits. Policy implications for management, state legislators, higher education, & technological change are discussed. 2 Tables. 7 References. Modified HA

88T2297

Giannini, Mirella & Sforza, Gabriella (Dept Sociology U Bari, 70121 Italy), La formazione professionale: esigenze e occasioni di intervento (Vocational Training Needs and Opportunities for Action), Studi di Sociologia 1986, 24, 2, Apr-June, 239-248. (ITA)

¶ It is argued that inadequacies of the public service system in Italy contribute to the gap between offer & demand for vocational training, especially in industrial systems undergoing rapid technological change. Numerous studies suggest that legislation concerning training policies & union experience requires interventions typical of a postindustrial state, which would balance offer & demand for vocational training & guarantee areas of control by workers & their union representatives. However, the implementation of such interventions is blocked by the bureaucratic logic that pervades all public institutions. 1 Figure. Modified HA

88T2298

Gill, David G. (Heller Graduate School Brandeis U, Waltham MA 02254), Social Sciences, Human Survival, Development and Liberation, ♦ Humanity and Society, 1987, 11, 2, May, 175-188.

¶ In a keynote address at the 1986 Inaugural Conference of the Center for Advanced Studies in Humanist Social Sciences in Waterloo, Ontario, principles & an agenda for social sciences are identified. The underlying premise of these principles & agenda is that the practice of social sciences is not only influenced by values, but also involves political dimensions. To support this premise the meanings of the concepts "politics" & "science" are derived from universal aspects of the human condition, the political nature of values & morals are explored & major stages of the political orientation of science are traced. The suggested principles & agenda address values, goals, substance, methods, teaching, & dissemination of humanistically oriented social sciences. AA

88T2299

Grunfeld, Franz (Lilburg U, NL-5000 LE Netherlands), The Changing Role of Universities in a Highly Developed Society: The Case of the Netherlands, ♦ The Policy Studies Journal, 1986, 14, 3, Mar, 437-444.

¶ The development of modernization in the Netherlands & at Dutch U's is described. Ongoing specialization, increase of scale & the replacement of more or less closed communities by open networks are characteristics of modernization. Centripetal effects of this process imply the danger of social disintegration. In trying to respond to this danger, the U's are hampered by these same influences. As a result of modernization, & the ensuing societal problems, there has been an explosive increase in budgets for research & in numbers of students, especially within the faculties of social sciences. Some recommendations are formulated to improve the conditions necessary for a continuation of the innovating & integrating functioning of U's in a postindustrial society. 1 Table, 6 References. AA

88T2300

Hallinan, Maureen T. & Williams, Richard A. (Dept Sociology U Notre Dame, IN 46556), The Stability of Students' Interracial Friendships, ♦ American Sociological Review, 1987, 52, 5, Oct, 653-664.

¶ An investigation of determinants of the stability of schoolchildren's interracial & same-race friendships. It is hypothesized that classroom organizational features & student characteristics affect the cohesiveness of social ties, with consequences for friendship stability. Data were obtained from school records & a sociometric questionnaire administered at 6 6-week intervals throughout the 1976/77 school year to 375 students in grades 4-7 in 16 desegregated classrooms in 10 northern Calif public & private schools. Descriptive & inferential analyses show that interracial friendships are almost as stable as same-race ones, while this stability is influenced by classroom characteristics, it is more strongly influenced by ascribed & achieved characteristics of students. Suggestions are offered to schools in adopting policies & practices that promote stable friendships between black & white students. 5 Tables, 23 References. Modified HA

88T2301

Hare, Bruce R. (Dept Sociology State U New York, Stony Brook 11790), Structural Inequality and the Endangered Status of Black Youth, The Journal of Negro Education, 1987, 56, 1, winter, 100-110.

¶ An analysis of the structural conditions that lead to & perpetuate the disproportionate underattainment of black youth. The impact of political & psychosociological factors on black youths is also described. The role of ideology in the justification of inequality, & the power of racism are discussed. An alternative view of the relationship between the occupational structure & the educational system is suggested. 1 Figure. F. Rasmussen

88T2302

Hare, William (Dalhousie U, Halifax Nova Scotia B3H 3J5), Reflections on Some Contemporary Educational Slogans, International Review of Education/Internationale Zeitschrift für Erziehungswissenschaft/Revue Internationale de pédagogie 1986, 32, 1, 71-83.

¶ Five fashionable ideas in educational theory are examined & found to be rhetorical slogans that offer simplistic solutions & serve to curtail serious criticism. (1) The back to basics movement trades on a preference to what is essential & useful, obscuring the fact that there is serious dispute about what is essential in education. (2) Discovery learning is favored by progressive educators, who ignore the fact that discoveries can grow out of teaching situations. (3) The notion of values clarification attracts who reject authoritarianism in moral education, but it is also necessary to ask how far moral views are defensible. (4) The idea of the hidden curriculum is used to denounce subtle indoctrination, but it is too readily assumed that a hidden curriculum is both inevitable & undesirable. (5) The idea of behavioral objectives appears to offer security, but many educational outcomes cannot be specified with the precision demanded. 4 References. Modified HA

88T2303

Heyvaert, P. (Centrum Sociologie Vrije U, Brussels, B-105 Belgium), Differentiële socialisatie-effecten tussen het openbaar en vrij onderwijs (Differential Socialization Effects between Public and Private Education), Tijdschrift voor Sociologie 1987, 8, 1, 27-50. (DUT)

¶ Belgium has two parallel school systems as a result of the church's attempt to give young people a Christian-based education. Investigated here, using data from 1,321 Flemish 15 aged 23-49, is whether an individual's choice of school system is linked with his or her norms & values. Results demonstrate that the difference in socialization models & social control models is not so much related to values & attitudes as to social controls & peer group reinforcement, confirming the hypothesis that education in Belgium is primarily a sociostructural rather than a cultural/philosophical system. 9 Tables, 1 Appendix, 48 References. Modified HA

88T2304

Howley, Craig (Appalachian Educational Laboratory, Atlas Building Charleston WV 25235), Anti-Intellectualism in Programs for Able Students (Beware of Gifts: An Application, Social Epistemology), 1987, 1, 2, Apr-June, 175-181.

¶ Anti-intellectual trends in special programs for gifted students are discussed proceeding from the notion that school programs should nurture the qualities of literacy & reason as the substance of scholastic aptitude. This notion is related to several methods promoted by progressive education. Their application is described as typical methods of programs for gifted students for directing intellect to safe ends in the political economy. 26 References. Modified AA

88T2305

Ilchman, Warren F. & Ilchman, Alice Stone (Rockefeller College of Public Affairs & Policy State U New York, Albany 12203), Academic Exchange and the Founding of New Universities, ♦ The Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science, 1987, 497,

88T2324

Ostrom, James (Dept Behavioral Sciences Bentley Coll, Waltham MA 02254). Habit and Inhabitation: An Analysis of Experience in the Classroom. Human Studies, 1987, 10, 2, 213-224

* An exploration of the prereflective intensity of classroom life from the pupil's perspective. It is argued that the Schutzian formulation of "taken-for-granted" (or typified) knowledge provides insufficient grounds for explicating the nonreflective, habitual qualities of consciousness. By contrast, the writings of John Dewey & Maurice Merleau-Ponty provide a firm basis for such an explication. The theory of habit that is developed along similar lines in both of their writings is applied to an analysis of a portion of a math lesson, as described by Jules Henry in Culture against Man (New York: Vintage Books, 1963). Experiential grounds for a pupil's being disposed to the particular practices that comprise being a pupil are revealed—including those practices that teachers might view as learning activities. 14 References. Modified AA

88T2325

Pallas, Aaron M., Entwisle, Doris R., Alexander, Karl L. & Cadigan, Doris (c/o Entwisle-Dept Sociology Johns Hopkins U, Baltimore MD 21218). Children Who Do Exceptionally Well in First Grade. J Sociology of Education, 1987, 60, 4, Oct, 257-271

* A modified school process model is used to examine factors that contribute to unexpectedly large gains in verbal competence (outlier status) among a representative sample of 825 Ur first graders in Baltimore, Md, based on interviews with students & parents, questionnaire data gathered from teachers, & California Achievement Test scores, all from the 1981/82 school year. Logistic regression analyses indicated that exceptionally high growth over the first grade is associated prominently with the characteristics of teachers (especially their job conditions) & two characteristics of students (personality/maturity & academic self-image). For policy purposes, these findings are encouraging because it is more feasible to make changes in classrooms & in the climate of a school than in a family's educational status or parents' attitudes. 2 Tables, 54 References. Modified HA

88T2326

Pediček, Franc. Naša pedagogika v okviru paradigmatškega loma današnje znanosti (Pedagogy in the Framework of a Paradigmatic Break in Current Science). ♦ Anthropos, Časopis za sodelovanje humanističnih in naravoslovnih ved, za psihologijo in filozofijo, 1986, 5-6, 244-265 (SLO)

* Much recent criticism of pedagogical theory rests on the discipline's resistance to developing self-criticism. Lately, however, fundamental changes in all sciences, also influencing labor & social processes, are developing based on new scientific paradigms. A shift from theoretical pedagogy to holistic pedagogy is foreseen when the following tendencies become adequately analyzed in educational theory: empiricism, mechanism, technicism, & pragmatism. Modified HA

88T2327

Popov, Vasilii Dmitrievich. Obshchestvo i shkola: nazrevshie problemy i puti ikh resheniya (Society and School: Old Questions and Ways to Solve Them). Voprosy filosofii, 1987, 41, 5, May, 83-91 (RUS)

* In order for socialist society to advance, it is necessary that each generation attain a higher educational & cultural level. A historical review of USSR secondary school educational reforms reveals a series of experiments that have gone full circle. Under N. S. Khrushchev there was a movement away from traditional classical curricula, with a heavy theoretical emphasis, toward practical instruction, integrating education with work experience. A return to the traditional format followed in 1964. Current economic restructuring programs envision a partial return to Khrushchev's model. Further study of USSR educational history could alleviate this circular curriculum development. The role of the family as a primary educational unit needs to be reinforced. G. Prostakov

88T2328

Powers, Brian. Schooling in America Reconsidered. ♦ Socialist Review, 1986, 16, 6(90), Nov-Dec, 117-131.

* A review essay on Ira Katznelson's & Margaret Weir's Schooling for All: Class, Race, and the Decline of the Democratic Ideal (New York: Basic Books, 1986); Stanley Aronowitz's & Henry A. Giroux's Education under Siege: The Conservative, Liberal, and Radical Debate over Schooling (South Hadley, Mass: Bergin & Garvey, 1985); & J. Anthony Lukas's Common Ground: A Turbulent Decade in the Lives of Three American Families (New York: Alfred A. Knopf, 1985) (see listings in IRPS No. 41)) The collective strength of these works is the breadth of their insight into the causes of educational phenomena usually taken for granted or not addressed. Lukas's epic study of desegregation in Boston is decidedly nonscholarly, but it is serious & learned, & the product of much intellectual labor. An admirable work, it blocks every impulse to substitute a moral or political evaluation of events for an awareness of the inevitable ambiguities in actual educational politics. Katznelson's & Weir's work analyzes the place of history & conflicting SC interests in understanding the characteristics of public school systems. They argue for the need to go more deeply into the political processes that lie behind public school system development, & they provide detailed case studies of Chicago, Ill, & San Francisco, Calif. Aronowitz's & Giroux's encyclopedic work on schooling is seen as both too theoretical & too ambitious to succeed. F. Rasmussen

88T2329

Radwan, Ann B., Research and Teaching in the Middle East. ♦ The Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science, 1987, 491, May, 126-133

* Educational institutions & scholars in the Middle East & South Asia continue to produce world-class research despite the burdens imposed by the great number of students, inadequate libraries, & limited supportive institutional infrastructure. The challenges facing the foreign scholar are not dissimilar to those of the host-country academic with the exception of the entry formalities, including both the general permission to enter a country & specific permissions for access to particular libraries or sites. The long-term relationship between the guest & the host-country scholar needs to be enhanced by the development of long-term US-overseas institutional relationships & of mechanisms that promote a sustained exchange of scholarship. The professional quality & commitment of the guest researcher or lecturer will be the determining factor of the success of an individual experience & of the idea of mutual understanding through educational exchange. HA

88T2330

Reinhardt, Sibylle (Am Eckbusch 55a, D-5600 Wuppertal 1 Federal Republic Germany). Was heisst "Anwendung" von Sozialwissenschaften in der schulischen Praxis? (On the Application of Social Science to Teaching). Zeitschrift für Pädagogik, 1987, 33, 2, Apr, 207-222 (GER)

* The usefulness of applying social sciences to the understanding of interactions in the classroom is assessed. The work of L. Kohlberg on levels of moral-cognitive development (Zur kognitiven Entwicklung des Kindes [On the Cognitive Development of the Child], Frankfurt, 1974) is applied to a classroom discussion. The analysis not only furthers an overall understanding of the interaction, but also makes possible an inter-subjective discussion of the implications & aspects of the interactions, such as the manner in which they are produced, their implications for the development of the students, the kind of everyday knowledge they incorporate, & the social factors that might have influenced the discussion. This procedure of application is characterized as neither empirical nor one of objective hermeneutics, but rather as one of practical hermeneutics. 32 References. Modified HA

88T2331

Rothstein, Stanley William (California State U, Fullerton 92634). The Sociology of Schooling: Selection, Socialization, and Control in Urban Education. ♦ Urban Education, 1986, 21, 3, Oct, 295-315

* The sociology of schooling (SoS) describes the teacher-pupil relationship & relates conflict to the demands that teachers place on youth. These demands are caused by the selection processes that are central to schooling in industrial society, as well as by the need to control students in mass institutions. The SoS also focuses on the effects the schoolteacher's work has on his or her personality & relationships with others in the school. Schooling is placed in its historical perspective, & an attempt is made to answer questions about the effects of industrialism, urbanism, & bureaucracy on current practices relating to curriculum, pedagogy, & evaluation methods. The notions of Emile Durkheim & W. Waller are used to explain the social structures that are affecting schooling today. 20 References. Modified AA

88T2332

Russell, Tommy & Bryant, Cynthia Ann (U Alabama, University 35486). The Effects of a Lecture Training Program and Independent Study on the Knowledge and Attitudes of Law Students toward the Mentally Retarded Offender. Journal of Offender Counseling, Ser-

88T2316

Levine, Edward M. (828 Oakton St. IC, Evanston IL 60202), Grade Inflation in Higher Education: Its Causes and Consequences. ♦ Free Inquiry in Creative Sociology 1987, 15, 2, Nov., 113-121

¶ Grade inflation in Coll & U. began in the late 1960s, reaching alarming proportions in the mid 1970s, & tapering off only slightly since then. The causes of grade inflation, which is also widespread in secondary schools, are outlined & responsibility for it is placed on faculties & administrators. The educational process has been corrupted & many students graduate with undeserved good & high grades, possessing less knowledge & skills than their grades indicate. Thus, by undermining higher education, grade inflation imposes great costs on society itself. There are presently no signs that faculty members will act to end it. 11 References. Modified AA

88T2317

Lincoln, Eugene A. (School Education U Pittsburgh, PA 15260), Searches and Seizures: The U.S. Supreme Court's Decision on the Fourth Amendment. ♦ Urban Education 1986, 21, 3, Oct., 254-262

¶ As a result of the 1985 US Supreme Court decision in the case of New Jersey v. T.L.O. (the initials of a 14 year old expelled from school after a search of her purse by the principal revealed marijuana paraphernalia), students were provided additional constitutional rights against unreasonable searches & seizures. It was ruled that teachers or other school officials, acting alone or on their own authority, could conduct a student search or seizure based only on "reasonableness," not the "probable cause" generally required to obtain a warrant for such activity under the Fourth Amendment. Suggestions are provided to assist teachers & other school officials in determining "reasonableness" & conducting subsequent searches & seizures. 5 References. K. Hyatt

88T2318

Ma, Li-Chen, Ma, Sue Ann & White, Kathryn (Lamar U Beaumont TX 77710), Sex Differences in the Perception of Women's Attributes for Management Positions: A Cross-Cultural Comparison between American and Chinese Business College Students. Kuo Li Tai-wan Ta Hsueh She Hui Hsueh Kuo/National Taiwan University Journal of Sociology 1986, 18, Nov., 191-205

¶ Questionnaire data from 138 US & 173 Taiwanese business students are used to investigate whether the individual's sex determines his or her perception of women's ability to meet the demands of management positions. Stereotypic attitudes toward women are measured in three domains: general skills, physical factors, & traits of managers, using the Women as Managers Scale. F students in both cultures perceive women more favorably than M students do. Results also show that mother's rather than father's high educational or occupational status improves students' perceptions of women's fitness for managerial jobs. The interaction between sex & view of the women's rights movement is also examined. 6 Tables, 1 Appendix, 18 References. Modified HA

88T2319

Magnuson-Martinson, Scott (U Minnesota, Minneapolis 55455), Flagships and Flackcatchers Revisited: Another Look at Student Performance in Introductory Sociology across Two Educational Institutions. ♦ Free Inquiry in Creative Sociology 1987, 15, 2, Nov., 123-128

¶ Examinations of the quality of community Colls in the US often conclude that they are less substantial than other institutions of higher education. These assertions are usually based on resources & prestige of the institution, as well as on training & scholarly output of the faculty, however, such measures do not reflect the educational outcomes for the students, & do not employ systematically controlled comparisons of student abilities & achievements. Here, standard quasi-experimental, quantitative measures administered to students from introductory sociology classes at both a major U & a nearby community Coll (s not given) are used to replicate an earlier comparison of performance (Magnuson-Martinson, S., & Reynolds Ruemski, M., Flagships and Flackcatchers: Perspective and Performance in Introductory Sociology at Two Educational Institutions, paper presented at the 1983 general annual meeting of the Midwest Sociological Society, Kansas City, Mo). Results indicate that the performance of students in these vastly different educational settings does not differ significantly at this point in their matriculation. These findings suggest that if educational differences are ultimately manifested, they may result from social perceptions & related socialization based on beliefs about the quality & role of education in community colls. 1 Table, 28 References. Modified AA

88T2320

Meijnen, Gus Wim (Dept Education U Amsterdam, NL-1015 DT Netherlands), From Six to Tweve. Different School Careers in Primary Education. Zeitschrift fur Sozialisationsforschung und Erziehungssoziologie 1987, 7, 3, July, 209-225

¶ The respective influences of different schools & variations in family socialization on SC-specific differences in intellectual achievement are investigated in a longitudinal study of children aged 6, 9, & 12 in the Netherlands. Data were gathered from 24 schools in 1 town via testing of students, interviews with mothers, questionnaires filled out by fathers, & interviews with teachers (N = 728 children). Parents were analyzed according to role structure, cultural-pedagogical level, expectations about school career, & educational values. Schools were classified as curriculum centered, social-progressive, culture-integrating, & pupil centered. Among the conclusions drawn are (1) the greatest variance at age 6 is related to SC, (2) institutional measures cause the educational gap to exceed SC-specific differences in intelligence, (3) while family socialization is important to the development of intelligence, school socialization influences variations in learning achievements, & (4) differences between schools affect achievement in subjects requiring direct instruction more than subjects learned not only in school. 5 Tables, 35 References. Modified HA

88T2321

Nelkin, Dorothy & Hilgartner, Stephen (Program Science Technology/Society Cornell U, Ithaca NY 14853-2501), Disputed Dimensions of Risk: A Public School Controversy over AIDS. The Milbank Quarterly 1986, 64(supplement 1), 118-142

¶ Analysis of 1985 court hearing records in a case to prevent a New York City child with acquired immune deficiency syndrome (AIDS) from attending school reveals how perceptions of risk are shaped by a range of cultural, political, & institutional factors. The many actors in this ritualized verbal combat sought to control interpretations of evidence, scientific credibility, legitimacy of decision-making procedures, & the balance of rights & responsibilities. Technocratic authority may be less important than symbolic & political issues in determining acceptability of risk. 1 Appendix, 18 References. HA

88T2322

Nespor, Jan (U Texas, Austin 78712), Trouble at School: A Case Study of the Economy of Blame. ♦ Urban Education 1986, 21, 3, Oct., 211-227

¶ Decision making & conflict resolution in school organizations were investigated in a 2-year ethnographic study of how teachers & administrators at a recently desegregated Ur middle school in the northeastern US responded to increased student disruption & perceptions of decreased educational quality. Observations of daily school routines, including 35x class sessions conducted by 23 different teachers, formal interviews with 71 students & 9 teachers, & informal conversations with other school staff, revealed that in problem situations, where escape & reform (exit & voice) were blocked, the least costly response was to adopt a blame strategy to absolve oneself of fault. Five such strategies are identified & illustrated with case studies. It is argued that they are ineffective in alleviating the problems that inspired them, & may even exacerbate underlying conflict through providing an illusion of positive action. 2 References. K. Hyatt

88T2323

Nieminen, Seija (Albertink 31 B 45, 00180 Helsinki Finland), Peruskoulun opettajien kuvauksia vuosikymmenien 1960 ja 1970 yhteiskunnallisten muutosten vaikutuksista koulutamaan (Teachers' View of the Impact of Social Changes in the 1960s and 1970s on School Work). ♦ Kasvatus 1985, 16, 2, 77-81. (FIN)

¶ Interview data from Finnish teachers reveals their perceptions of changes in their SS & role & in students' behavior since the 1960s. Though children's linguistic & intellectual readiness have increased, they have more problems with concentration & impulsive control, & class rooms are beset by more noise & problem behavior. Teachers perceive themselves to be less authoritarian (& less appreciated) & more concerned with human relations than the mere distribution of knowledge. School reforms have caused courses to become more extensive & theoretical. 8 References. Modified HA

8812341

Walker, James C. & Evers, Colin W. (U Sydney, New South Wales 2006 Australia). Theory, Politics, and Experiment in Educational Research Methodology. International Review of Education/Internationale Zeitschrift für Erziehungswissenschaft/Revue Internationale de pédagogie 1986, 32, 4, 373-387
 Comments, 388-397.

* In laboratory experiments & other research situations, the testing of any one hypothesis entails the simultaneous testing of a whole network of auxiliary hypotheses, including those about the stability of statistical structure, the viability of methods, & the social relations between researcher & S. In the absence of a rigorously theorized framework, traditional experimental designs entail professional domination of knowledge & epistemically privileged researchers, as a consequence, their use is open to serious epistemological & political questioning. An alternative account of experiment & scientificity is proposed that recognizes the need to incorporate an understanding of Ss' epistemologies into research programs, a need that requires greater power for Ss in the development of research, & thus undermines professional domination & epistemic privilege. The account also implies that laboratory experimental inquiry will lapse in rigor unless it is designed & conducted within an explicitly & precisely theorized naturalistic context. Whereas other accounts make scientificity contingent on professional control & epistemic privilege, it is suggested that scientificity in social & educational research is contingent on a deprofessionalized set of social & epistemic relations. In Theory, Politics and Experiment in Educational Research Methodology: A Response, John P. Keeves (U of Melbourne, Victoria, Australia) criticizes Walker & Evers for basing their argument on too narrow a view of educational research, neglecting its empiricist characteristics & the complexity of educational problems. In Something Old, Something New: A Reply to Walker & Evers, & Dennis C. Phillips (Stanford U, Calif) concurs with their discussions of the theory-ladenness of observation, but finds fault in their pessimism regarding the evaluation of auxiliary hypotheses. Their position regarding scientific reliability, epistemic control, & experimenter-S relations in social science research is judged to be unfounded on the basis of the arguments they provide. Modified HA.

8812342

Welch, Finis (Dept Economics U California, Los Angeles 90024). A Reconsideration of the Impact of School Desegregation Programs on Public School Enrollment of White Students, 1968-76. U Sociology of Education 1987, 60, 4, Oct, 215-221
 Reply, 222-223.

* In his recent article, Franklin D. Wilson attempts to assess the magnitude of decreases in white enrollment following school desegregation, the permanence of these changes, & the sensitivity of the losses to the specific features of desegregation plans (see SA 35 1/86Q3879). Major comparable studies are briefly reviewed & problems in Wilson's treatment of the data are outlined. Contrary to Wilson, the evidence suggests that enrollment responds to the implementation of desegregation plans, & not the specific features of plans affect the response. In A Reply to Finis Welch Wilson (U of Wisconsin, Madison) sees Welch's reanalysis of his data as an important extension of the original work that addresses new factors. However, some problems are evident in his methodology. The current availability of large databases permits a more careful empirical testing of the hypotheses than was previously possible, further research on this question is needed. 2 Tables, 7 References. W. H. Stoddard.

8812343

Wenger, Morton G. (U Louisville, KY 40292). The Restructuring of Higher Education in Contemporary America: Dimensions and Consequences. Humanity and Society 1987, 11, 2, May, 137-151.

* The relationship between formal education & ideology is most often treated as a substantive one, where education is seen as a mechanism by which ideological content is transmitted. An alternative, suggested by French structuralist Marxist conceptions, is to understand education as ideology itself & as legitimating phenomena independent of the content of the structure of educational milieu. In the case of the US, for over a century this process has evolved into a major means by which the conflict between SCs has been transformed into a conflict for credentials within the Wes. This is in opposition to the earlier US experience, as well as the continuing situation in most of the rest of the world, wherein higher education functions as the training ground for political & technical elites. However, in recent decades, changes in the world political economy & the relative position of the US therein, have led to a restratification of higher educational opportunities in the US, with an apparently substantial decline in the objective utility as a mobility mechanism for individual members of the Wes. The possible political significance of this development is discussed. 10 References. AA.

8812344

Whitaker, Dulce C. A. (Dept Sociologia Instit Letras Ciências Sociais e Educação U Estadual Paulista, 14800 Araraquara São Paulo Brazil). Estudos latino-americanos em Oxford: notas sobre a Universidade de Oxford colhidas durante a realização de um seminário sobre o Brasil atual (Latin-American Studies at Oxford: Notes on Oxford University Gathered during the Realization of a Seminar on Today's Brazil). Perspectivas 1985, 8, 211-219. (POR).

* In July 1984 St. Anthony's Coll of Oxford U, England, sponsored a seminar on Brazil twenty years after the 1964 coup d'état. Many Brazilian social scientists & UK specialists in Latin American studies presented papers. Attention is focused on opportunities for Brazilian graduate students in the social sciences interested in studying at Oxford, especially St. Anthony's Coll. M. Meeks.

8812345

Wilson, Karen R. & Allen, Walter R. (Dept Sociology U Pennsylvania, Philadelphia 19104). Explaining the Educational Attainment of Young Black Adults: Critical Familial and Extra-Familial Influences. The Journal of Negro Education 1987, 56, 1, winter, 64-76.

* An examination of the relationship between black family practices & the educational attainment of black youth, focusing on the impact of socialization & allocation factors on the attainment process. Data were obtained from several national surveys conducted during the 1970s & 1980s, particularly the National Survey of Young Black Adults (N = 201). Rs were interviewed at age 16-24, & again at age 19-28. Multivariate analysis reveals that the strongest predictor of low educational attainment was high school curriculum track, followed by Rs' parental status, age, whether the high school counselor had been helpful in making plans for the future, & the mother's educational attainment. 2 Tables. Modified AA.

8812346

Wissler, Dorothy F. & Ortiz, Flora Ida (San Bernardino Valley Coll, CA 92410). The Decentralization Process of School Systems: A Review of the Literature. U Urban Education 1986, 21, 3, Oct, 280-294.

* A review of the major studies of decentralization of US school systems. Most of the literature reports external parties imposing decentralization, & its enactment did not result in much parental or community powers, decision making was retained in the organization by the original decisionmakers. In addition to administrative changes, decentralization was also instituted for the purpose of school reform, but this was seldom attained either. Examination of several case studies leaves many questions unanswered, among them, how a complex school district can manage decentralized units in order to provide educational services throughout. 52 References. Modified AA.

8812347

Yang, Caroline A. Matano, Multiple Cost Sharing: The Japan Experience. U The Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science 1987, 491, May, 85-91.

* Among the approximately 120 countries with Fulbright international educational exchange programs, Japan is the only case where cost sharing by the US & the host society is on a fifty-fifty basis & where the Fulbright alumni contribute approximately 15% of the program's budget. Here, the factors behind this unique multiple cost sharing, particularly the strong support from Japanese alumni, are analyzed. Among the contributing elements are the historical relationship between Japan & the US, the rapid economic development of Japan, cultural factors peculiar to Japan, timing, & the right leader. These factors converged in 1982, the thirtieth anniversary year of the Japan program, & resulted in the organization of nine regional alumni associations within a period of two months & the launching of a fund-raising campaign to invite more Americans to Japan. The campaign developed a momentum of its own & evolved into the establishment of a permanent alumni Fulbright Foundation in 1986 through which contributions to the regular program are made. The entire alumni movement has served as a catalyst to the expansion & dynamism of the Fulbright program in Japan & may offer some lessons for other programs. 1 Table. HA.

Victims and Rehabilitation, 1987, 11, 2, spring-summer, 53-66

† An investigation of the effects of two instructional programs on the knowledge & attitudes of law students toward mentally retarded offenders. Students at the U of Alabama's law school ($N = 102$) were randomly assigned to 1 of 2 groups: lecture & independent study that met for 1 hour, questionnaires to measure knowledge of mental retardation & the mentally retarded offender were administered both before & immediately after the sessions. Results indicate that both groups increased their knowledge of & developed more positive attitudes toward mentally retarded offenders. The benefits of adding such instruction to law school curriculum are discussed. 2 Tables, 19 References. Modified HA

88T2333

Scarth, John (Springfield Middle School, Milton Keynes MK6 4HW England), Teacher Strategies: A Review and Critique, British Journal of Sociology of Education, 1987, 8, 3, Sept., 245-262

† A review & critique of the past decade of research on teacher strategies. Though such research is extensive, most of it is descriptive, with little effort to build on previous research in this area. P. Woods ("Ethnography and Theory Construction in Educational Research" in Burgess, R. G. [Ed.], Field Methods in the Study of Education, Lewes: Falmer Press, 1985) has suggested that a more cumulative approach requires development of sensitizing concepts both from existing & from new theories. Though these are important, three more fundamental problems are at least as important: clarification of the concept of strategy, explanation of how teachers adopt strategies, & critical reappraisal of the concept of constraint. 84 References. Modified HA

88T2334

Schreiber, Meyer S. (Kean Coll, Union NJ 07083), The Definition of the Situation: The First Year of Graduate Social Work Education, ♦ The Jewish Social Work Forum, 1987, 23, spring, 11-23

† Relatively little is known about the socialization of graduate social work students from the student perspective. Results are reported of an exploratory study based on interviews with first year students ($N = 25$) dealing with how these students actively manage their education & create definitions, norms, & evaluative strategies for themselves. The creation of a definition of the situation is an active process of reality construction in which people are the authors of their own experiences & the realities they inhabit. 23 References. Modified HA

88T2335

Shepherd, David (7 Smithwell Ln, Heptonstall Hebden Bridge West Yorkshire HX7 7NX England), The Accomplishment of Divergence, British Journal of Sociology of Education, 1987, 8, 3, Sept., 263-276

† The emergence in the UK of a number of schools where ethnic minority pupils are a majority raises issues surrounding cultural transmission & encounter & communicative competence. These issues are illustrated by open-ended interview data from the teaching staff ($N = 28$) of a large middle school near the center of a large northern city, where almost all pupils were of South Asian origin. These teachers viewed their pupils as suffering from substantial deficits. A microsociological model is presented of the processes by which close intercultural interaction generates such a perception. 10 References. Modified HA

88T2336

Sherlock, Joyce (Bedford Coll Higher Education, MK40 2BZ England), Issues of Masculinity and Femininity in British Physical Education, Women's Studies International Forum, 1987, 10, 4, 443-451

† An investigation of the cultural production & reproduction of masculinity & femininity in GB physical education. The continued sex segregation of the curriculum is attributed both to traditional social views of appropriate M/F physical activities & to the separate training of M & F physical education teachers. Data from interviews with 2 M physical education teachers reveal how conceptions of masculinity are associated with both M & F behavior, since the values of masculinity, sport, & capitalism have developed closely in GB & permeate physical education. As a result, the contradictions for the F role are bewildering, & the emphasis on "macho" values also poses problems for Ms wishing to partake in more traditionally feminine sports. Physical educationalists are urged to examine notions of masculinity & femininity in connection with wider cultural determinants, & to explore the implications of resistant & accommodating gender values. 24 References. Modified HA

88T2337

Stern, Maurice A., Educational Exchange in Latin America, ♦ The Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science, 1987, 491, May, 104-117

† Since its inception three decades ago, the Fulbright international educational exchange program in Latin America has aided individual students & Latin American educational institutions alike. The binational Fulbright commissions that select participants have earned a reputation for autonomy & fairness & have encouraged innovative programs such as cost sharing, state-of-the-art seminars, & flexible tenure provisions for US scholars teaching in Latin America. As the US & Latin American U systems have increasingly converged, Fulbright has also helped to introduce & promote such US concepts as U-based research & decentralized higher education, as well as Latin American U commitment to social outreach. Yet some problems remain. These include competition from European & Soviet exchange programs, inadequate contact among Fulbright scholars now in the US, & failure to maintain contact with Fulbright alumni once they have returned home. Further institution building in the Latin American educational sector also deserves greater support. The existing binational commissions provide an excellent model for the cooperation needed to address these problems, & they underscore the important role that Fulbright can continue to play in Latin America. HA

88T2338

Szumowski, Emily K., Ewing, Linda J. & Campbell, Susan B. (Dept Psychology U Pittsburgh, PA 15260), What Happens to "Hyperactive" Preschoolers?, Journal of Children in Contemporary Society, 1986, 19, 1-2, fall-winter, 75-88

† Overactivity, limited attention span, & impulsivity, the diagnostic indicators of Attention Deficit Disorder, are often characteristic of preschool children. Results of a longitudinal study of 46 "hyperactive" children & 22 children without such behaviors, involving interview & questionnaire data from parents, indicate that, as a group, preschoolers showing high levels of these & related problem behaviors are likely to continue to have more difficulties at school-age. The prediction of outcome for individual children, however, is not straightforward. It is important to examine each child's behavior in a variety of settings, to consider parental perceptions & behaviors, & to view the family in its social context. Case examples are presented from the research illustrating differential outcomes for "hyperactive" preschool children. 6 References. HA

88T2339

Tyler, William (Dept Sociology & Social Policy Darwin Instit Tech, PO Box 40146 Casuarina New Territories 5792 Australia), 'Loosely Coupled' Schools: A Structuralist Critique, British Journal of Sociology of Education, 1987, 8, 3, Sept., 313-326

† The dominant model of the school in the specialist administrative & organizational literature, the loosely coupled model, has been applied ambiguously—as a research tool & as a theoretical device—to mark schools where the elements of functional analysis have no predictive interdependence. The irony that a model derived from biological & cybernetic thinking should become a tool of demystification of orthodox functional theory is interesting in itself & perhaps points to a major conceptual weakness in its formulation & application. The ambiguities of the model can be resolved by a structuralist approach that distinguishes surface looseness from the more determining patterns of the interrelationship between rules & rituals within the school organization's institutional &/or technological core. 71 References. Modified HA

88T2340

Vogel, Ralph H., The Making of the Fulbright Program, ♦ The Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science, 1987, 491, May, 11-21

† The nature & character of the Fulbright program were shaped by the 1946 legislation that gave it life, by the circumstances of its foreign currency financing generated by surplus property sales, by those in the State Dept & in a few private organizations, & by members of the first Board of Foreign Scholarships, who transformed the Fulbright Act into the worldwide educational exchange program it is today. The first bilateral Fulbright programs depended on the negotiation of executive agreements with participating governments & the establishing of binational commissions abroad. The latter played a key role in the initial acceptance of the exchange program, in its planning & administration, & in eventual joint financing by many participating governments. Today the Fulbright program looks to the future with confidence as it proudly claims over 150,000 alumni in the US & abroad. Modified HA

1500 sociology of religion

35 sociology of religion

88T2350

Abelmann, Robert (Cleveland State U, OH 44115), Religious Television Uses and Gratifications, ♦ Journal of Broadcasting & Electronic Media 1987, 31, 3, summer, 293-307

* Questionnaire data gathered from 210 Rs randomly selected from cable TV subscribers who were also high consumers of religious programming are analyzed to assess TV viewing patterns & motives. Ritualized & instrumental patterns of religious TV use identified in previous research are discussed, & a reactionary factor involving the seeking out of religious programming as an alternative to secular fare is proposed. Canonical & identifies reactionary TV use as a pattern that is related to dissatisfaction with secular TV rather than motivated by religiosity. 3 Tables, 43 References. Modified HA

88T2351

Ali, Mohammad Husain (Michigan State U, East Lansing 48824), Kuwait: Religion and Politics, * Dissertation Abstracts International, 4 The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 1, July, 228-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8707087.

88T2352

Arkoun, Mohammed (c/o Archives de science sociales des religions, 59-61 rue Pouchet 75017 Paris France), Réflexions sur la notion de "raison islamique" (Considerations on the Notion of "Islamic Reasoning"), ♦ Archives de sciences sociales des religions, 1987, 32, 63-1, Jan-Mar, 125-132 (FRE)

* The status of reasoning in the Islamic context is investigated using three sources of information: (1) classical Islamic literature, up to the fifteenth century; (2) contemporary Islamic literature of the nineteenth & twentieth centuries; & (3) Orientalist literature. An attempt is made to identify the type of reasoning that produced literary works designed to satisfy specific tastes at specific times. It is suggested that the major productions of Islamic reasoning should be analyzed from the viewpoint of the relationship between the formation of each corpus & the sociohistoric conditions surrounding it. This is illustrated with three examples, from the Koran, the Classical Age, & the Scholastic Age. Modified HA

88T2353

Bernal Restrepo, S. (Pontificia U Gregoriana, Brazil), La Iglesia del Brasil y el compromiso social. El paso de la Iglesia de la Cristiandad a la Iglesia de los Pobres (The Brazilian Church and Social Commitment: The Transition from a Church of Christendom to the Church of the Poor), * Dissertation Abstracts International C European Abstracts, 1987, 48, 1, spring, 62 (SPA)

† Available from UMI; contact the degree-granting university.

88T2354

Bourdieu, Pierre (Coll France, 75231 Paris Cedex 05), Sociologues de la croyance et croyances de sociologues (Sociologists of Belief and Beliefs of Sociologists), ♦ Archives de sciences sociales des religions, 1987, 32, 63-1, Jan-Mar, 155-161 (FRE)

* The question is investigated, whether the sociology of religion which is dominated by the productions of those who belong more or less to the religious field—can be considered genuine scientific sociology. It is argued that this can hardly be the case, unless there is also a scientific sociology of the religious field. Because religious belonging contributes toward determining the kind of relationship established with the object of research, it demands elucidation. It implies an interest of a particular type, the characteristics of which are analyzed here. Although religious belonging can constitute an obstacle to objectivization, it can also be objectivized & controlled, through the objectivization of past or present links or attachments. This is the difficult but necessary prerequisite for achieving a scientific practice in the sociology of religion. Modified HA

88T2355

Bruce, Steve (Queen's U, Belfast BT7 1NN Northern Ireland), Status and Cultural Defense: The Case of the New Christian Right, U Sociological Focus, 1987, 20, 3, Aug, 242-246. Comment, 247-249.

† In "The New Christian Right and Fundamentalist Discontent: The Politics of Lifestyle Concern Hypothesis Revisited" (see SA 34 1/86Q3925), Wesley E. Miller concluded that there was no support for the cultural defense or "politics of lifestyle concern" explanation for the rise of the New Christian Right movement in the US. Miller's data/content analysis of 6 conservative Protestant serials published between 1955 & 1980 are reexamined. On the grounds that both his methodology & conceptualizations are irrelevant to the issues explored, it is argued that there is no evidence for his support of the resource mobilization explanation. In An Assessment of Bruce's Reassessment, Miller responds to each criticism, & concludes that his study was an accurate test of the hypothesis that lifestyle concerns underlie the rise of social movements. K. Hyatt

88T2356

Bukowczyk, John J. (Wayne State U, Detroit MI 48202), The Church in the Immigrant City, Journal of Urban History, 1987, 13, 2, Feb, 207-217

† A review essay on Thomas H. O'Connor's Fitzpatrick's Boston, 1846-1866: John Bernard Fitzpatrick, Third Bishop of Boston (Boston, Northeastern U Press, 1984), Lawrence D. Orton's Polish Detroit and the Kolasinski Affair (Detroit, Mich. Wayne State U Press, 1981), Joseph John Parot's Polish Catholics in Chicago, 1850-1920: A Religious History (DeKalb, Northern Illinois U Press, 1981), Edward R. Kantowicz's Corporation Sole: Cardinal Mundelein and Chicago Catholicism (Notre Dame, Ind. U of Notre Dame Press, 1983), & Charles Shanabruch's Chicago's Catholics: The Evolution of an American Identity (Notre Dame, Ind. U of Notre Dame Press, 1981 (see listings in IRPS No. 41)). The common focus of these books is the Roman Catholic Church's adaptation to the entry of immigrants into US life. Together they give evidence for two propositions: that the Church underwent institutional change, & that the men in it were of ordinary abilities & orthodox opinions. Regrettably, none of these works explores the implications of these propositions. W. H. Stoddard

88T2357

Cipriani, Roberto (Dept Sociology U Rome, 00100 Italy), Per una teoria della religione diffusa (For a Theory of Diffuse Religion), Studi di Sociologia, 1986, 24, 2, Apr-June, 161-174. (ITA)

† Arguments are presented that oppose current theories of secularization. It is shown that religion still plays a strategic role in many sociopolitical contexts, where the presence of diffuse or implicit religions is evident. A theoretical definition of the concept of diffuse religion is presented. Manifestations of diffuse religion in different societies throughout the world are discussed from a macroscopic perspective. Specific examples concerning the case of Italy are examined, drawing on several studies, especially a survey by Jean Stoetzel (Les valeurs du temps présent: l'Europe au carrefour (Today's Values: Europe at the Crossroads), Brussels: IPC, 1983). Modified HA

88T2358

Cipriani, Roberto (U Rome, I-00100 Italy), Symbolisme et biographie dans la redécouverte de la religiosité populaire: le Christ rouge (Symbolism and Biography in the Rediscovery of Popular Religiosity: The Red Christ), Recherches Sociologiques, 1987, 18, 2, 95-111. (FRE)

† An investigation of the significance of the "Red Christs," part of the Roman Catholic rites celebrating Easter in southern Italy, based on field research conducted during 1976-1982 in the Ru town of Cerignola, including interviews (N not given), observations, & sound & film recording. The "Red Christs" are human actors representing Christ, dressed in red, who take part in processions. A biographical approach has been used to elucidate the links between daily life & this form of celebration. The "Red Christs" are found to be a peculiar symbol of popular religion, having political meaning. 9 References. Modified HA

88T2359

Davis, Natalie Zemon (Princeton U, NJ 08544), The Sacred and the Body Social in Sixteenth-Century Lyon, Past and Present, 1981, 90,

8872348

----, Review Symposium: A Sociology of Educating, Sociology, Education and Schools and The Sociology of School and Education, British Journal of Sociology of Education, 1987, 8, 3, Sept., 327-341

* A review symposium on Roland Meighan's A Sociology of Educating (Eastbourne: Holt, Rinehart & Winston, 1986), Robert G. Burgess's Sociology, Education and Schools (London: Batsford, 1986), & Ivan Reid's The Sociology of School and Education ([a revised edition of Sociological Perspectives on School and Education, 1978], London: Fontana, 1986 (see listings in IRPS No. 41)). All three are addressed to student & practicing teachers. Maggie Wilson (Dept of Education, Oxford Polytechnic, Wheatley, England) finds value in all three somewhat different approaches & recommends having students read more than one. Sally Power (35 Linden Rd, Westbury Park, Bristol, England) focuses on their treatment of one specific topic that students often find hard to grasp: the occurrence of different sociological perspectives. Ken Foster & Alan Hurst (Lancashire Polytechnic, Preston, England) see these books as meeting a need of students for a single comprehensive textbook & weighs their strengths & weaknesses, noting several points where all three have similar virtues or omissions. W. H. Stoddard

8872349

----, A Symposium: What Future Directions for Academic Exchange?, The Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science, 1987, 491, May, 154-163

† Four informed observers & former or present participants in Fulbright & other educational exchange programs present their views on the objectives of such programs. Paul Seabury (U of California, Berkeley) argues for a more sharply focused Fulbright program in an age when it is only one of many exchanges, & urges that the focus should serve national interests. James H. Billington suggests that Fulbright or part of it be upgraded to focus on "brighter students or future leaders." Mark Blitz points out that the strong support the program now receives from the administration & in Congress is based not so much on the desire to "enhance academic opportunities or mutual understanding," but rather on the hope of improving prospects for democratic development, a central purpose of US foreign policy. A. Kenneth Pye (Duke U, Durham NC) emphasizes the traditional objective of mutual understanding, & the importance of avoiding politicization & respecting the independent role of the binational commissions; he presents a variety of proposals for improvement in the program. HA

SAVE FOR FUTURE REFERENCE.

Document Delivery Service

The costs of reproduction are: US $0.25 per reproduced page. Orders must be PREPAID (unprepaid orders cannot be acknowledged or returned) and sent to SOCIOLOGICAL ABSTRACTS, INC. (P.O. Box 22206, San Diego, CA 92122, USA) together with the SA accession number and the complete citation of the document to be reproduced. To calculate price per document, multiply the number of pages as indicated in the citation of the abstract by US $0.25 and add a US $1.50 search fee per document. POSTAGE is EXTRA. Below is a table for postage fees that vary by weight/size of paper.

No. of Pages	US & Canada Postage Fee	All Other Countries		Surface
		Postage Fee	Air Mail
1-5	$0.39	US $1.40		US $1.00
6-10	$0.73	$2.24		$1.90
11-15	$1.07	$2.78		$2.30
16-20	$1.41	$3.32		$2.75
21+	Additional multiples as above

CONFERENCE papers are available ONLY when the following notation precedes the text of the abstract: ● "Complete paper available from SA Reproduction Service prepaid at $0.25 per page plus $1.50 search and postage. Length: pp." For copies of paper without this notation, write directly to the author, whose address is listed in the citation.

of St. Croix. Adventists rated their church as more prejudiced than the general population on St. Croix. Intrinsic religiosity was also found to be significantly correlated with prejudice. There was no relationship between the extrinsic or quest orientations & prejudice. It is concluded that there is no singular relationship between religious orientation & prejudice; researchers must take account of particular religious & social norms. 3 Tables. Modified HA

88T2368

Hawthorne, John William (Purdue U, West Lafayette IN 47907). The Attending Nonmember: An Examination of a Neglected Population. ♦ Dissertation Abstracts International, A The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 1, July, 220-A.
Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8709804.

88T2369

Hay, Eldon (Dept Religious Studies Mount Allison U, Sackville New Brunswick E0A 3C0). Gautama Buddha as Religious Model in Stress-Coping. ♦ Journal of Comparative Sociology and Religion/Bulletin de sociologie et de religion comparées, 1979-80, 6-7, 155-181.

† Starting from a personal experience of stressful life events, the discovery of Buddhism & of Gautama Buddha as a model for coping with stress is recounted. Several questions about philosophical issues raised by Buddha's experiences are stated. The ultimate compatibility of this interpretation of Buddhism with Christianity is argued. 8 References. W. H. Stoddard

88T2370

Hegy, Pierre (Adelphi U, Garden City NY 11530). The Invisible Catholicism. ♦ Sociological Analysis, 1987, 48, 2, summer, 167-176.

† Questionnaire data from a French survey of Catholic priests (N = 112) in Strasbourg, Alsace, collected in 1981 are compared to the findings of 3 other surveys of clerical subcultures conducted in Peru (1969) & the US (1971 & 1986). Utilizing the Pre-Vatican II scale, correlations of the 5 items used in all 4 surveys are compared, & social involvement & the rejection of the traditional doctrine of the Church are assessed. 3 Tables, 2 Appendixes, 10 References. Modified HA

88T2371

Herberich-Marx, Geneviève & Raphael, Freddy. L'Ex-voto peint, figure de dépassement (The Painted Ex-Voto, a Symbol of Transcendence), Recherches Sociologiques, 1987, 18, 2, 145-162. (FRE)

† A discussion of the religious significance of the painted ex-voto, a traditional type of painting presented as an offering by Catholic pilgrims or supplicants since the fifteenth century. In particular, such paintings found in the churches of the Alsace region of France are described. The paintings are both realistic & symbolic, deeply personal & yet marked by the stamp of a collective religiosity. They represent an individual's attempt to establish a more intimate link with the sacred, puritanical efforts on the part of some clergy to discourage these offerings are therefore seen as misguided. 18 References. Modified HA

88T2372

Hervieu-Léger, Danièle (Group sociologie religions Centre national recherche scientifique, 75700 Paris France). Faut-il définir la religion? Questions préalables à la construction d'une sociologie de la modernité religieuse (Must Religion Be Defined? Questions Previous to the Establishment of a Sociology of Religious Modernity). ♦ Archives de sciences sociales des religions, 1987, 32, 63-1, Jan-Mar, 11-30. (FRE)

† The problem of the definition of religion is discussed, considering the structural ambiguity of the sociology of religion, & the "reduction" of religious phenomena. For a time, the sociology of religious institutions concentrated on the images that religions project of themselves. It is argued that this position of epistemological retreat is unacceptable, especially when studying the work of religion within the core of modernity. The theoretical debate is examined, which extends throughout the history of the sociology of religions, concerning which prerequisites are necessary in order to establish a sociology of religious modernity. Modified HA

88T2373

Hewitt, W. E. (U Lethbridge, Alberta T1K 3M4). Basic Christian Communities of the Middle-Classes in the Archdiocese of São Paulo,

♦ UM Sociological Analysis, 1987, 48, 2, summer, 158-166

† A study of the basic Christian community phenomenon of the Latin American Catholic Church, based on data from questionnaire responses (N = 273), interviews with group leaders (N = 22), & direct observations of specific groups (N = 11 Mc & 11 poor) located in São Paulo, Brazil. Results indicate that the Mc groups are beginning to involve the influential Mc directly in the social reform movement, with potentially significant implications for the future of Brazilian society. 7 Tables, 13 References. Modified HA

88T2374

Hill, Michael & Zwaga, Wiebe (Dept Sociology & Social Work Victoria U, Wellington New Zealand). Civil and Civic: Engineering a National Religious Consensus. New Zealand Sociology, 1987, 2, 1, May, 25-35.

† The concept of civil religion in its 1967 reformulation by Robert Bellah ("Civil Religion in America," Religion in America, McLoughlin, W.G., & Bellah, R.N. (Eds), Boston, Beacon Press, 1968) has been used principally in the US; its value in other societies is more questionable. It has been argued that biculturalism deprives Canada of a national ideology, & that attempts to identify elements of civil religion in New Zealand expose areas of social conflict rather than of consensus. The inventory of evidence for civil religion in New Zealand contains three observances which on closer inspection prove to be symbolic of conflict. The prayers that begin each session of Parliament arose from pragmatic compromise & have recently been used by political protesters. Waitangi Day, commemorating the Treaty signed by the British & the Maori, is of recent fabrication & engenders annual ethnic protest. Anzac Day—which has been successfully incorporated into national ritual in Australia—exposes conflict between Christian & military symbolism. Finally, the New Christian Right has failed to coopt symbols of national consensus in its protest against the decriminalizing of homosexuality, indicating that civil religion is not a resonant feature of contemporary political rhetoric. 38 References. Modified AA

88T2375

Idler, Ellen L. (Dept Sociology Rutgers U, New Brunswick NJ 08903). Religious Involvement and the Health of the Elderly: Some Hypotheses and an Initial Test. ♦ UM Social Forces, 1987, 66, 1, Sept, 226-238.

† A revised version of SA 34 5/S19017/ASA/1986/4058

88T2376

Jacobs, Janet (U Colorado, Boulder 80309). Deconversion from Religious Movements: An Analysis of Charismatic Bonding and Spiritual Commitment. ♦ UM Journal for the Scientific Study of Religion, 1987, 26, 3, Sept, 294-308.

† Deconversion from authoritarian religious movements is studied from the perspective of dissatisfaction as expressed through severing of socio-emotional bonds to religious leaders. Data were collected through 40 in-depth interviews of former religious devotees, representing 17 different religious movements. Each of the Rs had left the movement voluntarily after an intense commitment to the group, & an average length of involvement of 4.5 years. Focus was on the process leading to conversion, the Rs' experience once inside the group, & the events that led to deconversion. A two-stage process of separation is elaborated in which bonds to the group are severed first, followed by emotional disengagement from the charismatic leader. The bond between the leader & follower is shown to be most significant in determining the strength of continued commitment to the movement. An in-depth analysis of the leader-follower bond is offered, identifying specific sources of disillusionment. Principles of power dependency theory are also elaborated in order to explain the strength of commitment to the charismatic figure. 3 Tables, 39 References. Modified AA

88T2377

Johnson, Nan E. & Burton, Linda M. (Michigan State U, East Lansing 48824). Religion and Reproduction in Philippine Society: A New Test of the Minority-Group Status Hypothesis. ♦ UM Sociological Analysis, 1987, 48, 3, fall, 217-233.

† A test of the religious-minority-group status hypothesis, focusing on Protestant antinatalism in the Philippines. Questionnaire data gathered in 1985 from 366 unmarried Coll students indicate that Protestant Ms desire fewer sons & daughters than do Catholic Ms, & Protestant Fs do not want fewer sons, but do want fewer daughters, than Catholic Fs. Protestants are less likely than Catholics to view the instrumental roles

Feb, 40-70)

† An analysis of the role of the sacred in sixteenth century Lyon, France, with focus on 1550-1580, when Calvinism emerged as an active movement in conflict with Catholicism. The relationship between Ur values, morality, social interaction, & religion is examined. Protestantism & Catholicism are viewed as two languages shaped by doctrine, the social spiritual relations between laity & clergy, & the unique experience of their practitioners that were used to describe, mark, & interpret Ur life. Data from marriage contracts & archives are used to analyze the social composition & structure of each religion. Their differing interpretations of Ur space, time, & community particularly the ways each served as a source of safety & solidarity in the city are examined. Max Weber's notions of the potentiality of traditional-magical religion & the "rationality of Calvinism" are formulated to incorporate the role of Catholicism & explore the relation of each religion to capitalism & manufacture. 1 Table, 1 Map. K. Hyatt

88T2360

Deconchy, Jean-Pierre (Laboratoire psychologie sociale U. Paris X, 92001 Nanterre Cedex France), Les Methodes en psychologie de la religion: Leur evolution recente. (Methods in Psychology of Religion: Current Trends). ♦ Archives de sciences sociales des religions, 1987, 12, 611, Jan-Mar, 11-81 (FRF)

† A review of the methods currently used in the psychology of religion, focusing on how the use of these techniques can affect the type of knowledge produced, & how new methods might be developed to reach newly defined scientific objectives. After examining the status of nonexperimental methods, which are most often based on questionnaires about beliefs & on attitude scales, the ongoing debate about the relevance & feasibility of using experimental methods in the psychology of religion is analyzed. 383 References. Modified HA

88T2361

Dinges, William D. (Catholic U. America, Washington DC 20064), Ritual Conflict as Social Conflict: Liturgical Reform in the Roman Catholic Church. ♦ Sociological Analysis, 1987, 48, 2, summer, 138-157

† An analysis of ritual as a cultural symbol that gives expression to social codes, focusing on the conflict over ritual in the liturgical reform in the Roman Catholic Church. Resistance to such reform gives expression to SC & interest group conflict linked to the weakening of Catholic identity in a pluralistic society, to a crisis of role status loss among clerical elites, & to the emergence & empowerment of a new knowledge class within the Church. Examination of these issues focuses on the impact of social change on the Church & relates the transformation of ritual to broad social changes associated with modernization. 149 References. Modified HA

88T2362

Dobbelaere, Karel (Katholieke U. Leuven, B-3000 Belgium), Some Trends in European Sociology of Religion: The Secularization Debate. ♦ Sociological Analysis, 1987, 48, 2, summer, 107-137

† A discussion of trends in European sociology of religion vs those in the US, based on a study of journal articles in the field ($N = 1,098$ European & 762 US) published 1980-1984. European & US research trends are compared statistically, & major differences analyzed. The secularization thesis is identified as the major illustration of the current relationship between religion & society, in Europe, there is also the more specific de-Christianization, an idea that emerged from comprehensive studies of religious practice. The development of these theories is traced, & their content discussed in terms of three levels of analysis: societal, institutional, & individual. 2 Tables, 131 References. F. Rasmussen

88T2363

Fulton, John (Saint Mary's Coll, Twickenham TW1 4SX England), Religion and Politics in Gramsci: An Introduction. ♦ Sociological Analysis, 1987, 48, 3, fall, 197-216

† An introduction to Antonio Gramsci's sociology of religion with reference to his Prison Notebooks (Selections from The Prison Notebooks, Hoare, Q. & Smith, G. N. [Eds], London: Lawrence & Wishart, 1971). Gramsci's understanding of religion is bound up with the principal concern of his work: to understand the dynamics of power in society both in the past & in the present, with the aim of bringing about a socialist intellectual & moral reformation. This key concern is examined, & his main concept for analyzing religion is explored. Gramsci's analysis of history as a study of the interplay between religion & social structure is outlined. There is much to be learned from his method & conceptual framework if one is seeking to rediscover the link between religion & politics in social-structural analysis. 41 References. Modified HA

88T2364

Gaddy, Gary D. & Pritchard, David (Mass Communication Research Center U. Wisconsin, Madison 53706), Is Religious Knowledge Gained from Broadcasts?. ♦ Journalism Quarterly, 1986, 63, 4, winter, 840-844

† Based on research on other areas of knowledge, it was hypothesized that Bible reading, church attendance, & educational attainment would be more positively related to religious knowledge than would exposure to religious radio & TV. Analyzing data from a 1978 US national survey ($N = 1,553$), partial support was found for the proposed inefficacy of broadcasts as a source of religious knowledge, at least for Protestants. Bible reading & church attendance were better predictors of knowledge of the origin of the phrase "born again" than either religious radio or TV use. For Catholics, however, there were no significant differences among these predictors for this question, & religious TV use was significantly & positively related to correctly identifying the source of the quote. For the ability to name five of the Ten Commandments, educational attainment was found to be a better predictor than the other sources for all Rs & church attendance better than religious TV for both Protestants & Catholics. 2 Tables. Modified AA

88T2365

Galanter, Marc (Dept. Psychiatry Albert Einstein Coll. Medicine Bronx NY 10461), "Moonies" Get Married: A Psychiatric Follow-Up Study of a Charismatic Religious Sect. ♦ The American Journal of Psychiatry, 1986, 143, 10, Oct, 1245-1249

† A 3-year questionnaire follow-up of longtime engaged members of the Unification Church revealed remarkable compliance with the sect's unusual marital commitments. Of 305 Ss, 95% were still active in the Church, & 85% had been married in the interim to mates designated by their religious leader. Their scores on a measure of psychological well-being remained below those of the general population, & members who deviated from the sect's expectations showed even greater distress. Additional interviews with members revealed that affiliative ties with the sect apparently counteracted the distress produced by the unusual marital experience & helped to explain compliance with the sect's unusual behavioral norms. 1 Table, 11 References. HA

88T2366

Glenn, Charles L., Religion, Textbooks, and the Common School. ♦ The Public Interest, 1987, 88, summer, 28-47

† Recent legal cases in which parents challenged the textbooks chosen by their children's schools as religiously biased raise crucial issues, not so much because it would be difficult for public schools to accommodate religious concerns, but because this issue represents a challenge to the common school as an institution. US schools have always sought more to educate than to instruct, & to achieve this have insisted on keeping specific religious doctrines out of the classroom. Fundamentalists have sought to exercise their religion within the public schools, while Evangelicals have challenged public schools as being in effect an establishment of religion. Two recent court cases from Tenn & Ala illustrate these distinctive issues. The Ala case in particular raises the two questions of whether Americans who value self-realization should not be able to see their values reflected in their children's schooling, & whether Americans with traditional values should not have the same right. Attempting to achieve uniformity of values is futile in most communities. Two solutions are to enrich the curriculum & make it more comprehensive, & to make public education more diverse in content. W. H. Stoddard

88T2367

Griffin, Glenn A. Elmer, Gorsuch, Richard L. & Davis, Andrea-Lee (Graduate School Psychology Fuller Theological Seminary, Pasadena CA 91182), A Cross-Cultural Investigation of Religious Orientation, Social Norms, and Prejudice. ♦ Journal for the Scientific Study of Religion, 1987, 26, 3, Sept, 358-365

† Researchers have recently established that the low r between intrinsic religiosity & prejudice is an artifact of social desirability. It has been argued that only the "quest orientation" correlates negatively with prejudice. These contentions are examined here in a culture in which prejudice against Rastafarians is not considered socially undesirable, using questionnaire data from 191 Seventh-Day Adventists on the Caribbean island type (as the term is used by Max Weber) is constructed around the following characteristics: intellectualization vs affective involvement; formal rationality & religious specialization, cosmic vs specific religion; the tension between transcendence & immanence; & the intermediary function of the priesthood in relation to distance & proximity. Possible connections between this revitalization of popular religion & antimodernist movements are also discussed. 9 References. Modified HA

88T2387

Rose, Susan D. (Dickinson Coll, Carlisle PA 17013). Women Warriors: The Negotiation of Gender in a Charismatic Community. ♦ UM Sociological Analysis, 1987, 48, 3, fall, 245-258.

* The theological views of the New Christian Right on the family, & the roles & relationships as lived out by a group of evangelical men & women, are examined based on a 1982/83 ethnographic study of an independent, charismatic fellowship in upstate NY. While findings indicate that the hierarchical ordering of relationships within the family is part of their explicit ideology, in practice, power relations are not so clearly delineated. Indeed, many decisions are discussed & jointly made, moreover, influence is wielded in different ways by men & women. The women report willingly relinquishing their power & position in order for their men to rise to "God-appointed" positions of leadership, however, while women assume the traditional F role for themselves, they reject the traditional M role for their husbands, in that men are not just the primary breadwinners & protectors of the family, but must also be actively & intimately involved in family life & children. 26 References. Modified HA

88T2388

Schoeman, W. J. (Dept Sociology U Orange Free State, Bloemfontein 9300 Republic South Africa). Erediensdeelnamen - beleving in 'n Afrikaanse Kerk in die Oranje-Vrystaat (The Participation in and Experience of the Religious Service in an Afrikaans-Speaking Church in Orange Free State). ♦ Suid-Afrikaanse Tydskrif vir Sosiologie/The South African Journal of Sociology, 1987, 18, 4, Nov, 121-128. (AFR)

* Secularization & segmentation have decreased the role of religion in modern society, with the result that an individual's religious experience is more subjective & private. The relationship between the religiousness of individual church members & their experience of religious services is investigated using questionnaire data obtained from 507 members of 7 randomly selected congregations of the Dutch Reformed Church in Orange Free State, South Africa. Results indicate that frequency of church attendance & religiousness as assessed by various cognitive, cultic, creedal, & devotional dimensions both influence how the religious service is experienced. 4 Tables, 1 Figure, 19 References. Modified HA

88T2389

Sethi, Amarjit Singh, Singh, Joginder & Singh, Gurcharan (Faculty Administration U Ottawa, Ontario K1N 6N5). Nam Simran (Contemplation) in the Transformation of Consciousness. ♦ Journal of Comparative Sociology and Religion/Bulletin de sociologie et de religion comparées, 1979-80, 6-7, 211-223.

* Nam Simran is a practice within the Sikh religion that is intended to transform an unenlightened person into an enlightened one. The concept is developed through original material from Sikh scripture. Several issues that individuals confront in implementing this practice in their lives are identified. The ultimate goal of Nam Simran is realization of the constant & inescapable presence of God. 16 References. W. H. Stoddard

88T2390

Shaffir, William (Dept Sociology McMaster U, Hamilton Ontario L8S 4L8). Separation from the Mainstream in Canada: The Hassidic Community of Tash. The Jewish Journal of Sociology, 1987, 29, 1, June, 19-35.

* Based on participant observation & informal interviews (N not provided) conducted during the 1970s, the structure & organization of the Tasher Hassidic community situated on the outskirts of Montreal, Quebec, are examined. Focus is on the community's bid for autonomy, specifically, its attempt in 1979 to obtain separate municipal status & the rights & privileges such a status entailed. Also discussed are the community's stress on the importance of geographical isolation, its attempt to achieve self-regulation & self-sufficiency in that isolation; & the organization & supervision of secular studies. Findings suggest that the Tasher Jews so far are increasing in number, & that the members appear to be quite content with their lifestyle. Paradoxically, however, it is precisely the high birthrate & the negligible amount of defections that may endanger the future of the community. Modified AA

88T2391

Shepherd, Gordon (U Central Arkansas, Conway 72032). The Social Construction of a Religious Prophecy. ♦ UM Sociological Inquiry, 1987, 57, 4, fall, 394-414.

* Based on data from interviews & participant observation, a narrative account is presented of the reactions of people in a small Ark community to religious claims of prophecy & divine mission made by an individual who came to reside temporarily in the community. Public interpretation & evaluation of the prophecy took place informally through the rumor construction process. Naturalistic interpretations of fraud or delusion were mostly suspended as supernatural interpretations by community members became ascendent. People were eventually forced to rationalize their reactions when events failed to materialize in the manner originally prophesied. The unfolding events are viewed from a SofK perspective & treated as a case study of the social construction of reality. 22 References. HA

88T2392

Spickard, James V. (Cultural Development Instit, Aromas CA 95004). Environmental Variation and the Plausibility of Religion: A California Indian Example. ♦ UM Journal for the Scientific Study of Religion, 1987, 26, 3, Sept, 327-339.

* Coastal Miwok Indian religion before the European conquest of Calif appears to have been bimodal. Its public face a world-renewal cult brought together peoples from surrounding regions in great celebrations. More privately, sorcery pitted neighbor against neighbor, village against village. It is argued that the variable Calif environment let both aspects of this religion make sense, but at different times & to different degrees. The coastal Miwok environment was rich in resources, but each was subject to periodic failure. In most years there was enough food for all, & the common ceremonies were an expression of good fortune. In bad years, all sought common renewal. In some years, however, only certain lineages' resources might fail. Because all property was private, & there was no system of redistribution, sorcery "explained" (& provided retributions for) such inequities in fortune. In each situation, one or another aspect of native religion "made sense". 57 References. HA

88T2393

Stump, Roger W. (Dept Geography/Regional Planning State U New York, Albany 12222). Regional Contrasts within Black Protestantism: A Research Note. ♦ UM Social Forces, 1987, 66, 1, Sept, 143-151.

* An examination of North/South contrasts in the determinants of church attendance & the association between attendance & asceticism among black Protestants based on 1984 national survey data (N not given). Findings indicate that social factors have a larger effect on attendance in the South, religious factors in the North. The association between attendance & ascetic moral values is also weaker in the South than in the North. Both patterns reflect historical regional variations within black Protestantism. 3 Tables, 21 References. HA

88T2394

Tomasi, Luigi (Dipt Teoria Storia e Ricerca sociale U Trento, 38100 Italy). Religione e modernità: sopravvivenza o risveglio? Alcune riflessioni ai margini della XVIII Conferenza Internazionale dei Sociologi della Religione (Religion and Modernity: Survival or Revival? Some Reflections on the 18th International Conference of Sociologists of Religion). Studi di Sociologia, 1986, 24, 2, Apr-June, 260-272. (ITA)

* A discussion of some of the issues debated at the Eighteenth International Conference of Sociologists of Religion, held in Lovanio, Belgium, in Aug 1985, on the topic "Religion and Modernity: Survival or Revival?" In particular, four contributions relating to the issue of charisma are summarized: Gustavo Guizzardi (U of Padova, Italy), "Charisma and the Mass Media"; Nils G. Holm (Abo Akademi, Finland), "Charisma and Religious Transformation in the Nordic Countries"; J. Ségué (Ecole pratique des hautes études en sciences sociales, Paris, France), "Charisma in the Modern World"; & Robert Wuthnow (Princeton U, NJ), "Modernity and Religious Evolution." Charisma is viewed as an attempt to revitalize religious culture in modern society, in which the role of religion is becoming limited to the personal sphere, while the influence of scientific models & values is increasing. Modified HA of sons & daughters as the most salient advantages of having children, & more likely than Catholics to think a married couple should start to practice contraception, even before the first birth. The results suggest that support for the religious-minority group status hypothesis is not limited to minorities with explicitly pronatalist creeds or to religious groups in more developed nations or nations with an indigenous European culture. 7 Tables, 24 References. Modified HA

88T2378

Jules-Ronette, Bennetta (U California San Diego, La Jolla 92093), The Narrative Structure of Prophecy among the Maranke Apostles: An Alternative System of Religious Expression, Semiotica, 1986, 61, 1-2, 13-31.

¶ An analysis of the narrative & dialogical structure of Apostolic prophecy as a ritual performance & an alternative system of linguistic & religious expression from a semiotic perspective based on field investigations conducted from 1969-1978 on the Apostolic Church of John Maranke, an indigenous African church with 300,000+ members in 5 nations. Prophecy is used among the Apostles of John Maranke to structure everyday & religious interactions. The prophetic account has a dialogical format, consisting of the prophet's assertion & the candidate's response. Each prophecy contains a short narrative about the subject's moral & spiritual state. Apostolic prophecy is a system of expression that shapes the universe of spiritual discourse of church members & serves as a means of social control. 26 References. Modified AA

88T2379

Ladriere, Paul (c/o Archives de sciences sociales des religions, 59-61 rue Pouchet 75017 Paris France), Les Sciences sociales des religions aujourd'hui: jalons et questions (Social Sciences of Religions Today: Trends and Questions), ♦ Archives de sciences sociales des religions, 1987, 32, 63-1, Jan-Mar, 5-9. (FRE)

¶ An editorial introduction to this special issue of Archives de sciences sociales des religions which celebrates thirty years of publication. Focus is on two topics: (1) a review of the current work in three of the disciplines of the social sciences of religions: sociology, psychology, & history; (2) the theme of belief & reason, as it is treated today. The approach of each article is briefly summarized (see abstracts in this section). HA Tr & Modified by C. Walters

88T2380

Lambert, Yves (Institut national recherche agronomique, Rennes France), L'Art d'accommoder et de transformer la religion: le sens théorique populaire (The Art of Accommodating and Transforming Religion: The Popular Theoretical Sense), Recherches Sociologiques, 1987, 18, 2, 113-128. (FRE)

¶ In a theoretical discussion of popular religion, the concept of "referential" is put forward. Just as the "practical sense" corresponds to the practical control brought about by habitus (as shown in Pierre Bourdieu's Le Sens pratique [The Practical Sense], Paris: Editions de Minuit, 1980), this "theoretical sense" designates the symbolic control brought about by referentials (systems of reference). This theoretical analysis is supported by a case study (details not given) of a Ru community in Brittany, France, which is perceived as having moved from Christianity to a new form of Catholicism, or to indifference or unbelief. 13 References. Modified HA

88T2381

Langlois, Claude (U Rouen, 76130 Mount-Saint-Aignan France), Trente ans d'histoire religieuse: Suggestions pour une future enquête (Thirty Years of Religious History: Suggestions for Future Research), ♦ Archives de sciences sociales des religions, 1987, 32, 63-1, Jan-Mar, 85-114. (FRE)

¶ The problem of evaluating change from the inside is investigated, with reference to religious history. Drawing on experience in dealing with source material from the sixteenth to the twentieth centuries, some suggestions are made for studying the religious history of recent decades. The approach is based on bibliographical retrospectives combined with a study of the institutionalization of research within the academic establishment. It is emphasized that the collective actors involved in change must be identified, & the role of informal groups must be taken into account. As an example, the different types of organization & practice of two groups that superficially appear similar: the Groupe de Sociologie des Religions & the group called La Bussière are contrasted. Modified HA

88T2382

Lehman, Edward C., Jr., Sexism, Organizational Maintenance, and Localism: A Research Note, ♦ WM Sociological Analysis, 1987, 48, 3 fall, 274-282.

¶ Survey data gathered in 1983/84 from a national sample (N not given) of lay church members in England support the assertion that associations observed previously between religious sexism & internationalization of the organizational maintenance motif are spurious. While the analysis also indicates that measures of localism—the test variable—are predictive of differences in religious sexism, the initial associations between sexism & organizational concerns remain in the partials. These patterns imply that the congregational level of analysis & the perspective of local community attachments are best conceived of as separate conceptual spaces providing possible explanations of differences in religious sexism. 2 Tables, 1 Appendix, 13 References. Modified HA

88T2383

Liebersohn, Harry (Claremont Graduate School, CA 91711), Religion and Industrial Society: The Protestant Social Congress in Wilhelmine Germany, Transactions of the American Philosophical Society, 1986, 76, 6, 1-63.

¶ An analysis of the Protestant Social Congress as representative of Germany's Left-liberal, educated elite from 1890 to 1914. Particular stress is placed on the emergence of a sociological perspective in the Congress as its members confronted the structural limits of social reform. Special attention is paid to the exchange of ideas between social scientists & theologians & how this informed Germany's sociological tradition. In particular, the way in which Personallichkeit, the German Protestant idea of personal autonomy, passed over from a religious to a secular context in the Congress is outlined. Max Weber, Ernst Troeltsch, & Leopold von Wiese, three prominent sociologists, gave speeches at the Congress & took part in its discussions. Their role & the Congress's significance for their work is given special attention. 1 Table. Modified AA

88T2384

Nason-Clark, Nancy (Dept Sociology U New Brunswick, Fredericton E3B 5A3), Ordaining Women as Priests: Religious vs. Sexist Explanations for Clerical Attitudes, ♦ WM Sociological Analysis, 1987, 48, 3 fall, 259-273.

¶ Based on questionnaire & interview data, regarding the ordination of priests, obtained from Anglican clerics in southern England (N = 284), the relationship between religion & sex-role ideology is explored. The contribution of Christian symbolism toward accounting for the current position of women in the Anglican Church is also considered. Results indicate that scriptural & theological beliefs alone are unable to account for the current opposition to women priests in the Church of England. Rather, an unwillingness to accept the priesthood of women emerges as a specific example of a more pervasive conservative sex-role ideology. 7 Tables, 58 References. Modified HA

88T2385

Porterfield, Amanda (Syracuse U, NY 13210), Feminist Theology as a Revitalization Movement, ♦ WM Sociological Analysis, 1987, 48, 3 fall, 234-244.

¶ The new & influential religious movement of feminist theology in the US is analyzed from a social scientific perspective. Feminist theologians who advocate Goddess religion are distinguished from Jewish & Christian feminists on the basis of their different relationship to established religious institutions. Anthony F. C. Wallace's theory of revitalization movements (see SA 61/583968) is used to interpret the social function & context of feminist theology & its stages of development. Mary Daly considered the prophet of Goddess religion, sought to overcome women's oppression through a revitalization movement. Feminists within established religions are identified as leaders of the subsequent stage of adaptation through which feminist theology is becoming accessible to diverse religious groups, an essential step to any revitalization movement's success in transforming its culture. 34 References. Modified HA

88T2386

Remy, Jean (U Catholique Louvain, B-1348 Louvain-la-Neuve Belgium), Revalorisation de la religion populaire et recomposition du champ religieux (Popular Religion and Dynamics in the Religious Field), Recherches Sociologiques, 1987, 18, 2, 163-183. (FRE)

¶ A discussion of the meaning of popular religion & of the current search for revitalization among European Catholic parishes. An attempt is made to define the ambiguous concept "popular religion." An "ideal does. In Psychoanalysis and Anthropology: A Renewed Alliance, Sudhir Kakar (Center for the Study of Developing Societies, 29 Rajpur Rd. Delhi 110054, India) sees Obeyesekere's work as exemplifying a new approach to the incorporation of psychoanalysis in anthropology—one founded on the recognition of alternatives in psychoanalysis to classical drive theory. Obeyesekere is prepared to interpret symbols flexibly & according to their contexts, a major advantage of his work, though he could benefit from greater openness to nonclassical models in psychoanalysis. In The Power of Personal Symbols, Fitz John Porter Poole (U of California at San Diego, La Jolla) explores the theoretical potential of Obeyesekere's concept of personal symbol. In Re-Reflections on Parinirvana and Medusa, Gananath Obeyesekere (Princeton U, NJ) explores the theoretical & methodological issues raised by the various commentators, with emphasis on how to read the two books being discussed & on the relevance of psychoanalysis for anthropology. W. H. Stoddard

88T2403

———, A Review Symposium on Tambiah's Thailand Trilogy, Contributions to Indian Sociology, New Series, 1987, 21, 1, Jan-June, 111-216

* A review symposium on Stanley Jeyaraja Tambiah's Buddhism and the Spirit Cults in North-East Thailand; World Conqueror, World Renouncer: A Study of Buddhism in Thailand against a Historical Background; & The Buddhist Saints of the Forest and the Cult of Amulets: A Study in Charisma, Hagiography, Sectarianism, and Millennial Buddhism (New York: Cambridge U Press, 1970, 1976, & 1984, respectively [see listings in IRPS No. 41]). In Trajectories in Theravāda Studies with Special Reference to the Work of Stanley Tambiah, Frank E. Reynolds (Divinity School, U of Chicago, Ill) describes Theravāda studies as having four main modes, two primarily doctrinally oriented & two with more holistic concerns. Tambiah's emphasis is on the entirety of Theravāda society, & his methodology is ethnographic; he has made major contributions in both dimensions. In Theravāda Buddhism and Its Worldly Transformations in Thailand: Reflections on the Work of S. J. Tambiah, Charles F. Keyes (U of Washington, Seattle) sees as central to Tambiah's work the question of how everyday life in this world can be reconciled with a religion that seeks to renounce the world. His solution is to see the sangha, the community of Buddhist monks, as integrated into society as a whole. He also examines the impact of Thai history on this integration, in an approach that takes more aspects of Thai Buddhism into account than any other scholar has considered. In Kingship and Polity in Buddhism and Hinduism, H. L. Seneviratne (U of Virginia, Charlottesville) offers detailed comments on World Conqueror and World Renouncer, & argues that Tambiah overstates the contrast between Hindu & Buddhist kingship. In Religion and the Social Order, Romila Thapar (Center Historical Studies, Jawaharlal Nehru U, New Delhi, India) also sees Tambiah as overstating the contrast between Hindu & Buddhist kings. The ethical problems surrounding the use of force in various forms by Buddhist kings are considered. In Buddhists without History, Michael Carrithers (U of Durham, England) suggests that Tambiah's work reveals how difficult a structuralist approach to Theravāda Buddhism is to formulate. Tambiah's efforts to do so are flawed by their ultimately static image of history, despite their wealth of detail. In Monasteries, Palaces and Ambiguities: Burmese Sacred and Secular Space, F. K. Lehman (Chit Hlaing) U of Illinois, Urbana) finds Tambiah's insights so valuable as to transcend the limitations of his structuralism. Tambiah's concepts of the galactic polity & of the interplay between forest-dwelling & town-dwelling monastic communities are used to guide an analysis of the parallels between the architecture of palaces & monasteries in Burma. In At the Confluence of Anthropology, History, and Indology, Stanley J. Tambiah (Peabody Museum, Harvard U, Cambridge, Mass) describes his own writings as situated at the meeting of these three disciplines & explores the relations among the three. Several major themes are discussed & applied to contemporary Burmese & Thai society. 164 References. W. H. Stoddard ———, Symposium on Hjalmar Sundén's Role-Theory of Religion, Journal for the Scientific Study of Religion, 1987, 26, 3, Sept., 366-412.

88T2404

† A discussion of the role theory of religion developed by Hjalmar Sundén (Die Religion und die Rollen: Eine psychologische Untersuchung der Frömmigkeit [translated by Herman Muller & Suzanne Ohman from Religionen och Rollerna (Religion and Roles)] Berlin: Topelmann, 1959). In The Application of the Religio-Psychological Role Theory, Thorvald Kallstad (Uppsala U, Sweden) applies Sundén's interactive role conception of religion to the careers of three religious figures: Ignatius Loyola, John Wesley, & Ruth Dahlen. In Saint Augustine and the Psalter in the Light of Role-Psychology, Hjalmar Sundén (Uppsala U, Sweden) identifies the episode in Saint Augustine's life of the reading of the Psalms at Cassiciacum as one that has received insufficient attention from scholars. The role theory of religion offers a basis for understanding this text, but an in-depth psychological interpretation also appears necessary. In Sundén's Role Theory and Glossolalia, Nils G. Holm (Åbo Akademi, Turku, Finland) restates the main concepts of Sundén's role theory of religion & applies them to the phenomenon of glossolalia as revealed by fieldwork in Swedish-speaking Pentecostal groups in Finland. In Attribution, Roles and Religion: A Theoretical Analysis of Sundén's Role Theory of Religion and the Attributional Approach to Religious Experience, Owe Wikström (Uppsala U, Sweden) sees Sundén's theory of religion as drawing on ideas from three theoretical domains: sociology of knowledge, social psychology, & the psychology of perception. The major concepts of his theory are explored & its uses & limits are identified. In The Value of Sundén's Role-Theory Demonstrated and Tested with Respect to Religious Experiences in Meditation, Jan van der Lans (Catholic U Nijmegen, Netherlands) compares four theoretical approaches to meditation: the hypnosis model, the psychoanalytic approach, physiological approaches, & cognitive theories, such as Sundén's approach. The validity of Sundén's approach is tested using data from 35 U students who took part in a course in Zen meditation during which Ss were exposed to taped instructions that provided either a religious or a psychological frame of reference or role; it appears that this difference was associated with having or not having a religious experience. 4 Tables, 1 Appendix, 93 References. W. H. Stoddard

88T2395

Turner, Ronny E. & Harvey, Patricia (Dept Sociology Colorado State U Fort Collins 80523). Sex, Sin and Sorcery: The Social Construction of Gendered Religion. ♦ Free Inquiry in Creative Sociology 1987, 15, 2, Nov, 129-137

† An exploration of how religious myth & mystical numerology were combined to create M power systems stealing the creative power of women where possible & demigrating it into low power where necessary. A review of studies in sociology, historiography, folklore & anthropology illustrates the transformation of the Earth Mother into God the Father & the use of numerology in that transformation. The Greek Judeo-Christian M mythos extols God as Father & maleness as sacred, while characterizing the Goddess as the seductress who, with the inherent wiles of her gender, tempts humanity with her evil apples. The place of religious ideas, including the power of numbers as determinant & legitimator of social sex roles, must be addressed further. 49 References. Modified AA

88T2396

Valentova, Lubica (Instit Philosophy & Sociology Slovak Academy Sciences, Obrancov Mieru 49 81438 Bratislava Czechoslovakia). K problemom náboženského jazyka v americkej radikálnej teológii (On the Problem of Religious Language in American Radical Theology). Filozofia 1983, 38, 4, 491-501 (SLO)

† A survey of contemporary radical US Protestant thought shows that the term "God" has lost a sharply defined meaning. Many theologians doubt that human language is adequate to communicate ideas about God or his word. Neo-orthodox kerygmatic theology is contrasted with philosophical (metaphysical) approaches. Special attention is given to the linguistic theology of P. Van Buren's "The Dissolution of the Absolute" in Contemporary American Protestant Thought 1900-1970 (New York, 1973). 1 Reference. G. Prostakov

88T2397

Vernant, Jean-Pierre (Coll France, 75311 Paris Cedex 05). Formes de croyance et de rationalité en Grèce ancienne (Forms of Belief and Rationality in Ancient Greece). ♦ Archives de sciences sociales des religions 1987, 32, 63-1, Jan-Mar, 115-123 (FRE)

† An analysis of the types & functions of religious belief in archaic & classical Greece (eighth to fourth centuries BC). Belief is not an isolated entity, & the structure of belief constantly undergoes transformation. The role of religion in the sociopolitical structure must also be considered. There is no individual link to the divine without social mediation, & the realm of belief cannot be clearly divided from that of rationality. Certain forms of rationality & of belief are both inherent in social phenomena. Modified HA

88T2398

Vincent, Gilbert (Centre sociologie protestantisme Centre national recherche scientifique U Strasbourg II, 67084 Cedex France). La Rationalité herméneutique du discours théologique de Calvin (The Hermeneutic Rationality of Calvin's Theological Discourse). ♦ Archives de sciences sociales des religions 1987, 32, 63-1, Jan-Mar, 133-154 (FRE)

† Protestant theologian John Calvin's distinctive discourse can be defined in terms of various indicators, including indicators of enunciation (eg, criticism of the scholastic tradition), semantic indicators (the effacement of the cosmos- or ontotheological referential) & pragmatic indicators (providence & predestination as ecclesiological markers). In order to investigate whether all the risk of the arbitrary can thus be eliminated the hermeneutic conditions of possibility in Calvin's discourse are analyzed, guided by some of Calvin's own affirmations pertaining to how meaning is elicited in a Biblical text. The modernity of Calvin's discourse is apparent on two points: (1) By containing itself within the limits of biblical interpretation, his theology can accept the autonomous existence of scientific approaches. (2) By insisting on the interpretive responsibilities of all the faithful, his theology makes a new kind of subjectivity possible. Modified HA

88T2399

Weber, Edith (U Paris V, F-75270 Cedex 06 France). Musique et sociétés: l'hymnologie huguenote, origine et évolution dans les pays du "refuge" (Music and Societies: Huguenot Hymnology, Its Origins and Evolution in the "Refuge" Countries). ♦ Cahiers de Sociologie Economique et Culturelle, Ethnopsychologie 1987, 7, June, 115-129 (FRE)

† The part played by the collection of Huguenot hymns, dating from the sixteenth century, in the Protestant religion & community life in several European countries is examined. After the revocation of the Edict of Nantes in 1685, French Protestant refugees attempted to maintain their traditions & cultural identity through congregational song. In exile, after their integration, their mother tongue became progressively deformed but the melodies remain unchanged. The approach of hymnology in studying this phenomenon is discussed. 8 References. Modified HA

88T2400

Weimann, Gabriel (Dept Sociology U Haifa, Mount Carmel Israel). "New Religions": From Fear to Faith. ♦ Canadian Journal of Sociology/Cahiers canadiens de sociologie 1987, 12, 3, fall, 216-228

* It is suggested that a more comprehensive understanding of the proliferation of new religions in Western societies will emerge by relating the typologies of cult & occult to the needs motivating their participants. As an illustrative example, the existentialist concepts of anxiety are related to Emile Durkheim's typology of cults according to locus of divinity as presented & analyzed by Frances Westley (see SA 26 5/78J6408). The possible sets of relations between anxiety level, locus of control, & participation in the new religion were tested, using data collected in a questionnaire survey of 228 U students in Israel. Loglinear analysis reveals that certain anxiety dimensions are significantly related to interest in cults; however, the choice of cults, according to Durkheim's classification, is mediated by locus of control. By & large, the findings provide empirical evidence for the potency of the interconceptual study of new religion. 3 Tables, 1 Appendix. 44 References. Modified HA

88T2401

Zylberberg, Jacques & Côté, Pauline (U Laval, Quebec G1K 7P4). Le Reenchantement du monde: le cas du pentecôtisme catholique (The Reenchantment of the World: Catholic Pentecostalism). Recherches Sociologiques 1987, 18, 2, 129-144 (FRE)

* An interpretation of a modern religious movement, Catholic neo-Pentecostalism, based on evidence from various studies. This charismatic movement is perceived as the reaction to the disenchantment of contemporary society & the crisis of legitimacy of organized religions. The Pentecostalist movement sets itself up, independently of central religious organizations, to produce a universe that is plausible for its members, on the basis of various representations & behaviors available in the environment. Pentecostalists do not reject modern innovations, but use them as tools for re-enchantment. 25 References. Modified HA

88T2402

---, Review Symposium on Obeyesekere's Medusa and Pattini Books, Contributions to Indian Sociology, New Series 1987, 21, 1, Jan-June, 27-109

* A review symposium on Gananath Obeyesekere's Medusa's Hair: An Essay on Personal Symbols and Religious Experience & The Cult of the Goddess Pattini (both published in Chicago: U of Chicago Press, 1984 [see listings in IRPS No. 41]). In Gananath Obeyesekere and the Study of Religion, Patrick Olivelle (Indiana U, Bloomington) notes that Obeyesekere is one of the few social scientists primarily concerned with religious phenomena, with interests focused on psychoanalytic interpretation of symbols, though some of his symbolic interpretations rely on oversimplified contrasts between Hinduism & Buddhism. In How to Look at Medusa without Turning to Stone, Richard A. Shweder (U of Chicago, Ill.) sees Obeyesekere as exemplifying modern heroes who are willing to look at what terrifies them. His Medusa's Head explores the meaning of head hair, rejecting social conventionalism almost completely in favor of ideas derived from psychoanalysis about the psychobiological roots of folk symbolism. In On Female Body and Sexuality, Veena Das (U of Delhi, India) examines Obeyesekere's view of the nature of F sexuality, which is focused on an ideal-typical F personality based primarily on brahmanic texts. This approach appears to oversimplify a complex reality & to impose an excessively phallicentric view of women. In A View from Britain, R. I. Stirrat (U of Sussex, Falmer Brighton, England) finds numerous ideas in Obeyesekere's work that are systematically rejected by British social anthropology. The aim of his work is to fuse the psychological & the anthropological, & to do so, he is prepared to reject any Durkheimian ideas of autonomous social facts. The possible benefits of such an approach are examined. In Therapeutic History, E. Valentine Daniel (U of Washington, Seattle) sees The Cult of the Goddess Pattini as a work written with therapeutic aims in the psychoanalytic sense, thus spanning the gap between theory & myth as psychoanalysis in general.

1600 social control

36 sociology of law

88T2405

Bertilsson, Margarita (Lund U, S-221 00 Sweden). Justice and Social Theory. ♦ The Polish Sociological Bulletin, 1983, 1-4(61-64), 65-83

* Parameters in the concept of justice that are opposed to one another are discussed in the context of social theory, describing how formal legal systems can operate in technically correct ways & yet appear unjust in a material sense. The distinction between individual & relational justice, & formal & material justice are defined, & examples are presented. Three types of justice claims found in classical sociological theories are identified, & related to justice claims inherent in different forms of social life. It is concluded that social theories can be assessed not only in terms of propositional truth, but in terms of a scheme of rightness/goodness, ie how proposed social relations secure the moral value & the well-being of individuals & social relations. 2 Figures. F. Rasmussen

88T2406

Black, Donald (Dept Sociology U Virginia, Charlottesville 22903). Compensation and the Social Structure of Misfortune. ♦ Law and Society Review, 1987, 21, 4, winter, 563-584

* Social conditions associated with the compensatory style of conflict management are identified, variable aspects of compensation itself are addressed, & the modern trend toward a greater degree of compensatory liability of organizations for the misfortunes of individuals is examined, based on a review of the literature. Several propositions are discussed: compensation is a direct function of groups & a curvilinear function of relational distance, & is greater in upward & group-directed cases than in downward & individual-directed ones. In addition, liability varies directly with social distance & is greater in group-directed than in individual-directed cases. The modern trend toward greater organizational liability appears to be a devolution toward a pattern of collective dependency characteristic of earlier societies before the decline of kinship. 83 References. HA

88T2407

Chase, Anthony (Nova Law Center, Fort Lauderdale FL 33314). Toward a Legal Theory of Popular Culture. ♦ Wisconsin Law Review, 1986, 3, 527-569.

* The failure of US legal scholars to recognize the images of law & law veyers generated by mass culture as legitimate & important topics for scholarly critique is described, & the costs of this failure are suggested. A remedy is proposed: the creation of a systematic legal theory of US popular culture. As a starting point, cultural formats are identified (eg fiction & nonfiction TV, pop music, & advertising) that might provide fertile ground for a "primitive accumulation" of mass culture images of law & lawyers. Acceptance of this stockpile of social & anecdotal raw material as a useful resource for legal scholarship will both help legal academics gain a sense of perspective on the law from outside the confines of their own narrow discourse & help elevate the academic debate above the false dichotomy between liberal behaviorism & doctrinaire critical legal theory. Modified HA

88T2408

Daly, Kathleen (Dept Sociology Yale U, New Haven CT 06520). Discrimination in the Criminal Courts: Family, Gender, and the Problem of Equal Treatment. ♦ Social Forces, 1987, 66, 1, Sept, 152-175

* "Sex effects"-favoring women-typically found in criminal court pre-trial release & sentencing outcomes are examined drawing on data compiled in 1974/75 in New York City from interviews with defendants & review of their court records (N=2,004) & interviews with court officials (N not given). A social control/social costs framework is presented using Candace Kruttschnitt's social control arguments (see SA 34 4/86Q8391) & introducing the idea that there are social costs to punishment. Results show that initially significant sex effects are explained by defendants' familial situations. Implications are drawn for future research on gender discrimination in the criminal courts & for the problem of equal treatment of groups & individuals before the law. 4 Tables, 1 Appendix, 45 References. Modified HA

88T2409

Drass, Kriss A. & Spencer, J. William (Dept Sociology Southern Methodist U, Dallas TX 75275). Accounting for Pre-Sentencing Recommendations: Typologies and Probation Officers' Theory of Office. ♦ Social Problems, 1987, 34, 3, June, 277-293

* Many studies of social reactions to deviance have focused on how agents of social control make decisions, but little is known about how these agents produce accounts for their decisions. Research on accounts or rationales for decisions can provide important insights into the typologies of deviant actors used by agents in their daily work activities. An analysis is presented of 126 accounts that probation officers in Dallas, Texas produced as support for their evaluations of defendants during the presentencing process. Quantitative & qualitative analytic techniques are used to identify the typologies that officers employ when assessing a defendant as a high risk for probation. The concept "theory of office" is used to discuss how such typologies reflect the work perspectives used by agents in particular locations within the criminal justice system. 5 Tables, 40 References. HA

88T2410

Engel, David M. (Law School State U New York Buffalo, Amherst 14260). Law, Time, and Community. ♦ Law and Society Review, 1987, 21, 4, winter, 605-637

* Based on transcripts of open-ended interviews (N not given), two aspects of the human experience of time that were especially important for the residents of a Ru US community are explored: the sense of time's iterative character, & its linear or irreversible quality. These two ways of experiencing & conceptualizing time played a significant part in efforts by residents to define their community & interpret the social, cultural, & economic transformations it was undergoing. They were also important in the residents' efforts to frame & define conflict within the community & to determine when law should or should not be invoked. Ways in which the analysis of varying conceptions of time within a community can enhance understanding of expectations, perceptions, & values concerning law in a changing society are examined. 21 References. Modified HA

88T2411

Fischl, Richard Michael (School Law U Miami, Coral Gables FL 33124). Some Realism about Critical Legal Studies. ♦ University of Miami Law Review, 1987, 41, 3, Jan, 505-532

* Critical legal studies (CLS) are discussed in depth within the context of the history of US legal thought. Particular emphasis is on the influence of the battle between scientific jurisprudence & legal realism in the early twentieth century, & that between idealized & skeptical theories of law. Detailed discussion is offered of how CLS combines a progressive political critique & social policy analysis with a skeptical jurisprudence, & embraces the "indeterminacy argument" that for every rule there is a counterrule, exception, or legal gambit available to confuse the issue & justify contradictory results through legal reasoning. CLS argues that the idealized view of judges as mechanical, unconstrained decision-makers applying an apolitical law is inescapably flawed because of the nature of legal discourse & its connection to human experience & interaction. Critiques of CLS from a variety of sources are summarized, & some reasons for their passionate denunciation explored. K. Hyatt

88T2412

Fluehr-Lobban, Carolyn (Dept Anthropology Rhode Island Coll, Providence 02908). Islamization of Law in the Sudan. Legal Studies Forum, 1987, 11, 2, 189-204

* The roots of Islamic fundamentalism or religious revitalization in the Republic of Sudan are traced from 1884, the year of the Mahdist revolt that installed an Islamic Republic, to the present, focusing on the last decade. In 1977 the Numeiri regime began the process of a gradual Islamization of certain laws in the country. With a 30% non-Muslim population in the South & a strong tradition of secular rule, the process moved slowly until the deterioration of the Numeiri military regime in the early 1980s & the proclamation in Sept 1983 that Islamic law (Shari'a) would henceforth be the sole law in the state. The Shari'a was applied in an ex-

PUBLIUS:

THE JOURNAL OF FEDERALISM

Published by the Center for the Study of Federalism

Temple University and North Texas State University

Editors: Daniel J. Elazar and John Kincaid

PUBLIUS is a quarterly journal now in its eighteenth year of publication. It is dedicated to the study of federal principles, institutions, and processes. PUBLIUS publishes articles, research notes, and book reviews on the theoretical and practical dimensions of the American federal system and intergovernmental relations and other federal systems throughout the world.

Forthcoming issues will feature articles on bicomunal polities, Reagan's New Federalism, land and liberty, federalism in Germany, rural communities in the federal system, federalism and military rule in Nigeria, and much more as well as the PUBLIUS Annual Review of American Federalism.

EDITORIAL ADVISORY BOARD: Thomas J. Anton, Samuel H. Beer, Lewis A. Dexter, Ivo D. Duchacek, Max Frenkel, Robert B. Hawkins, Jr., A.E. Dick Howard, L. Adele Jinadu, Irving Kristol, E. Lester Levine, William S. Livingston, Donald S. Lutz, Alexandre Marc, Elinor Ostrom, Vincent Ostrom, Neal R. Peirce, William H. Riker, Harry N. Scheiber, Ira Sharkansky, Donald V. Smiley, David B. Walker, Murray L. Weidenbaum, Frederick Wirt, Deil S. Wright.

ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTION RATES: Individual $20; Institutional $30; Student and Retired, $15. (Add $5.00 for foreign postage.)

Subscriptions and manuscript submissions should be sent to:

PUBLIUS: THE JOURNAL OF FEDERALISM
c/o Department of Political Science, North Texas State University
Denton, Texas 76203-5338 (817) 565-2313

cess and Moments of Silence: The Equal Status of Religious Speech by Private Speakers. ♦ Northwestern University Law Review, 1986, 81, 1 fall, 1-67

A proposal for a simple rule defending the equal access of student religious groups to public high school facilities in the US. Recent court decisions on equal access & moment-of-silence laws are reviewed, & arguments against equal access are considered. The central issue—that allowing religious speech in high schools might constitute endorsement—is addressed. Although some evangelicals & fundamentalists attack the constitutional safeguard to free speech, their right to speak should be protected as vigilantly as the rights of political groups, & government efforts to endorse or oppose them or any other religious groups should be fought. F. Rasmussen

88T2422

Maroules, Nicholas (U California San Diego, La Jolla 92093), The Social Organization of Sentencing in Alaska's Superior Courts. ♦ Dissertation Abstracts International. 4 The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 47, 11, May, 4197-A
Available from UMI, Ann Arbor MI. Order No. DA8705605.

88T2423

Marshall, William P. (Law School Case Western Reserve U, Cleveland OH 44106), Discrimination and the Right of Association. ♦ Northwestern University Law Review, 1986, 81, 1, fall, 68-105
An exploration of the issues raised by the application of antidiscrimination requirements to private organizations. Specifically, focus is on groups that discriminate based on ethnicity including race, religion, & sexuality. Problems raised by gender are discussed only tangentially. The antidiscrimination/private organization issue is thought to be capable of resolution without need for a cataclysmic balancing between freedom & equality. Close inspection of the problem reveals that the conflict, in most cases, is more apparent than real. Careful definition of the competing concerns avoids overstating the constitutional case. F. Rasmussen

88T2424

Millay, John R. (Dept Sociology Eastern Oregon State Coll, Le Grande 97850), Prohibition Pacific Style: The Emergence of a Law Banning Alcohol in Truk. Legal Studies Forum, 1987, 11, 2, 165-187
An ordinance to prohibit the sale & consumption of alcoholic beverages on Moen Island in Truk, Micronesia, became law on 14 Jan 1978. The social processes leading to the creation of that law are described. Three major inputs to the law-making process are highlighted: (1) the role of church women's groups acting as moral entrepreneurs seeking to impose their conception of justice & morality with a new law, (2) bureaucratic needs as perceived by the Moen Municipal Council, & (3) interest group opposition to the law from young men & liquor businesses. The prohibition ordinance is one manifestation of a larger trend toward decreased dependence on formal legal control mechanisms in a rapidly changing society. 49 References. AA

88T2425

Milovanovic, Dragan (State U New York, Albany 12203), Weberian and Marxist Analysis of Law: Development and Functions of Law in a Capitalist Mode of Production. ♦ Dissertation Abstracts International. 4 The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 1, July, 221-A
Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8709273.

88T2426

Musto, David F. (Yale School Medicine, New Haven CT 06510-8009), Quarantine and the Problem of AIDS. The Milbank Quarterly, 1986, 64(supplement 1), 97-117
Throughout history, quarantine has been a response not only to disease transmission, but also to popular demands for a boundary between diseased people & "respectable" people who hope to remain healthy. Historical sources are used to demonstrate that efforts to control epidemics—leprosy, cholera, tuberculosis, drug addiction—through quarantine of large numbers of people have never been successful. Acquired immune deficiency syndrome (AIDS) patients share characteristics often invoked in defense of quarantine, they have reason to fear anachronistic & unenlightened outrage. 19 References. HA

88T2427

Nicholson, M. E. R. (Basque Studies Program U Nevada, Reno 89557), Ethno-Ideology's Role in Legal Behavior: Another Dimension of Ideological Pluralism. Legal Studies Forum, 1987, 11, 2, 145-163.

¶ Sally Engle Merry's conclusion that legal ideologies are constructed as a direct result of experiences with the court system ("Concepts of Law and Justice among Working-Class Americans: Ideology as Culture," Legal Studies Forum, 1985, 9, 1, 59) is challenged by evidence that the French Basques have maintained a distinct group ideology that has guided their legal behavior apart from any contact with, & often in opposition to, the dominant legal ideology. This "ethno-ideology"—a set of group-based interpretive categories & symbols developed over time—is shown to be based on the Basques' unique language, cultural antiquity, ancient homeland, & written law, & has worked to insure their cultural continuity in the face of different dominant ideologies since Roman times. Their legal practices are based on a philosophy of using mediation rather than physical aggression or reliance on the courts to settle internal conflicts, & they will ignore, avoid, or circumvent expressions of dominant ideology that run counter to their own ethno-ideology. The Basque example offers evidence of why legal theorists need to consider the ethno-ideology dimension in their attempts to develop realistic hypotheses of legal behavior & ideological pluralism. 1 Chart, 58 References. K. Hyatt

88T2428

Pojezná, Anna (Ústav štátu a práva Československa Akademie Vied, Národný Tr 3 CS-111 42 Prague), K významu axiologie pre vedy o štáte a práve (To the Relevance of Axiology for the Sciences on State and Law), Filozofia, 1980, 35, 1, 69-72. (CZE)
¶ An argument is presented for the relevance of axiology to the science of the state. It is essential to distinguish between the axiological aspects of the study of law as a social phenomenon & the axiological aspects of law itself. Modified HA

88T2429

Rhode, Deborah L. (Instit Research Women & Gender Stanford U, CA 94305), Association and Assimilation. ♦ Northwestern University Law Review, 1986, 81, 1, fall, 106-145.
¶ An exploration of the historical, SE, & legal background of US single-sex clubs & schools. Of particular concern is the dual role of such institutions both in expressing individual autonomy & fostering collective goals, & in denying individual opportunity & perpetuating collective subordination. It is concluded that such separatist affiliations have served both to empower women & exclude them from circles in which power is exercised. Accordingly, a better framework for analysis would employ a contextual approach that recognizes the different functions & consequences of all-M & all-F institutions. AA

88T2430

Rosen, Lawrence (Princeton U, NJ 08544), Alternative Courts and the Concept of Community. ♦ U Comparative Studies in Society and History, 1987, 29, 3, July, 558-565.
¶ A review essay on Jerold S. Auerbach's Justice without Law? (New York: Oxford U Press, 1983 (see listing in IRPS No 41)). Auerbach traces through US history the theme of tension between law & the community, concluding that the individualism of the US prevents the emergence of genuine community & compels reliance on formal legal processes. Regrettably, Auerbach is imprecise & somewhat romantic about the actual nature of community, & has failed to resolve the tension between his own attachments to community & to individualism. A more useful approach might be based on distinguishing between culture & law. It is not necessarily as important as Auerbach suggests whether alternative forms of dispute resolution are integral to or separate from the state apparatus; what is crucial is that dispute resolution be rooted in cultural norms. W. H. Stoddard

88T2431

Sajó, András, Racionalitások és materiális igazságosság a "modern" jogban (Rationalities and Material Justice in "Modern" Law), Szociológia, 1982, 2, 185-200. (HUN)
¶ The legal structures of bourgeois societies reflect the partial rationalities of commodity production & bureaucracy. Present-day departmental government is characterized by a new type of partial rationality, i.e., scientific rationality, which leads to a decay of the traditional structure of the law, especially its formal deductive character. Trends to delegitimation emerge in various societies, but do not make law less important;

tremely harsh fashion, to non-Muslims & Muslims alike, representing to many observers the abuse of the religiously based law for political reasons & also inflaming the ongoing civil war in the south. When the Numeiri regime was overthrown by popular action in Apr 1985, this harsh use of the law was brought to an abrupt halt, but the new government under Sadiq al Mahdi has failed to deal effectively with the future of Islamic law in the Sudan. 10 References. Modified AA

88T2413

Foster, D. H., Sandler, D., & Davis, D. M. (Instit Criminology U Cape Town, Rosebank 7700 South Africa), Detention, Torture and the Criminal Justice Process in South Africa, International Journal of the Sociology of Law, 1987, 15, 2, May, 105-120

† A report on an empirical study involving 175 interviews with former security law detainees in South Africa. The substantial majority of detainees reported being subjected to both physical & psychological torture & abuse, despite state claims to the contrary. Details of various forms of torture are presented, along with reactions by government & its supporters to the findings. Under recent emergency legislation, detention numbers have soared, yet both state & courts of law have continued to legitimate the brutality of South African law with regard to the system of detention. Extracts from trials & statements by government ministers are provided. 4 Tables, 8 References. AA

88T2414

Gadacz, Rene R. (Faculty Business U Alberta, Edmonton T6G 2R6), Folk Law and Legal Pluralism: Issues and Directions in the Anthropology of Law in Modernizing Societies, Legal Studies Forum, 1987, 11, 2, 125-144

† A new orientation for the anthropology of law focusing on the idea of legal pluralism is proposed that entails using studies of folk or customary law reflexively, adopting a conflict of laws perspective, & examining state or official law to see how it can be changed. The assumptions are that state law, by ignoring pluralism, commits injustice & that folk law can successfully challenge the dominance of "official" law. The processes of the imposition of official law as a matter of national policy in modernizing & developing countries is examined, & it is concluded that while customary law is recognized as a competing ideology, it is invariably operationalized according to the criteria of the rule of law & appropriated for the use of the state. The consequences for economic & social equity are profound. However, the premises on which the rule of law is founded are increasingly called into question & new models of law are emerging that are sensitive to social context, social change, & cultural pluralism. 78 References. AA

88T2415

Gostin, Larry (Dept Health Policy & Management Harvard School Public Health, Boston MA 02115), The Future of Communicable Disease Control: Toward a New Concept in Public Health Law, The Milbank Quarterly, 1986, 64(supplement 1), 79-96

† In the US the exercise of compulsory public health powers for the common good of the community, though rooted in constitutional authority, involves a potentially massive infringement of individual liberty, autonomy, & privacy. Yet, public health statutes do not reflect modern conceptions in either science or law. Most are structurally obsolete & lack criteria for judicial oversight & impartial decision making. Guidelines for a model statute are proposed to protect both communal & personal interests. 3 References. HA

88T2416

Hembroff, Larry A. (Dept Sociology & Anthropology Radford U, VA 24142), The Seriousness of Acts and Social Contexts: A Test of Black's Theory of the Behavior of Law, American Journal of Sociology, 1987, 93, 2, Sept, 322-347

† Several of the primary propositions constituting D. Black's (The Behavior of Law, New York: Academic Press, 1976) theory of the behavior of law are tested. The data consist of judgments elicited in interviews with 141 adult residents of Radford, VA, about the seriousness of acts embedded in social contexts, which are varied systematically to represent the theory's five structural factors: type of act, amount of harm, integration/organization, rank/respectability, & conventionality. The results generally support Black's theory, although several problems are noted regarding two of his propositions. 4 Tables, 30 References. HA

88T2417

Humphrey, John A. & Fogarty, Timothy J. (Dept Sociology U North Carolina, Greensboro NC 27412), Race and Plea Bargained Outcomes: A Research Note, WM Social Forces, 1987, 66, 1, Sept, 176-182.

† The criminal sentencing of M burglary defendants is analyzed within the context of plea negotiations & between southern & nonsouthern judicial jurisdictions based on data collected in 1978 from the court records of 3,149 felony cases in 6 US Ur areas. In the southern jurisdictions, the odds of imprisonment markedly increase among defendants who are racial minorities or have been previously convicted of a felony. Support is given to Ruth D. Peterson's & John Hagan's contention that the effect of race on criminal sentencing is context specific (see SA 32 2 84N8271). 2 Tables, 21 References. Modified HA

88T2418

Kahn, Ronald (Dept Government Oberlin Coll, OH 44074), The Intersection of Policy and Rights Principles on the Burger Court: Towards a Social Science of Jurisprudence, Legal Studies Forum, 1987, 11, 1, 5-28

† An analysis of policy & rights principles throughout the history of the US Supreme Court, focusing on their role in judicial decision making. Policy principles are justices' deeply held beliefs about where constitutional decision-making power should be located, rights principles are beliefs about whether legally enforceable claims for individual powers, rights, privileges, & immunities are guaranteed under the Constitution statutes, & precedent-based common law. Systematic, qualitative analysis of cases shows that judicial decision making can only be understood by exploring the tension between policy & rights in principles, the bases for court choices are not as different among the various areas of public law as legalist-oriented scholars indicate, & all justices have both policy & rights principles that are in conflict & inform their judicial choices. Modern constitutional theory, segmented between scholars who advocate either a process or a rights-based jurisprudence, cannot provide an adequate understanding of the nature of judicial decision making on the Burger/Rehnquist Court nor does it allow comparison of judicial politics & doctrine among the eras of the Supreme Court. Modified AA

88T2419

Kleinman, Mark A. R. (John F. Kennedy School Government Harvard U, Cambridge MA 02138), Liberalism and Vice Control, WM Journal of Policy Analysis and Management, 1987, 6, 2, winter, 242-247.

† An analysis of the imposition of legal restrictions on the consumption of those goods & services considered vices in light of the liberal assumption that individuals are better judges of what will or will not contribute to their own well being than the state. Assumptions underlying the liberal preference for free choice are discussed, & conditions for overriding those assumptions are described. Five justifications for the control of a vice are: (1) external costs in consumption, (2) external costs in production, (3) behavioral consequences of consumption, (4) citizenship & personal responsibility, & (5) failures of individual self-control. Vice control policy based on these principles is discussed, & differences from current policy are illustrated. F. Rasmussen

88T2420

Kudriavtsev, V. N. (Soviet Academy Sciences, Leninsky Prospekt 14 Moscow V-71), Yuridicheskie issledovaniya-na uroven' novykh zadach (Legal Studies. To the Level of New Tasks), Sovetskoye Gosudarstvo i Pravo, 1987, 61, 6, June, 3-11 (RUS)

† An article based on a report presented at the all-Union conference of lawyers held in Moscow, USSR, on 2-4 Dec 1986. The objective conditions of a new stage in socialist development have created problems that require a radical improvement of the state & of legal mechanisms. As a result, the significance of legal science has also increased. Four major goals are specified for applied legal science: (1) legal reorganization of economic mechanisms to enhance the functioning of the economy as a whole; (2) development of the political system, of Soviet democracy, & ultimately of socialist self-government; (3) consolidation of the legal system & improvement of public & official knowledge of the law; & (4) solution of problems in international law, especially creation of a comprehensive system of international security & provision of universal peace. Modified HA

88T2421

Laycock, Douglas (School Law U Texas, Austin 78712), Equal Ac-

Jørgen Graversen (U of Aarhus, Denmark) notes recent revisions to custody, visitation rights, & guardianship in Danish family law. In England: The Trumping of Parental Rights, M. D. A. Freeman reviews major family law changes in England. In Federal Republic of Germany: Accommodating to Social Change after the Major Reforms, Rainer Frank (U of Freiburg, Breisgau, Federal Republic of Germany) discusses post-WWII changes in laws regarding maintenance after divorce, cohabitation, artificial insemination, adoption, marriage, & international family law. In Finland: More Rights for Children, Matti Savolainen (Ministry of Justice, Helsinki, Finland) reviews reforms in family law back to 1970, including laws on children, family names, matrimonial law, & artificial insemination & in vitro fertilization. In France: The Reform Wagon Rolls Again, Jacqueline Rubellin-Devichi (Centre de droit de la famille, U of Jean Moulin, Lyon, France) notes legal change in such areas as economic consequences of divorce, divorce & children, matrimonial property, & cohabitation. In Greece: Towards Freedom from Discrimination, George Koumantos (U of Athens, Greece) notes the lateness of Greek reforms of family law, & describes current reforms. In Iran: Family Law after the Islamic Revolution, Albert Bernardi discusses the law of marriage, divorce, & personal status of religious minorities under Iran's current system of Islamic family law. In Ireland: Waiting for Divorce, William Duncan (Trinity Coll, Dublin, Ireland) recounts the history of efforts to legalize divorce in Ireland, & notes such other problems as recognition of foreign divorces, annulment of marriage, & child care & protection. In Israel: Calm before the Storm, Ariel Rosen-Zvi (Tel-Aviv U, Ramat-Aviv, Israel) emphasizes the depth of the Supreme Court's involvement in such issues as matrimonial property, cohabitation, & inheritance by spouses. In Japan: The Rise of Children, Ichiro Shimazu (Soka U, Tokyo, Japan) reviews developments in 1985 that reflect a general shift in emphasis within Japanese society to the needs of children. In The Netherlands: Family Law, More and More, Madzy Rood-de Boer discusses major Dutch trends in legislation, law reform, & administration of justice. In New Zealand: Re- lections Five Years after Reform, Bill Atkin (Victoria U, Wellington, New Zealand) examines how New Zealand has adapted to major reforms in family law as of 1980 over the five years since those reforms. In Norway: Reforming the Law of Divorce, Peter Lødrup (U of Oslo, Blindern, Norway) discusses ongoing changes in the law of divorce as influenced by cooperation among the five Nordic countries on family law reform. In Poland: Denying Paternity, Wanda Stojanowska (Instytut Państwa & Prawa, Polish Academy of Sciences, Warsaw) reviews the important Supreme Court decisions of 1985. In Scotland: Family Finances and Property Reformed, Elaine E. Sutherland (U of Edinburgh, Scotland) discusses the 1985 passage of the Family Law (Scotland) Act. In South Africa: Politics, Society and the Family, June Sinclair (Faculty of Law, U of Witwatersrand, Johannesburg, South Africa) discusses legal changes regarding children, sexual offenses, marriage, divorce, & donations & tax duty. In Soviet Union: The Transition to the Gorbachev Era, William E. Butler (Centre of Socialist Legal Systems, University Coll, London, England) discusses changes in Soviet law regarding marriage, divorce, alimony, division of marital property, parental rights, & the campaign against alcoholism. In Sweden: Paternity Developments-National and International, Åke Saldeen (Uppsala U, Sweden) reports on the Act on International Paternity Matters of 1985 & some paternity cases from the Supreme Court. In Switzerland: Further Steps towards Equality, Jacques Michel Grossen (U of Neuchâtel, Switzerland) discusses the movement in Switzerland toward greater equality of the sexes. In Tanzania: More Protection for Children, B. A. Rwezaura (U of Dar es Salaam, Tanzania) discusses three major areas of legal reform: adoption law, affiliation law, & jurisdiction of marriage conciliatory boards. In United States of America: All Quiet on the Federal Front, Lynn D. Wardle (Brigham Young U, Provo, Utah) sees 1985 as having been a relatively quiet year, but discusses some legal changes & forecasts likely developments during 1986. In Yugoslavia: More Rights for Cohabitants and Children, Mira Alinčić notes changes in rights to marry, divorce, parent-child relations, & mutual support obligations within the family. W. H. Stoddard

53 police, penology, & correctional problems

88T2440

Baroody-Hart, Cynthia & Farrell, Michael P. (c/o Farrell-State U New York Buffalo, Amherst 14260). The Subculture of Serious Artists in a Maximum Security Prison. Urban Life, 1986-87, 15, 3-4, Oct-Jan, 421-448.

* Findings from a 1981 ethnographic study of the art world of "serious artists" in a maximum security prison in the US are presented, based on extensive interviews with inmate-artists & guards, both alone & in groups, & direct observation of the settings in which inmates "do art." It is found that serious artists are disproportionately older, white, long-term prisoners who adopt a strategy of withdrawal into a network of friends to escape the psychological & physical stresses of dealing with the guards & the more violent inmates. Becoming a serious artist involves a career that includes passage through the prison art program, sales within prison, recognition by established artists, sales to outside organizations that sponsor prison art, & sales at public art shows. Each advance in the career provides access to more resources, especially self-esteem & money, which frees the inmate from the prison economy. Recognition by the network of serious artists facilitates a career by providing access to exchange of supplies, criticism, information about markets, & socialization into skills of dealing with the guards & dangerous inmates. 19 References. HA

88T2441

Bastard, Benoit & Cardia-Vonèche, Laura (Centre sociologie organisation, 19 rue Amélie F-75007 Paris France). Normative oder soziale Logik? Eine Untersuchung der Unterhalts- und Entschädigungsfestsetzung nach Ehescheidung (Normative or Social Logic? An Investigation of the Determination of Support and Compensation after Divorce). Zeitschrift für Sozialisationsforschung und Erziehungssoziologie, 1987, 8, 1, June, 74-85. (GER)

* Principles employed in the resolution of divorce cases are derived from a study of 490 divorce decrees in Geneva, Switzerland, in 1980. The increase in the number of divorces is argued to have caused a move away from a "normative logic" of blame, sanctions, & compensation, toward a "social logic" of consensus & sharing of responsibility & resources. While such factors as commitment to the marriage & respective responsibility for the breakdown may be considered, the predominant principle in judicial practice has been a search for mutually agreed-upon solutions. 2 Tables, 24 References. Modified HA

88T2442

Boigeol, Anne (Centre recherche interdisciplinaire Vaucluse, 54 rue de Garches F-92420 France). Aus Anlass eines neuen Gesetzes: Überlegungen zur Unterhaltsbetreuung in Frankreich (On the Occasion of a New Law: Reflections on the Collection of Maintenance in France). Zeitschrift für Rechtssoziologie, 1987, 8, 1, June, 57-73. (GER)

Translated from French by Dieter Martiny.

* The growth of the problem of nonpayment & noncollection of child support in France over the past fifteen years is discussed. The complexities of the problem are outlined & are shown to defy simplistic solutions. Various causes for nonpayment are considered. Legislative responses to the problem are based on two approaches: (1) the improvement in legal recourse open to the party entitled to support; (2) the development of social & familial protection, with the expansion of eligibility criteria for certain benefits. An attempt at combining these two solutions is demonstrated in the reform law of 12 Dec 1984, which provides for the advance payment & collection of child support. It is claimed that the pre-existing framework of social & familial protection significantly limits the effectiveness of such measures. 26 References. Modified HA

88T2443

Bridges, George S., Crutchfield, Robert D. & Simpson, Edith E. (Dept Sociology DK-40 U Washington, Seattle 98195). Crime, Social Structure and Criminal Punishment: White and Nonwhite Rates of Imprisonment. Social Problems, 1987, 34, 4, Oct, 345-361.

* An examination of how various aspects of community social structure differentially affect criminal punishments administered to whites & nonwhites. County-level data from the state of Wash are used to regress white & nonwhite rates of imprisonment on measures of crime & arrest rates, county social structure, & court workload. This analysis indicates that nonwhites are particularly likely to be sentenced to prison in urbanized counties & in counties with relatively large minority populations. Material from interviews with justice officials (N not provided) is presented, which sheds light on the perceptual & political processes that link structural conditions to patterns of criminal punishment. 1 Table, 1 Figure, 1 Appendix, 66 References. Modified HA rather, they generate a more technical, consequence-oriented bureaucratic law. Neither the legislator nor the law court can fully consider consequences. Material justice, though it seems to contradict the criterion of rationality, is in fact fully compatible with the semiscientific, technically charged & limited-rationality structures of modern law. Material justice also allows fuller consideration of consequences. 48 References. Modified HA

88T2432

Sajo, Andras & Colling, Gyorgy (Inst Legal & Administrative Sciences, Orszaghaz u 30 H-1014 Budapest Hungary), Law-Making as Administrative Behaviour: The Case of Investment Regulation in Hungary, International Journal of the Sociology of Law 1987, 15, 2, May, 209-221

† Lawmaking legal norm creation is analyzed as an organizational reaction to uncertainty, based on participant observation of 29 regulatory processes between 1974 & 1979 in Hungarian public bureaucracies. Public agencies in Hungary are responsible for government (public) investment & for the gross national investment, as realized by autonomous state-owned enterprises. The data reveal that the authorities were unable to cope with the problems of high investment outlays, & reacted in a way that resembles J. G. March's & J. P. Olsen's "garbage-can" model (Ambiguity and Choice in Organizations, Universitetsforlaget, Bergen, 1976). A standard reaction to uncertainty is recurrent lawmaking, eg. the duration of life of all the relevant rules & regulations observed was about 13 months. Case studies of 50 Hungarian investment regulation projects indicate that lawmaking & its qualitative deterioration can be explained in terms of administrative behavior. It is concluded that the inclination, especially in Eastern-Central Europe, toward the selective use of law & lawmaking as legal regulation is cheap & has sufficient publicity & weight to appease the public. 12 References. Modified AA

88T2433

Savenberg, Joachim J., The Making of Criminal Law Norms in Welfare States: Economic Crime in West Germany, ♦ Law and Society Review, 1987, 21, 4, winter, 529-561

† A cognitive mapping approach is used to investigate the genesis of criminal law norms against economic crime in West Germany. Four theoretical approaches can be derived from the interaction of two dimensions: differentiation vs Marxist theory, & functionalist vs conflict-group theory. Focusing on interests, anticipated functions, & conflict lines, the argumentation structures in the minutes of a Nov 1983 Bundestag judicial committee debate concerning the criminalization of price fixing in cases of public tender were coded for causal relations & concepts, identified by speaker, so as to produce cognitive maps. The results show that the rationalities of politicians are oriented to dominance groups & power, not policy, communicative relatedness between representatives of different political parties is low, & cognitive maps are restricted & indicate legitimacy purposes, not policy rationality. 2 Tables, 5 Figures, 59 References. Modified HA

88T2434

Stryker, Robin Sue (U Wisconsin, Madison 53706), Limits of Technocratization of the Law: The Elimination of the NLRB's Division of Economic Research, ♦ Dissertation Abstracts International, 4, The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 47, 12(1), June, 4523-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor MI. Order No. DA8701876.

88T2435

Symes, Pamela (Lucy Cavendish Coll, Cambridge CB3 0BU England), Property, Power, and Dependence: Critical Family Law, Journal of Law and Society, 1987, 14, 2, summer, 199-216

† An agenda for critical family law is proposed that emphasizes the need to expose myths about the family to reveal the structurally imbalanced power relations between its members. Lawyers must become more than mere technicians & be willing to expose the societal & legal structures that generate & maintain exploitation, particularly that of dependent women & children. The traditional relationship between property & power has changed, & new legal standards are required to protect "new" property, eg. job security & basic human rights. It is suggested that the real measure of property is freedom from dependence & the ability to effect change & exercise free choice; women are often restricted from property & economic freedom by various forms of dependence. Three major problem areas, each rooted in the public/private dichotomy that underlies critical family law, are explored—protection, poverty, & parenthood, & some suggestions for change in legal thinking about these issues are offered. K Hyatt

88T2436

van de Bunt, Hendrik Geert (Janskerkhof 16, Utrecht, Netherlands), Public Prosecutors in the Netherlands, The Netherlands Journal of Sociology/Sociologia Neerlandica, 1987, 23, 2, Oct, 102-115

† Participant observation data on public prosecutors in the Netherlands are presented. Three roles of the public prosecutor are distinguished—magistrate, government employee, & case manager & important characteristics of each role are summarized. Results offer some evidence as to why efforts by the Openbaar Ministerie to transform public prosecutors into a policy body were unsuccessful. 20 References. Modified HA

88T2437

White, Lawrence T. (Dept Psychology Beloit Coll, WI 53511), Juror Decision Making in the Capital Penalty Trial: An Analysis of Crimes and Defense Strategies, Law and Human Behavior, 1987, 11, 2, June, 113-130

† The juror penalty decision process is examined, & the efficacy of various defense strategies is assessed, based on the results of an experimental study of Coll students ($N = 232$) participating in a mock jury deciding death penalty cases. Four strategies were tested: (1) an anti-capital punishment defense, (2) a social history defense, (3) a mental illness defense, & (4) no defense. Three capital crimes were included: robbery-murder with accidental, unplanned violence, robbery-murder with wanton violence, & multiple murder. A model of penalty decision making is proposed & factors influencing decision making are explored. Further research is suggested. 6 Tables, 2 Figures, 17 References. † Rasmussen

88T2438

Yeager, Peter C. (Dept Sociology Boston U, MA 02215), Structural Bias in Regulatory Law Enforcement: The Case of the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency, U.S. Social Problems, 1987, 34, 4, Oct, 330-344

† The utility & importance of merging the two distinct, yet related, lines of inquiry that have been pursued in connection with illegal business activity are demonstrated. One tradition has sought to isolate the organizational &/or financial characteristics that may lead to such behavior on the part of firms; the other has investigated the political economic relations that influence legislation & enforcement efforts directed at business behavior. Government data on the Environmental Protection Agency's enforcement of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act in NJ is used to analyze a structural model that links firm & regulatory characteristics to determine whether systematic biases operate in regulatory law enforcement. The results suggest that ostensibly neutral legal structures necessarily tend to favor more powerful businesses & to burden smaller companies disproportionately. Smaller firms appear more frequently on official lists of violators, indicating that regulatory law reflects & reproduces systemic inequalities. 2 Tables, 1 Figure, 41 References. HA

88T2439

—, Annual Survey of Family Law 1985, Volume 9, U.S. Journal of Family Law, 1986-87, 25, 1, Oct, 1-286

† A review of recent developments in family law in twenty-nine countries throughout the world. In Argentina: Tradition and Social Reality, Mario J. Bendersky notes two major developments: equal rights for illegitimate children, & equal parental duties for mothers & fathers. In Australia: The Beginnings of a New Phase, Frank Bates (U of Tasmania Hobart, Australia) examines recent court decisions, changes in the states regarding unformalized relationships & adoption, & the operation of the Family Law Act. In Belgium: Reforming Paternity, Marie-Thérèse Meulders-Klein (Centre de droit de la famille, U of Louvain, Belgium) reviews changes in Belgian family law. In Brazil: Reform in Prospect, João Baptista Villela reviews recent legislation, proposals for reform, & judicial decisions. In Canada: The Charter of Rights Begins to Bite, Alastair Bissett-Johnson & Nicholas Bala (Dalhousie Law School Halifax, Nova Scotia) note major changes in federal laws regarding family matters & young offenders. In The People's Republic of China: Some General Observations on Family Law, Michael Palmer describes family law in China as providing general models of correct conduct based on ideology. In Czechoslovakia: The Importance of Recent Changes in the Law, Jiří F. Haderka (Regional Court Division of Appeal, Ostrava Czechoslovakia) lists new & amended family law statutes from 1982 to 1985 & explains their content. In Denmark: Custody Reform, turning large numbers of admissions from prisoners. It is included that the extensive use of this practice is based not on a desire to catch undetected offenders, nor on the needs of victims, but on an urge to present a public relations image of police effectiveness. 2 Tables, 1 Figure. Modified AA

88T2453

Homant, Robert J. (School Education & Human Services, 4001 West McNichols Rd Detroit MI 48221). Ten Years After: A Follow-Up of Therapy Effectiveness. Journal of Offender Counseling, Services and Rehabilitation, 1986, 10, 3, spring, 51-57.
 * Results are reported of a 1984 follow-up (based on prison records) of an original group of 92 inmates of a Wisconsin state prison who had been assigned to a group therapy or a control condition in 1974. The original study (Homant, Robert J., "Therapy Effectiveness in a Correctional Institution," Offender Rehabilitation, 1976, 1, 101-113) found a significant improvement in the institutional behavior of the therapy Ss. The follow-up, however, failed to find any significant differences between experimental & control Ss. There were nonsignificant trends for better adjustment of follow-up Ss to have been from the control group, to have had fewer psychotherapy contacts, & to have had poorer institutional adjustment. Overall, 44.3% of the Ss showed successful post-release adjustment for 1 year; only 12.5% had been reincarcerated at the time of the follow-up. Modified HA

88T2454

Hourihan, Kevin (Dept Geography University Coll, Cork Ireland). Local Community Involvement and Participation in Neighbourhood Watch. A Case-Study in Cork, Ireland. Urban Studies, 1987, 24, 2, Apr, 129-136.
 * It is often assumed that community policing will develop as a response to local crime & out of a sense of collective solidarity. This was examined in Cork, Ireland, through a 1984 city-wide questionnaire survey relating to people's attitudes to neighborhood watch & their willingness to participate in it, to their perceptions of local crime, their experiences of it, & their involvement in a range of local community behaviors. Discriminant analysis shows that the effect of crime is complicated. Serious crime deters involvement, although when this is held constant, victimization to some offences results in a greater willingness to join. Of the community variables, only involvement in a community organization & strong value orientations encourage participation. 2 Tables, 27 References. Modified HA

88T2455

Jacobs, Pearl (New York Instit Technology, Old Westbury 11568). Women in Police Work: What's the Attraction? ♦ Free Inquiry in Creative Sociology, 1987, 15, 2, Nov, 213-217.
 * An exploration of the influence of family members on women's decisions to become police officers via analysis of interview data obtained in 1981 from 30 New York City F officers & in 1985 from 41 Nassau County NY officers. Results indicate that the example of a working mother & the desire for economic independence were strong factors in a woman's decision to become a police officer. 35 References. Modified AA

88T2456

Jones, Richard Statler (Iowa State U, Ames 50010), Mitchellville: A Study of the Adaptation Responses of Women in Prison. ♦ Dissertation Abstracts International: A The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 47, 11, May, 4196-A.
 Available from UMI, Ann Arbor MI. Order No. DA8703718.

88T2457

Keenan, Michael, The Effects of Prison Academic Programs on Inmates' Disciplinary Infraction Behavior. ♦ Dissertation Abstracts International: A The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 47, 11, May, 4196-A-4197-A.
 Available from UMI, Ann Arbor MI. Order No. DA8706349.

88T2458

Lutton, R. (Open U, Milton Keynes MK7 6AA England). Crime, Crime Prevention and Insurance. ♦ Dissertation Abstracts International: European Abstracts, 1987, 48, 1, spring, 60-61.
 Available from UMI; contact the degree-granting university.

88T2459

Marks, Denton & Vining, Aidan (Policy Analysis Division U British Columbia, Vancouver V6T 1Y8). Prison Labor Markets: The Supply Issue. Policy Sciences, 1986, 19, 1, July, 83-111.

* Putting prisoners to work has widespread appeal in the US, but the nature of prison labor markets suggests that prisoners may have little incentive to work. Official statistics indicate that the inmate population exhibits sociodemographic & psychological characteristics that correlate highly with labor market difficulties. Moreover, work incentives are bounded by both a guaranteed minimum standard of living & severe restrictions on the uses of earnings; prison is essentially a ration regime. The impact of these institutional arrangements also depends on the duration of the prisoner's remaining sentence & expected remaining lifetime. There is little evidence bearing on these concerns, & experimental analysis is proposed. 3 Tables, 1 Figure, 1 Appendix, 84 References. HA

88T2460

Marquart, James W. & Roebuck, Julian B. (Sam Houston State U, Huntsville TX 77340). Institutional Control and the Christmas Festival in a Maximum Security Penitentiary. Urban Life, 1986-87, 15, 3-4, Oct-Jan, 449-473.

* The relationship between the social structure of a southern penitentiary & the character of its Christmas festival is analyzed for the years 1981 & 1982, prior to & after court-ordered reforms resulting from the Ruiz v Estelle case. Data were collected via interviews with prisoners, guards, & key informants, as well as from observation & institutional records. Prior to the reforms, Christmas involved a vibrant collective celebration during which the normally brutal system of inmate control was temporarily relaxed & both inmates & guards engaged in a wide range of unusual behaviors. The reforms, which made the prison's system of control more bureaucratic & legalistic, were accompanied by the decline & near disappearance of the festival. The findings show that different social structures & systems of social control generate different institutional celebrations. 17 References. HA

88T2461

Martiny, Dieter (Max-Planck-Institut ausländisches und internationales Privatrecht, Mittelweg 187 D-2000 Hamburg 13 Federal Republic Germany). Des widerspenstigen Schuldners Zähmung—Zur Soziologie des Unterhaltsrechts (The Taming of the Obstinate Debtor: On the Sociology of Maintenance Law). Zeitschrift für Rechtssoziologie, 1987, 8, 1, June, 24-56 (G1 R).

* An overview is provided of areas of research in the sociology of law pertaining to maintenance (alimony & child support) & recent research in the field. Existing studies of problems in the allocation & enforcement of maintenance obligations focus on debtors' behavior, the phenomenon of divorce, or the practices of legal institutions; the inherent limitations of each focus are noted with a recommendation that all three be combined. The roles of the state, courts, lawyers, & family history in the determination & collection of support are discussed. The relation of maintenance law to society in general is considered. Modified HA

88T2462

McShane, Marilyn D. (Dept Sociology/Social Welfare/Criminal Justice Southeastern Louisiana U, Hammond 70402). Paralegals in Corrections: A Proposed Model. Journal of Offender Counseling, Services and Rehabilitation, 1987, 11, 2, spring-summer, 87-92.

* Prisoners' rights litigations over the past twenty years in the US has spurred the growth of inmate legal assistance programs, including the provision of law libraries & attorney services. Consequently, there is an increased need for trained professionals in the prison setting, a role that can be filled efficiently & cost-effectively by paralegals. The program currently in operation in the Texas Dept of Corrections is examined to illustrate the wide range of services that paralegals can provide in order to help prison administrators comply with mandatory reform. 4 References. Modified HA

88T2463

Olivero, J. Michael & Roberts, James B. (c/o Roberts Law School Legal Clinic Southern Illinois U, Carbondale 62901). Marion Federal Penitentiary and the 22-Month Lockdown: The Crisis. ♦ Crime and Social Justice, 1987, 27-28, 234-255.

* An examination of the Federal Bureau of Prison's (BOP) policies regarding the management of prisoners at the federal penitentiary in Marion, Ill. Despite numerous problems, the BOP has continued to apply the concentration model of corrections—under which all problem prisoners

88T2444

Brogden, Mike (Dept Social Studies Liverpool Polytechnic, L3 5UX England). An Act to Colonise the Internal Lands of the Island: Empire and the Origins of the Professional Police. International Journal of the Sociology of Law. 1987, 15, 2, May, 179-208.

¶ The overall dynamics of Victorian police work as practiced in the colonial setting are explored in an attempt to provide a corrective to both orthodox & revisionist versions of British police history. Conventional portrayals of early British models of policing are reviewed, & wider state apparatuses of the period are examined. The impact of the imposition of colonial police authority on indigenous legal systems is assessed, & variations in colonial legal systems are discussed. 59 References. F. Rasmussen

88T2445

Cohen, Ronald L. (Social Science Division Bennington Coll, VT 05201). Distributive Justice: Theory and Research. Social Justice Research. 1987, 1, 1, Mar, 19-40.

¶ The major conceptual dimensions of distributive justice: receipts, receipt units, functional rules & judging standards are discussed as a background for examining the extensive theoretical & empirical literature that has developed over the last two decades, particularly in the fields of psychology, sociology, & political philosophy. Major areas of inquiry have included (1) principles of distributive justice & their endorsement, & (2) reactions to distributive justice. It is suggested that future research recognize the interdisciplinary nature of distributive justice, & investigate such topics as the relation between distributive justice, power, & the concept of the person. 129 References. K. Hyatt

88T2446

Cook, Karen S. (Dept Sociology U Washington, Seattle 98195). Toward a More Interdisciplinary Research Agenda: The Potential Contributions of Sociology. Social Justice Research. 1987, 1, 1, Mar, 5-18.

¶ Some recent theoretical & empirical contributions from sociologists to the social justice literature are summarized. It is recommended that future social scientists aim at developing a multidisciplinary & cross-national/cultural body of work on social justice. Major issues that should be included in future research agendas are discussed, including (1) the emergence of norms, (2) contextual/situational determinants of justice processes, (3) the social processes of structural inequality & legitimation, & (4) the link between collective action, social dilemmas, & social justice. 75 References. K. Hyatt

88T2447

Culbertson, Robert G. & Fortune, Eddyth P. (Eastern Montana Coll, Billings 59101). Incarcerated Women: Self-Concept and Argot Roles. Journal of Offender Counseling, Services and Rehabilitation. 1986, 10, 3, spring, 25-49.

¶ The Tennessee Self-Concept Scale (TSCS) & an argot role instrument were administered to a sample of 182 F's incarcerated in the Dwight Correctional Facility for Women, Dwight, Ill. Demographic data related to age, county of residence, offense history, education, marital status, & number of children were collected. Analyses were conducted utilizing each of the Row scores & Column scores from the TSCS. Additionally, TSCS scores were analyzed focusing on demographic variables & argot roles. In many respects, the TSCS scores reflected the typical delinquent profile identified by Fitts (Fitts, William H., & Hamner, William T., The Self-Concept and Delinquency. Nashville, Tenn: Counselor Recordings & Tests, 1969). The variables of race & educational attainment also impacted on self-concept scores. Self-concept scores for argot roles were also examined focusing on the following roles: "butch," "lemme," "life," "square," & "cool." 8 Figures, 34 References. Modified AA

88T2448

Dimmel, Nikolaus & Noll, Alfred J. (Instt Rechtssoziologie Salzburg U, A-5020 Austria). Rechtssoziologische Aspekte kooperativ-konzertierter Politik: Einwände gegen Edgar Grandes "Konfliktsteuerung zwischen Recht und Konsens" (Aspects of the Sociology of Law Concerning Cooperative/Concerted Politics: Objections to Edgar Grande's "Managing Conflict between Law and Consensus"). Österreichische Zeitschrift für Soziologie. 1987, 12, 1, 43-61 (GER).

¶ A critique of Edgar Grande's "Konfliktsteuerung zwischen Recht und Konsens" ((Managing Conflict between Law and Consensus) in Sozialpartnerschaft in der Krise [Social Partnership in Crisis], Gerlich,

P. Grande, Edgar, & Muller, W. C. (Eds), Wien/Köln/Graz, 1985). Contrary to the approach of research on neocorporatism, which investigates the phenomenon of Austria's "social partnership" primarily from the perspective of political science as regards functional elites, & which therefore views the means of state regulation as integral components of the social partnership consensus, here the social partnership is analyzed as a system of domination. It is shown empirically that state coercion does not represent the antithesis of social partnership consensus & that interventionist law is inevitably characterized by compromise. The law as an instrument of the state, which acts in accordance with the power relations of the social contracting parties, though relatively independently, finds its determination both in organizing favorable conditions for the political expansion of the hegemonial class & the utilization of capital & also in strengthening the sociopolitical standards in the interest of the subordinate SCs. 68 References. AA Tr & Modified by C. Waters

88T2449

Erez, Edna (Dept of Criminal Justice Studies Kent State U, Oh 44242). Rehabilitation in Justice: The Prisoner's Perspective. Journal of Offender Counseling, Services and Rehabilitation. 1987, 11, 2, spring-summer, 5-19.

¶ A presentation of inmates' perspectives on issues related to rehabilitation program determination & participation, based on a questionnaire survey of a random sample of federal prison inmates (N = 348). The questionnaire included items about desirable programs for rehabilitation, the fairness of various selection methods for program participation, & prisoner needs relative to rehabilitation. Results indicate that inmates were interested in participating in programs that will help them adjust to prison or to the outside world: educational counseling or therapy, & vocational training. However, about 50% of those who said they were interested did not think they needed any program. The majority of the inmates view their needs & thus their criminal involvement as resulting from inability to compete in the job market: they lack vocational skill or sufficient education. Inmates also expressed strong distrust in the validity of decisions made by administrative & treatment staff concerning the appropriateness of the programs & criteria used for determining participation of inmates. 4 Tables, 17 References. Modified AA

88T2450

Gardner, Jack Joseph (U Northern Colorado, Greeley 80639). Attitudes about Rape among Inmates and Correctional Officers. Dissertation Abstracts International: A The Humanities and Social Sciences. 1987, 47, 12(1), June, 4515-A.

Available from UMI, Ann Arbor MI. Order No. DA8707035.

88T2451

Gibson, Colin S. (Royal Holloway & Bedford New Coll U London, Egham Surrey TW20 0EX England). Maintenance in England and Wales: Entanglement with Reality. Zeitschrift für Rechtssoziologie. 1987, 8, 1, June, 86-97 (GER).

¶ The current state of the system of alimony & child support in England & Wales is discussed. The ineffectiveness of maintenance awards in providing financial support for dependents in divorce cases is investigated. The almost complete lack of official statistics is noted. The two-tier court system & its substantial role in awarding support are examined. The safety net of welfare benefits is shown to constitute the main financial support of one-parent families & to have a significant effect on court decisions. The importance of remarriage for improving the financial status of such families is considered. Various strategies for & limitations of seeking or avoiding support payment are described. A trend toward more conciliation & fewer court battles is noted. Modified HA

88T2452

Gill, Peter (Dept Social Studies Liverpool Polytechnic, L2 2NSG England). Clearing up Crime: The Big 'Con'. Journal of Law and Society. 1987, 14, 2, summer, 254-265.

¶ An analysis of UK police use of prison confessions to clear up unsolved crimes with no further prosecution. The extent & implications of this method are examined, focusing on the Merseyside police, which for some years has used the method more than any other police force in the UK. Data from the annual & other reports from the Chief Constable to the Police Authority for 1974-1985 show that the detection rate on Merseyside kept pace during these years with the increase in recorded crime, but that the rate at which people were prosecuted dropped dramatically after 1981. The only possible explanation for this was that increasing numbers of detections were being obtained by police officers visiting prisons & ob-

85287). The Changing Forms of Racial/Ethnic Biases in Sentencing. In Journal of Research in Crime and Delinquency, 1987, 24, 1, Feb, 69-92

1 Four waves of historical research on sentencing disparities conducted between 1930 & the present are compared to assess racial/ethnic discrimination in criminal justice processing. Specific attention is given to changes in research methodologies & data sources, the social contexts within which research has been conducted, & the various forms that bias can manifest. The transition from overt racial/ethnic bias to more subtle institutional biases are explored, & the movement toward determinate sentencing is discussed. The biases identified are partially explained by the need for the system to maintain legitimacy in the face of social change. 68 References. Modified HA books for the fin-de-millennium

CULTURETEXTS

BODY INVADERS

panic sex in America

Marlouse and Arthur Kroker, eds

THE POSTMODERN SCENE

excremental culture and hyper-aesthetics

Arthur Kroker and David Cook

Alex Colville

LIFE AFTER POSTMODERNISM

essays on value and culture

John Fekete, ed.

To order USA St Martin's Press
Canada Oxford University Press
Outside North America Macmillan Publishers Ltd

are housed in one location at Marion, rather than the dispersal model which distributes them throughout the system. Various riots & deaths of both inmates & guards led to the prison being placed on lockdown status on 27 Oct 1983 in which prisoners were restricted to their cells for 23 hour periods, this condition persists today. The effects on inmates & staff are examined, & it is concluded that such a policy can only result in continued bloodshed. Ongoing battles in federal court & Congress regarding the situation at Marion are summarized & recommendations for change offered. 21 References. K. Hyatt

88T2464

Onojeharho, John F. & Bloom, Leonard (c/o Bloom 17 Dunster Gardens, London England N26 7NG), Inmate Subculture in a Nigerian Prison, The Journal of Psychology 1986, 120, 5, Sept., 471-477

¶ An examination of a prisoners' subculture in a Nigerian prison dealing with the prisoners' interactions among themselves & their adaptations to the subculture based on observations & interviews & questionnaire data gathered in 1983 from inmates & guards. Focus is on the principal values & practices of the subculture & the vulnerability to them of different groups of prisoners. Striking similarities are found between the subculture & the world outside the prison. 12 References. Modified HA

88T2465

Pogrebin, Mark R., Poole, Eric D. & Regoli, Robert M. (Graduate School Public Affairs U Colorado, Denver 80202), Natural Deaths and Unknown Persons: The Process of Creating Identity, The Social Science Journal 1986, 24, 4, Oct., 391-396

¶ An examination of how detectives create social identities for unknown deceased persons who died from natural causes. Data were derived from observations of 12 death scene investigations conducted by 3 investigators during a 6 month period in a large southeastern police department. The overriding finding is that detectives create social identities for these unknown persons on the basis of their interpretations of objects discovered at the deceased's dwelling. Modified HA

88T2466

Rauma, David & Berk, Richard A. (Dept Sociology U Michigan, Ann Arbor 48109), Remuneration and Recidivism: The Long-Term Impact of Unemployment Compensation on Ex-Offenders, Journal of Quantitative Criminology 1987, 3, 1, Mar., 1-27

¶ The long term relationship between criminal recidivism & unemployment compensation is investigated for a sample of 842 releasees from Calif prisons who applied for unemployment benefits following their release in accordance with the mandates of Calif Senate Bill 224 (SB 224). Calif Dept of Corrections' data on eligibility for benefits & Federal Bureau of Investigation data detailing any criminal activity for a 5-year period following release were incorporated into a time-to-failure model using a regression discontinuity approach. Results indicate that those offenders eligible for benefits (on the basis of having participated in vocational training or worked at a job while in prison) had a lower rate of recidivism than did those ineligible. Economic theory explains these results better than does traditional criminological theory, policy & theoretical implications are discussed. 3 Tables, 5 Figures, 33 References. K. Hyatt

88T2467

Russell, Tommy & Boswell, Cary Ford (Coll Education U Alabama, University 35486), A Comparison of Selected Demographic, Educational, and Behavioral Factors among Adolescent Mentally Retarded Offenders and Adolescent Mentally Retarded Nonoffenders, Journal of Offender Counseling, Services and Rehabilitation 1986, 10, 3, spring, 5-24

¶ An examination of the predictive significance of 21 selected demographic, educational, & behavioral variables in identifying potential mentally retarded juvenile offenders. Forty identified mentally retarded offenders & 40 identified mentally retarded nonoffenders from the Tuscaloosa City School System (Ala) were evaluated during 1981-1984 based on student record files, a teacher's behavior rating scale evaluation, & interviews with parents & students. The results of multiple regression analysis of the data indicate that the combined effect of the 21 independent variables significantly discriminated between the 2 groups of retarded Ss, but only 3 of the variables: number of siblings with court referral, number of days in school attendance, & standard score spelling were individually significant. Six specific recommendations for future research in the area of mentally retarded offenders are presented. 4 Tables, 11 References. Modified AA

88T2468

Seyfrit, Carol L., Reichel, Philip L. & Stotts, Brian L. (U Wisconsin, Oshkosh 54901), Peer Juries as a Juvenile Justice Diversion Technique, Youth and Society 1987, 18, 3, Mar., 302-316

¶ Using the informal adjustment section of the Ga Juvenile Code, the juvenile court in Columbia County is experimenting with panels of peers who determine case disposition for certain offenses & offenders. The effectiveness of the peer jury form of informal adjustment & that of the traditional form of informal adjustment are compared using information from the juvenile court docket sheets in Columbia & Liberty Counties ($N = 52$ & 50 , respectively). The data indicate that the peer jury can handle more serious offenses & second offenders as effectively as the traditional system, in addition, the jury may be more effective with first offenders. Due to the small size of the sample, further research is suggested using a larger program, or following the existing sample over a longer period of time. 2 Tables, 17 References. AA

88T2469

Staples, William G. (Social Science Research Instit U Southern California, Los Angeles 90089), Law and Social Control in Juvenile Justice Dispositions, Journal of Research in Crime and Delinquency 1987, 24, 1, Feb., 7-22

¶ A number of hypotheses are tested concerning the relationship between legal & nonlegal social control in the U.S. juvenile justice system, focusing on those presented in Donald Black's The Behavior of Law (New York: Academic Press, 1976). Data collected from court records between 1976 & 1978 as part of a juvenile justice evaluation project in Calif are analyzed with an offense-stratified, random sample of juvenile arrests ($N = 4,644$). Multivariate analyses indicate that the quality of law afforded to offenders at 3 juvenile justice processing points is dependent in part, on the amount of nonlegal social control they are already subjected to. 7 Tables, 1 Figure, 19 References. Modified HA

88T2470

Sutton, John R. (Dept Sociology Princeton U, NJ 08544), Doing Time: Dynamics of Imprisonment in the Reformist State, American Sociological Review 1987, 52, 5, Oct., 612-630

¶ Most explanations of official social control point either toward reform movements or the imperatives of the social system as dominantly influencing imprisonment rates, with little attempt to integrate these distal causal processes. It is argued here that the strategic behavior of official state actors plays an intervening role in the punishment process that determines the relative salience of reform & systems effects. An analysis is presented of US prison & jail expansion & changes in their inmate populations between 1880 & 1923 as a result of officials' discretion, application & interpretation of 3 criminal justice reforms: probation, parole, & indeterminate sentencing within the imperatives of the system & its resources. A series of dynamic additive & interactive models are explored using institutional census data, decennial census reports, & a historical survey of state reform policies conducted by the US Dept of Justice in 1939. The findings support the argument that reforms introduced discretion into the social control system & allowed official actors greater freedom to adjust their behavior to shifting bureaucratic & political constraints. 8 Tables, 3 Appendixes, 71 References. Modified HA

88T2471

Willenbacher, Barbara, Voegeli, Wolfgang & Muller-Alten, Lutz (Fachbereich Rechtswissenschaften U Hannover, D-3000 91 Federal Republic Germany), Auswirkungen des Ehegattenunterhaltsrechts in der Bundesrepublik Deutschland (Effects of Alimony Law in the Federal Republic of Germany), Zeitschrift für Rechtssoziologie 1987, 1, June, 98-113. (GFR)

¶ The controversy in West Germany over whether alimony & child support levels should be reduced or are already insufficient is addressed. An analysis of how courts calculate awards on the basis of the relevant laws in existence since 1977. Analyses of official statistics (primarily from 1983 in Lower Saxony) indicate that the low amounts normally awarded by the courts, combined with a program of public assistance & some legal costs, tend to level the award differences between lower & middle-income groups, in contrast to the results of Australian & Danish investigations. Attorneys' strategies in cases of different income levels & their consequences for court proceedings, are discussed. 4 Tables, 1 Figure. Modified HA

88T2472

Zatz, Majorie S. (School Justice Studies Arizona State U, Tempe)

1700 sociology of science

34 sociology of science

88T2473

Altheide, David & Lauderdale, Pat (School Justice Studies Arizona State U, Tempe 85287). The Technocratic Form in the Study of Mass Media Effects: An Application, Social Epistemology, 1987, 1, 2, Apr-June, 183-186

† A critical examination of studies that claim to demonstrate that mass media messages are causing suicides. A critique of a replication of such research by J. N. Baron & P. C. Reiss (see SA 33 5/85Q2686) shows that there is more to the problem than mere difficulties with mortality data. Rather, a host of studies are found to be atheoretic, lacking internal validity, & in general, based on tautological reasoning. It is suggested that these problems have been overlooked by some reviewers because of the technocratic form in which quantitative data are presented & massaged. 19 References. AA

88T2474

Bairoch, Paul & Etemad, Bouda (U Geneva, CH-1211 4 Switzerland), La Littérature périodique d'histoire économique contemporaine (Periodical Literature Concerning Contemporary Economic History), Annales, 1987, 42, 2, Mar-Apr, 369-401 (FRF)

† A review of the main approaches used, subjects treated, & geographic areas discussed in the field of economic history over the past 30 years, based on the analysis of 72 journals. A content analysis of 3,000 articles was performed & a further 15,000 articles were scanned. The growth since 1900 of journal literature concerning economic history is evaluated. Comparative analysis with a further 65 journals concerning other disciplines shows that economic history is a dynamic branch of the social sciences, with a rapid growth in the stock of articles: from 300 in 1900 to 22,000+ in 1985. 12 Tables, 1 Appendix. Modified HA

88T2475

Bloor, David (Science Studies Unit Edinburgh U, EH8 9JT Scotland), The Living Foundations of Mathematics, Social Studies of Science, 1987, 17, 2, May, 337-358

† A review essay on Eric Livingston's The Ethnomethodological Foundations of Mathematics (London, Henley, & Boston, Mass: Routledge & Kegan Paul, 1986 [see listing in IRPS No. 41]). Two of the most intriguing & difficult questions in the philosophy of mathematics are addressed: the nature of mathematical objects, & the nature of the compulsion that attaches to mathematical reasoning. Although Livingston's work provides insights & valuable comments about mathematical proof procedures, these insights are not particularly original, nor have they been pressed any further than their originators have already taken them. Based on this effort, the ethnomethodological study of mathematics would appear to be an unrewarding & confused enterprise. 7 Figures. F. Rasmussen

88T2476

Borštner, Bojan, Ontološko pojmovanje inkomenzurabilnosti (The Ontological Comprehension of Incommensurability), ♦ Anthropos, Časopis za sodelovanje humanističnih in naravoslovnih ved, za psihologijo in filozofijo, 1986, 5-6, 60-77 (SLO)

† In primitive chemical studies of the eighteenth century, many scientists reasoned that the loss of mass during the combustion process was due to the escape of a substance called phlogiston. This mistaken idea was disproved by evidence that some substances gain mass during combustion, providing John Dalton, founder of the modern atomic theory, with the stimulus for developing a new, fruitful idea. From here it can be seen that in The Structure of Scientific Revolutions (Chicago: U of Chicago Press, 1970) Thomas S. Kuhn allows for the possibility that rival paradigms have empirical contact points; however, this does not exclude their incommensurability, as observation data might. Data that are anomalous to the old paradigms & successful in development of new paradigms assume a great epistemological importance. 31 References. Modified HA

88T2477

Dennis, Michael Aaron (Dept History of Science Johns Hopkins U, Baltimore MD 21218), Accounting for Research: New Histories of Corporate Laboratories and the Social History of American Science, Social Studies of Science, 1987, 17, 3, Aug, 479-518.

† Recent histories of several corporate laboratories & industrial research are discussed by explicating common themes & assumptions. Alfred D. Chandler's work on business organization in late nineteenth-century US (no reference specified) is the interpretive framework used in two recent & important histories: Leonard Reich's The Making of American Industrial Research: Science and Business at GE and Bell, 1876-1926 (Cambridge & New York: Cambridge U Press, 1985) & George Wise's Willis R. Whitney, General Electric, and the Origins of US Industrial Research (New York: Columbia U Press, 1985). Both works provide rich accounts concerning the reasons why firms invested in research laboratories, & also reveal the problems inherent in using Robert K. Merton's sociology of scientists in discussions of researchers working outside the discipline-oriented U. The normative sociological framework found in these histories is replaced with an analysis that locates the first corporate laboratories within the history of late nineteenth- & early twentieth-century US science. HA

88T2478

Dukić, Zvezdana (Nacionalna i sveučilišna biblioteka, Zagreb Yugoslavia), Sociologija i sistemi znanstvenih informacija (Sociology and Systems of Scientific Informations), Revija za Sociologiju, 1985, 15, 1-2, Jan-June, 67-73 (SCR)

† In developed countries, sociology has found its place in scientific information systems. Insight into the social aspects of scientific research activities is needed to apply modern technology to the delivery of scientific information. Such insight can only be gained through sociological investigation of scientific communities. Attention is given to the formal & informal mechanisms for exchange of scientific information. Formal networks involve citation networks, & informal networks involve "invisible colleges." Unfortunately, Yugoslav sociology has not produced much research on these mechanisms. 10 References. Modified HA

88T2479

Feinstein, Alvan R. (School Medicine Yale U, New Haven CT 06510), The Intellectual Crisis in Clinical Science: Medaled Models and Muddled Mettle, U Perspectives in Biology and Medicine, 1987, 30, 2, winter, 215-230

† The current intellectual crisis in clinical medicine is described & attributed to problems in the conceptual & theoretical models that guide clinical thinking about disease, medical decision making, data evaluation, & practice/research goals. It is shown how different nonclinical sources formed the basis for the development of clinical science in the nineteenth century, giving rise to nonclinical models that were inappropriate to applied research or medical practice. Clinical medicine was left with no inherent intellectual content or challenges to call its own, a situation that continues to impede both the opportunities & incentives to conduct research in order to develop improved models. Seven major problems caused by reliance on inappropriate models, largely derived from mathematics, natural science, & biomedicine, are discussed in detail, & suggestions offered to improve clinical medicine's status as a humanistic science. 19 References. K. Hyatt

88T2480

Fletcher, Ronald, The Doubtful Case of Cyril Burt, ♦ Social Policy and Administration, 1987, 21, 1, spring, 40-57.

† A defense of Cyril Lodowic Burt, calling into question the validity of the decreditation of his work, which resulted in one of the most dramatic controversies in the social sciences in British U.s. in recent years. The quality of the evidence produced by his denigrators is examined & explanations for apparent discrepancies in his work are given. 1 Table. F. Rasmussen

88T2481

Frolov, Ivan Timofeevich (Soviet Academy Sciences, Leninsky Prospekt 14 Moscow V-71), Itogi i perspektivy issledovaniy filosofskikh i sotsial'nykh problem nauki i tekhniki (The Results and Pros-

INTERNATIONAL JOURNAL OF HEALTH SERVICES

Vol. 17, No. 1 - 1987

editor-in chief:
vicente navarro

SPECIAL SECTION ON THE CORPORATIZATION OF MEDICINE

- 1 Introduction J. Warren Salmon
- 7 Business and the Pushcart Vendors in an Age of Supermarkets Linda A. Bergthold
- 27 Proprietary Hospital Chains and Academic Medical Centers Howard S. Berliner and Robb K. Burlage
- 47 The Proprietization of Health Care and the Underdevelopment of the Public Sector David Whiteis and J. Warren Salmon

ORIGINAL ARTICLE ON PROFESSIONALISM

- 65 The Deprofessionalization of Soviet Physicians: A Reconsideration Julia V. Brown

ORIGINAL ARTICLE ON THE PHARMACEUTICAL INDUSTRY

- 77 Pharmaceutical Promotion in Canada: Convince Them or Confuse Them Joel Lexchin

ORIGINAL ARTICLES ON UNDERDEVELOPMENT AND HEALTH

- 91 Health Services and the Legitimation of the Colonial State: British Malaya 1786-1941 Lenore Manderson
- 113 Overpopulation as Crisis: Redirecting Health Care Services in Rural Bangladesh Shelley Feldman

ORIGINAL ARTICLE ON GENDER AND HEALTH OCCUPATIONS

- 113 Gender Hierarchies in the Health Labor Force Irene Butler, Eugenia S. Carpenter, Bonnie J. Kay, and Ruth Simmons

ORIGINAL ARTICLE ON OCCUPATIONAL HEALTH POLICY

- 151 Worker Participation in Occupational Health Research: Theory and Practice Donna Mergler

REPORT ON NICARAGUA

- 169 Nicaragua: A Health System Developing Under Conditions of War Paula Braveman and David Siegel

REPORT ON CUBA

- 179 The Prevention of Health Risks in Cuba Sally Guttmacher
- 191 Contributors
- 195 Books Received

The articles that appear in the Journal analyze what is going on in our industry, why it is going on in the way it is, and with what effect. It also analyzes forces that shape the nature of health, disease, medicine and public health.

ISSN 0020-7314

INSTITUTIONAL PRICE $75.00

INDIVIDUAL PRICE $25.00 (Paid by personal check or credit card.) Add $3.00 for postage in the U.S.A. and Canada and $7.00 elsewhere. Subscription per volume only (4 issues), must be prepaid in U.S. dollars on a U.S. bank. Prices subject to change without notice.

Baywood Publishing Company, Inc.

P.O. Box D, Farmingdale, NY 11735

88T2491

Dehler, Kay Janet (Washington U, Saint Louis MO 63130), Changes in Scientific Discourse: The Introduction of the Axiomatic Method to Economics. * Dissertation Abstracts International, 4 The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 47, 12(1), June, 4527-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor MI. Order No. DA8708377.

88T2492

Payne, David (Dept Speech Communication U Texas, Austin TX 78712), Adaptation, Mortification, and Social Reform, in The Southern Speech Communication Journal, 1986, 51, 3, spring, 187-207. An analysis of the scientific rhetoric of B. F. Skinner's Beyond Freedom and Dignity (New York: Knopf, 1971) & Jeremy Rifkin's Crucible: A New World View (New York: Viking Press, 1980). It is argued that these works are characteristic of institutional rhetoric. The complexity & thoroughness with which the concept of adaptation is conceptualized in the assumptions & perspectives of the two authors is examined. It is found that the use of adaptation in their schemes of social reform operates in ways remarkably similar to the religious concept of justification. Kenneth Burke's analysis of this concept in the institutional rhetoric of religion (see The Rhetoric of Religion, U of California Press, 1970) is applied to illustrate the importance of adaptation in scientific rhetoric. Modified HA.

88T2493

Petrovskan, Armen Ernstovich (Moscow M. V. Lomonosov State U, 119808 USSR), Problema sotsial'noy otsenki nauchnykh issledovaniy (The Problems of Social Appraisal of Scientific Studies), Voprosy filosofii, 1987, 41, 5, May, 50-62 (RUS). The sum of expenditures on fundamental research from Archimedes to present does not exceed the worth of goods & services produced today in the advanced countries in a period of several weeks. With this in mind, it becomes quite apparent that scientific research, despite its high cost, stimulates economic development. It is argued that investigations of the social impact of technological advances are needed that: (1) establish a hierarchy of technological goals, (2) set up a scheme of values, & (3) exactly measure the speed with which technological advances modify social structure. G. Prostavov.

88T2494

Platt, Jennifer (U Sussex, Falmer Brighton BN1 9QN England), Research Dissemination: A Case Study, The Quarterly Journal of Social Affairs, 1987, 3, 3, July, 181-198. A study of the diffusion of the results of a research project funded by the Economic & Social Research Council (ESRC). Jan Pahl's "The Spread and Distribution of Resources within the Household." Data were taken from ESRC records, publications from the project (eg. see SA 4 83401887), an extensive interview with Jan Pahl, telephone interviews with five persons in policy contexts who Pahl knew to have taken interest in her work, the Social Science Citation Index (SSCI), & informal discussions. It was found that the level of interest in the research, hence the extent of its dissemination, depended not only on Pahl's level of activity but also on the fact that her topic was relevant to themes in other disciplines & to a range of current policy issues. It is also significant that in all but two of the cases where Pahl's work is cited, an author known to her through various socio-intellectual networks. It is concluded that the process of dissemination is a social one, & that the social relations involved would merit attention. 44 References. Modified AA.

88T2495

Potré, Matjaž, O realizmu in antirealizmu znanstvenih teorij (On Realism and Antirealism in Scientific Theories), in Anthropos. Časopis za sodelovanje humanističnih in naravoslovnih ved, za psihologijo in filozofijo, 1986, 5-6, 99-116 (SLO). An informal discussion of the relationship between scientific theories & the philosophy of mind, arguing that a possible intersection of the two could be found by analyzing the realism/antirealism of scientific theories & the de re/de dicto modes of propositional attitudes. Among the four possible combinations, only realism de re is considered, asking whether the realism of scientific theories necessarily involves de re attitudes in the philosophy of mind & vice versa. 6 References. Modified HA.

88T2496

Roberts, Bryan (Dept Sociology U Manchester, M13 9PL England), Evaluation, Dissemination and the Social Affairs Committee, The Quarterly Journal of Social Affairs, 1987, 3, 3, July, 161-179.

161-179.

Some issues surrounding the role & effectiveness of evaluation & dissemination procedures used in research funding are investigated via an analysis of 129 projects whose end-of-grant reports have been reviewed by the Social Affairs Committee of the Economic & Social Research Council (ESRC) in GB. Questionnaires completed by 96 researchers involved with the projects provide supplementary data as to the nature of the projects, their published outputs (in the form of books, professional/lay articles, & academic lectures), & factors affecting whether they were judged successes or failures. Rs's views of the ESRC are examined, & suggest some changes that could be made in project evaluation & dissemination. Some proposals are offered for creating an experimental database of ongoing & completed projects. 2 Tables, 1 Appendix. K. Hyatt.

88T2497

Strnad, Janez, Etude v filozofiji znanosti (Study in the Philosophy of Science), in Anthropos. Časopis za sodelovanje humanističnih in naravoslovnih ved, za psihologijo in filozofijo, 1986, 5-6, 78-98 (SLO).

A study of the relationship between philosophy & science, focusing on the impact of developments in physics. The processes by which language interprets & presents quantum mechanics become increasingly abstract. It is uncertain if man's linguistic capacity will allow the analysis of all of nature in terms of physical laws. Implications for epistemology are discussed, following a critique of physicalism. 1 Table, 4 References. Modified HA.

88T2498

Thagaard, Tove (Instit sociologi U Oslo, Blindern N-0316 3 Norway), Kvinner i forskningen: om kjønnsforskjeller i publiseringsaktivitet (Sex Differences in Publication Productivity), Tidsskrift for samfunnsforskning, 1987, 28, 1, 72-86 (NOR).

A review of research examining sex differences in publication productivity among M & F scientists. Aspects of the work situation are seen as more significant than household & child care responsibilities for F authors. The low % of Fs in high positions means fewer research opportunities leading to publication. F scientists are also less integrated into research networks & receive less information through informal channels. F socialization often results in lower self-confidence in relation to intellectual achievement, which affects publication productivity. 1 Table, 28 References. Modified HA.

88T2499

Vessuri, Hebe M. C. (Dept Política Científica, Instit Geociências, Unicamp-Caixa Postal 6152 13081 Campinas SP Brazil), The Social Study of Science in Latin America, Social Studies of Science, 1987, 17, 3, Aug, 519-554.

Since WWII, scientific activity has grown significantly in Latin America, & with it there has been a modest development of the social study of science (SSS). The changing significance of the work of science planners & social thinkers is investigated with respect to the understanding of the social role of science in Latin America. On the basis of this investigation, it is argued that despite promising signs, institutional developments in SSS in Latin America are fragile, & that the chances for their survival & success lie in their capacity to demonstrate their ability to bridge the research gap between academia, public decision making, & industry. 3 Tables. HA.

88T2500

Zviglyanich, Vladimir Aleksandrovich, Teoreticheskie struktury znaniya v neempiristicheskikh versiyakh zapadnoy metodologii nauki (The Theoretical Structures of Knowledge in the Nonempirical Versions of the Western Methodology of Science), Voprosy filosofii, 1987, 41, 2, Feb, 42-53 (RUS).

A critique of non-Marxist philosophies of science demonstrates the consistent appearance of a one-sided examination of the concept of cognition. Both positivism & neopositivism failed to give a fully empirical interpretation of scientific knowledge, ignoring the true historical significance of research. Newer trends concerned with the nonempirical criteria & foundations of science lean toward interdisciplinary development. A circular development can be seen in bourgeois theories of science, proceeding from positivism to the search for nonmaterial criteria of analysis in postpositivism & finally, to neopositivism. The only way out of this circle is to approach the theory & practice of science in an integrated manner. Modified HA.

pects of Studying the Philosophical and Social Problems of Science and Technology), Voprosy filosofii 1987, 41, 4, Apr., 3-15 (RUS).

¶ Contemporary USSR philosophy regarding social development & its relationship to the growth of science & technology seeks to describe recent shifts as resulting from economic policy changes. Qualitatively new approaches to the definition of Marxist-Leninist philosophy are being introduced. With the aid of dialectical materialism, an evolution in SE thought can be discerned, determined by factors both inside & outside of science. More attention should be given by philosophers of science to the human factor, for man is both the moving force behind, & chief object of, the scientific-technological revolution. G. Prostakov

8872482

Hajek, Karol (Instit Philosophy & Sociology Slovak Academy Sciences, Obrancov Mieru 49 81438 Bratislava Czechoslovakia), Vzťah pozitivistickej a marxistickej filozofie vedy (The Relation of Positivist and Marxist Philosophy of Science), Filozofia 1979, 34, 5, 524-531 (CZE).

¶ An analysis of the major drawbacks of contemporary positivist theory of science & a comparison with Marxist theory of science. These defects include the influence of bourgeois ideology & the denial of political-functional connections between philosophy & science. Classical positivism is essentially the same as contemporary positivism. An alternative Marxist-Leninist interpretation of the relationship between philosophy & the special sciences is developed. 4 References. Modified HA

8872483

Hess, David (Anthropology Dept Cornell U, Ithaca NY 14853), Religion, Heterodox Science and Brazilian Culture, Social Studies of Science, 1987, 17, 3, Aug., 465-477.

¶ An analysis of the science of parapsychology in Brazil, where there is a relative absence of the academic, secular parapsychology of North American & Western Europe, instead, the Catholic Church & the Spiritist movement structure & define parapsychology. Explanatory models involving boundary work strains & interests help clarify the peculiar structure of Brazilian parapsychology, but they do not explain why this structure exists in the first place, nor why it seems so well adapted to Brazil. Answering this question requires examination of the dual, Afro-Catholic nature of the Brazilian religious system, as well as the importance of personalistic & hierarchical values in Brazilian culture. HA

8872484

Hicks, Diana (Science Policy Research Unit U Sussex, Falmer Brighton East Sussex BN1 9R1 England), Limitations of Co-Citation Analysis as a Tool for Science Policy, Social Studies of Science 1987, 17, 2, May, 295-316.

¶ Co-citation analysis, a tool initially developed for use in science studies, is entering the science policy arena, where the technical demands placed on data differ. Comparison of co-citation data & a manually generated bibliography of a physics specialty (spin glass) based on articles published 1964-1983 reveals that, at present, co-citation analysis is inconsistent & fragile when used to track national participation in a specialty over time. Specifically, co-citation clusters only emerged some time after the field began, were inconsistent in their coverage over time, were subject to errors in citations, underrepresented experimental work, & were found to contain a significant subjective element. 3 Tables, 2 Figures. HA

8872485

Hollingsworth, J. Rogers (Instit Research Poverty U Wisconsin, Madison 53706), The Decline of Scientific Communication within and across Academic Disciplines, UW The Policy Studies Journal, 1986, 14, 3, Mar., 422-428.

¶ A discussion of the specialization & fragmentation of knowledge in both basic & applied fields of science, & the resulting problems in communication within & across academic disciplines in the US. Methods to facilitate communication are related to the structure of the U in the twentieth century, & the alternative structure of an interdisciplinary institute is evaluated. Since the problems themselves are interdisciplinary in nature, it is suggested that U's confront them in an interdisciplinary setting. F. Rasmussen

8872486

Jasanoff, Sheila S. (Cornell U, Ithaca NY 14853), Contested Boundaries in Policy-Relevant Science, Social Studies of Science, 1987, 17,

¶ In the US, as in other industrialized nations, regulatory decisions to protect the environment & public health depend heavily on scientific information & place unusual strains on science. Knowledge claims are deconstructed during the rule-making process, exposing areas of weakness or uncertainty & threatening the cognitive authority of science, yet the final regulatory decision depends on the reconstruction of a plausible scientific rationale for the proposed action. The processes of deconstructing & reconstructing knowledge claims give rise to competition among scientists, public officials, & political interest groups, resulting in the use of boundary-defining language to distinguish between science & policy, & to allocate the right to interpret science in ways that further their own interests. Here, the contours of such boundary disputes in the context of the 1970s controversy over carcinogen regulation are explored, focusing on the contested definitions & strategic implications of three groups of concepts: trans-science or science policy, risk assessment, & risk management. Modified HA

8872487

Jones, John F. & Jones, Lois M. (Chinese U Hong Kong, Shatin New Territories), Citation Analysis as an Approach to Journal Assessment in Social Work, Kuo Li Tai-wan Ta Hsueh She Hui Hsueh K'an/National Taiwan University Journal of Sociology, 1986, 18, Nov., 207-219.

¶ Citation analysis is used to measure the adequacy of social work & related journal holdings in 4 tertiary education institutions in Hong Kong. A rank order of 40 journals was established through the Social Science Citation Index. The library committees in the social work departments of the various institutions were then asked to select the 10 most useful journals. While there was considerable agreement among the committees as to the most useful periodicals, their choices were not significantly correlated with the Social Science Citation Index ranking. However, Hong Kong libraries' core social work journal holdings appear reasonably strong. 5 Tables, 20 References. Modified HA

8872488

Laudan, Larry (U Hawaii, Honolulu 96822), Relativism, Naturalism and Reticulation, Synthese, 1987, 71, 3, June, 221-234.

¶ Much discussion of naturalistic epistemology in recent years has supposed that such an epistemology must be relativistic & descriptive with no normative elements. Here it is shown that epistemology can be naturalized without capitulating to relativism or descriptivism. AA

8872489

Laudan, Rachel (Center Study Science Society Virginia Polytechnic Instit, Blacksburg 24061), Drifting Interests and Colliding Continents: A Response to Stewart, Social Studies of Science, 1987, 17, 2, May, 317-321.

Reply, 321-331.

¶ A comment on John Stewart's quantitative study of continental drift & plate tectonics (see SA 35 2/87R4555). Questions are raised regarding his conclusions that among the authors who published on drift, the more prominent rejected the theory. Using both supplementary data & an analysis of Stewart's underlying assumptions, it is argued that the point has not been established. In Drifting or Colliding Interests? A Reply to Laudan with Some New Results, John Stewart (U of Hartford, Conn.) discusses these criticisms, agreeing with several points raised, & he presents new data that better illustrate his thesis. F. Rasmussen

8872490

McKinlay, Andrew & Potter, Jonathan (Psychological Laboratory U Saint Andrews, Fife Scotland KY16 9JU), Model Discourse: Interpretive Repertoires in Scientists' Conference Talk, Social Studies of Science, 1987, 17, 3, Aug., 443-463.

¶ An examination of accounts where both advocates & critics of "top-down" & "bottom-up" theoretical models of science defend their own conceptions & criticize other psychologists' conceptions. The findings of this analysis (1) illustrate how psychologists use interpretive repertoires to produce internally coherent-but at the same time highly variable-accounts of action & belief, (2) explain the detailed content & organization of accounts in terms of dual motivations, both to maintain a coherent position & to avoid making a potentially disruptive blaming & (3) represent a development of the work done on error accounting & biochemistry, with attention to social scientists & the use of interactional, rather than interview, data. Overall, the analysis describes some features of the constitution of scientific conferences & shows the potential for interactional discourse & conversation analysis approaches. HA

8812491

Dehler, Kay Janet (Washington U, Saint Louis MO 63130), Changes in Scientific Discourse: The Introduction of the Axiomatic Method to Economics, * Dissertation Abstracts International, A The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 47, 12(1), June, 4527-A. Available from U MI, Ann Arbor MI. Order No. DA8708377.

8812492

Payne, David (Dept Speech Communication U Texas, Austin TX 78721), Adaptation, Mortification, and Social Reform, in The Southern Speech Communication Journal, 1986, 51, 3, spring, 187-207. An analysis of the scientific rhetoric of B. F. Skinner's Beyond Freedom and Dignity (New York: Knopf, 1971) & Jeremy Rifkin's Naughty A New World View (New York: Viking Press, 1980). It is argued that these works are characteristic of institutional rhetoric. The complexity & thoroughness with which the concept of adaptation is conceptualized in the assumptions & perspectives of the two authors is examined. It is found that the use of adaptation in their schemes of social reform operates in ways remarkably similar to the religious concept of justification. Kenneth Burke's analysis of this concept in the institutional rhetoric of religion (see The Rhetoric of Religion, U of California Press, 1970) is applied to illustrate the importance of adaptation in scientific rhetoric. Modified HA.

8812493

Petrosyan, Armen Ernstovich (Moscow M. V. Lomonosov State U, 119808 USSR), Problema sotsial'noy otsenki nauchnykh issledovaniy (The Problems of Social Appraisals of Scientific Studies), Voprosy filosofii, 1987, 41, 5, May, 50-62 (RUS). The sum of expenditures on fundamental research from Archimedes to the present does not exceed the worth of goods & services produced today in the advanced countries in a period of several weeks. With this in mind, it becomes quite apparent that scientific research, despite its high cost, stimulates economic development. It is argued that investigations of the social impact of technological advances are needed that: (1) establish a hierarchy of technological goals, (2) set up a scheme of values, & (3) exactly measure the speed with which technological advances modify social structure. G. Prostavov.

8812494

Platt, Jennifer (U Sussex, Falmer Brighton BN1 9QN England), Research Dissemination: A Case Study, The Quarterly Journal of Social Affairs, 1987, 3, 3, July, 181-198. A study of the diffusion of the results of a research project funded by the Economic & Social Research Council (ESRC), Jan Pahl's "The Control and Distribution of Resources within the Household." Data were drawn from ESRC records, publications from the project (eg, see SA 4 8401887), an extensive interview with Jan Pahl, telephone interviews with five persons in policy contexts who Pahl knew to have taken interest in her work, the Social Science Citation Index (SSCI), & informal discussions. It was found that the level of interest in the research, hence the extent of its dissemination, depended not only on Pahl's level of activity but also on the fact that her topic was relevant to themes in several disciplines & to a range of current policy issues. It is also significant that in all but two of the cases where Pahl's work is cited, an author known to her through various socio-intellectual networks. It is concluded that the process of dissemination is a social one, & that the social relations involved would merit attention. 44 References. Modified AA.

8812495

Potrc, Matjaž, O realizmu in antirealizmu znanstvenih teorij (On Realism and Antirealism in Scientific Theories), ♦ Anthropos, Časopis za sodelovanje humanističnih in naravoslovnih ved, za psihologijo in filozofijo, 1986, 5-6, 99-116 (SLO). An informal discussion of the relationship between scientific theories & the philosophy of mind, arguing that a possible intersection of the two could be found by analyzing the realism/antirealism of scientific theories & the de re/de dicto modes of propositional attitudes. Among several possible combinations, only realism de re is considered, asking whether the realism of scientific theories necessarily involves de re attitudes in the philosophy of mind & vice versa. 6 References. Modified HA.

8812496

Roberts, Bryan (Dept Sociology U Manchester, M13 9PL England), Evaluation, Dissemination and the Social Affairs Committee, The Quarterly Journal of Social Affairs, 1987, 3, 3, July, 161-179.

tee, The Quarterly Journal of Social Affairs, 1987, 3, 3, July, 161-179.

¶ Some issues surrounding the role & effectiveness of evaluation & dissemination procedures used in research funding are investigated via an analysis of 129 projects whose end-of-grant reports have been reviewed by the Social Affairs Committee of the Economic & Social Research Council (ESRC) in GB. Questionnaires completed by 96 researchers involved with the projects provide supplementary data as to the nature of the projects, their published outputs (in the form of books, professional/lay articles, & academic lectures), & factors affecting whether they were judged successes or failures. Rs's views of the ESRC are examined, & suggest some changes that could be made in project evaluation & dissemination. Some proposals are offered for creating an experimental database of ongoing & completed projects. 2 Tables, 1 Appendix. K. Hyatt.

88T2497

Strnad, Janez, Etude v filozofiji znanosti (Study in the Philosophy of Science), ♦ Anthropos, Časopis za sodelovanje humanističnih in naravoslovnih ved, za psihologijo in filozofijo, 1986, 5-6, 78-98 (SLO).

¶ A study of the relationship between philosophy & science, focusing on the impact of developments in physics. The processes by which language interprets & presents quantum mechanics become increasingly abstract. It is uncertain if man's linguistic capacity will allow the analysis of all of nature in terms of physical laws. Implications for epistemology are discussed, following a critique of physicalism. 1 Table, 4 References. Modified HA.

88T2498

Thagaard, Tove (Instit sociologi U Oslo, Blindern N-0316 3 Norway), Kvinner i forskningen: om kjønnsforskjeller i publiseringsaktivitet (Sex Differences in Publication Productivity), Tidsskrift for samfunnsforskning, 1987, 28, 1, 72-86 (NOR).

¶ A review of research examining sex differences in publication productivity among M & F scientists. Aspects of the work situation are seen as more significant than household & child care responsibilities for F authors. The low % of Fs in high positions means fewer research opportunities leading to publication. F scientists are also less integrated into research networks & receive less information through informal channels. F socialization often results in lower self-confidence in relation to intellectual achievement, which affects publication productivity. 1 Table, 28 References. Modified HA.

88T2499

Vessuri, Hebe M. C. (Dept Política Científica Instit Geociencias, Unicamp-Caixa Postal 6157 13081 Campinas SP Brazil), The Social Study of Science in Latin America, Social Studies of Science, 1987, 17, 3, Aug, 519-554.

¶ Since WWII, scientific activity has grown significantly in Latin America, & with it there has been a modest development of the social study of science (SSS). The changing significance of the work of science planners & social thinkers is investigated with respect to the understanding of the social role of science in Latin America. On the basis of this investigation, it is argued that despite promising signs, institutional developments in SSS in Latin America are fragile, & that the chances for their survival & success lie in their capacity to demonstrate their ability to bridge the research gap between academia, public decision making, & industry. 3 Tables. HA.

88T2500

Zviglyanich, Vladimir Aleksandrovich, Teoreticheskie struktury znaniya v neempiristicheskikh versiyakh zapadnoy metodologii nauki (The Theoretical Structures of Knowledge in the Nonempirical Versions of the Western Methodology of Science), Voprosy filosofii, 1987, 41, 2, Feb, 42-53 (RUS).

¶ A critique of non-Marxist philosophies of science demonstrates the consistent appearance of a one-sided examination of the concept of cognition. Both positivism & neopositivism failed to give a fully empirical interpretation of scientific knowledge, ignoring the true historical significance of research. Newer trends concerned with the nonempirical criteria & foundations of science lean toward interdisciplinary development. A circular development can be seen in bourgeois theories of science, proceeding from positivism to the search for nonmaterial criteria of analysis in postpositivism & finally, to neopositivism. The only way out of this circle is to approach the theory & practice of science in an integrated manner. Modified HA.

pects of Studying the Philosophical and Social Problems of Science and Technology), Voprosy filozofii 1987, 41, 4, Apr. 3-15 (RUS).

¶ Contemporary USSR philosophy regarding social development & its relationship to the growth of science & technology seeks to describe recent shifts as resulting from economic policy changes. Qualitatively new approaches to the definition of Marxist-Leninist philosophy are being introduced. With the aid of dialectical materialism, an evolution in St. thought can be discerned, determined by factors both inside & outside of science. More attention should be given by philosophers of science to the human factor, for man is both the moving force behind, & chief object of, the scientific-technological revolution. (J. Prostakov) Hajek, Karol (Instit Philosophy & Sociology Slovak Academy Sciences (Brancov Mieru 49 81438 Bratislava (Czechoslovakia)), Vzťah pozitivistickej a marxistickej filozofie vedy (The Relation of Positivist and Marxist Philosophy of Science), Filozofia 1979, 34, 5, 524-531 (CZE).

88T2482

¶ An analysis of the major drawbacks of contemporary positivist theory of science & a comparison with Marxist theory of science. These defects include the influence of bourgeois ideology & the denial of political functional connections between philosophy & science. Classical positivism is essentially the same as contemporary positivism. An alternative Marxist-Leninist interpretation of the relationship between philosophy & the special sciences is developed. 4 References. Modified HA

88T2483

Hess, David (Anthropology Dept Cornell U, Ithaca NY 14853), Religion, Heterodox Science and Brazilian Culture, Social Studies of Science 1987, 17, 3, Aug. 465-477.

¶ An analysis of the science of parapsychology in Brazil, where there is a relative absence of the academic, secular parapsychology of North American & Western Europe; instead, the Catholic Church & the Spiritist movement structure & define parapsychology. Explanatory models involving boundary work strains & interests help clarify the peculiar structure of Brazilian parapsychology, but they do not explain why this structure exists in the first place, nor why it seems so well adapted to Brazil. Answering this question requires examination of the dual, Afro-Catholic nature of the Brazilian religious system, as well as the importance of personalistic & hierarchical values in Brazilian culture. HA

88T2484

Hicks, Diana (Science Policy Research Unit U Sussex, Falmer Brighton East Sussex BN1 9RF England), Limitations of Co-Citation Analysis as a Tool for Science Policy, Social Studies of Science 1987, 17, 2, May, 295-316.

¶ Co-citation analysis, a tool initially developed for use in science studies, is entering the science policy arena, where the technical demands placed on data differ. Comparison of co-citation data & a manually generated bibliography of a physics specialty (spin glass) based on articles published 1964-1983 reveals that, at present, co-citation analysis is inconsistent & fragile when used to track national participation in a specialty over time. Specifically, co-citation clusters only emerged some time after the field began, were inconsistent in their coverage over time, were subject to errors in citations, underrepresented experimental work, & were found to contain a significant subjective element. 3 Tables, 2 Figures. HA

88T2485

Hollingsworth, J. Rogers (Instit Research Poverty U Wisconsin, Madison 53706), The Decline of Scientific Communication within and across Academic Disciplines, QJM The Policy Studies Journal 1986, 14, 3, Mar. 422-428.

¶ A discussion of the specialization & fragmentation of knowledge in both basic & applied fields of science, & the resulting problems in communication within & across academic disciplines in the US. Methods to facilitate communication are related to the structure of the U in the twentieth century, & the alternative structure of an interdisciplinary institute is evaluated. Since the problems themselves are interdisciplinary in nature, it is suggested that U's confront them in an interdisciplinary setting. 1 Rasmussen

88T2486

Jasanoff, Sheila S. (Cornell U, Ithaca NY 14853), Contested Boundaries in Policy-Relevant Science, Social Studies of Science 1987, 17, 2, May, 195-210.

¶ In the US, as in other industrialized nations, regulatory decisions to protect the environment & public health depend heavily on scientific information & place unusual strains on science. Knowledge claims are deconstructed during the rule-making process, exposing areas of weakness or uncertainty & threatening the cognitive authority of science, yet the final regulatory decision depends on the reconstruction of a plausible scientific rationale for the proposed action. The processes of deconstructing & reconstructing knowledge claims give rise to competition among scientists, public officials, & political interest groups, resulting in the use of boundary-defining language to distinguish between science & policy, & to allocate the right to interpret science in ways that further their own interests. Here, the contours of such boundary disputes in the context of the 1970s controversy over carcinogen regulation are explored, focusing on the contested definitions & strategic implications of three groups of concepts: trans-science or science policy, risk assessment, & risk management. Modified HA

88T2487

Jones, John F. & Jones, Lois M. (Chinese U Hong Kong, Shatin New Territories), Citation Analysis as an Approach to Journal Assessment in Social Work, Kuo Li Tai-wan Ta Hsueh She Hui Hsueh K'an/National Taiwan University Journal of Sociology 1986, 18, Nov, 207-219.

¶ Citation analysis is used to measure the adequacy of social work & related journal holdings in 4 tertiary education institutions in Hong Kong. A rank order of 40 journals was established through the Social Science Citation Index. The library committees in the social work departments of the various institutions were then asked to select the 10 most useful journals. While there was considerable agreement among the committees as to the most useful periodicals, their choices were not significantly correlated with the Social Science Citation Index ranking. However, Hong Kong libraries' core social work journal holdings appear reasonably strong. 5 Tables, 20 References. Modified HA

88T2488

Laudan, Larry (U Hawaii, Honolulu 96822), Relativism, Naturalism and Reticulation, Synthese 1987, 71, 3, June, 221-234.

¶ Much discussion of naturalistic epistemology in recent years has supposed that such an epistemology must be relativistic & descriptive with no normative elements. Here it is shown that epistemology can be naturalized without capitulating to relativism or descriptivism. AA

88T2489

Laudan, Rachel (Center Study Science Society Virginia Polytechnic Instt, Blacksburg 24061), Drifting Interests and Colliding Continents: A Response to Stewart, Social Studies of Science 1987, 17, 2, May, 317-321.

Reply, 321-331.

¶ A comment on John Stewart's quantitative study of continental drift & plate tectonics (see SA 35 2/87R4555). Questions are raised regarding his conclusions that among the authors who published on drift, the more prominent rejected the theory. Using both supplementary data & an analysis of Stewart's underlying assumptions, it is argued that the point has not been established. In Drifting or Colliding Interests? A Reply to Laudan with Some New Results, John Stewart (U of Hartford, Conn.) discusses these criticisms, agreeing with several points raised, & he presents new data that better illustrate his thesis. F. Rasmussen

88T2490

McKinlay, Andrew & Potter, Jonathan (Psychological Laboratory U Saint Andrews, Fife Scotland KY16 9JU), Model Discourse: Interpretive Repertoires in Scientists' Conference Talk, Social Studies of Science 1987, 17, 3, Aug. 443-463.

¶ An examination of accounts where both advocates & critics of "top-down" & "bottom-up" theoretical models of science defend their own conceptions & criticize other psychologists' conceptions. The findings of this analysis (1) illustrate how psychologists use interpretive repertoires to produce internally coherent—but at the same time highly variable—accounts of action & belief, (2) explain the detailed content & organization of accounts in terms of dual motivations, both to maintain a coherent position & to avoid making a potentially disruptive blaming, & (3) represent a development of the work done on error accounting in biochemistry, with attention to social scientists & the use of interactional, rather than interview, data. Overall, the analysis describes some features of the constitution of scientific conferences & shows the potential for integrating discourse & conversation analytic approaches. HA

88T2508

Nagy, Katalin. Számítógépesítés. Változó erőterben (Computerization in a Changing Field of Force). Szociologia 1982, 2, 249-263 (HUN)

Abstract not currently available

88T2509

Newton, Susan Lucille (Purdue U, West Lafayette IN 47907). A Comparison of Innovation Adoption Models in Relation to Innovation Type: The Case of the Transportation Cooperative. * Dissertation Abstracts International. 4 The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 1, July, 231-A

Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8709840.

88T2510

Pittman, Jeffrey R. (Arkansas State U, State University 72467). Medicine, Technology, and Genetic Engineering: Reflections from the Outside. ♦ Journal of Sociology and Social Welfare, 1986, 13, 1, Mar, 130-141

Advances in technology are producing many changes in the ways humans view & manage their lives. The refinement of genetic engineering techniques has created vast opportunities for humankind, along with novel problems & dangers. Accordingly, the questions that must be addressed pertain to the nature of life itself. Yet the scientific community must be given sole discretion in managing today's technologies. Indeed, all segments of society must be involved in determining how genetic engineering will be used. 16 References. HA

88T2511

Queau, Philippe. Du langage à l'image (From Language to Image). Cahiers Internationaux de Sociologie 1987, 34, 82, Jan-June, 109-114

The role of the image in the age of modern computer technology is discussed. It is suggested that the possibility of applying mathematical concepts has given the image a much higher status. Whether used in analysis or synthesis, digitalization permits the assimilation of an image to a formal vocabulary used in mathematics or data processing. Images thus given new characteristics. Simulated images do not imitate reality; instead, they make it possible to construct reality & to study its gene- & transformations. Simulation is inventing another reality. Modified A

88T2512

Reese, Stephen D., Shoemaker, Pamela J. & Danielson, Wayne A. (Coil Communication U Texas, Austin 78712). Social Correlates of Public Attitudes toward New Communication Technologies. Journalism Quarterly 1986, 63, 4, winter, 675-682, 692

An exploration of public attitudes in the US toward a variety of new technology issues & the public's predictions of adoption rates for specific media. Telephone interview data from 1,076 Tex residents aged 18+ & used to specify a group of attitudes that form a single dimension of active optimism or pessimism toward the social impact of new technologies. & to relate such attitudes to the social structure. Results indicate that most Rs are optimistic about the personal effects of new media, responses to other items were more complex, & no strong underlying dimension was found. 6 Tables. F. Rasmussen

88T2513

Renaud, Alain. Nouvelles images, nouvelle culture: vers un "imaginaire numérique" (ou "il faut imaginer un demiurge heureux") (New Images, New Culture: Toward a "Numerical Imagination" (or "One Must Imagine a Happy Demiurge")), Cahiers Internationaux de Sociologie, 1987, 34, 82, Jan-June, 125-135 (FRE)

It is argued that the new, computer-based technologies, which have already taken over written texts & sounds, are now monopolizing images, both in analysis & synthesis. This process is not merely an episode in the history of science & technology, nor is its impact restricted to the industrial & economic field. A new pattern of visibility is taking shape, which is part of a basic change in the notion of the imaginary, & is linked to a general transformation of the cultural concepts of space & time. Modified HA

88T2514

Silberman, Amichai (U Wisconsin, Madison 53706). The Rise of the Digital Computer Technological Community in the U.S., * Dissertation Abstracts International. 4 The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 47, 12(1), June, 4526-A

Available from UMI, Ann Arbor MI. Order No. DA8701873.

88T2515

Spinardi, Graham (Science Studies Unit U Edinburgh, EH8 9JT Scotland). Trident: Tracing the Course of Nuclear Weapons Technology. Social Studies of Science, 1987, 17, 2, May, 371-381.

¶ A review essay on Collin McInnes's Trident: The Only Option? (London: Brassey's Defence Publishers, 1986), & D. Douglas Dalglish's & Larry Schweikart's Trident (Carbondale: Southern Illinois U Press, 1984 (see listings in IRPS No. 41)). Both works treat the processes of technological change & technological choice as if they occurred in a social vacuum &, in so doing, demonstrate why a proper understanding of the politics of nuclear weaponry requires a detailed social analysis, including the social shaping of technological change & its social impact. McInnes analyzes the British government's choice to replace the Polaris submarine with the highly sophisticated & expensive Trident, considered by many to have capabilities beyond those required for deterrence. Dalglish's & Schweikart's discussion of processes that shaped technical development of the Trident in the US provides only partial insight, focusing on the submarine portion of the system, & relying heavily on congressional & press sources for their data. F. Rasmussen

88T2516

Todd, Edmund N. (Dept History U New Haven, West Haven CT 06516). A Tale of Three Cities: Electrification and the Structure of Choice in the Ruhr, 1886-1900. Social Studies of Science, 1987, 17, 3, Aug, 387-412

¶ Technological systems often take on characteristics of their social & political contexts. This was particularly clear during the 1890s, when alternating- & direct-current systems offered different advantages. In the late nineteenth century, the two German cities of Dortmund & Essen were expansive, & introduced electric light & power systems using alternating current to promote that tendency. Bochum was more locally oriented, & chose a more efficient & secure direct-current system to serve a narrowly circumscribed area. In each case, elites & officials deployed technological systems that promoted the continued development of the social & political structures within which they lived. 1 Table. HA

88T2517

Zuev, Konstantin Aleksandrovich. Sotsiologicheskie i sotsial'no-psikhologicheskie problemy "komp'yuternoy revolyutsii" (Sociological and Sociopsychological Problems of the "Computer Revolution"). Voprosy filosofii, 1987, 41, 5, May, 133-139. (RUS)

¶ A review article on Sherry Turkle's The Second Self: Computers and the Human Spirit (New York: Simon & Shuster, 1984 (see listing in IRPS No. 41)). A positive appraisal is given of the book, which represents the results of a six-year review of a considerable volume of concrete sociological & psychosociological studies. The book's assessment of the impact of microelectronics & computer technology on all levels of society, including adults & children, is highly valuable. However, its almost exclusive focus on the US & debatable points of methodology limit its usefulness. G. Prostavov

72 sociology of technology

88T2501

Cole, Sam (State U. New York Buffalo, Amherst 14260). The Global Impact of Information Technology. WM World Development, 1986, 14, 10-11, Oct-Nov, 1277-1292.

¶ The impact of information technology on the worldwide distribution of income, employment, & growth is explored. A review of empirical literature is used to quantify the impact of information technology on productivity in different sectors & groups of countries. An economic model of the global economy is then used to calculate the possible impact of information technology on international & domestic distribution & employment. The calculations suggest that indirect effects arising from international & intersectoral competition are at least as important as direct effects, & that the distribution of gains from information technology depends as much on what technology is introduced as on where it is introduced. 8 Tables, 36 References. Modified HA.

88T2502

Franke, Richard H. (Sellingier School Business & Management Loyola Coll. Baltimore MD 21210). Technological Revolution and Productivity Decline: Computer Introduction in the Financial Industry. WM Technological Forecasting and Social Change, 1987, 31, 2, Apr, 143-154.

¶ Productivity effects of the second technological revolution are evaluated for the US financial (banking & insurance) industry, the first major sector of the economy to use the computer widely. Data from the US Commerce Dept. & other statistics on financial industry inputs, outputs, & productivity between 1948 & 1983 indicate that adoption of computer technology has been associated with massive increases of fixed capital, but not with proportionate increases of output, either in total or per unit of labor. As capital intensity grew without compensating benefits, capital productivity began a sharp decline, which has continued for a quarter century. However, multivariate analysis demonstrates the beginning of economic improvement resulting from new technology. These industry-level results are verified in a case study of a large northeastern bank during the period 1960-1984. In the computer revolution, as in the first technological transformation 200 years ago, it appears that experience gained over generations is required to obtain economic benefits from fundamental alterations to work processes. 2 Tables, 3 Figures, 38 References. Modified HA.

88T2503

Gransow, Volker (Dept. German U. California, Berkeley 94720). DDR. Gesellschaft im Umbruch (The German Democratic Republic Society in Revolutionary Change). Soziologische Revue, 1987, 10, 2, Apr, 168-173. (GfR).

¶ A review essay on eight books about the German Democratic Republic: (1) Jahrbuch für Soziologie und Sozialpolitik 1984 (Yearbook for Sociology and Social Policy, 1984), Akademie der Wissenschaften der DDR [Eds], Berlin: Akademie-Verlag, 1984), (2) Jahrbuch für Soziologie und Sozialpolitik 1985 (Yearbook for Sociology and Social Policy, 1985), Akademie der Wissenschaften der DDR [Eds], Berlin: Akademie-Verlag, 1985), (3) Irene Dolling, Individuum und Kultur. Ein Beitrag zur Diskussion (Individual and Culture: A Contribution to the Discussion), Berlin: Dietz, 1986), (4) Manfred Hutter, et al., Mikroelektronik und Gesellschaft (Microelectronics and Society), Berlin: Akademie-Verlag, 1984), (5) Alice Kahl, Steffen H. Wilsdorff, & Herbert I. Wolf, Kollektivreziehungen und Lebensweise (Collective Relationships and Way of Life), Berlin: Dietz, 1984), (6) Schlüsseltechnologie Mikroelektronik (Microelectronics: The Key Technology), Marschall, Wolfgang & Steinitz, Klaus [Eds], Berlin: Dietz, 1985), (7) Dietrich Staritz, Geschichte der DDR 1949-1985 (History of the GDR 1949-1985), Frankfurt: Suhrkamp, 1985), & (8) Die Gesellschaft der DDR. Untersuchungen zu ausgewählten Bereichen (The Society of the GDR: Research in Selected Fields), Voigt, Dieter [Ed], Berlin: Duncker & Humblot, 1984 [see listings in IRPS No. 41]). The Yearbooks examine changing social structures. Some of the contributions of individual authors are discussed here. Dolling offers enlightening interpretations of some aspects of E behavior, eg. self-sacrifice & privacy. Hutter et al. analyze the role of microelectronics in the scientific/technological revolution. Kahl et al. discuss the effects of automation on social life. Marschall & Steinitz examine the economic & other effects of microelectronics. Staritz presents a readable history of the German Democratic Republic since 1949, which analyzed its development as complex interrelationship of internal & external factors. Voigt regards the German Democratic Republic as a society of "total scarcity." C. W. ters.

88T2504

Hammond, Hassan R. (Dept. Sociology & Social Work Kuwait U. Safat), The Impact of Technology on Social Welfare in Kuwait. J. The Social Service Review, 1986, 60, 1, Mar, 52-69.

¶ An investigation of the impact of technology on the modernization process of an oil-rich Arab society explores both the negative & positive effects of technology on the emergence of Kuwait's social welfare system within the context of its accelerating development. The findings illustrate the need to rethink the relationship between technology & societies of the Third World & to formulate appropriate social policies that could contribute to the development & well being of these societies. 3 Tables. A.

88T2505

Ilan, Yael (Faculty Industrial Engineering/Management Technion City Haifa 32000 Israel), Introduction of Microcomputers at an Academic Institute—Study of an Innovative Process. J. Technological Forecasting and Social Change, 1986, 30, 4, Dec, 347-359.

¶ The process of microcomputer adoption & diffusion at an academic institute in Israel is described & implications of this innovation for faculty & students are assessed. Individual faculty acquisition data are analyzed using E. Mansfield's diffusion model ("Technological Change and Rate of Imitation," Econometrica, 1961, 29, 741-765). In addition, case study that describes the centralized purchase decision-making process at the institute is reported, & 2 questionnaire surveys of faculty & students (24 = 51 & 73, respectively) in 1985/86 that examine the development of microcomputer uses & users' attitudes over a 1-year period are presented. The results show mainly that the adoption process is quite slow, although the response of the users is generally found to be quite favorable. 5 References. HA.

88T2506

Kassalow, E. M. (Carnegie Mellon U., Pittsburgh PA 15213). Innovazione tecnologica e relazioni industriali negli Stati Uniti d'America. Un panorama della situazione e delle tendenze attuali (Technological Innovation and Industrial Relations in the U.S.: Outline of the Situation and Present Trends). Studi di Sociologia, 1986, 24, 2, Apr-June, 175-200. (ITA).

Translated by Maurizio Ambrosini.

¶ A translation of the first part of a two-part study presented at the ISET-ENI International Colloquium on "New Technologies and Industrial Relations," Castelgandolfo, Italy, 1985. An overview of the impact of new technologies on the US labor market is presented, drawing on statistical & other evidence. The debate between academics & trade union is summarized. The consequences of technological change for trade union organization & strategies are examined. It is shown that new employment has been created mainly in those areas, companies, or industrial sectors where unions are absent or weak. 2 Tables. Modified HA.

88T2507

Moles, Abraham A., La Visualisation thématique du monde, triomphe du structuralisme appliqué (The Thematic Visualization of the World, Triumph of Applied Structuralism), Cahiers Internationaux de Sociologie, 1987, 34, 82, Jan-June, 147-175. (FRE).

¶ An investigation of the nature of the image. Focus is on the "scientific" image produced by the figurative techniques of the new, computer-based technologies. Technological advances have been so vast, rapid, & unexpected, & so closely linked to an extreme "structuralization" of the image, that they are not understood even by those who use them. Aspects discussed here include: the totalizing function of the image, scientific images as tools of knowledge, the universality of the process of digitalization of images; & the evolution away from representation toward "figurativeness." The laws of the theory of form & of visual infrastructures are summarized. 2 Tables, 7 Figures, 19 References. Modified HA.

1800 demography and human biology

37 demography (population studies)

[2518]

Amichkin, A. B. (Instut Sociological Research, ul Krzhizhanovskogo 24-35 korpus 5 117259 Moscow USSR), Demograficheskaya politika vo frantsii (Demographic Policy in France), Sotsiologicheskie Issledovaniya, 1987, 14, 2, Mar-Apr, 74-82 (RUS)

Though France in the nineteenth & twentieth centuries has largely shared the universal demographic pattern of Europe, it has also had important peculiarities that are evident in its strongly pronatalistic population policy, which has centered on two major themes: prohibitive sanctions against contraception & abortion, & family allowances policy. The first prohibitive approach proved ineffective & was replaced by a stimulative approach based on family allowances. This policy in turn has passed through three stages, characterized by increasingly complex stimulation. It is estimated that legislative actions of this type have a 10% effect on the fertility rate. Modified AA

[2519]

Atkinson, Lynn Parkin (Oklahoma State U, Stillwater 74078), The Generation Gap: An Analysis of Similar Age-Cohorts and Their Parents at Two Time Periods, * Dissertation Abstracts International, A The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 1, July, 222 A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8709689.

[2520]

Babiker, A. (U Southampton, SO9 5NH England), Sampling on Successive Occasions from a Changing Population, * Dissertation Abstracts International C European Abstracts, 1987, 48, 1, spring, 61.

Unavailable from UMI; contact the degree-granting university.

[2521]

Beratis, Stavroula (Dept Psychiatry Medical School U Patras, 261 00 Greece), Suicide in Southwestern Greece 1979-1984, ♦ Acta Psychiatrica Scandinavica, 1986, 74, 5, Nov, 433-439.

An examination of suicide in a southwestern Greek province (population 295,000) from 1979 to 1984, based on police records & official statistics demonstrated: (1) a mean suicide rate 0.48/10,000 population/year, (2) a significant increase of the suicide rate in Ms after age 65, but not in Fs, (3) significantly higher suicide rates in Ms from Ru as opposed to Ur areas, (4) a significantly higher suicide rate in Ms than in Fs from Ur areas, but no difference in Ur areas, (5) differences in suicide for age according to marital status, (6) violent methods of suicide, & psychological disorders the most frequent causes of suicide. Many of the findings are observed for the first time. Some may be related to the characteristics of the population studied, whereas others may also be present in other populations. 3 Tables, 3 Figures, 22 References. Modified HA

[2522]

Betts, Katharine (Dept Anthropology & Sociology Monash U, Clayton Victoria 3168 Australia), The Billings Method of Family Planning: An Assessment, Studies in Family Planning, 1984, 15, 6(1), Nov-Dec, 253-266.

The Billings ovulation method is a periodic abstinence method of regulating births based on the client's interpretation of changing patterns in secretions of cervical mucus monitored by external self-examination, developed in Australia & widely promoted overseas. The method's recent history is outlined & its physiological basis, its use-effectiveness as measured in a number of major trials, & some evidence concerning its general acceptability & applicability in family planning programs are discussed. 5 Tables. HA

[2523]

Birindelli, Anna Maria (U Rome, I-00100 Italy), L'immigrazione straniera a Roma: problemi ed esperienze della prima fase dell'indagine (Foreign Immigration to Rome: Problems and Experiences of the First Phase of the Study), ♦ Studi Emigrazione/Etudes Migrations, 1986, 23, 82-83, June-Sept, 391-402 (ITA)

¶ The characteristics of the foreign population in Rome, Italy, are examined on the basis of official statistics, & the preliminary phase of a field investigation is described. Focus is on the characteristics that determine the degree of internal organization achieved by certain foreign communities. Interviews were conducted in 1984 with 140 immigrants: 43% from the Philippines, 30% from the Cape Verde Islands, 13% from Eritrea, & the rest from other countries. Information derived from the interview questionnaire is presented as a basis for a broader research project on foreign immigration. 2 Tables, 1 Figure, 1 Schema. Modified HA

88T2524

Boehnke, Klaus, Merckens, Hans, Schmidt, Folker & Bergs, Dagmar (Instut Allgemeine und Vergleichende Erziehungswissenschaften Freie U Berlin, 1000 33 Federal Republic Germany), Ausländer und Wertwandel. Hat die "Stille Revolution" auch bei Arbeitsmigranten stattgefunden? (Foreign Workers and Value Change: Is There a "Silent Revolution" among Immigrant Workers in West Germany?), Kolner Zeitschrift für Soziologie und Sozialpsychologie, 1987, 39, 2, June, 330-346 (GER)

¶ An investigation of the value orientations of immigrants vs native-born West Germans, using data from a 1984 nationwide questionnaire interview survey (N = 9,143 Germans & 3,215 foreigners aged 16+). A 4-item version of Ronald Inglehart's postmaterialism scale ("Wertwandel in den westliche Gesellschaften: politische Konsequenzen von materialistischen und postmaterialistischen Prioritäten") [Changing Values in Western Society: Political Consequences of Materialistic and Postmaterialistic Priorities] in Wertwandel und gesellschaftlicher Wandel [Changing Values and Social Change], Klages, Helmut, & Kmiecik, Peter (Eds), Frankfurt, 1981) is used to test the hypothesis that immigrant workers, who are expected to be strongly materialistic at the time of migration, will have higher postmaterialistic orientations the longer they stay in West Germany. Results show that immigrants do have higher materialism scores, but level of education has a strong effect on value orientations. The expected positive association between age & materialism was found only for the native-born, among immigrants, materialism was inversely related to age. It is argued that this should not be considered a result of acculturation, but a consequence of the decision-making process either to immigrate permanently or to remigrate. 2 Tables, 2 Figures, 44 References. Modified HA

88T2525

Bongaarts, John, Building a Family: Unplanned Events, Studies in Family Planning, 1984, 15, 1, Jan-Feb, 14-19.

¶ Couples in developed countries are often unsuccessful in achieving precise family building goals despite the widespread use of birth control. Unplanned events that frustrate reproductive intentions to varying degrees include contraceptive failure, sterility, miscarriage, prolonged conception delay, undesired sex combination of offspring, divorce, & the death of a spouse or a child. The probability of the occurrence of these events is reviewed using US data for 1970-1973 from previous studies. It is concluded that the large majority of newlyweds will experience at least one unplanned event during the family building phase of the life cycle. 1 Table, 5 Figures. HA

88T2526

Borjas, George J. & Tienda, Marta (U California, Santa Barbara 93106), The Economic Consequences of Immigration, IM Science, 1987, 235, 4789, 6 Feb, 645-651.

¶ A review of published statistical evidence & empirical research on the economic consequences of immigration to the US supports three major conclusions: (1) The aggregate impact of foreign workers on native workers' earnings & employment is small, but differs for selected population subgroups & high ethnic density labor markets. (2) Immigrants who arrived during the 1970s are less skilled than earlier arrivals & can be expected to have relatively low incomes throughout their working lives. (3) The evidence on immigrants' receipt of public assistance income is inconclusive, though the greater pervasiveness of poverty among Asian & Hispanic immigrants makes them more likely to need such assistance than do US natives. 5 Tables. Modified HA

PHILOSOPHICAL INVESTIGATIONS

Edited by D Z Phillips

Philosophical Investigations features articles in every branch of philosophy together with wide ranging critical notices and reviews. Among the articles in 1988 issues will be Robert Coburn's Metaphysical Theology and the Life of Faith, David Cockburn's The Idea of a Person as He is in Himself, Christopher Cherry's When is Fantasising Morally Bad?, John Churchill's Wittgenstein: The Certainty of World Pictures, A. B. Cody's States of Quine and H. E. Mason's On the Treatment of the Will in Wittgenstein's Later Writings.

Recent book reviews include:

Fergus Kerr: Theology after Wittgenstein
ROWAN WILLIAMS

R. A. Sharpe: Contemporary Aesthetics
MARTYN EVANS

R. A. Duff: Trials and Punishments
DUDLEY KNOWLES

Philosophical Investigations is published in January, April, July, October
Subscription Rates Volume 11, 1988

Individuals: £16.00 (UK) £20.00 (overseas) US$34.25 (N. America)

Institutions: £38.80 (UK) £48.25 (overseas) US$80.00 (N. America)

Rates include inland or accelerated surface postage.

- ☐ Please enter my subscription to Philosophical Investigations/send me a sample copy
- ☐ I enclose cheque/money order made payable to Basil Blackwell
- ☐ Please charge my Access/American Express/Barclaycard/Diners Club/Mastercharge/Visa account number:

..... Signature

Card expiry date

- ☐ For payments via the National Giro Bank, the Basil Blackwell account number is 236 6053

Address

.....
If address registered with card company differs from above, please give details.
Please return this form together with your payment if applicable to:

Basil Blackwell • Journals Subscription Dept.,
108 Cowley Road, Oxford OX4 1JF, UK or Journals Dept., Box 1320,
Murray Hill Station, NY 10158, USA.

reveals a predominance of Ms in the central age brackets. The Tunisian presence is greatest in southern Italy, especially Sicily; data for this region are examined separately. 4 Tables, 3 Figures, 19 References. Modified HA

88T2537

Dow, Thomas E., Jr. & Werner, Linda H. (State U New York, Purchase 10577), Perceptions of Family Planning among Rural Kenyan Women, Studies in Family Planning, 1983, 14, 2, Feb, 35-43

Perceptions of family planning & attitudes toward the family planning program held by a sample of 1,339 Ru Kenyan women are examined, using data from the 1977/78 Kenya Fertility Survey. In spite of reasonable levels of family planning knowledge & approval, as well as generally favorable perceptions of family planning program goals, little contraceptive use is observed. High levels of desired fertility & the success of current noncontraceptive spacing practices are noted as possible explanations, along with concerns over the safety, availability, & cost of contraceptives. 6 Tables. HA

88T2538

Federici, Nora, Difficoltà e problemi di ricerche sul campo relative all presenza straniera in Italia (Difficulties and Problems of Field Research Concerning the Foreign Presence in Italy), ♦ Studi Emigrazione/Etudes Migrations, 1986, 23, 82-83, June-Sept, 315-321 (ITA)

A brief, general discussion of the methodological problems that have arisen in the course of field research on the foreign population in Italy. These include problems of organization, funding, & the utilization of personnel. The problems are increased when an attempt is made to coordinate investigations carried out in different geographical areas by different scholars. Modified HA

88T2539

Finns, F. (Abo Akademi, SF-20500 50 Finland), Den finlandssvenska befolkningsutvecklingen, 1950-1980. En analys av en språkgrupps demografiska utveckling och effekten av blandaktenskap (The Demographic Development of the Swedish Population in Finland, 1950-1980. A Study of the Demography of a Language Group and the Effect of Mixed Marriages), ♦ Dissertation Abstracts International C European Abstracts, 1987, 48, 1, spring, 61 (SWE)

Unavailable from UMI; published by Svenska Litteratursällskapet i Finland. (Abstract appears in English.)

88T2540

Journier, Marcel (Dept sociologie U Montréal, Quebec H3C 3J7), La Démographie comme discipline (Demography as a Discipline), ♦ Sociologie et Sociétés, 1987, 19, 1, Apr, 163-165 (FRE)

The relationship between demography & other social science is examined. Émile Durkheim considered demography as a very important but not an autonomous part of sociology. However, since WWII, demography has developed as an autonomous discipline. This is part of a general trend toward differentiation & specialization. The institutional context of this development is examined, & the question of whether demography should constitute a separate U discipline is discussed. Particular reference is made to the situation in the U of Montreal, Quebec. 2 Tables. C. Waters

88T2541

Fukurai, Hiroshi, Pick, James B. & Butler, Edgar W. (U California, Riverside 92521), Interstate Migration in Mexico, 1979-80: A Spatial Analysis, ♦ U Sociology and Social Research, 1987, 71, 4, July, 312-322

An examination of the 1979/80 interstate migration patterns in Mexico. Statistical graphics techniques are used to identify states with similar migration patterns & to examine SE characteristics of states at both origin & destination of migrants. Analytic techniques include regression analysis, migration flows, & a statistical residual mapping. The residual migration patterns suggest the extent to which SE variables explain migration differences by showing unique clusters of unexplained residuals. 5 Tables, 5 Figures, 14 References. Modified AA

88T2542

Gabor, László & Háber, Judit, Tanító-és tanárképző főiskolák végző hallgatóinak munkahelyválasztása (Labor Migration among Young Graduates from Teacher Training Institutes).

Sociologia, 1982, 2, 265-282 (HUN)

† Abstract not currently available

88T2543

Gervais, Raymond & Ouelet, Charles (U Paris VII, F-75221 Cedex 05 France), Hypothèses sur les rapports entre qualitatif et quantitatif en démographie (Hypotheses on the Relationships between the Qualitative and the Quantitative in Demography), ♦ Sociologie et Sociétés, 1987, 19, 1, Apr, 159-162 (FRE)

Based on a historical & epistemological approach, some reflections are presented on the emergence of the dominant type of demography, i.e., quantitative & institutional. The general context is described in which, on one hand, the concept of statistics was formed, & on the other, the Malthusian system was established. The role of demography in the formation of state discourse on the management of human resources & the application of policies is discussed. Some hypotheses are put forward concerning the difficulty, in demography, of harmonizing the relations between quantitative & qualitative. 4 References. C. Waters

88T2544

Giacomello, Paola (U Rome, I-00100 Italy), Studio del comportamento demografico della popolazione straniera: aspetti metodologici ed esperienze straniere (The Study of the Demographic Behavior of Foreign Populations. Methodological Aspects and Experiences in Other Countries), ♦ Studi Emigrazione/Etudes Migrations, 1986, 23, 82-83, June-Sept, 251-258 (ITA)

A discussion of the methodological issues involved in the attempt to identify the principal demographic variables that reveal the characteristics of immigrant populations. Problems arise from the lack of continuous, comprehensive census or survey data, such data are extremely difficult to obtain, because of the large number of undocumented immigrants involved. The most significant methodological approaches used experimentally in other countries are reviewed, & their usefulness for Italy is discussed. Modified HA

88T2545

Goodman, Allen C. (Dept Economics Wayne State U, Detroit MI 48202), Using Lorenz Curves to Characterize Urban Elderly Populations, Urban Studies, 1987, 24, 1, Feb, 77-80

Ur elderly distributions are measured using Lorenz curves & Gini coefficients estimated from 1980 US Census data. These summary measures are then used to examine population distributions among three metropolitan Ur areas: Baltimore, Md, & Philadelphia & Pittsburgh, Pa. It is revealed that the elderly are more concentrated in the central cities of Philadelphia & Baltimore than in Pittsburgh, even though the Pittsburgh SMSA has the largest elderly % of the three. The elderly & the poor elderly are more concentrated in Baltimore than in Philadelphia, & both are more concentrated than in Pittsburgh. 2 Tables, 5 References. Modified HA

88T2546

Greenhalgh, Susan & Bongaarts, John, Fertility Policy in China: Future Options, U Science, 1987, 235, 4793, 6 Mar, 1167-1172

A wide range of social, economic, & demographic criteria are used to evaluate the People's Republic of China's present one-child policy & five alternate fertility policies that might guide population control efforts until the end of the century when the one-child policy is scheduled to be abandoned, using government statistics, data from previous studies, & discussions with government officials (N not given). These criteria include (1) the policies' macrodemographic impact on total population size & population aging, (2) their microdemographic effects on the family's ability to support the elderly, its economic capabilities, & the position of women, & (3) their cultural acceptability to the majority Han Chinese population. Results suggest that the least desirable strategy is to retain the present policy, all the two-child alternatives perform better than the current one-child policy in achieving the policy goals considered. 5 Tables. HA

88T2547

Hamel, Pierre J., La Réforme fiscale et le "papy boom" (Fiscal Reform and the "Daddy Boom"), ♦ Sociologie et Sociétés, 1987, 19, 1, Apr, 178-180 (FRE)

Current fiscal reform measures in Canada are examined & their probable consequences are analyzed in relation to the aging of the "baby boom" generation (the "daddy boom"). The reforms aim to lower personal income taxes while raising consumption & profits taxes. Higher

88T2527

Boyd, Monica, Taylor, Chris & Delaney, Paul (Carleton U, Ottawa Ontario K1S 5B6). Temporary Workers in Canada: A Multifaceted Program. ♦ International Migration Review, 1986, 20, 4, winter, 929-950.

¶ Important developments in the character of temporary worker flows to Canada between 1973 & 1985 are highlighted, using unpublished data analyzed by new measures. The number of employment authorizations are converted to person years to indicate the overall labor market impact of temporary worker flows, & this measure is used to analyze unpublished data from Employment & Immigration Canada. The findings reveal that a significant & growing proportion of employment authorizations are exempted from governmental procedures that link the admission of temporary workers to the Canadian labor market. In many cases, these exempt documents are being authorized for social & humanitarian programs (eg, refugee claimants, in-Canada immigrant claimants). As a result, the actual "labor recruitment" component of these authorizations is considerably less than interpreted from published statistics of employment authorizations. The policy implications of these findings are discussed. 6 Tables, 21 References. HA

88T2528

Brody, Charles J. & McRae, James A., Jr. (Dept Sociology U South Carolina, Columbia 29208). Models for Estimating Effects of Origin, Destination, and Mobility. ♦ Social Forces, 1987, 66, 1, Sept., 208-225.

¶ The effects of SS inconsistency or mobility on different dependent variables focusing on emotional well-being are examined based on 1978 survey data on white working Ms (N = 838). Two types of identifying restrictions on the mobility effects are proposed, allowing the estimation of main & mobility effects. The first of these constrains the effect of slight upward mobility to be identical to the effect of no mobility. The second constrains the effects of upward & downward mobility to be exponential. For four of five measures of well-being, significant effects are estimated. For three of these, mobility in either direction is associated with improved mental health. For another, the effects of downward mobility are beneficial, & the effects of upward mobility are detrimental. Net of origin & destination, change positively affects men's lives. 3 Tables, 2 Figures, 28 References. Modified HA

88T2529

Brown, Barbara B. (Boston U, MA 02215). Facing the 'Black Peril': The Politics of Population Control in South Africa. Journal of Southern African Studies, 1987, 13, 2, Jan., 256-273.

¶ Using government statistics, the nature & cause of birth control policy changes in South Africa are explored in the context of current political & economic trends. Migration history in South Africa is outlined & the establishment in the 1970s of a government birth control program, which targets black Fs living in Uruas, is described. A number of serious contradictions in the government's policies regarding birth control are identified & the effects of these contradictions on the effectiveness of the programs are discussed. 5 Tables, 2 Figures. F. Rasmussen

88T2530

Carchedi, Francesco. Alcune modifiche sopravvenute nelle principali comunità di immigrati presenti a Roma (Some Changes That Have Occurred in the Main Immigrant Communities in Rome). ♦ Studi Emigrazione/Études Migrations, 1986, 23, 82-83, June-Sept., 410-413. (ITA)

¶ A report on ongoing research on the Filipino & Cape Verdian immigrant communities in Rome, Italy. In 1984, the CISP research group interviewed 60 Filipinos & 421 Cape Verdians (see abstract of Giovanni Battista Ranuzzi's article in this section). Two years later, further conversations with representatives of these communities (N not given) generally confirmed the reliability of the earlier data. The size of the communities has remained stable: approximately 7,500 Filipinos & 3,500 Cape Verdians. However, certain changes in sociodemographic characteristics have been brought to light. The investigation is continuing, & immigrants of other nationalities will also be interviewed. Modified HA

88T2531

Casacchia, Oliviero. La rilevazione dell'immigrazione straniera: considerazioni sulle fonti disponibili in alcuni paesi di accogliimento (Surveying Foreign Immigration: Considerations on the Available Data Sources in Some Host Countries). ♦ Studi Emigrazione/Études Migrations, 1986, 23, 82-83, June-Sept., 266-280. (ITA)

¶ Information sources & methods used to collect data on foreign immigrants in seven traditional host countries: France, the Netherlands, G West Germany, Sweden, Switzerland, & the US are reviewed. The documentation is found to be generally poor & imprecise. Some common characteristics are noted, in particular the still insufficient attention given to the integrated use of all available information sources in the study of international migration flows. 35 References. Modified HA

88T2532

Chayovan, Napaporn, Hermelin, Albert L. & Knodel, John (Inst Population Studies Chulalongkorn U, Bangkok Thailand). Measuring Accessibility to Family Planning Services in Rural Thailand. Studies in Family Planning, 1984, 15, 5, Sept-Oct., 201-211.

¶ There are a variety of ways to conceptualize & measure accessibility to contraceptive services & supplies. Data from national-, community-, & village-level surveys conducted in Ru Thailand between 1969 & 1984 are used to develop 11 measures of accessibility that reflect time & distance to various government program outlets. Many of these are moderately correlated with one another, & to an important extent, different measures show different associations with levels of contraceptive prevalence. Clearly there is a general need in this area of investigation to pay more attention to the measurement of accessibility as a community characteristic & to consider the sensitivity of results to alternate measures. 8 Tables. Modified HA

88T2533

Collicelli, Carla & DiCori, Simonette. L'immigrazione straniera in Italia nel contesto delle problematiche migratorie internazionali (Foreign Immigration into Italy in the Context of International Problems of Migration). ♦ Studi Emigrazione/Études Migrations, 1986, 82-83, June-Sept., 429-442. (ITA)

¶ Some official statistics concerning worldwide migration patterns are examined & their implications discussed, especially as regards the situation in Italy. Traditionally, Italians emigrated to northern Europe & the US; today, there is increasing immigration into Italy from Asia & Africa. This situation has given rise to new problems, relative to the social integration of immigrants, illegal immigrants, black market labor, & political refugees. Research on these problems is hampered by the difficulty of obtaining accurate data concerning the foreign presence, & seems that the public has not yet become aware of the magnitude of the immigration phenomenon & its possible social effects. 9 Tables. Modified HA

88T2534

Cook, Annabel Kirschner (Dept Ru Sociology Washington State U, Pullman 99164-4006). Nonmetropolitan Migration: The Influence of Neglected Variables. ♦ Rural Sociology, 1987, 52, 3, Oct., 409-418.

¶ A revised version of SA 33 3/S16838/RSS/1985/1686

88T2535

Cote, Guy L. (748 Ave Rockland, Outremont Quebec H2V 2Z6). Migration interne: phénomène demo-sociologique et socio-démographique (Internal Migration: A Demo-Sociological & Socio-Demographic Phenomenon). ♦ Sociologie et Sociétés, 1987, 19, 1, Apr., 175-178. (FRE)

¶ Drawing on research experience on internal migration, regional disparities, & social mobility in GB (Cote, Guy L., "Moving On: Area, Migration and Socio-Economic Attainment in Sociological Perspective," Ph.D. thesis, Oxford U, 1983) this research area is described as a "no man's land" between sociology & demography. The different interests & approaches of sociology & demography are examined, & the benefits & problems of attempting to combine the two are considered. Various aspects of internal migration in general are discussed, & their significance for Quebec is considered. 10 References. C. Waters

88T2536

DiComite, Luigi (U Bari, I-70121 Italy). L'immigrazione tunisienne in Italia: alcune donnee censitarie (Tunisian Immigration in Italy: Some Census Data). ♦ Studi Emigrazione/Études Migrations, 1986, 23, 82-83, June-Sept., 217-227. (FRE)

¶ According to the 1981 census, the Tunisian community in Italy consisted of approximately 9,000 persons; however, Tunisian sources estimate that 13,000 Tunisians live in Italy. Tunisians form the largest group of North Africans in Italy (46% of the total North African population). Examination of the regional distribution & sex & age structure of the community ions are supported by considerable literature. Increasing evidence indicates that other Caribbean people have the proven West Indian ability to assimilate & manage the complexities of US economic & political life & that this skill does not appear to be a function of SC or even language class, as the recent Haitian migration to Miami demonstrates. 1 Table, Photograph. Modified AA

88T2558

Manese, Guido, Nascite e matrimoni di cittadini stranieri in Italia (Births and Marriages among Foreign Residents in Italy), ♦ Studi Emigrazione/Etudes Migrations, 1986, 23, 82-83, June-Sept, 228-241 (ITA)

* The fertility & nuptiality ratios of foreign immigrants in Rome, Italy, are examined, based on a sample of 996 marriages & 1,030 births, drawn from the official 1984 register of births & marriages. Factors such as educational level, & occupation & employment sector of the parents & spouses are investigated. Marriage patterns among Italians, Europeans of other nationalities, & non-Europeans are also examined. 11 Tables. Modified HA

88T2559

Manton, Kenneth G., Myers, George C. & Andrews, Gary R. (Center Demographic Studies Dept Sociology Duke U, Durham NC 27706) Morbidity and Disability Patterns in Four Developing Nations: Their Implications for Social and Economic Integration of the Elderly, Journal of Cross-Cultural Gerontology, 1987, 2, 2, Apr, 115-129

* Data from the World Health Organization regional office of the Western Pacific-sponsored surveys conducted in 4 countries (the Republic of Korea, the Philippines, Malaysia, & Fiji; N not given) on long-term health care services for the elderly were analyzed using a multivariate procedure that can identify both distinctive morbidity/disability patterns & the subgroups that manifest them. The implications for elderly persons' ability to remain socially & economically integrated are examined. 10 Tables, 10 References. Modified HA

88T2560

Marozza, Franco, Possibilita teoriche di coordinamento informatico delle fonti di informazione sulla presenza degli stranieri in Italia: il linkage dei vari archivi (The Theoretical Possibility of Coordinating Data from Different Information Sources on the Presence of Foreigners in Italy: The Linkage of Various Archives), ♦ Studi Emigrazione/Etudes Migrations, 1986, 23, 82-83, June-Sept, 281-305 (ITA)

* A review of all possible sources of information on the presence of foreigners in Italy. The various types of data collected by ISTAT, government ministries, & other foreign sources are examined. The theoretical possibility of coordinating the data from these different sources is investigated, & a proposal for linking the various archives is presented. 9 Tables. Modified HA

88T2561

McDevitt, Thomas M., Hawley, Amos H., Udry, J. Richard, Gadalla, Saad, Leoprapi, Boonlert & Cardona, Ramiro (c/o Udry, Dept Maternal & Child Health U North Carolina, Chapel Hill 27514), Migration Plans of the Rural Populations of Third World Countries: A Probit Analysis of Micro-Level Data from Asia, Africa, and Latin America, Journal of Developing Areas, 1986, 20, 4, July, 473-490

* The extent to which certain microlevel factors can predict rural migration plans across different SE settings is investigated using questionnaire interview, & life history data obtained from 3,392 Ru adults living in selected villages located within the "migration shed" of Bangkok, Thailand, Cairo, Egypt, & Bogota, Colombia, between 1977 & 1979. Using a probit estimation technique, it is demonstrated that decisions to migrate are influenced by personal characteristics (age, education, & marital status), adaptability, & access to information about alternative living areas; the effect of economic status is unclear. These findings are consistent with those found in other studies of the migration decision process in Africa, Asia, & Latin America. Suggestions for methodological improvements in future comparative cross-national research are offered. 1 Table, 1 Hyatt

88T2562

Millman, S. R. & Potter, R. G. (Dept Sociology Brown U, Providence RI 02912), The Fertility Impact of Spousal Separation, Studies in Family Planning, 1984, 15, 3, May-June, 121-126

* The impact of spousal separation on marital fertility in a natural fertility context is investigated, using REPMOD, a procedure for computer simulation of reproductive processes. A given length of separation affects fertility more the less it overlaps with time during which the woman is not at risk of conception. Thus the "efficiency" of separation as a constraint on fertility increases as its duration increases, the duration of postpartum amenorrhea decreases, & fecundability decreases. Effects of spousal separation in actual situations can be estimated using results of these simulations as inputs. 6 Tables. HA

88T2563

Moon, Chang-Jin (U Chicago, IL 60637), Women's Work and Fertility Preference in a Developing Society: Central Thailand, ♦ Dissertation Abstracts International, 4, The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 47, 11, May, 4200-A. Unavailable from UMI; contact the degree-granting university.

88T2564

Moretti, Eros (U Ancona, I-60128 Italy), La presenza di studenti stranieri nelle Marche: presentazione di una ricerca (The Presence of Foreign Students in the Marche Region: Presentation of a Research Project), ♦ Studi Emigrazione/Etudes Migrations, 1986, 23, 82-83, June-Sept, 414-418 (ITA)

* A preliminary report on an ongoing 3-part study of foreign students in the Marche region of Italy, consisting of: (1) in-depth interviews with key witnesses (N not given), (2) the compilation of data from the personal data files maintained at the administrative offices of US & other schools on all foreign students who have registered for a course in the region in the past 10 years, & (3) an interview survey, consisting of a structured questionnaire administered to a probability sample of all foreign students currently residing in Marche (N not given). Here, some findings of Phase 1 are summarized, & the techniques used to gather information in Phases 2 & 3 are described. 1 Table. Modified HA

88T2565

Mosher, William D. & Goldscheider, Calvin (National Center Health Statistics, 3700 East-West Highway Hyattsville MD 20782), Contraceptive Patterns of Religious and Racial Groups in the United States, 1955-76: Convergence and Distinctiveness, Studies in Family Planning, 1984, 15, 3, May-June, 101-111

* A number of studies have reported data on contraceptive use among white Protestant & white Catholic couples in the US. Here, a large sample of couples with other or no religious affiliation, as well as black couples categorized by religion, are studied, using data from the 1973 & 1976 national surveys of family growth & the 1955 growth of American Families survey. Within a nationally representative sample of 14,000 married women aged 15-44, a convergence is found among white Protestant, Catholic, & Jewish couples in contraceptive patterns between 1955 & the mid-1970s, but large differences remained at the latter date, even after multivariate controls. Among black couples, differences by religious affiliation are smaller, but differences between white & black couples within religion categories are substantial. It is concluded that religious differences are not artifacts of an incomplete demographic transition, & that religious affiliation is an indispensable datum for understanding contraceptive choice in the US. 6 Tables, 32 References. Modified HA

88T2566

Murty, K. Radhakrishna & DeVos, Susan (Dept Sociology Andhra U, Andhra Pradesh India), Ethnic Differences in Contraceptive Use in Sri Lanka, Studies in Family Planning, 1984, 15, 5, Sept-Oct, 222-232

* In Sri Lanka in 1975, the majority Sinhalese had a much higher use of contraception than either the Sri Lanka Tamils or the Moors. Results of a 1975 Sri Lanka World Fertility Survey, involving a nationally representative sample of 4,640 ever-married women under age 45, are used to assess four possible reasons for differential contraceptive use: (1) differences in SE position, (2) cultural differences, (3) minority status, & (4) differential access to family planning services. The SE, cultural, & minority status hypotheses fail to explain the higher contraceptive use among the Sinhalese; rather, ethnic differences in contraceptive use appear to have been largely caused by differential access to family planning services. 8 Tables, 1 Appendix, 26 References. Modified HA consumption taxes will place a greater burden on retired persons, whose expenses (eg, for food, lodging, & services) will increase although their income will not. Inequalities between the Mc elderly, who have been able to contribute to savings schemes, & those who depend entirely on social security payments will become more marked. This scenario can still be averted if the "daddy boomers" mobilize & bring pressure to bear on government to change its policies. 3 References. C. Waters.

88T2548

Hammerslough, Charles Rohr, II (Princeton U., NJ 08544), Correcting Survey-Based Contraceptive Failure Rates for Abortion Under-Reporting. * Dissertation Abstracts International: A The Humanities and Social Sciences 1987, 47, 11, May, 4197-A 4198-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor MI. Order No. DA8704585.

88T2549

Hazlett, Leslie Street (Florida State U., Tallahassee 32306), The Effectiveness of Survival Rate and Time-Series Regression Techniques for Estimation of Net Migration, Florida and New York: State and State Economic Areas. * Dissertation Abstracts International: A The Humanities and Social Sciences 1987, 47, 12(1), June, 4516-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor MI. Order No. DA8708175.

88T2550

Holinger, Paul C., Offer, Daniel & Ostrov, Eric (Rush-Presbyterian Saint Luke's Medical Center, 1725 West Harrison St Chicago IL 60612), Suicide and Homicide in the United States: An Epidemiologic Study of Violent Death, Population Changes, and the Potential for Prediction. Am J The American Journal of Psychiatry 1987, 144, 2, Feb, 215-219.

¶ Various data on US mortality rates from 1933 to 1982 & unpublished data from the National Center for Health Statistics reveal significant positive correlations between the suicide & homicide rates for persons aged 15-24 & the proportion of this age group in the population, but significant negative correlations for most adult age groups (35-64 years). Since future numbers of adolescents & adults can be estimated on the basis of current population data for children & preadolescents, the epidemiologic patterns for suicide & homicide may be predictable for certain age groups. However, methodologic problems are inherent in using national mortality & population data, & many years are necessary to evaluate such epidemiologic propositions. 1 Table, 1 Figure, 25 References. Modified HA.

88T2551

Jones, Frank F. (McMaster U., Hamilton Ontario L8S 4L8), Age at Immigration and Education: Further Explorations. ♦ International Migration Review 1987, 21, 1, spring, 70-85.

¶ Although initial analyses of national survey data collected for the July 1973 Canadian Mobility Study, reveal a weak relationship between age at immigration & educational attainment, inclusion of a measure of periodicity in educational attainment models reveals age at immigration to have an effect comparable to that of family size on educational attainment. Given the strong periodicity effect, when age at immigration is excluded from the analysis, it is argued that the status attainment model, which best accounts for the educational attainment of native-born Canadians, also accounts best for the educational attainment of the foreign-born. 7 Tables, 22 References. HA.

88T2552

Landry, Yves & Legare, Jacques (U Montreal, Quebec H3C 3J7), The Life Course of Seventeenth-Century Immigrants to Canada. Am J The Journal of Family History 1987, 12, 1-3, Jan-July, 201-212.

¶ Data from a computerized register of the seventeenth century French Canadian population are used to identify the demographic parameters behind the individual life course of the cohorts of immigrants that founded the country. Individuals born outside of Canada who settled there before 1680 (N = 2,236) were selected for the study. The analysis covers not only the timing of the marriages & births of children of the immigrants, from their arrival to their death, but also the intensity of the phenomena that characterize their family life. An attempt is made to identify the proportion of individuals who lived through the main phases of the family life cycle (preparental, parental, postparental), & to measure their timing. To avoid hiding the diversity of demographic behaviors behind broad averages, such basic variables as sex, length of life, number of marriages contracted, & number of children born are taken into account. 7 Tables, 2 Figures, 11 References. HA.

88T2553

Lane, John Christian (8181 South Lewis Ave, Tulsa OK 74137), Social Epidemiology: Directions for the Future in Academic and "Sho Leather" Risk Analysis. ♦ Am J The Journal of Community Health 1987, 12, 2-3, summer-fall, 130-138.

¶ An examination of the changing scope & impact of social epidemiology, focusing on the future of teaching & research in the field. Social analysis is seen as a method for linking many disciplines, & a collaborative approach is considered essential. The newer social epidemiology holds promise for all professionals in community health & preventive medicine, provided those professionals are receptive to interdisciplinary cooperation. 1 Figure, 50 References. Modified HA.

88T2554

Levinson, Uri, Cohen, Jiska & Jaffe-Katz, Amanda (Cohen George Washington U Medical Center, Washington DC 20037), Life Expectancy of Kibbutz Members. International Journal of Aging and Human Development 1986, 23, 3, 195-205.

¶ Kibbutz federation statistical data for 1977 are presented demonstrating that the life expectancy (LE) of kibbutz members both men & women is higher than that of the overall Jewish population in Israel. However, closer inspection of the death rates at various ages reveals that from age 10 to 49, those of kibbutz men are actually higher than that of the general population, but this does not affect average LE in the long run. These data add to & support other research findings illustrating more positive mental health & well-being found among kibbutz members than among other comparative populations. 2 Tables, 18 References. Modified HA.

88T2555

Levy, Frank (School Public Affairs U Maryland, College Park 20742), Changes in the Distribution of American Family Income 1947 to 1984. Am Science 1987, 236, 4804, 22 May, 923-927.

¶ US family income distribution is at the center of several controversies. Some observers argue that the US Mc is vanishing, but US census statistics show income inequality has not changed appreciably since 1947. A second controversy involves whether average living standards have risen or fallen since the 1973/74 major oil price increase. These controversies can be partially resolved by understanding the sharp slowdown in the growth of workers' wages that occurred after 1973, & the demographic trends that kept per capita living standards rising despite stagnant wages including more working women & low birthrates. 4 Tables, 1 Figure. HA.

88T2556

Light, Ivan & Sanchez, Angel A. (U California, Los Angeles 90024), Immigrant Entrepreneurs in 272 SMSAs. Am Sociological Perspectives 1987, 30, 4, Oct, 373-399.

¶ An examination of the effect of the % of foreign-born in the LE on aggregate self-employment in 272 SMSAs, based on data collected from the 1980 public use sample of the US Census. Because mean self-employment was higher among foreign-born than among native-born, increased % of foreign-born in an SMSA's LE causes increased self-employment. As a result of renewed immigration during the 1970s & % resulting increase in the foreign-born component of the civilian LE, net farm self-employment in the US increased about 3% above what would have been expected from a comparable addition of native-born workers. Depending on the method of estimation used, this increase explains from 16% to 52% of the decade's increase in total self-employment. Rates of self-employment among immigrants had no effect on rates of or return to self-employment among the native-born in general, or among native blacks, specifically. 9 Tables, 2 Figures, 36 References. Modified HA.

88T2557

Maingot, Anthony P. (Florida International U, Tamiami Trail Miami 33165), The Stress Factors in Migration: A Dissenting View. ♦ Am Migration Today 1985, 13, 5, 26-29.

¶ Today studies in the area of modernization are disputing the assumption that migration is inevitably accompanied by stress & other deterrents to psychological well-being. This view is supported by an analysis of migration to the US of peoples from the English-speaking West Caribbean area, based on US government data & previous studies. By conceptualizing the US-West Indian region as a sociocultural area with a high degree of shared values & norms, allowing considerable transmissibility of skills, it is shown that the region is something akin to one social structure. Within this framework it is realistic to assume low levels of stress in population movements & successful adaptation: these assumptions

8812576

Rammi, Taghi (New York U, NY 10003). Interprovincial Migration in Iran. * Dissertation Abstracts International: A The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 47, 12(1), June, 4517-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor MI. Order No. DA8706774.

8812577

Ranzani, Giovanni Battista. Alcune caratteristiche dell'immigrazione straniera a Roma: confronto tra l'indagine ECAP-CGIL, FMIM e i primi risultati dell'indagine CISP (Some Characteristics of Foreign Immigration in Rome: A Comparison between the ECAP-CGIL / FMIM Survey and the First Results of the CISP Survey). ♦ Studi Emigrazione/Etudes Migrations, 1986, 23, 82-83, June-Sept., 433-409 (ITA).

An examination of data on the Filipino & Cape Verdian ethnic groups Rome, Italy. In 1980, ECAP-CGIL/FMIM interviewed 55 Filipinos & 88 Cape Verdians, CISP interviewed 60 Filipinos & 42 Cape Verdians in 1984 in the preliminary phase of a larger survey. Some of the more salient structural traits of the evolution of the immigrant communities are confirmed by the later survey, but certain changes are also observable over the intervening 4 years. Some processes of settlement have in that involve members of both communities, but in other ways the modalities are differentiated from each other. 8 Tables. Modified HA.

8812578

Ricketts, Erol (City U New York, NY 10036). U.S. Investment and Immigration from the Caribbean. ♦ Social Problems, 1987, 34, 4, Oct., 374-387.

Multivariate analysis of official statistics on a sample of 18 Caribbean countries examines the relationship between growth in US direct investment in Caribbean countries & immigration from the area during the 70s. The results indicate countries that received more US direct investment had higher rates of immigration after other important factors were controlled. Implications of this finding for economic policy in the Caribbean Basin are discussed. 3 Tables, 1 Figure, 45 References. HA.

8812579

Robinson, Warren C. (Population Issues Research Centre Pennsylvania State U, University Park 16802). Regional Variation in the Age-Specific Natural Fertility Curve. Journal of Biosocial Science, 1987, 19, 1, Jan., 57-64.

The question of whether there are consistent regional variations in the shape of the age-specific natural fertility curve is examined using data for 45 less-developed countries drawn from a 1979 US Census Bureau compilation. In general, there do not appear to be such variations. A remarkably consistent age pattern of natural fertility emerges, once rates have been normalized & an adjustment made for age at first exposure to the risk of pregnancy. The results strongly support A. J. Coale's original natural fertility paradigm (see SA 22/73G2088). 4 Tables, 3 Figures, 4 Appendixes, 14 References. HA.

8812580

Rocha-Trindade, Maria Beatriz. Do rural ao urbano: o associativismo como estratégia de sobrevivência (From the City to the Country: Association as a Strategy of Survival). ♦ Análise Social, 1986, 22, 29(1), 313-330. (POR).

The Zona do Pinhal is an inland area of central Portugal suffering in depopulation due to lack of economic opportunities. The population shrank from 64,802 in 1911 to 42,726 in 1981. While many residents emigrated abroad to Angola, Mozambique, & Brazil, most of the emigrants fled to Lisbon. Many levels of association continue to exist between residents of Zona do Pinhal & their relatives & friends in Lisbon. The emergence of strong social networks involving sizable remittances from the emigrant community together with programs to enhance employment opportunities in Zona do Pinhal are the primary strategies for economic survival in this region. 4 Tables, 3 Charts, 1 Graph, 3 Maps, 10 References. Modified HA.

8812581

Rodriguez, Nestor P. (U of Houston, TX 77004). Undocumented Central Americans in Houston: Diverse Populations. ♦ International Migration Review, 1987, 21, 1, spring, 4-26.

During political conflict &/or economic decline, large numbers of undocumented Central Americans have been coming to the US since the 1970s. Many of these migrants have settled in Ur areas of the country that have large Hispanic concentrations. It is estimated that about 100,000 have settled in Houston, Tex. Interviews (N = 150 Rs) & observations indicate that this Central American population, composed principally of Salvadorans, Guatemalans, & Hondurans, constitutes a new diverse Latino immigrant experience in the city. 4 Tables, 17 References. HA.

8812582

Rogers, Richard G. (U Colorado, Boulder 80309). Assessing the Accuracy of Neonatal and Postneonatal Mortality: A Comparison of Cause- and Period-Specific Infant Mortality Rates. The Social Science Journal, 1986, 23, 4, Oct., 411-418.

* Investigated is how well neonatal & postneonatal mortality two period-specific rates approximate endogenous & exogenous infant mortality two cause-specific rates. The period-specific measures are assumed to be equivalent to cause-specific rates & are used interchangeably in social science literature. This assumption was tested with birth & infant death records from NM for the mid-1970s (N = 87,724 births & 1,438 deaths), & variances were found. The implications of the results for studies that rely on period-specific mortality rates are discussed, & suggestions are made for future research work with cause-specific infant mortality. 2 Tables. Modified HA.

8812583

Rosenwaike, Ira (Graduate School Social Work U Pennsylvania, Philadelphia 19104). A Technique for Determining Jewish Population Distribution in U.S. Metropolitan Areas. Jewish Social Studies, 1986, 48, 3-4, summer-fall, 293-304.

† In recent years the Jewish population within large US metropolitan areas has become increasingly dispersed. A strategy is described that permits estimation of the number of Jewish persons in small subdivisions. The technique makes use of 1980 census statistics regarding ancestry, particularly the counts of persons of Russian ancestry. Estimates of local Jewish populations derived from the technique from areas within metropolitan New York, NY, & Philadelphia, Pa, generally correspond with figures obtained in community surveys. AA.

8812584

Silva, Nelson do Valle & Roditi, Débora. Laboratório Computação Científica Conselho Nacional Desenvolvimento Científico e Tecnológico, Ave W-3 Norte Quadra 507 B1 B 70740 Brasília DF Brazil. Et plus ça change... Tendências históricas da fluididez social no Brasil (Et plus ça change... Historical Trends in Social Fluidity in Brazil). Dados, 1986, 29, 3, 345-363. (POR).

† Temporal trends in intergenerational occupational mobility for Brazilian Ms (N = 13,345) between 1914 & 1973 are examined using official data from the 1973 National Survey of Households. Although high rates of urbanization & industrial growth characterized Brazilian society during this period, temporal constancy in occupational mobility becomes clear when the effects of shifts in occupational distributions of origin & destination are verified. These results contradict a key proposition of the so-called "thesis of industrialization," by which industrial growth increases social fluidity. 4 Tables. Modified HA.

8812585

Straubhaar, Thomas (Dept Economics U Berne, CH-3012 Switzerland). The Causes of International Labor Migrations—A Demand-Determined Approach. ♦ International Migration Review, 1986, 20, 4, winter, 835-855.

* Analysis of empirical data from various national & international sources regarding the causes of migration flows from Italy, Spain, Greece, Portugal, & Turkey to European Economic Community countries shows that determinants used to explain migration flows inside a given country can be applied to the migration flows within a common market, but not to international migration flows in general. International migration flows are demand-determined by the existence of restrictive immigration control systems. The demand for immigrants in the destination country is the decisive condition for the phenomenon of international labor migration, & the supply of migration-willing workers is only a necessary condition. 2 Tables, 5 Figures, 38 References. Modified HA.

8812586

Szantó, Miklós. Az emigráció és bevándorlás-szociológiai elemzési kategóriáiról (On the Analytical Categories of Emigration and Immigration). Szociológia, 1982, 1, 69-81. (HUN).

† Abstract not currently available.

88T2567

Nair, Neal Kar & Smith, Lawrence (Contraceptive Prevalence Survey Project Westinghouse Public Applied System, PO Box 866 Columbia MD 21044). Reasons for Not Using Contraceptives: An International Comparison. Studies in Family Planning, 1984, 15, 2, Mar-Apr, 84-92

† The main reasons for currently not using contraceptives given by currently in-union, nonpregnant women aged 15-44 in 3 Asian countries (Bangladesh, Korea, & Thailand) & 3 Latin American countries (Barbados, Colombia, & Costa Rica) are presented based on 1978-1981 surveys. Desire for next child, side effects or health reasons, & temporary infecundity were the most commonly given reasons for current nonuse. In Korea, Thailand, & Barbados, there is little or no disapproval of contraceptives, but in the other countries there is an appreciable amount. Variations in the reasons given are examined in terms of selected SE & demographic characteristics. Age of R₁, number of living children, & ever use of family planning methods are the most important of reasons given for nonuse. 8 Tables. Modified HA

88T2568

Natale, Marcello (U Rome, I-00100 Italy). Fonti e metodi di rilevazione della popolazione straniera in Italia. Contributi del dibattito in corso e nuovi elementi conoscitivi (Sources and Methods of Surveying the Foreign Population in Italy: Contributions to the Current Debate and New Cognitive Elements). ♦ Studi Emigrazione/Etudes Migrations, 1986, 23, 82-83, June-Sept, 165-216 (ITA)

† (A conclusion to the article of the same title that appeared in Studi Emigrazione, 1983, 71, see SA 32 3/84N9326) The sources & methods used in surveying the size & dynamics of the foreign population in Italy are thoroughly analyzed, focusing on the measurement of migration flows & population stocks, the results of possible comparisons among the different sources, & information derived from indirect sources. Working proposals are offered to improve the sources of information & make it possible to estimate the size of the undocumented migration in Italy. These proposals would necessitate a strict coordination among the various organizations in charge of collecting data, & the adoption of a uniform system of data collection & classification. 21 Tables. Modified HA

88T2569

Penninx, Rinus. International Migration in Western Europe since 1973: Developments, Mechanisms and Controls. ♦ IM International Migration Review, 1986, 20, 4, winter, 951-972

† A discussion of the development of migration within, to, & from Western Europe, seeking to determine to what extent such migration movements are influenced by governmental action & regulation. Statistical data collected in 1982/83 for the Council on Europe are analyzed & discussed within the historical context. Differential patterns of migration are defined according to the origin of the migrants & by country of destination. Current trends & governmental responses are discussed, & the dilemmas of migration pressures on Western European nations are elaborated. 3 Tables, 18 References. F. Ramussen

88T2570

Perall, Giorgio. Immigrazione clandestina: alcune osservazioni su metodi di stima con particolare riferimento all'esperienza statunitense (Clandestine Immigration: Some Observations on Methods of Estimation, with Particular Reference to the Experience of the United States). ♦ Studi Emigrazione/Etudes Migrations, 1986, 23, 82-83, June-Sept, 259-265 (ITA)

† Some of the major studies of undocumented immigration in the US from the 1970s to the present are reviewed. Methodological problems involved in studying this phenomenon are discussed, especially the difficulty in finding reliable information sources. It is suggested that the indirect techniques applied by J. G. Robinson to estimate & analyze the undocumented migration flow from Mexico to the US ("Estimating the Approximate Size of the Illegal Alien Population in the United States," Demography, 1980, 17, 159-176) offer a sound starting point for interpreting the complex phenomenon present in Italy. 14 References. Modified HA

88T2571

Peters, Gary L. (California State U, Long Beach 90840). Migration Decision Making among the Vietnamese in Southern California. ♦ IM Sociology and Social Research, 1987, 71, 4, July, 280-286.

† An assessment of why Vietnamese immigrants resettle in selected areas of southern Calif. based on interview data from heads of household living in Long Beach & Westminster. Results indicate that Vietnamese immigrants base their destination choices within the US on the same factors as other Americans. 3 Maps, 11 References. Modified HA

88T2572

Piché, Victor (Dept démographie U Montréal, Québec H3C 3J7). La Démographie sociale au Québec: un premier bilan (Social Demography in Quebec: A Preliminary Account). ♦ Sociologie et Sociétés, 1987, 19, 1, Apr, 9-23 (FRE)

† A review of the explanatory models that dominate social demography in Quebec. The classical organization of demography is followed, which calls on the three components of demographic reproduction: fertility, migration, & mortality. A concept of "demographic regime" is described that aims to bring the three components together in an overall theory of demographic reproduction. The functionalist & empirical tradition has dominated the field of demography for a long time, but feminist & materialist interpretations have recently appeared. To produce a global theory of reproduction of the LF, the level of analysis must shift from the individual to the family or household unit & relate family structures to social structures. 123 References. Modified HA

88T2573

Pool, I., Scaats, J. E., Hooper, A., Huntsman, J., Plummer, E., & Prior, I. (Population Studies Center U Waikato, Hamilton New Zealand). Social Change, Migration and Pregnancy Intervals. Journal of Biosocial Science, 1987, 19, 1, Jan, 1-15

† Maternity histories collected during informal interviews from residents of a Polynesian society, Tokelau, who remained in their homeland & those who & migrated to New Zealand, (N = 1,140) were analyzed using life-table techniques. Comparison of women from 9 birth cohorts (1876-1961) revealed intercohort differentials in patterns of family formation in the total Tokelau-origin population. The process of accelerated timing & spacing of pregnancies was more pronounced among migrants, who tended to marry later, be pregnant at marriage, have shorter interpregnancy intervals at lower parities, & show evidence of family limitation occurring at higher parities. These results point to the significance of changing patterns of social control on strategies of family building. 9 Tables, 14 References. Modified HA

88T2574

Porter, Elaine G. (Ministry Community & Social Services, Box 608 Simcoe Ontario N3Y 4L8). Birth Control Discontinuance as a Diffusion Process. Studies in Family Planning, 1984, 15, 1, Jan-Feb, 20-29

† The diffusion of innovations model is applied to the study of the birth control discontinuance of first-time users in the Dominican Republic. Interview data from 554 F first-time users who enrolled in birth control clinics in Santiago during 1977 are used to test E. M. Rogers's & I. Floyd Shoemaker's notion that discontinuers have more traditional values than continuers (see Diffusion of Innovations, New York: The Free Press, 1971, 1-20), & the adoption process is analyzed to identify the relationship of communication factors to discontinuance. Although number of children & experience of method problems were the major determinants of discontinuance, unfavorable information from friends & other birth control users was a significant factor. Rumor was found to have little effect on a woman's decision to continue or discontinue. Results suggest that more attention should be paid to the interpersonal social networks that channel unfavorable information. 6 Tables. Modified HA

88T2575

Portes, Alejandro (Johns Hopkins U, Baltimore MD 21218). The Social Origins of the Cuban Enclave Economy of Miami. ♦ Sociological Perspectives, 1987, 30, 4, Oct, 340-372.

† Recent fieldwork on the origins of the Cuban ethnic economy in southern Fla is reviewed in the context of competing theories of minority entrepreneurship. Sociological theories that emphasize contextual characteristics internal to the group appear best to fit the empirical evidence but they do not clarify the dynamic aspects of the process by which individual & family business goals are implemented. A typology of minority enterprises is developed on the basis of the background characteristics of their founders. Implications of this evidence for theory & policies aimed at promoting self-employment among minorities are discussed. 3 Tables, 65 References. Modified HA

44 human biology/sociobiology

88T2597

Gore, Walter R. (Dept Sociology Vanderbilt U, Nashville TN 37235), Sociobiology Misses the Mark: An Essay on Why Biology but Not Sociobiology Is Very Relevant to Sociology. In The American Sociologist, 1987, 18, 3, fall, 258-277

The position is taken that sociologists need to pay more attention to biology, but that the biological perspective provided by sociobiology is not the perspective that is most relevant. The reductionist nature of sociobiology is noted & its treatment of altruism, religion, homosexuality, the maximization of inclusive fitness, group vs individual inheritance, & the genetic inheritance process itself is critiqued. Sociobiology's strong emphasis on ultimate causation & the denigration of proximate causation is created as particularly problematic. A plea is made that sociologists pay more attention to the research that shows the interactional effects of biological, psychological, & social processes. 24 References. HA

88T2598

Wooddell, George & Gramling, Robert (U Southwestern Louisiana, Lafayette 70504), Human Sociobiology and the Concept of Inclusive Fitness: A Theoretical Note. In Free Inquiry in Creative Sociology, 1987, 15, 2, Nov, 167-168

Human sociobiology has been the subject of extensive debate in recent years. The central concept of sociobiology, inclusive fitness, asserts that living organisms including human beings tend to behave in ways that maximize their genetic representation in future generations. This position has been criticized as a form of genetic determinism; sociobiologists' efforts to defend it against this charge have been theoretically flawed. 10 References. Modified AA

AMERICAN INDIAN CULTURE AND RESEARCH JOURNAL

The American Indian Culture and Research Journal provides a quarterly interdisciplinary research forum for scholars and innovators in the areas of historical and contemporary American Indian life and culture. Original scholarly papers are invited on a broad range of issues. While encouraging innovation, the editor will favor those articles which demonstrate rigorous and thorough research in an interdisciplinary context.

Mailing Address for manuscripts and subscriptions:

UCLA
American Indian Studies Center
Editor
3220 Campbell Hall
Los Angeles, CA 90024

Subscription Rates:

Regular $20.00
Institutional $30.00

88T2587

Tauber, Kory (Inst Survey Research Temple U, Philadelphia PA 19122). Patterns of Premarital Cohabitation among Never-Married Women in the United States. ♦ Journal of Marriage and the Family 1987, 49, 3, Aug, 483-497

* Patterns of heterosexual cohabitation among never-married women, aged 20-29 ($N = 1,314$), in the U.S. are examined, using data from a 1983 national interview survey. Estimates of the incidence & prevalence of cohabitation are presented & cohabitators & noncohabitators are compared on the basis of 4 groups of variables. Logistic regression analyses indicate that heterosexual cohabitation among never-married women is a common occurrence but is affected by a number of social, psychological, demographic & fertility related variables. Cohabitation, as currently practiced among single T.s in their twenties, does not appear to be a permanent replacement for marriage. For most women, it seems to be a new dimension & a part of the courtship process, but not a long-range lifestyle. 4 Tables, 1 Appendix, 32 References. Modified HA

88T2588

Isavella, Graziano, Il mito del nord. Rassegna bibliografica sulle migrazioni clandestine (The Myth of the North. Research Bibliography on (Clandestine Migration)). ♦ Studi Emigrazione/Études Migrations 1986, 23, 84, Oct-Dec, 513-573 (ITA)

* A bibliography on illegal migration containing 537 items arranged alphabetically by author. Most are in English, studies in French, Spanish, & Italian are also included. An introduction, index, & descriptive notes on selected studies are provided. C. Waters

88T2589

Hienda, Marta (Dept Ru Sociology U Wisconsin, Madison 53706). Community Characteristics, Women's Education, and Fertility in Peru. Studies in Family Planning 1984, 15, 4, July-Aug, 162-169

* Data from the World Fertility Survey of 1977/78 ($N = 5,640$ married FRs) are used to examine the influence of community characteristics on completed fertility in Peru. The analysis shows that community characteristics do not interact with the effects of mother's education in determining completed fertility. Rather, the effects of community characteristics are best described by a threshold model, which posits that below or above critical cut points, the effects on fertility of community (or individual) characteristics will diminish or increase. Empirical results showed that residence in communities with higher levels of access to the benefits of development decreased completed fertility beyond a prediction based on women's characteristics alone, & this effect was further amplified with increasing levels of development. 4 Tables, 1 Figure, 24 References. Modified HA van Poppel, Frans & Veys, Dion (Nederlands Interuniversitair Demografisch Inst., POB 11650 2502 AR Hague). De ontwikkeling van de sterfte in Nederland en België (Mortality Trends in the Netherlands and Belgium). ♦ Mens en Maatschappij 1987, 62, 2, May, 131-152 (DUT)

88T2590

* Since 1950, mortality trends in the Netherlands & Belgium have been very similar. Life expectancy increased sharply, & M life expectancy first declined & then rose slightly. In this period, mortality rates at young ages declined consistently, at middle & old ages they first increased & then dropped abruptly. In both countries there are still large regional, SE, & ethnic differences. In the near future, it is expected that life expectancy will continue to rise, with significant effects on family structure. 2 Tables, 3 Figures, 53 References. Modified HA

88T2591

Visaria, Leela & Visaria, Pravin (Gujarat Instit Area Planning, Pritamrai Marg Post Bag No 2 Ahmedabad 380 006 India). Prospective Changes in the Age and Gender Structure of India's Population and Their Socio-Economic Implications. ♦ Sociological Bulletin 1986, 35, 2, Sept, 95-116

* (Originally presented at the Eleventh World Congress of Sociology in New Delhi, India, 18-22 Aug 1986). Past & prospective changes in the sex & age composition of India's population are briefly examined using decennial census data from 1901-1981 & demographic statistics from the Sample Registration System, 1979-1982. Attaining the replacement level of fertility by the year 2010 will undoubtedly cause a radical transformation of the societal value structure, along with major SE changes in (1) LF participation, employment, & retirement trends, (2) fertility & marriage patterns, (3) the structure of demand for various goods & services, rate of savings, & pattern of investment, & (4) housing availability & household composition. 8 Tables, 6 References. K. Hyatt

88T2592

Weiss-Akane, Eric (Dept études urbaines U Quebec, Montreal H3C 3P8). Rapports entre la sociologie et la démographie latino-américaine (The Links between Sociology and Demography in Quebec: A Comparison with Latin American Demography). ♦ Sociologie et Sociétés 1987, 19, 1, Apr, 166-170 (FRE)

* The relationships among sociology, demography, economics, & other disciplines in the study of population are discussed. Demographic research in Quebec is compared with that in Latin America, based on a review of the leading professional journals in each region (5 journals in Quebec, & not given for Latin America) from the 1950s to the present. In Quebec, a variety of sociological themes are treated, none is dominant, & demography tends to remain a field apart. By contrast, in Latin America, the emphasis on development & population policies has focused greater attention on demographic studies. C. Waters

88T2593

Williams, Richard A. (U Wisconsin, Madison 53706), Indianapolis. Revisited: A New Look at Social and Psychological Factors Affecting Fertility. * Dissertation Abstracts International, 4. The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 47, 11, May, 4198-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor MI. Order No. DA8620921.

88T2594

Wood, Robert & Hinde, P.R. Andrew (Dept Geography U Sheffield, S10 2TN England). Mortality in Victorian England: Models and Patterns. ♦ The Journal of Interdisciplinary History 1987, 18, summer, 27-54

* A discussion of mortality in Victorian England based on the work of Thomas McKeown (The Modern Rise of Population, London, 1976). An alternative yet complementary description of the underlying mortality conditions is presented that takes into consideration the availability & quality of civil registration data, & of official English Life Tables. Regional variations in mortality patterns, age-specific structure changes, & the influence of environmental factors, including the maldistribution of the medical profession in the nineteenth century, are described, illustrating several weaknesses in McKeown's method. 5 Tables, 8 Figures. F. Rasmussen

88T2595

Wrigley, E. A. (London School Economics & Political Science, Weych WC2A 2AE England). The Growth of Population in Eighteenth-Century England: A Conundrum Resolved, Past and Present. 1983, Feb, 121-150

* An analysis of the causes of a remarkable population growth surge in eighteenth-century England, based on historical statistics for England & Western Europe. Both the proximate causes & the wider context in which growth occurred are addressed with specific attention to the economic & social environment. It is suggested that the acceleration in the rate of population growth was primarily due to economic circumstances in which real incomes were rising, resulting in a higher fertility rate due to earlier marriages. A two-way relationship between economic & demographic variables is identified & discussed, & the linkage between birth-nuptiality & inflation is analyzed. 1 Table, 5 Graphs. F. Rasmussen

88T2596

Yu, Mei-yu (U Texas, Austin 78712). Patterns of Distribution and Fertility of the Overseas Chinese. * Dissertation Abstracts International, 4. The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 47, 11, June, 4517-A-4518-A

Available from UMI, Ann Arbor MI. Order No. DA8706139.

1900 the family and socialization

38 sociology of the child

88T2599

Amato, Paul R. & Ochiltree, Gay (Dept Psychology San Diego State U, CA 92182-0350). Interviewing Children about Their Families: A Note on Data Quality. Journal of Marriage and the Family, 1987, 49, 3, Aug, 669-675

¶ Interview data from a 1982/83 study of 195 children, aged 8-9, & adolescents, aged 15-16, gathered in Victoria, Australia, are used to assess & compare the quality of data provided by Rs in the 2 age groups. Analysis of interviewers' ratings of children's behavior during the interview, the quantity of missing data across interview items, & the % of agreements between parents & children on 10 relatively objective family characteristics indicates that the quality of data is significantly higher for adolescents than for primary schoolchildren. However, the quality of data for primary schoolchildren is high in absolute terms. 3 Tables, 18 References. HA

88T2600

Austin, Ann M. Berghout, Salehi, Mahshid & Leffler, Ann (Utah State U, Logan 84322). Gender and Development Differences in Children's Conversations. Sex Roles, 1987, 16, 9-10, May, 497-510

¶ Previous predictions of gender differences in assimilative/accommodative behavior (eg, see J. Block's "Differential Premises Arising from Differential Socialization of the Sexes: Some Conjectures" [see SA 33 2/8506046]) are extended to a study of discourse devices used by preschool, third-, & sixth-grade children ($N = 48$). Children were videotaped as they interacted in same-sex dyads, & their utterances transcribed. Multivariate analysis of variance examined the effects of grade, sex, friendship, & status (popularity) on conversation. Results indicate a significant effect of gender & grade: boys used more accommodative devices (attention-getting, active), while girls used more assimilative ones (facilitating, reinforcing), & older children generally used more conversational devices than did younger ones. It is concluded that as children develop societally normative speech, they are developing discourse conventions that promote M-F inequalities. 1 Table, 40 References. K. Hyatt

88T2601

Christopoulos, Christina, Cohn, Deborah A., Shaw, Daniel S., Joyce, Susan, Sullivan-Hanson, Jean, Kraft, Sherry P. & Emery, Robert F. (Dept Psychology U Virginia, Charlottesville 22901). Children of Abused Women: I. Adjustment at Time of Shelter Residence. Journal of Marriage and the Family, 1987, 49, 3, Aug, 611-619

¶ Interview & scale data were used to compare the individual & familial adjustment of a sample of 40 battered women & their children with that of a sample of 40 community families. As expected, abused women were dramatically more distressed on a variety of measures than were community women. Significant, but more modest differences, were found between the groups of children studied. No between-group differences were found in regard to the children's perceived competence or IQ. While estimates of the risk for psychological difficulties among children of battered women are similar to those obtained by other investigators, notably different findings regarding sex differences were observed. 3 Tables, 42 References. Modified HA

88T2602

Forstenberg, Frank F., Jr., Morgan, S. Phillip & Allison, Paul D. (Dept Sociology U Pennsylvania, Philadelphia 19104-6299). Paternal Participation and Children's Well-Being after Marital Dissolution. American Sociological Review, 1987, 52, 5, Oct, 695-701

¶ The influence of continued paternal involvement following divorce on children's well-being is investigated using interview data from 227 US children (part of the larger National Survey of Children) aged 11-16 who in 1981 were living with their mothers following their parents' marital dissolution. For measures of academic difficulty, problem behavior, & psychological distress, there is little evidence that paternal involvement had either harmful or beneficial effects, though paternal economic support reduced somewhat the likelihood of problem behavior. Frequency of visitation & closeness of relationship to father showed no consistent influence on the available measures of child well-being. Policy implications are discussed. 2 Tables, 1 Appendix, 27 References. Modified HA

88T2603

Gibbs, Jewelle Taylor (School Social Welfare U California, Berkeley 94720). City Girls: Psychosocial Adjustment of Urban Black Adolescent Females. SAGE, 1985, 2, 2, fall, 28-36.

¶ A comparison of the self-esteem & educational/vocational aspirations of black & white adolescent Fs, using data from a larger study of the psychosocial adjustment of a multiracial sample of Ur adolescent Fs. A voluntary sample of 320 Fs, grades 7-9, attending public schools in San Francisco, Calif, completed several standardized psychological instruments & biographical questionnaire; they were also interviewed & observed at school & home. Results indicate that on the whole, black Fs are as well or better adjusted than their white peers, & have high self-esteem; their educational & career aspirations are also high, but often are not balanced by realistic plans for achieving them. In general, SES appears to be a more significant correlate of adjustment & educational/occupational expectations than does ethnicity. Suggestions are offered for the development of early intervention programs & more effective policies regarding the health, education, & welfare of children in low SES families. 2 Tables. K. Hyatt

88T2604

Herman, Judith, Russell, Diana & Trocki, Karen (61 Roseland St, Somerville MA 02143). Long-Term Effects of Incestuous Abuse in Childhood. The American Journal of Psychiatry, 1986, 143, 10, Oct, 1293-1296

¶ Two groups of adult women with histories of incest: a nonclinical sample ($N = 152$) in San Francisco, Calif, & an outpatient sample ($N = 53$) in Boston, Mass, were surveyed. The nonclinical Rs reported a range of long-term effects, most said they had been upset by their incest experiences, but about 50% said they had recovered well from their trauma. Most women who had suffered forceful, prolonged, or highly intrusive sexual abuse, or who had been abused by their father or stepfather, reported long-lasting negative effects. The patient sample reported histories comparable to the most severe traumatic histories in the community sample. Further research is needed to identify environmental factors that help sexually abused children develop adaptive resources & promote their long-term recovery. 3 Tables, 14 References. Modified HA

88T2605

Hofferth, Sandra L. & Phillips, Deborah A. (National Instit Child Health & Human Development, 7910 Woodmont Ave 7C25 Bethesda MD 20892). Child Care in the United States, 1970 to 1995. Journal of Marriage and the Family, 1987, 49, 3, Aug, 559-571.

¶ The proportion of children with employed mothers, by age of child, is estimated for 1990 & 1995, based on analysis of 1983-1986 US Census data on trends in the number of children & in the proportion of children with a mother in the LF. The current distribution of children in non-parental care is profiled, & trends are examined over the past two decades. Using census & other national survey data, the most recent information on the current supply of child care & trends in that supply are presented. Implications of recent developments for the supply of & demand for child care in the future are discussed. 3 Tables, 45 References. HA

88T2606

Hoffman, Lois Wladis (Dept Psychology U Michigan, Ann Arbor 48109). The Value of Children to Parents and Childrearing Patterns. Social Behaviour, 1987, 2, 3, Sept, 123-141

¶ Cross-cultural differences in childbearing orientations are examined based on national interview surveys conducted with samples of 1,000-3,000 married Fs under age 40 in Indonesia, Korea, the Philippines, Singapore, Taiwan, Thailand, Turkey, & the US. Analysis suggests that the value of children to parents, conceptualized in terms of needs that children satisfy, affects parenting attitudes & behavior. 10 Tables, 28 References. Modified HA

FREE Sample Copies Available On Request

ALCOHOL AND ALCOHOLISM

International Journal of the Medical Council on Alcoholism

Editor: ALLAN D THOMSON, 64 Lee Park, Blackheath, London SE3 9HZ, U K

Deputy Editor: A A-B BADAWY, Addiction Research Unit, Whitchurch Hospital, Whitchurch, Cardiff CF4 7AB, U K

Assistant Editor: J S MADDEN, Mersey Regional Alcohol and Drug Dependence Unit, Countess of Chester Hospital, Liverpool Road, Chester CH1
3SE, U K

Associate Editors: M F SORRELL & D J TUMA, Liver Study Unit, University of Nebraska Medical Center, 4101 Woolworth Avenue, Omaha NE 68105, U S A and K KURIYAMA, Kyoto Prefectural University of Medicine, Kyoto, Japan

Alcohol and Alcoholism publishes original research and review articles on every aspect of alcohol and alcoholism. The areas of interest include all the clinical disciplines of medicine, the basic medical sciences, psychology, sociology and epidemiology.

It is the policy of Alcohol and Alcoholism to publish in English papers which make a new and significant contribution to knowledge in the field and its related areas. The journal also contains correspondence, book reviews and other items of interest.

The journal now includes a new "rapid communications" section and has increased frequency to 6 issues per year.

A Selection of Papers

Tetrahydro-B carbolines in human urine and rat brain—no evidence of formation by alcohol drinking, K MATSUBARA (Japan) *et al

Serum apolipoprotein A II as a marker of change in alcohol intake in male drinkers, I B PUDDY (Australia) *et al

Patterns of compliance and evasion in treatment programmes which include supervised disulfiram, C BREWER (U K)

Differential effects of ethanol on the plasma glucose of non-alcoholic light and heavy social drinkers, D M CONNELLY *et al

The binding of acetaldehyde to the active site of ribonuclease: alterations in catalytic activity and effects of phosphate, T J MAUCH (U S A) *et al

Indexed/Abstracted in: Current Awareness in Biological Sciences (CABS), Excerpta Medica, Current Contents, Index Medicus, MEDLINE, Psychol Abs, PsychINFO, BIOSIS Database, Sci Cit Ind, Biol Abs, Social Abs

Subscription Information

1988, Volume 25 (6 issues)

Annual subscription (1988)

US$ 155.00

Two year rate (1988/89)

US$ 294.50

ISSN 0735-0414

Advertising rate card available on request. Back issues and current subscriptions are also available in microform. The Dollar prices shown include postage and insurance and apply in North and South America only. For the rest of the world apply to the nearest Pergamon office. Prices are subject to change without notice.

PERGAMON PRESS

Headington Hill Hall, Oxford OX3 0BW, U K Fairview Park, Elmsford, New York 10523, U S A

911/88/1/87

& 27 respectively), revealed that most children do well in their adoptive homes. Interviews held with parents & children, supplemented with some standardized test material, indicate that, in overall adjustment, the 3 groups of children were similar, & similar to the children of other studies of adoption. Interest at this reporting, when the children were aged 8, focused on the transracially adopted children because their pattern of racial identity development differed from that of children in black homes. The stress of low income & the close nature of the parent-child relationship were noted in the single-parent adoptions. Different patterns of handling issues of adoption were also noted among the 3 groups. 2 Tables. AA

88T2617

Thompson, Grey Bennett (U Maryland, College Park 20742), Family Processes and Family Structure: Effects on Black and White Children's Socialization Outcomes in Single and Two Parented Homes, * Dissertation Abstracts International, A The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 1, July, 226-A
Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8709468.

88T2618

Wersheit, Ralph A. (Illinois State U, Normal 61761), When Mothers Kill Their Children, The Social Science Journal, 1986, 23, 4, Oct., 439-448

* Of 460 F homicide offenders admitted to a women's state prison between 1940 & 1983, 39 were institutionalized for killing their children

Among these offenders, several interesting changes over time were noted (1) women in the earlier time periods were more likely to be married at the time of the offense; (2) the racial mix of offenders changed from predominantly white to predominantly black, & (3) offenders in the 1940-1966 period were often motivated by a strong sensitivity to social rules (eg. regarding illegitimacy & other stigmas), while those in the early 1980s often acted with an insensitivity to socially accepted rules for the treatment of children (eg. abuse & neglect). Regarding race, education, & marital status, child killers differed considerably from other types of homicide offenders in the 1940-1966 period, but were not distinguishable from others in the 1981-1983 period; ie, child killers have become more similar over time to other types of F homicide offenders. 1 Table, 11 References. Modified HA

88T2619

Wolff, Werner Y. (U Hannover, D-3000 21 Federal Republic Germany), The Highrise and the Child, ♦ Sociological Bulletin, 1987, 36, 1, Mar, 133-147.

¶ Working from the assumption that the zenith of the residential highrise building is soon to come in India, experiences with this building form in Western countries, & major deficiencies in current planning, construction, & administration are described, & possible improvements are presented. Related sociological-behavioral findings & problems of research are summarized. Focus is on the needs & problems of the child & mother, & on the open space aspects of living. The perspective is multidisciplinary, social & psychological variables are related to those of space, including questions of density, scale, & the social-psychological significance of form. Modified AA

39 adolescence & youth

88T2620

Chase-Lansdale, P. Lindsay & Vinovskis, Maris A., Should We Discourage Teenage Marriage?, UM The Public Interest, 1987, 87, spring, 33-37

* In the current controversy over teenage pregnancies, a nearly universal consensus seems to exist that pregnant teenagers should be discouraged from marrying. Attitudes toward marriage have changed dramatically over the past decades, with pressure for fathers of unwed children to marry & the children's mothers having almost vanished. Yet the widespread belief that teenage marriages universally fail is unfounded, though such marriages are less stable than others, many of them survive for extended times. Further, there is evidence that unwed mothers who stay with their parents rather than marrying the father of the child suffer adverse economic effects. Absent fathers generally contribute little or nothing economically to their children's support, while married fathers contribute much more. These data support a reexamination of policy toward teenage marriage. W H Stoddard

88T2621

Dembo, Richard, Dertke, Max, LaVoie, Lawrence, Borders, Scott, Washburn, Mark & Schmeidler, James (Dept Criminal Justice U South Florida, Tampa 33620), Physical Abuse, Sexual Victimization and Illicit Drug Use: A Structural Analysis among High Risk Adolescents, Journal of Adolescence, 1987, 10, 1, Mar, 13-34

* Structured interview data gathered from a sample of youths in a southern US juvenile detention center (N = 145) in 1984 are used to examine the relationships between child physical & sexual abuse & illicit drug use. A structural model, specifying the influence of child physical & sexual abuse variables on the youths' illicit drug use, directly & as mediated by self-derogation, was estimated among M & F detainees. Results suggest that for both gender groups, sexual victimization had a primarily direct effect on drug use. The indirect effect of physical abuse on drug use was mediated by self-derogation. Further analysis indicated that race did not affect the results. The implications of these results for theory & research on the etiology of drug use & the identification of youths in high risk groups who are likely to become seriously involved in drug use are discussed. 78 References. HA

88T2622

Drakulic, Slobodan (U Zagreb, 41000 Yugoslavia), Omladinske subkulture i njihovo proučavanje (The Investigation of Youth Subcultures), Revija za Sociologiju, 1984, 14, 3-4, July-Dec., 241-247 (SCR)

* A theoretical analysis of the need for investigating different youth subcultures. The culture of any one society can be understood as enjoying only partial approval by its many subcultures. Subcultures may be distinguished on the basis of their vitality, innovation, or level of imitation of the primary culture. Although the use of qualitative methods in the investigation of youth subcultures should be expanded, quantitative techniques need not be abandoned. Modified HA

88T2623

Goldscheider, Frances Kobrin & Waite, Linda J. (Dept Sociology Brown U, Providence RI 02912), Nest-Leaving Patterns and the Transition to Marriage for Young Men and Women, ♦ UM Journal of Marriage and the Family, 1987, 49, 3, Aug, 507-516

¶ The hypothesis that the increase in independent living during young adulthood may have caused some of the delay in marriage in the US is examined on the basis of interview data from the National Longitudinal Surveys of Young Men & Young Women, 1966-1980 (original N = 10,000). Some support is shown, especially among women, for the hypothesis that (1) living independently during young adulthood delays marriage, (2) the effects of nonfamily living are smaller for those in group quarters than for others, (3) living away has larger effects if it occurs relatively early in adulthood, & (4) the effects are stronger for women than for men. 3 Tables, 29 References. Modified HA

88T2624

Heinz, Walter R. (Dept Humanities & Social Science U Bremen, D-2800 33 Federal Republic Germany), The Transition from School to Work in Crisis: Coping with Threatening Unemployment, ♦ Journal of Adolescent Research, 1987, 2, 2, summer, 127-141

¶ A 1979-1983 longitudinal interview study of 200 youth in Bremen, West Germany, a city with a depressed economy, reveals that the youth tend to accept personal responsibility for improving their prospects instead of turning against society or giving up. So were students in the lowest-level secondary school (Hauptschule), who were optimistic as they sought apprenticeship places, they asserted that they were obligated to obtain the highest educational levels possible, & to be flexible in their career choices, in order to maximize their chances of finding a training place &, ultimately, a job. Although this finding is encouraging from the perspective of maintaining social order, it is unexpected in view of the German tradition of state responsibility for maintaining low rates of unemployment. 24 References. Modified HA

88T2625

Hendin, Herbert, Youth Suicide: A Psychosocial Perspective, ♦ UM

88T2607

Jones, David P. H. & McGraw, J. Melbourne. Reliable and Fictitious Accounts of Sexual Abuse to Children. ♦ Journal of Interpersonal Violence 1987, 2, 1, Mar. 27-45

† Categories of reports of child sexual abuse were examined in phase 1 of a 2-part study. In the first phase, all the reports ($N = 576$) of child sexual abuse made to the Denver (Colo) Dept of Social Services in 1983 were categorized. Most were reliable accounts (70%), but a small proportion appeared to be fictitious (8%). In phase 2, fictitious reports of child sexual abuse were examined in detail. Certain clinical features appeared to mark the fictitious reports: lack of emotion, absence of detail, & an absence of coercion & threat. In some cases, posttraumatic stress disorders, custody or visitation disputes, or poor quality interviews with children were a factor. Tentative conclusions are drawn concerning current clinical practice, & suggestions are made for future research. 2 Tables, 24 References. Modified HA

88T2608

Miller, Cynthia L. (U Houston Clear Lake, TX 77058). Qualitative Differences among Gender-Stereotyped Toys: Implications for Cognitive and Social Development in Girls and Boys. Sex Roles, 1987, 16, 9-10, May, 473-487

† Much research has suggested that early play experiences may contribute to gender differences in cognitive & social development, due largely to the stereotyped nature of children's toys. After testing a comprehensive toy classification scheme in a pilot study, the relationship between 50 toys "sex appropriateness" & 12 other functional characteristics was examined by having 100 Canadian undergraduate psychology students rate the toys using a questionnaire. Results indicate that children's toys continue to be differentiated with respect to gender, & those judged appropriate for boys differed from those for girls along all 12 functional dimensions (eg, sociability, aggressiveness, handling, competition, & creativity). Implications for children's cognitive & social development are discussed. 4 Tables, 34 References. K. Hyatt

88T2609

Myers, John F. B. (McGeorge School Law, 3200 5th Ave Sacramento, CA 95817). Testimonial Competence of Children. ♦ Journal of Family Law 1986-87, 25, 2, Oct, 287-356

† The ability of children to testify in legal proceedings depends on whether they possess the capacity to observe, remember witnessed events, communicate what is remembered, understand the difference between truth & falsehood, & comprehend the duty to testify truthfully. Case law & psychological literature pertaining to each of the elements of testimonial competence are discussed, & rules governing the competency examination conducted by the judge to determine whether children are competent to testify are described. The propriety of court-ordered psychological examinations to determine whether children are competent to testify is also considered. Techniques to prepare children for the experience of the judge's competency examination are suggested. AA

88T2610

Parker, Douglas A. & Harford, Thomas C. (National Instit Alcohol Abuse & Alcoholism, 5600 Fishers Lane Rockville MD 20852). Alcohol-Related Problems of Children of Heavy-Drinking Parents. ♦ Journal of Studies on Alcohol 1987, 48, 3, May, 265-268

† Alcohol-related problems that are experienced by sons & daughters of heavy-drinking parents (either father or mother) are examined using interview data from a 1978 household sample of employed adults ($N = 1,026$) in metropolitan Detroit, Mich. Adult children with heavy-drinking parents were found to have a higher % of dependent problem drinking than those without heavy-drinking parents. Also, adult children with low status (blue-collar) occupations were found to have a higher % of dependent problem drinking than those with high status (white-collar) occupations. The results support the hypothesis that having both heavy-drinking parents & low occupational status places sons & daughters at elevated risk for alcohol-related problems. Implications for future epidemiological studies are discussed. 2 Tables, 7 References. Modified HA

88T2611

Paveza, Gregory J. (U Illinois, Chicago 60680). A Case-Control Study of Several Factors Associated with the Occurrence of Intra-familial Child Sexual Abuse and Its Implications for Theory and Practice. ♦ Dissertation Abstracts International, 4, The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 47, 11, May, 4200-A-4201-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor MI. Order No. DA8705567.

88T2612

Prech, Kathleen & Howard, Jeanne A. (School Social Work U Illinois, Urbana 61801). Parental Visiting of Children in Foster Care. ♦ Social Work, 1986, 31, 3, May-June, 178-181

† Data from a review of the case records of 256 randomly selected foster children in Ill are used to examine the relationship between agency practices & parental visiting patterns. Explicit or implicit visiting plans were used in 70% of the cases, & were strongly connected with actual visiting patterns. Agency staff typically did little either to encourage or to discourage visiting. In general, plans did not specify changes in visitation patterns. A strong influence of worker practices on parental behavior is evident. Knowledge & policy about visitation are not fully integrated in current child welfare practice. 1 Table. Modified HA

88T2613

Punamaki, Raija-Leena (U Helsinki, SF-00100 Finland). Content and Factors Affecting Coping Modes among Palestinian Children. ♦ Scandinavian Journal of Development Alternatives, 1987, 6, 1, Mar, 86-98

† An investigation of ways that Palestinian children cope with the stress of Arab-Israeli conflict. Between 1979 & 1985, 8-14-year-olds living in the Israeli-occupied West Bank, the Gaza Strip, or Beirut refugee camps of Sabra & Shatilla ($\Sigma N = 97$) completed a Picture-Frustration Test (Rosenzweig, S., Fleming, E. E., Clarke, H. J., "The Children's Form: the Rosenzweig Picture-Frustration Study," Journal of Psychology 1948, 26, 141-191), & their mothers were interviewed about traumatic family experiences. The children's responses were coded according to psychological level (intentional, cognitive, & emotional) & coping mode (eg, passive, defiant, helpless, & apprehensive). Gender & age differences were examined, along with the effects of personal, familial, & situational factors, & traumatic events on the choice of coping mode. Differences between children in the occupied areas & refugee camps illustrate the integration of political, individual psychological, & social factors in collective coping. 1 Figure, 21 References. K. Hyatt

88T2614

Quous, Bernita, Ellis, Godfrey J. & Stromberg, Frances (Oklahoma State U, Stillwater 74078). Sex-Role Preferences of Young Children Reared by Feminist Parents and by Parents from the General Population. ♦ Free Inquiry in Creative Sociology, 1987, 15, 2, Nov, 139-144

† Though childrearing practices in the US now increasingly encourage nonstereotyped sex-role behavior, stereotypes appear to have remained stable among young children. Here, the sex-role preferences of young children raised by feminist parents ($N = 32$) are compared with those of young children raised by parents belonging to the general US population ($n = 184$). All Ss completed a standardized test based on choices of cards bearing pictures with varied sex-role content. Results suggest that differential socialization practices within the feminist subculture affect boys much more than girls. Three possible theoretical interpretations of these findings are considered: gender pride, gender constancy, & gender construction. Further research on this population of children is urged. 3 Tables, 27 References. W. H. Stoddard

88T2615

Rodman, Hyman & Pratto, David J. (Family Research Center U North Carolina, Greensboro 27412). Child's Age and Mother's Employment in Relation to Greater Use of Self-Care Arrangements for Children. ♦ Journal of Marriage and the Family, 1987, 49, 3, Aug, 573-578

† Factors associated with the amount of time children spend in self-care are investigated, based on responses to a magazine questionnaire from 194 mothers who had children under age 14. Child's age & mother's hours per week of paid employment were significantly related to greater use of self-care arrangements. Mother's frequency of attendance at religious services was related to lesser use of self-care. Mother's marital status showed a less clear relationship to self-care use. 3 Tables, 11 References. Modified HA

88T2616

Shireman, Joan F. & Johnson, Penny R. (School Social Work Portland State U, OR 97207). A Longitudinal Study of Black Adopted Single Parent, Transracial, and Traditional. ♦ Social Work, 1986, 31, 3, May-June, 172-176.

† A longitudinal study of 76 black children, adopted as infants & reared in single-parent, transracial, or traditional adoptive homes ($N = 23$). 26

10025). The Psychoanalytic Model of Male Homosexuality: A Historical and Theoretical Critique. ♦ UM The Psychoanalytic Review, 1986, 73, 4, winter, 79-115.

¶ A historical & theoretical critique of the psychoanalytic theory of M homosexuality & its central thesis of homosexual pathology. Initially outlined by Sigmund Freud, the theory assumed its classical form with S. Rado & I. Bieber, & has since remained largely unchanged. Psychoanalysis asserts that homosexual Ms all suffer developmental arrest caused by early narcissistic fixations, disturbed family environment, pathological defenses against a biologically primary heterosexuality, & an underlying disturbance of M gender identity. It is argued that this theory suffers major ambiguities, especially through its confounding of homosexual preference or object choice with various aspects of M effeminacy. The classic etiology attributed to homosexual Ms by psychoanalysis is only a rough generalization covering partly incompatible subpatterns, & may be related more to the pathology of the preselected patient population than to the sexual preference itself. Major nonpsychoanalytic research on homosexuality since the 1950s is reviewed as a complement to the clinical findings. It is suggested that psychoanalysts & sex researchers from all disciplines should work toward a comprehensive & integrated model of M homosexuality. 87 References. Modified AA

88T2654

Garrett-Gooding, Joy & Senter, Richard, Jr. (Central Michigan U, Mount Pleasant 48859). Attitudes and Acts of Sexual Aggression on a University Campus. ♦ UM Sociological Inquiry, 1987, 57, 4, fall, 348-371

¶ The amount of men's physical sexual coercion of women in US society is documented among a sample of 369 M & 403 F Coll students. Fs' experience as victims of & Ms' experience as perpetrators of sexual aggression & both Ms' & Fs' values regarding gender inequality & attitudes regarding sexual aggression are measured using written questionnaire data. F Coll students in the sample experienced considerable sexual aggression, M & F students' values regarding gender inequality & their attitudes regarding physical sexual coercion differed widely. Strong relationships were found between M students' values & attitudes & their participation in sexual aggression. 5 Tables, 34 References. HA

88T2655

Hekma, Gert (U Amsterdam, NL-1012 WX Netherlands). Wrong Lovers in the 19th Century Netherlands. Journal of Homosexuality, 1986-87, 13, 2-3, winter-spring, 43-55

¶ Various styles of homosexual M love occurring in the Netherlands during the nineteenth century are examined. Locations & public ordinances relating to these styles of love are discussed. The development of the homosexual role is broached, along with the question of whether attitudes & laws of the nineteenth century were responsible in part for the development of normative expectations for homosexuality, which might, in turn, have repressed its growth. HA

88T2656

Jarvie, I. C. (Dept Philosophy York U, Downsview Ontario M3J 1P3). The Sociology of the Pornography Debate. ♦ UM Philosophy of the Social Sciences, 1987, 17, 2, June, 257-275

¶ Public controversy about pornography serves different social functions: magical placation of the fear of sex & its disruption of social proprieties, repression & denial of childhood sexuality, giving employment & a sense of social importance to the clerical classes, elevating a minor matter to a high position on the social agenda as a distraction from other matters, & compelling society to articulate its principles, divisions, & conflicts. Recent Canadian & US literature on the topic is reviewed, including government reports. Modified HA

88T2657

Mitra, Charlotte L. (Instit Education U London, WC1H 0AL England). Judicial Discourse in Father-Daughter Incest Appeal Cases. International Journal of the Sociology of Law, 1987, 15, 2, May, 121-148

¶ An examination of the ideological assumptions underlying sentencing decisions in father-daughter incest cases & the role they play in the reproduction of women's subordination to men. Case data on 56 appeal hearings, the total number of cases heard in England between 1970 & 1980, are used to analyze the effect of aggravating & mitigating features on the court's decisions. The findings suggest that the sentencing process in incest cases operated to reinforce traditional norms of F sexuality by discouraging women from taking legal action against paternal perpetrators & to maintain traditional family structures by rewarding wives who stand by their husbands. It concludes that the court's decisions support patriarchal power that feminists have identified as the root cause of incest. 7 Tables, 63 References. AA

88T2658

Seng, Magnus J. (Dept Criminal Justice Loyola U, Chicago IL 60611). Sexual Behavior between Adults and Children: Some Issues of Definition. Journal of Offender Counseling, Services and Rehabilitation, 1986, 11, 1, fall-winter, 47-61

¶ A variety of sexual behaviors occurring between adults & children are examined, & an attempt is made to clarify some of the confusion in terminology that has resulted from coverage of this topic by the popular press & broadcast media. Based on a review of selected professional literature & clinical practice, some behavioral distinctions are provided to clarify the meaning of such frequently used terms as child abuse, sexual child abuse, child molestation, & sexual exploitation, in order to contribute to improved estimates of incidence & assist in the treatment & control of sex offenders. 1 Figure, 36 References. HA

88T2659

Steyn, Anna F. (Dept Sosiologie Randse Afrikaanse U, Johannesburg 2000 Republic South Africa). Die portuurgroep as verwysingsgroep in die gedrag van die adolescent met verwysing na seksuele gedrag (The Peer Group as Reference Group in the Behavior of the Adolescent with Reference to Sexual Behavior). ♦ Suid-Afrikaanse Tydskrif vir Sosiologie/The South African Journal of Sociology, 1987, 18, 1, Aug, 88-94. (AFR)

¶ As the peer group provides for specific needs of the adolescent, it can become an important reference group & consequently influence his/her behavior. A review of research shows that this influence also applies to adolescent sexual behavior, & can have detrimental consequences; however, results are still inconclusive, particularly for South Africa. More such knowledge should be generated by further research, & should be used in aiding the development of peer-group counseling. 28 References. Modified HA

88T2660

Tielman, Rob (Gay Studies Dept U Utrecht, Heidelberglaan 1 NL 3584 CS Netherlands). Dutch Gay Emancipation History (1911-1986). Journal of Homosexuality, 1986-87, 13, 2-3, winter-spring, 9-17

¶ The Dutch homosexual movement is one of the oldest & most influential in the world. This success can be explained both by specific characteristics of Dutch society & by ideologies, strategies, & tactics developed by the gay movement. Although it is always risky to make a comparison with other countries & their homosexual movements, an attempt is made to distinguish some differences & similarities. HA

41 sociology of the family

88T2661

Abyaneh, Parvin (U California, Riverside 92521). Post-Migration Economic Role of Females and Patriarchy in Immigrant Iranian Families. ♦ Dissertation Abstracts International, A The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 47, 12(1), June, 4518-A.

Available from UMI, Ann Arbor MI. Order No. DA8706975.

88T2662

Allen, Katherine R. & Pickett, Robert S. (Dept Family & Consumer Studies Texas Woman's U, Denton 76204). Forgotten Streams in the Family Life Course: Utilization of Qualitative Retrospective Interview in the Analysis of Lifelong Single Women's Family Careers. ♦ Journal of Marriage and the Family, 1987, 49, 3, Aug, 517-526

¶ Life course perspective, & an interdisciplinary approach to individual & family development are combined with the qualitative research strat-

Journal of Sociology, 1987, 29, 1, June, 5-17.

† An examination of the determinants of attitudes & inclinations toward return to Orthodox Judaism, based on questionnaire data from a purposive sample of 228 Israeli secular high school seniors, who resemble actual returnees in their social background. Focus is on the issue of active vs. passive conversion to new religions, which is applicable to the phenomenon of return to orthodox Judaism. Israeli returnees, predominantly secular Mx youth, are depicted by previous studies as alienated & inefficient social drifters. Yet, their return to Judaism may signify an active faith transformation of meaning seeking individuals. Results show that in this sample, alienation & the belief in external control have no effect on the attitudes & tendencies toward return to Judaism. Rather, these are mainly determined by the religious beliefs of the secular R's & by the relative religiosity of their parents. Supporting the active conversion paradigm, these findings suggest that future studies on conversion processes should concentrate on the religious upbringing of potential converts & on conflicts regarding religious socialization within their family of origin. 4 Tables, 1 Figure. AA

88T2646

Zayas, Luis H. (School Social Work, Columbia U., New York, NY 10025). Toward an Understanding of Suicide Risks in Young Hispanic Females. ♦ Journal of Adolescent Research, 1987, 2, 1, spring, 1-11.

‡ A review of the extant literature is used to examine suicide among adolescent Hispanic Fs in the US, focusing on psychosocial & cultural factors, such as SE disadvantage, traditional gender role socialization, acculturation, cultural identity, & intergenerational conflict. It is proposed that the interactive effects of these factors may contribute to suicide attempts among low-income, first- & second-generation Hispanic Fs. 40 References. Modified HA

88T2647

----, Ideyno-politicheskoe stanovlenie molodezhi: opyt, problemy (obrazovanie za "kruglym stolom" redaktsov zhurnalov Politicheskoe samooobrazovanie i Sotsiologicheskie issledovaniya (Youth's Ideological and Political Formation: Experience, Problems (Round-Table Discussion by the Editorial Staffs of Politicheskoe samooobrazovanie and Sotsiologicheskie issledovaniya)). Sotsiologicheskie Issledovaniya, 1987, 14, 2, Mar-Apr, 22-33 (RUS).

‡ Ya. Klepach began the round table discussion on the ideological formation of youth by commenting on the treasury of material contained in the works of Karl Marx & V. I. Lenin. I. I. Karpets commented on the adverse effects of poor ideological education. A. N. Medvedev spoke on the need to reestablish the concept of authority with each generation, & A. G. Kharchev discussed the questioning nature of youth. I. P. Bueva noted that the human factor brings both good & evil into the world, adding that there will always be negative phenomena to work with. V. G. Alekseeva addressed the need to develop an outlook promoting greater participation in society. I. N. Bogolyubov described characteristics of the TV generation. P. N. Reshetov & M. V. Konkin spoke on the need for better communication formats for youth, including mass media. V. A. Pechenev emphasized that Communist orientation is acquired through doing, as well as through listening & discussing. G. Prostakov

40 sociology of sexual behavior

88T2648

Brannigan, Augustine & Kapardis, Andros (U. Calgary, Alberta T2N 1N4). The Controversy over Pornography and Sex Crimes: The Criminological Evidence and Beyond. Australian & New Zealand Journal of Criminology, 1986, 19, Dec, 259-284.

‡ Renewed governmental inquiries into the regulation of sexually explicit materials have revived interest in the relationship between pornography & sexual offenses. The criminological studies that have explored this relationship are reviewed here. Availability of sexually explicit materials appears to be unrelated to the frequency of reported rape, though there is evidence for a decline in child molestation. Theoretical aspects of this putative relationship are examined in the context of known social correlates of rape victims & offenders & of contemporary theories of rape causation. Community, victim, offender, & legislative characteristics appear to explain variation in the rates of reported rape much more convincingly than the circulation of pornography. Modified HA

88T2649

Cain, Virginia S. (U. Maryland, College Park 20742). Changing Fertility Expectations of American Youth. * Dissertation Abstracts International, 1, The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 1, July, 221 A.

Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8709050.

88T2650

Darling, Carol A. & Davidson, J. Kenneth (Dept. Home & Family Life, Florida State U., Tallahassee 32306). Enhancing Relationships: Understanding the Feminine Mystique of Pretending Orgasm. ♦ Journal of Sex and Marital Therapy, 1986, 12, 3, fall, 182-196.

‡ Fs who pretend orgasm are profiled by examining the dimensions of their sexual & orgasmic behaviors, the factors that inhibit their orgasm, the dynamics of partner interaction, & any desired changes in their sexual lives. The mail questionnaire survey responses of US professional nurses (N = 805) indicate that Fs who have ever pretended orgasm became sexually active at a younger age & have been more sexually explorative than Fs who have not pretended orgasm. Further, the role of their sex partners was a significant dimension in their orgasmic pretense. The resultant impact on coupled relationships has many critical implications for couples. 4 Tables, 16 References. Modified HA

88T2651

Eckersley, Robyn (Centre Environmental Studies U. Tasmania, Hobart 7001, Australia). Whither the Feminist Campaign?: An Evaluation of Feminist Critiques of Pornography. International Journal of the Sociology of Law, 1987, 15, 2, May, 149-178.

‡ Reasons for the feminist entry into pornography debates are explored along with the theoretical understanding that informed the first wave of campaigns, which were characterized by 'take back the night' marches against pornography & violence against women. The early theoretical position is criticized for its lopsided, biological determinism & its revival of a crude behaviorist model. It is argued that countervailing feminist positions that developed in response to the first wave of theory & practice helped to broaden the initial analysis by calling attention to the ideological, as distinct from literal, effects of pornography & of redirecting attention away from the excessive concentration on the conjunction of sex & violence in pornography & toward the presentation of everyday images of women in the media. These more recent insights are consolidated into a more sophisticated & less panic-stricken theoretical formulation of the feminist objection to pornography. The revised feminist objection to pornography is juxtaposed to those of the moral conservative & liberal progressive standpoints that have dominated the revived public debate on pornography in the UK. Particular attention is given to the recommendations & philosophical position of the Report by the Committee on Obscenity & Film Censorship. It is suggested that the women's movement has been unable to devise a satisfactory reform strategy vis-à-vis the state because of this juxtaposition of strategies. 51 References. AA

88T2652

Freedman, Estelle B. (Stanford U., CA 94305). "Uncontrolled Desires": The Response to the Sexual Psychopath, 1920-1960. The Journal of American History, 1987, 74, 1, June, 83-106.

‡ An examination of the panics over sexual crimes in the US (particularly the rape/murders of children) that began in the mid-1930s, declined during WWII, & revived in the postwar decade. The panic is placed in the context of the history of sexuality, particularly the shift from a nineteenth-century concern with protecting F virtue to a twentieth-century acceptance of F sexuality & a concomitant fear of unleashed M sexual aggression. The popular, legal, & psychiatric responses to the psychopath are viewed as part of a complex redefinition of sexual boundaries. By stigmatizing extreme acts of violence, the discourse on the psychopath ultimately helped legitimize nonviolent, but nonprocreative, sexual acts within marriage or outside it, & heightened public awareness of sexual & sexual abnormality. 3 Photographs. Modified AA

88T2653

Friedman, Robert M. (350 Central Park West, New York, NY

Review, 1987, 21, 1, spring, 27-47

* Household immigration to the US from Mexico &, in particular, the cultural & work-related aspects of the transition faced by households are examined, based on ethnographic research conducted among a sample of 111 households in the Lower Rio Grande Valley of southern Tex. Analysis suggests that immigration often leads to downward social mobility with respect to legal status of household members, type of employment, & property ownership. Of particular note is the transformation of the household from a single to a multiple worker unit, in response to agricultural labor demands & growing employment opportunities in the non-agricultural sector. These factors are influential in the modification of the traditional ideology concerning the DofL by sex & age. Reasons for the increase & permanency of household immigration are discussed. 2 Maps, 50 References. Modified HA

88T2672

Brockmann, C. Thomas (Dept Sociology & Anthropology Saint Xavier Coll, Chicago IL 60655), The Western Family and Individuation: Convergence with Caribbean Patterns, ♦ UM Journal of Comparative Family Studies, 1987, 18, 3, autumn, 471-480

* A comparison of long-term trends in family organization & mating patterns in Western industrial & West Indian societies. A combination of interrelated economic, cultural, social, & psychological changes in the Western industrialized countries, particularly the less socialistic ones, is argued to be generating a convergence with patterns long observed in the West Indies. Implications for SC relations & the political economy are discussed. 39 References. k. Hvatt

88T2673

Burguière, Andre (Ecole hautes etudes sciences sociales, 75006 Paris France), The Formation of the Couple, UM Journal of Family History, 1987, 12, 1-3, Jan-July, 39-53

* Several interpretations have been proposed of the changes that transformed conjugal life in preindustrial Europe & brought about the emergence of the couple. Some focus on economics, others on the intellectual elites, & still others on the role of the state. In the period from 1500 to 1800, the idea of a permissive sixteenth, austere seventeenth, & liberated eighteenth century is acceptable, but only in terms of nonlinear evolution containing constraints, ruptures, & more than a simple loosening of control. It is during the long period of austere conjugal morality & surveillance of private life that a barrier between a public & private sphere becomes apparent, forming a space within which a couple was no longer a simple unit of reproduction, but a focus of affection & solidarity. 27 References. HA

88T2674

Cancian, Francesca M. (School Social Sciences U California, Irvine 92717), Love and Power: Types of Marriage in the U.S., UM Urban Anthropology, 1986, 15, 3-4, fall-winter, 215-243

* Three types of heterosexual relationships are analyzed-independent, dependent, & interdependent-based on intensive interviews with 5 families & previous research. Love & power are viewed as relations of mutual dependency, following exchange theorists, & the economic, social, cultural, & psychological dimensions of dependency are explored. Dependency may be overt or covert, & may focus on expressive or instrumental resources. In independent relationships, mutual exchange is so low that relationships become unstable. In dependent Mc marriages, wives are dependent & relatively powerless, & gender roles are polarized. In dependent We families, dependency & power are more equal, but there is little autonomy. Interdependent marriages in the We & Mc combine moderate mutual dependency, autonomy, & commitment. 35 References. HA

88T2675

Capuzzi, Cecelia Ostien (Portland State U, OR 97207), Effects of Stress and Social Support on Maternal Attachment with a Handicapped Infant, ♦ Dissertation Abstracts International, A: The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 1, July, 223-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8706827.

88T2676

Chia, Rosina C., Chong, C. J. & Cheng, B. S. (Dept Psychology East Carolina U, Greenville NC 27834), Relationship of Modernization and Marriage Role Attitude among Chinese College Students, The Journal of Psychology, 1986, 120, 6, Nov, 599-605.

* Questionnaire & scale data were collected in 1984 from Taiwan U students (N = 220 Ms & 158 Fs) measuring traditionality-modernity & marriage role & decision-making attitudes. Results indicate (1) a significant sex difference, with women holding more modern values & a more equalitarian attitude toward marriage roles, (2) a factor structure of marriage-role attitudes different for Chinese men & women, & (3) a significant relationship between traditionality-modernity & marriage-role attitude, with the more modern individuals having more equalitarian attitudes, especially among women. This last finding indicates a progressive equalitarian view among well-educated Chinese women that contradicts the stereotypic view of the obedient, submissive Chinese woman. 2 Tables, 8 References. Modified HA

88T2677

Chodorow, Nancy Julia (Dept Sociology U California, Berkeley 94720), Divorce, Oedipal Asymmetries, and the Marital Age Gap, ♦ UM The Psychoanalytic Review, 1986, 73, 4, winter, 202-206.

¶ Marriage in the US characteristically takes place between younger Fs & older Ms. Psychodynamic theory suggests that one reason for this is that age hypergamy resolves certain emotional tensions of heterosexuality. The pattern is favored by both M ambivalence toward intimacy & nurturance needs & F needs for the intimacy that older Ms are more capable of offering. The pool of unmarried older Ms created by divorce & the growing power of Fs in society favor its further development, though at the price of creating a population of unattached heterosexual Fs aged 30+. Moreover, the practice fails to resolve the developmental issues that it reflects. 6 References. W. H. Stoddard

88T2678

Cornell, L. L. (Cornell U, Ithaca NY 14853), Hajnal and the Household in Asia: A Comparativist History of the Family in Preindustrial Japan, 1600-1870, UM Journal of Family History, 1987, 12, 1-3, Jan-July, 143-162

¶ When John Hajnal (see SA 33 3/8507964) argued that different types of household formation rules determine whether fertility is adjusted to economic conditions in traditional peasant societies, he deliberately ignored societies with stem family formation rules. Here, the relationship between household formation, fertility, & family relations in such a society-eighteenth- & nineteenth-century Japan is examined. Previous work on the history of the family in Japan is summarized, & the role life-cycle service played in adjusting fertility to economic conditions is discussed. 1 Table, 2 Figures, 1 Appendix, 65 References. HA

88T2679

deTurck, Mark A. & Miller, Gerald R. (State U New York Buffalo, Amherst 14260), Conceptualizing and Measuring Social Cognition in Marital Communication: A Validation Study, ♦ UM Journal of Applied Communication Research, 1986, 14, 2, fall, 69-85

¶ A conceptual framework & a measurement model of the social cognitive processes underlying marital communication are outlined. Based on husbands' & wives' tendencies to perceive their spouses as unique individuals rather than undifferentiated role occupants, the measurement model specifies a 2-dimensional configuration consisting of marriage-specific & general social cognitive processes. Results of studies, conducted with 51 & 85 couples, respectively, to develop & validate a measure of conjugal understanding, confirm the proposed measurement model. The implications, uses, & shortcomings of the instrument are discussed. 4 Tables, 34 References. Modified HA

88T2680

Downey, Geraldine & Moen, Phyllis (Instit Social Research U Michigan, Ann Arbor 48109), Personal Efficacy, Income, and Family Transitions: A Longitudinal Study of Women Heading Households, UM Journal of Health and Social Behavior, 1987, 28, 3, Sept, 320-333.

¶ Previous research shows that men's sense of efficacy is related to their earnings. Using US survey data from the 1972, 1975, & 1976 waves of the U of Michigan's Panel Study of Income Dynamics, the income-efficacy relationship for a sub-sample of women heading households (N = 591) is examined, placing it in the context of work & family roles. Several models of efficacy change (from 1972 to 1976) are estimated, incorporating measures of previous efficacy, income, income change, employment transitions, family transitions (marriage & life-cycle changes in parenting), as well as controls for race, education, & physical health. Findings reveal that earned income increases the efficacy of women heading households, regardless of family context, supporting the role enhancement hypothesis. However, nonearned income also promotes efficacy, suggesting that personal earnings may operate as a family-rather than individual-resource. 3 Tables, 2 Appendixes, 57 References. Modified HA gy of life history interviewing to examine hidden dimensions in family life course. One stream that has long been unrecognized is the life course of women who remain unmarried & who do not become mothers. Their lives are contrasted to their more traditional peers who have experienced all the dimensions of the typical life cycle: marriage, motherhood, grandmotherhood, & widowhood. Here, ever married mothers & life-long single women with no children are compared, based on data obtained from a sample of women ($N = 30$) from the 1910 birth cohort interviewed in upstate NY in 1984. 24 References. HA

88T2663

Arlow, Henna, Samios, Mary & O'Leary, K. Daniel (U. Georgia, Athens 30602). Prevalence and Correlates of Physical Aggression during Courtship. ♦ Journal of Interpersonal Violence 1987, 2, 1, Mar, 82-90.

† Data from a packet of questionnaires administered to M & F NY U students ($N = 95$ & 175 respectively) provided information about whether they had engaged in or been victims of physical aggression in past &/or current dating relationships. Some 30% of the Ms & 32% of the Fs reported engaging in some form of physical aggression against a current steady dating partner. Additionally, 49% of the Ms & 26% of the Fs reported being the victims of their current dating partners' physical aggression. Length of the dating relationship was associated with Ms' physical aggression, & their victimization was associated with decreased liking for their partners. Fs' experiences with physical aggression in a dating relationship as both victims & aggressors were related to the length of the relationships, less liking for the partner, & less positive affect for the partner. 2 Tables, 19 References. Modified HA

88T2664

Atkinson, Jean (Child & Family Studies Program U. Wisconsin, Madison 53706). Gender Roles in Marriage and the Family: A Critique and Some Proposals. Journal of Family Issues 1987, 8, 1, Mar, 5-41.

† Gender role issues permeate nearly all aspects of marital & family life, & understanding the ways that women & men & girls & boys are different & similar should enhance understanding of marriage & family relationships in general. Although theory & experience seem to insist that gender differences clearly exist, empirical evidence about similarities or differences with few exceptions is not so clear. It is argued that these ambiguities can be traced in large part to conceptual & methodological issues, such as construct definitions, measurement techniques, & sampling, as well as inattention to the historical context. Household DoFL is focused on to illustrate how attending more carefully to method, theory, & history can improve understanding of how gender roles are played out in the family. 108 References. Modified HA

88T2665

Avi-Gal, Haviva. The Legal Aspects of Non-Remunerative Work within the Family Framework. Israel Social Science Research 1986, 4, 1, 99-107.

† An examination of the place of the housewife within the legal system of Israel, as it has been shaped by historical, political, & religious sources of family laws. Rights legally granted to family members include both economic rights (alimony, property-sharing, financial, & pension rights) & rights to social benefits (national insurance, provision of sustenance, & income tax). However, despite the Women's Equal Rights Law passed in 1951, & the many attempts to recognize the housewife's work as economically valuable, this work does not carry adequate economic or social rights. As a result, wives who are not employed outside the home are highly dependent on their husbands both during marriage & after its termination by death or divorce. Modified HA

88T2666

Bar-Yosef, Rivka W. (Dept. Sociology Hebrew U. Jerusalem, Mount Scopus 91905 Israel). The Family as a Work Organization—Some Theoretical Aspects. Israel Social Science Research 1986, 4, 1, 12-27.

† An examination of certain theoretical issues that surround unpaid work in the family setting. Many discussions of such work assume both that it occurs, & that it can be distinguished from nonwork activities. In fact, work cannot be defined as precisely as these assumptions require, as a consideration of traditional Jewish rules about work on the Sabbath illustrates. In modern societies, the concept of work is usually associated with that of payment, however, unpaid work occurs not just in nonmonetary economies, but in capitalist societies. Work on kibbutzim illustrates this phenomenon. Despite the unpaid status of work on kibbutzim, such work is often formalized—indeed, sometimes more extensively than paid work. In contrast, housework & other types of work are not formalized, & are in effect, a concealed form of work. Economists are increasingly recognizing the household as a unit of production as well as of consumption. Several possible classifications of unpaid work in the family unit & household are presented. The problem is explored of whether expressive as well as instrumental activities can be considered work. 55 References. Modified AA

88T2667

Bedard, Marcia (Women's Studies Program California State U. Fresno 93740-0078). Profamilism and the New Right: A Feminist Analysis of Fascist Family Ideology. ♦ The Psychohistory Review 1986-87, 15, 2, winter, 77-108.

† A review of social-psychological literature on fascist family beliefs provides evidence of US susceptibility to the profamilist ideology of fascist movements, & the role of religion & patriotism in such movements. Parallels are drawn between rising militarism & worsening SE conditions in the US today, Nazi Germany, & Stalinist Russia. Reasons why fascist movements have appeal at such times are explained. It is argued that an authoritarian patriarchal family model is central to the fascist state because it diffuses men's anger at state leadership by giving them absolute power over, & the right to aggress against, wives & children; it insures that rigid sex roles, obedience, & conformity required by the fascist state will be reproduced in the next generation, & violence, fear, & the use of physical force within the family become the standard means of conflict resolution & social control, thus insuring that similar actions by the state will be accepted by citizens. 48 References. Modified AA

88T2668

Birkeland, Gunn Elisabeth (Instit. Sociology U. Bergen, N-5014 Norway). Sosial klasse og arbeidsdelingen i hjemmet (Social Class and Division of Labor in the Household). Tidsskrift for samfunnsforskning 1987, 28, 2, 143-164 (NOR).

† Data from personal interviews conducted in 1982 with 2,532 Norwegian Ms & Fs are used to explain variations in the domestic DoFL, based on gender & SC differences. The possible influence of other factors is also explained, using multiple regression analysis. Men's relatively low participation in household activities is investigated in light of three theoretical perspectives: (1) the new home economists' notion of efficient labor allocation, (2) the spouse's power to avoid housework, as explained through social exchange theory, & (3) SC differences with regard to sex role ideologies. Results show that the parts of domestic work typically carried out by women still follow traditional patterns, with small but significant SC differences. 2 Tables, 1 Appendix, 35 References. Modified HA

88T2669

Brandon, Suzanne (U. Minnesota, Minneapolis 55455). Mine! No, Mine! The Politics of Parental Kidnapping: An Interactionist Perspective. ♦ Dissertation Abstracts International, A: The Humanities and Social Sciences 1987, 48, 1, July, 223-A.

Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8709550.

88T2670

Breault, K. D., Barker, Chris & Lemle, Russell (Jules Thorn Psychiatric Day Hospital Saint Pancras Hospital, 4 St Pancras Way London NW1 0PE England). Informal Helping in Partner and Stranger Dyads. ♦ Journal of Marriage and the Family 1987, 49, 3, Aug, 541-547.

† A comparison of the helping interactions of partners in close relationships & of strangers, based on analysis of the interactions of 92 participants (from 46 couples), who completed a semistructured helping task with their partner & with an opposite-sex stranger. Based on examination of audiotapes & scale data, it is concluded that partners were less empathic & used fewer acknowledgements & more behavioral advice, interpretations, & self-disclosures than strangers, & that there were no differences in perceived helpfulness between partners & strangers. Results are discussed in terms of the general effects of familiarity on communication, & of the specific dynamics of informal helping in close relationships. 3 Tables, 20 References. Modified HA

88T2671

Briody, Elizabeth K. (U. Texas, Austin 78712). Patterns of Household Immigration into South Texas. ♦ International Migration

88T2690

Gross, Penny (Dept Sociology Ontario Instit Studies Education, Toronto M5S 1V6). Defining Post-Divorce Remarriage Families: A Typology Based on the Subjective Perceptions of Children. Journal of Divorce, 1986, 10, 1-2, fall-winter, 205-217.

* The central question addressed is membership/boundary definition in the postdivorce remarriage family. Sixty children in remarriage families were asked whom they considered to be members of their families in structured interviews conducted in 1982 in Toronto, Ontario. A typology of four mutually exclusive & exhaustive types was developed based on children's subjective perceptions of parental family membership: retention, substitution, reduction, & augmentation. On an exploratory basis, variables were examined that might account for Rs' location in one of these four types. The findings have important implications for the definition of family after divorce & remarriage & call for a recognition of the importance of the children's perspective. 28 References. Modified HA

88T2691

Hamberger, L. Kevin & Hastings, James E. (Dept Family Practice Medical Coll Wisconsin Southeastern Family Practice Center, PO Box 598 Tallent Hall Kenosha 53141). Personality Correlates of Men Who Abuse Their Partners: A Cross-Validation Study. Journal of Family Violence, 1986, 1, 4, Dec, 323-341.

* A study of US Ms (N = 99) who attended a Aug 1984-Feb 1985 domestic violence abatement program, in an attempt to replicate a preliminary investigation (Hamberger, L. K., & Hastings, J. E., "Personality Correlates of Men Who Abuse Their Partners: Some Preliminary Data," paper presented at the meeting of the Society for Personality Assessment, Berkeley, Calif, 15 March 1985). Personality profiles derived from a battery of scales closely resembled those from the original study, confirming the preponderance of personality disorders with a confluence centering around schizoid/borderline, narcissistic/antisocial, & dependency/compulsive disorders. 3 Tables, 10 Figures, 22 References. F Rasmussen

88T2692

Hansen, Gary L. (Dept Sociology S-205 U Kentucky, Lexington 40546-0091). The Effect of Religiosity on Factors Predicting Marital Adjustment. U Social Psychology Quarterly, 1987, 50, 3, Sept, 264-269.

* Recent work on marital adjustment has taken a social exchange view of relationship satisfaction. Assessments of satisfaction are thought to be a function of equity, equality, & reward level. Based on questionnaire responses from 220 young, married Ss, the effects of these factors on adjustment are examined for both low & high religiosity Ms & Fs. While equality is more important for the high religiosity group, the exchange model explains approximately the same amount of variance in adjustment for both groups of Ms. For Fs, the model explains more variance in adjustment for those low on religiosity. This finding is interpreted in terms of religion performing a compensatory function, & implications for the use of the exchange perspective are discussed. 2 Tables, 36 References. HA

88T2693

Hauser, Stuart T., Book, Barbara K., Houlihan, John, Powers, Sally, Weiss-Perry, Bedonna, Follansbee, Donna, Jacobson, Alan M., & Noam, Gil G. (Medical School Harvard U, Boston MA 02115). Sex Differences within the Family: Studies of Adolescent and Parent Family Interactions. Journal of Youth and Adolescence, 1987, 16, 3, June, 199-220.

* Sex differences in verbal family interactions were investigated in a group of 79 adolescents & parents from normal & psychiatric settings. Parent & adolescent interactions were observed & audiotaped in a semi-structured, revealed-differences family discussion. All of the individual speeches were then scored with the constraining & enabling coding systems (Hauser, S. T., Powers, S., Jacobs, A., Noam, G., Weiss, B., & Follansbee, D., "Family Contexts of Adolescent Ego Development," Child Development, 1984, 55, 195-213). Initial predictions that across both generations, Ms would have a cognitive bias, while Fs would have an ineffective bias in expressing ideas were only partially confirmed. Other findings included parent sex differences: higher levels of cognitively enabling speeches expressed by fathers & more speeches addressed to fathers by mothers were more constraining. Also, adolescent girls spoke significantly more than boys. Several interpretations of these findings are discussed. The effects & influences of the task & the context of the task on the expression of family sex differences are also examined. 4 Tables, 43 References. Modified AA

88T2694

Hayami, Akira (Faculty Economics Keio U, Minato-ku Tokyo 108 Japan). Another Fossa Magna: Proportion Marrying and Age at Marriage in Late Nineteenth-Century Japan. U Journal of Family History, 1987, 12, 1-3, Jan-July, 57-72.

* Though Japan is culturally & socially homogeneous when compared with many other nations, in premodern times it had many local variations in its social life. One largely unexplored aspect of these differences was family life & social structure. National statistics from the early Meiji period on, together with historical case study data, are used to explore variations in two important demographic factors: age at marriage & proportion marrying. The principal source utilized is the Nihon Teikoku Minseki Kokoyo, a national population survey conducted in 1886. It is found that the proportion marrying was below 80% for both sexes, with peaks at age 20 for Fs & age 23 for Ms. Analysis of regional differences reveals two patterns: early marriage in the East & late marriage in the West. These differences appear to have resulted primarily from differing inheritance customs & family life cycles. 2 Tables, 3 Figures, 1 Map, 12 References. W. H. Stoddard

88T2695

Helle, Horst J. (Institut Soziologie Ludwig-Maximilians-U Munchen, D-8000 22 Federal Republic Germany). Why Fight for the Family? U Journal of Comparative Family Studies, 1987, 18, 3, autumn, 481-487.

* A review essay on Brigitte Berger's & Peter L. Berger's The War over the Family: Capturing the Middle Ground (Garden City, NY: Anchor Press/Doubleday, 1984 [see listing in IRPS No. 41]). A defense of the bourgeois family in the US as a bastion of shared values that keep democracy operable. The question of whether modernization has rendered the nuclear family obsolete is considered, & rejected in favor of the opposing view that the nuclear family has made modernization possible. Different camps in the "war over the family" are identified: the critical, neotraditionalist, & professional—along with some issues central to their current debates concerning the position of the nuclear family in US society: gender roles, the political struggle over the Equal Rights Amendment, new definitions of the family, abortion, & children's rights. Practical suggestions for defending the nuclear family & new directions for family policy are offered. K. Hyatt

88T2696

Imazumi, Yoko (Institut Population Problems Ministry Health & Welfare, Kasumigaseki Tokyo Japan). Reasons for Consanguineous Marriages in Japan. Journal of Biosocial Science, 1987, 19, 1, Jan, 97-106.

* Data from the 1983 Demographic Survey on Japanese marriages, in which questionnaires were administered to 9,225 couples chosen from 6 widely different areas of Japan, were used to examine consanguineous (inbred) marriages. Recommendation by parents or relatives was the most frequent reason for consanguineous marriage for both husbands & wives, followed by knowledge of the partner by relatives. The rate of consanguineous marriage on the recommendation of parents or relatives was higher in endogamy, arranged marriages, childhood friends, & groups in which there was external pressure for marriage, while it was lower in love match marriages, school, workplace, & social gatherings that gave opportunities for meeting, & where there was personal marital motivation. 6 Tables, 9 References. Modified HA

88T2697

Imbrogno, Salvatore. Changes in the Collective Family in the Soviet Union: A Comparative Perspective. International Social Work, 1986, 29, 4, Oct, 335-347.

* The collective family serves as the bedrock for the formulation of family policy in the USSR. However, constitutional revisions & statutory enactments granting legal freedom for divorce & abortions & additional SE benefits for families & working mothers, have inadvertently accelerated changes in traditional cultural values inherent in the collective. Comparisons are made to the situation in the US. Formulation of family policy, once viewed as a primary matter in quantitative improvements (concrete services), now must include qualitative changes resulting in the use of sociology & psychology in the human service delivery system. 24 References. HA

88T2698

Kennik, Ahto (Institut History Estonian Academy Sciences, 200101 Tallinn). Kutscharidusasteemi areng ja osa oskustooliste ettevalm-

88T2681

Edwards, Stephen D., Borsten, Gerard F., Nene, Louis M., & Kumene, Stanley T. (Dept Psychology U. Zululand, Private Bag X1001 Kwa-dlangezwa 3886 South Africa). Urbanization and Changing Perceptions of Responsibilities among African Fathers. The Journal of Psychology, 1986, 120, 5, Sept., 433-438.

¶ The effect of urbanization on South African fathers' perceptions of their paternal responsibilities is examined via 1983 questionnaire data ($N = 102$). Fathers were categorized as Ru, transitional, or Ur on the basis of a standardized interval measure of urbanization. Perceptions of paternal responsibilities were rank ordered into three basic anthropologically sequential categories: breadwinner, governor, & family. Results indicate that Ru, transitional, & Ur fathers all view breadwinner responsibilities as most important, but that urbanization has a significant effect on fathers' perceptions of their responsibilities. 1 Table, 20 References. HA

88T2682

Elder, Glen H., Jr. (U. North Carolina, Chapel Hill 27514). Families and Lives: Some Developments in Life-Course Studies. U. Journal of Family History, 1987, 12, 1-3, Jan-July, 179-199.

¶ As a theoretical orientation, the life course brings a contextual, dynamic, & temporal perspective to studies of families & lives in the past & present. Building on literature reviews in the mid 1970s, some elementary distinctions of life course analysis are examined, including the links between age, temporality, & the life course, the dynamics of interdependent lives, & the unit of analysis problem. Emerging conceptual & research approaches to the household exemplify these distinctions. The relation between social change & the life course remains one of the more central & challenging areas of life course study. 1 Figure, 73 References. HA

88T2683

Erlanger, Howard S., Chambliss, Elizabeth, & Meili, Marygold S. (Law School U. Wisconsin, Madison 53706). Participation and Flexibility in Informal Processes: Cautions from the Divorce Context. Law and Society Review, 1987, 21, 4, winter, 585-604.

¶ Based on open-ended interviews with the parties & lawyers in 25 informally settled divorce cases in Wisconsin in 1982, it is found that the informal process is often contentious, adversarial, & beyond the perceived control of one or both parties. Although settlement in some cases reflects flexibility, party participation, & true agreement, in most cases it reflects unequal financial resources, procedural support, or emotional stamina. Parties report settling issues such as child support according to nonlegal, situational factors, particularly their relative impatience to finalize the divorce & mutual satisfaction with settlement terms is low. The findings raise questions about the assumed value of informal settlement, however, it is recognized that informal divorce processing is structurally & institutionally inevitable (with or without evidence of its desirability). It is suggested that reform efforts must ultimately recognize both the inevitability & the limits of informal process. 28 References. HA

88T2684

Ferguson, Celia Bell. Employed Wives' and Husbands' Separateness and Connectedness as Predicted by Gender-Role Attitudes, Marital Communication, and Job/Family Stress. Dissertation Abstracts International, A: The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 47, 12(1), June, 4519-A.

Available from UMI, Ann Arbor MI. Order No. DA8708768.

88T2685

Fineman, Martha L., & Ople, Anne (U. Wisconsin, Madison 53706). The Uses of Social Science Data in Legal Policymaking: Custody Determinations at Divorce. U. Wisconsin Law Review, 1987, 1, 107-158.

Comment, 159-163, Reply, 165-169.

¶ A critique of how social science data are being increasingly used to guide the formulation of legislation concerning child custody following divorce. After presenting a brief history of custody rules, the process through which the appropriateness of long-standing legal rules for making custody decisions (eg, the maternal custody norms) has been challenged is reviewed. It is shown how the use of some social science information by legal policymakers can lead to idealized rather than realistic solutions, even if it is employed judiciously & with full knowledge of its methodological & theoretical weaknesses. David Chambers's "Rethinking the Substantive Rules for Custody Disputes in Divorce"

(Michigan Law Review, 1984, 477, 527-538) is analyzed as an example of the misuse of social science data to further a particular position, ie, the superiority of paternal custody; various other custody studies are explored in depth & critiqued. In The Abuses of Social Science: A Response to Fineman and Ople, David L. Chambers (U of Michigan Law School, Ann Arbor) asserts that his work has been misrepresented & misused. He claims that his goal was to develop acceptable ways of defining the "best interests of the child," & argues that most of his policy recommendations actually support maternal rather than paternal interests. In A Reply to David Chambers, Martha L. Fineman contests this assertion & quotes Chambers's work in detail to demonstrate how his recommendations are at best neutral, not maternally favorable. An attack on Chambers was not intended, & his work used only as an example of some of the problems associated with the use of social science data in formulating legal policy. K. Hyatt.

88T2686

Folbre, Nancy (U. Massachusetts, Amherst 01003). Hearts and Spades: Paradigms of Household Economics. U. World Development, 1986, 14, 2, Feb., 245-255.

¶ An explanation of why the feminist critique of inequalities within the family poses a serious challenge to conventional economic theories of the household. Also discussed are those aspects of both neoclassical & Marxian theory that are useful to an analysis of conflict within the family, arguing that the bargaining power models being developed by some neoclassical theorists are complementary to Marxist-influenced structural accounts. 102 References. HA

88T2687

Gauvreau, Danielle (SORIP U. Quebec, Chicoutimi G7H 2B1). Nuptialité et catégories professionnelles à Québec pendant le régime français (Marriage and Professional Categories in Quebec City during the French Regime). Sociologie et Sociétés, 1987, 19, 1, Apr., 25-35. (FR)

¶ The demographic regime that characterized Quebec during the French colonial period is examined, focusing on professional categories, marriage choices, & age at first marriage for Ms & Fs. Parish registers for 1621-1765 & 1744 census data reveal a specific sexual DoF. within the family, the different possibilities for family formation, the requirements of rank among various professional groups, & the degree of professional endogamy, which is much greater within the upper group (civil & military officials & merchants). 4 Tables, 1 Figure, 36 References. Modified HA

88T2688

Gilliland, Nancy (Moorhead State U., MN 56560). Mandating Family Responsibility for Elderly Members: Costs and Benefits. Journal of Applied Gerontology, 1986, 5, 1, July, 26-36.

¶ In light of recent interest at the federal & state levels in requiring financial contributions from adult children of parents who are Medicaid recipients, the advantages & disadvantages of states' enacting family responsibility statutes is examined. Past & recent experiences with these laws are described, as well as impacts on families. From the evidence it is concluded that mandated family responsibility does result in saving of public monies, but may not be a desirable route to reducing public expenditures for nursing home care. 22 References. HA

88T2689

Gordon, Sally W. (Dept Human Development & Family Ecology U. Illinois, Urbana 61801). I Go to 'Tanties': The Economic Significance of Child-Shifting in Antigua, West Indies. U. Journal of Comparative Family Studies, 1987, 18, 3, autumn, 427-443.

¶ An examination of the practice of child-shifting or fosterage in Antigua, West Indies, using data from interviews with a random sample of 50 households in 2 villages. It is concluded that this practice of reallocating dependent or minor children to households other than those of the natural parents is an adaptive strategy for household formation & an economic alternative; the practice does not reflect a lack of affection for the child. It is particularly well-suited to an externally constrained economy with multiple vagaries in which migration is a long-standing & essential economic option. Results provide tentative support for Wilks's & Netting's 1984 hypothesis (no citation provided) that when a F's productive tasks outside the household are incompatible with high fertility, surrogate caretakers will be utilized; further testing in other cultures is recommended. 9 Tables. Modified HA

Emory U, Atlanta GA 30322), Ethnic and Residence Differences among Poor Families, Journal of Comparative Family Studies 1987, 18, 3, autumn, 463-470.

* An investigation of Oscar Lewis's subculture of poverty thesis (see, eg, The Culture of Poverty in On Understanding Poverty, Moynihan, D. P. (Ed), New York: Basic Books, 1968, 187-200), ie, that economically disadvantaged people share certain structural characteristics & values regardless of ethnic subcultural or Ru-Ur differences. Interview data from 473 F homemakers from black, white, & Hispanic families defined as living below the poverty level in metropolitan areas of 13 US states in 1974 are analyzed to test the validity of some of the poverty characteristics defined by Lewis. Results indicate a wide variability in both household structure & value orientations regarding childrearing, with both place of residence & ethnicity contributing to the differences. 3 Tables, 19 References. K. Hyatt

88T2709

Laanesaar, Aili (Instut History Estonian Academy Sciences, 200101 Tallinn), Filmirovane gomogennykh i geterogennykh po natsional'nosti semei i ikh stabil'nost' (National Homogamy and Heterogamy Formation and Stability), Izvestiya Akademii Nauk Estonskoi SSR, Obshchestvennye nauki, 1987, 36, 3, 279-285. (RUS)

* Investigation of patterns of national homogamy & heterogamy in the USSR needs to be based not only on national census data but on special sociodemographic research. Census data reveal only a general trend to heterogamy for 1959-1979. However, it can be shown that for 1970-1979, as contrasted to 1959-1970, the number of heterogamous families has increased, although the rate of their formation has stabilized or even declined. National heterogamy appears to depend on the sociodemographic structure of a republic & especially on differences between young M & young F populations. Homogamy is stablest in Estonia, Russian homogamy's instability merits further sociological investigation. 3 Tables. Modified HA

88T2710

Langfeldt, Enno (Instut World Economics, Kiel Federal Republic Germany), Unpaid Work in the Family Setting-The German Case, Israel Social Science Research, 1986, 4, 1, 33-43.

* Unpaid work in the family setting has received little attention in the Federal Republic of Germany. However, estimates from several published sources place it at between 33% & 50% of official gross national product & portray its relative share as increasing over time. Described here are the actual development & future prospects of private households & their role in the overall SE network. Theoretical problems surrounding the evaluation of household activities in the national accounts are considered. 7 Tables, 1 Graph, 13 References. Modified HA

88T2711

Laslett, Peter (Trinity Coll U Cambridge, CBI 2JQ England), The Character of Familial History, Its Limitations and the Conditions for Its Proper Pursuit, Journal of Family History, 1987, 12, 1-3, Jan-July, 263-284.

* In this deliberately controversial essay, the duties of the historian of the family are derived from the ethical philosophy of Immanuel Kant. The following tendencies are criticized in the treatment of the subject: the tendency to read history backwards, to see it in terms of the doctrine of modernization, & to fail to recognize that familial change goes forward at the pace of social structural change, the slowest of all paces of change. The notion of approaches (eg, a demographic or a feminist approach) is rejected & the subject is defined as one of those within historical sociology: the type of all social science. 1 Appendix, 42 References. HA

88T2712

Lasry, Jean-Claude & Frédérik, Mario (Dept Psychologie U Montréal, Québec H3C 3J7), Structure familiale et pouvoir conjugal dans des familles haïtiennes de Montréal (Family Structure and Conjugal Power in Haitian Families in Montreal), Canadian Ethnic Studies/Etudes Ethniques au Canada, 1986, 18, 2, 151-158. (FRE)

* Husbands & wives in 60 Haitian families living in Montreal, Quebec, an average of 10 years were interviewed to assess their perception of marital power & sex-role attitudes. Two indices of marital power are calculated: numeric & structural, based on answers regarding who makes the decision in 20 situations. The numeric index of marital power shows that Haitian Ms & Fs do not differ in their perception of who is the decisionmaker, & that their pattern of decision making is democratic. Several studies have reported husband dominance in Haitian families living in Haiti; the structural index presents quite a different family power. The husband dominance is replaced mostly by an equalitarian pattern of decision making, but in some cases, by the wife's dominance. Sex roles are correlated with family structure: the more democratic the family, the less traditional the sex roles. 3 Tables, 21 References. HA

88T2713

LeBourdais, Celine, Hamel, Pierre J. & Bernard, Paul (c/o Bernard-Dept sociologie U Montréal, Québec H3C 3J7), Le Travail et l'ouvrage. Charge et partage des tâches domestiques chez les couples québécois (Work and Housework: Workload and the Sharing of Domestic Chores among Quebec Couples), Sociologie et Sociétés, 1987, 19, 1, Apr, 37-55. (FRE)

* The sharing of domestic work among Quebec couples is investigated, taking into consideration such variables as family responsibility & employment status. Telephone interviews were conducted in 1986 with a geographically stratified sample of Quebec couples (N = 1,332). It appears that domestic work remains essentially a F activity, to which Ms only occasionally make a significant contribution. This DoFl is not likely to change as long as, on the employment market, Fs continue to be relegated to positions inferior to those of Ms. 3 Tables. Modified HA

88T2714

Leppel, Karen (School Management Widener U, Chester PA 19013), Income Effects on Living Arrangements: Differences between Male and Female Householders, Social Science Research, 1987, 16, 2, June, 138-153.

* An examination of the effects of income on household composition choice, ie, marriage vs living alone or with unrelated individuals, with focus on gender differences. Data from 7,694 US households from 12 of the largest SMSAs that participated in the 1980 Current Population Survey were supplemented with data on housing costs from Chambers of Commerce & the Bureau of Labor Statistics. Analysis indicates that the probability of living with unrelated individuals rather than living alone increased for Fs & decreased for Ms as incomes increased, & roommates tended to have similar incomes. In addition, Fs' higher incomes reduced their probability of marriage, while the reverse was true for Ms. Future investigations might consider the effects of more interaction terms, eg, education & the presence of young children, on household composition choices. 6 Tables, 1 Appendix, 23 References. K. Hyatt

88T2715

Lewis, Constance, The Empty Nest Revisited, * Dissertation Abstracts International, A: The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 47, 11, May, 4199-A-4200-A.

Available from UMI, Ann Arbor MI. Order No. DA8706278.

88T2716

Li, Jason T. & Caldwell, Robert A. (c/o Caldwell Dept Psychology Michigan State U, East Lansing 48824-1117), Magnitude and Directional Effects of Marital Sex-Role Incongruence on Marital Adjustment, Journal of Family Issues, 1987, 8, 1, Mar, 97-110.

* The direction of differences in marital sex-role attitudes & its role in determining the direction of differences on the marital adjustment of husbands & wives is examined based on questionnaire data gathered from 67 married couples in a midwestern US U community. The findings show that the more egalitarian in marital sex-role orientation the husband is relative to his wife, the better the marital adjustment of both spouses, the less egalitarian he is relative to his wife, the poorer the adjustment. This finding is examined within the historical context of differences in the social power of husbands & wives. A "magnitude-only" measure of marital sex-role attitude incongruence is not related to marital adjustment. 2 Tables, 20 References. Modified HA

88T2717

Logue, Larry M., Modernization Arrested: Child Naming and the Family in a Utah Town, The Journal of American History, 1987, 74, 1, June, 131-138.

* Family history, like the family itself, is currently in a state of disorganization, but it is possible to uncover regularities in the family history of diverse groups. One such regularity has been the shift in the naming of children from repetition of family names to free choice of names. In general, this shift occurred through most of US society in the nineteenth century. However, some groups are counterexamples. Among these were parents in the Mormon community of St George, Utah. Archival data show a substantial shift in naming patterns, in which first-born sons &

Isamael eestis aastail 1959-1965 (The Development and Contribution of Vocational Schools to the Training of Qualified Labor in the Estonian SSR in 1959-1965). Izvestiya Akademi Nauk Estoniskoi SSR (Obshchestvennye nauki), 1987, 36, 3, 265-278. (EST)

† The 1958 law under which vocational education in the USSR was expanded & reorganized was applied in Estonia by the creation in 1959 of the Central Board of Vocational Education, & the placing of 26 schools under its control. In 1962/63 various types of schools were reorganized into a unitary town & village vocational school system that offered training for mechanized agriculture, construction, metals, & other industries. Over the years 1959-1965 these vocational schools trained 21,464 specialists for work in an expanded range of industries, making a substantial contribution to meeting Estonia's manpower needs & beginning to correspond to the level of social & economic development in Estonia & in the USSR overall. 2 Tables. Modified HA.

88T2699

Kortzer, David I. & Brettell, Caroline (Bowdoin Coll., Brunswick ME 04111). Advances in Italian and Iberian Family History, A Journal of Family History, 1987, 12, 1-2, Jan-July, 87-120.

† In the past decade, a tremendous increase in family history research in Italy, Spain, & Portugal provides new insight into family processes & has many implications for generalizations regarding the course of European family history. Many of these new findings are detailed, & their historical & theoretical implications assessed. Previous generalizations regarding Mediterranean family history are examined in light of this new evidence. Among the topics discussed are the sources & methods employed in recent research, the household formation systems operating in Italy & Iberia, the role played by inheritance norms & by dowry, changing childrearing practices especially as regards child abandonment, marriage patterns, the family lives of the elderly, & the impact of migration on family life. The benefits of considering certain cultural topics in understanding the course of southern European family history are also evaluated. 152 References. HA.

88T2700

Kharchev, Anatolii Grigorovich, Sem'ya i roditel'stvo (Family and Parenthood). Kommunist, 1987, 9, June, 22-82. (RUS)

† The family is at the core of all levels of social & historical development, from the individual to the national. Naturally, any discussion of the family must lead to a discussion of parenthood. Parents have a direct influence on their children's attitude toward work, political orientation, & moral development. Considerable variation exists among USSR families in terms of parenting styles, eg, Latvian women have an average of 1,690 children while Tadzhik women have 4,248. Unfortunately, women failing to finish high school have more children than better educated women. Stabilization of family life is a key facet of USSR social policy, to this end, more research must be done to determine ways of lowering the divorce rate. 6 Prostatkov.

88T2701

Kirchler, Erich & Wagner, Wolfgang (Inst. Psychologie Johannes Kepler U., A-4040 Linz Austria). Marital Satisfaction and Conflict in Purchasing Decisions, Social Behaviour, 1987, 2, 2, June, 99-103.

† An investigation of the influence of marital satisfaction on spouses' assessment of purchasing situations. Scales were administered in interviews with wives & husbands from 79 Linz, Austria, households rating their well-being in, & the frequency of, situations where they imagined buying or not buying a desired commodity, with the partner either agreeing or disagreeing with the purchase. Essentially, it was found that the more satisfying the relationship, the more often spouses reported experiencing situations associated with positive well-being, the more frequently they supported each other's purchase desires, & the less often they reported being in conflict with each other. 1 Table, 5 References. HA.

88T2702

Klein, Thomas (Theresienstr. 128, D-8000 Munich 2 Federal Republic Germany). Determinanten der sozialen Lage: Arbeitsmarkt versus Familie (Determinants of Social Situation: Labor Market versus Family), Zeitschrift für Soziologie, 1987, 16, 4, Aug., 254-271. (GER)

† A microsimulation approach is used to determine the extent to which the distribution of poverty is influenced by labor market (LM) position & family structure (FS). Drawing on data from a 1981 survey (N = 3,000 West German households), 3 specific factors are analyzed: (1) the impact of LM segmentation, as opposed to FS, on the working poor; (2) the contribution of LM segmentation & FS to the descent of the unemployed into poverty, & (3) differences among groups in unemployment rates, risk of poverty due to unemployment. Results show that poverty is determined not only by LM position, but also by FS, especially in cases of unemployment. 8 Tables. 37 References. Modified HA.

88T2703

Knodel, John, Kamnuansilpa, Peerasit & Chamratrithirong, Aphichai (Population Studies Center U. Michigan, Ann Arbor 48109). Breastfeeding in Thailand: Data from the 1981 Contraceptive Prevalence Survey, Studies in Family Planning, 1982, 13, 11, Nov., 307-315.

† Data on feeding practices from the 1981 Contraceptive Prevalence Survey, involving interviews with 7,038 ever-married women in Thailand, provide valuable new information on the extent of full breastfeeding, the type of supplemental foods given infants, & the duration of postpartum amenorrhea. While the results are inconclusive in terms of indicating whether a decline in breastfeeding has continued since 1979 (the year for which the last national survey provides evidence), they at least confirm the lower levels of breastfeeding found in the 1979 survey in comparison with earlier surveys. The results clearly indicate that breastfeeding mothers introduce supplemental food into the child's diet at a very early age & thus that full breastfeeding is quite short. 5 Tables, 1 Figure. HA.

88T2704

Koerpel, Barbara Jean (Florida State U., Tallahassee 32306). Family of Origin Variables and Length of Courtship as Related to Mate Selection Patterns and Marital Satisfaction, * Dissertation Abstracts International: 4: The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 47, 12(1), June, 4520 A-4521-A.

Available from UMI, Ann Arbor MI. Order No. DA8702242.

88T2705

Kranichfeld, Marion L. (Pennsylvania State U., University Park 16802). Rethinking Family Power, Journal of Family Issues, 1987, 8, 1, Mar., 42-56.

† The family power literature, in its macrolevel focus on marital decision-making, has emphasized the kind of family power that is generally conferred on men & is based on extrafamilial roles & performance. Women, by virtue of their intrafamilial roles as kinkeepers & nurturers, are more deeply, extensively, & enduringly embedded in the family, yet the power that accrues to them as the lynchpins of family cohesion & socialization has received little attention. A microlevel analysis of family power reveals that women's positions in the family power structure rest not on the horizontal marital tie but rather are derived from the more complex, significant, & dynamic power of the intergenerational bond. 44 References. HA.

88T2706

Krausz, Susan Lavinsky (108 East 66th Street Suite 1A, New York NY 10021). Sex Roles within Marriage, WM Social Work, 1986, 31, 6, Nov-Dec., 457-464.

† A study of married couples' allocation of tasks within the household based on questionnaire data from a sample of 130 married Fs in State Island, NY, in 1981. Results indicate that household specialization existed in most households in accordance with traditional sex-role norms. 2 Tables. F. Rasmussen.

88T2707

Krulik, Tamar & Hirschfeld, Miriam J. (Dept. Nursing Sackler School Medicine Tel-Aviv U., Ramat-Aviv 69978 Israel). Hard Laborers in Family Caregiving, Israel Social Science Research, 1986, 4, 1, 84-98.

† Family caregiving has become a more widespread & longer-lasting task than ever before as a result of demographic changes over time. The impact of this task on Jewish families in Israel is explored using interview data from 181 families caring for adults & elderly & 92 families caring for children. Family caregiving work is found to be highly demanding, to offer diminishing returns on work time. Caregivers have none of the rights routinely offered to workers in paid employment. A need is seen for a comprehensive health & social policy addressed to these caregivers' needs. 2 Tables, 15 References. W. H. Stoddard.

88T2708

Kutner, Nancy G. & Kutner, Michael H. (Dept. Rehabilitation Med.

lies of University Graduates). Opera Universitatis Purkynianae Brunensis Facultas philosophica, 1983, 248, 1-182 (CZE)

¶ An examination of the characteristics & experiences of Czech families in which both spouses are U graduates. In Předmluva (Introduction), the intense pressures for change in traditional sex roles that affect such families are discussed, along with the various problems they experience, including late marriage, childlessness, & high divorce rate. Problems also emerge in the occupational sphere due to sex differences in three areas: attitude toward work performance, attitude toward vertical mobility within the employing organization, & integration in informal groups. In Ekonomika rodiny jako sociálního mikrosystému (The Family Economy as a Social Microcosm), the family economy is examined from the perspective of energy management. Viewed as an element of the total economy, families in which both spouses have U degrees produce less contribution to the national LF at higher than average cost, viewed as a unit of economic decision making, such families possess a higher energetic capital. While they start out expecting to pursue dual careers, after having children they shift toward sacrifice of the wife's career goals, though generally the wife retains professional status & reduces her family size to do so. In Děla práce v rodině-Domáci hospodaření (The Division of Labor in the Family-Housekeeping), it is noted that these families do not delegate household chores to service agencies, rather, they rely on labor-saving devices & on reallocation of role expectations. Conflicts emerge between husbands & wives over the assignment of household tasks as a result of wives' new assertion of a right to preferences about the household. In Zaměstnaná žena a žena v zaměstnání (The Employed Woman and the Woman as an Employee), a historical trend is identified toward increasing similarity of F & M work resulting from smaller numbers of children, labor saving devices in the home, & reduction in the physical strength requirements of employment. Women are now employed almost continuously, rather than only before children are born & after they are grown, but this is at the expense of family size, & women in largely M fields have few or no children & are often divorced. In Muž v zaměstnání a v rodině zaměstnané ženy (The Husband of the Gainfully Employed Wife at Work and in the Family), an abrupt drop in husband-wife age gaps is noted that encourages egalitarianism, however, symmetric family organization is a major cultural innovation that meets numerous obstacles. Husbands are fully satisfied by accepting neither the fully symmetric family which requires them to reduce their career plans nor the traditional family which requires much harder work to justify deviation from egalitarianism. In Dítě v rodině vysokoškolsky vzdělaných partnerů (Children in the Families of Graduates), it is demonstrated that children in these families have older parents & less intimate social contacts, but greater material welfare. Children have more opportunity to see both parents at work, but are less likely to understand the nature of that work. Parents often experience a sense of inadequacy that causes them to devote high levels of care in middle & later parenthood. In sum, the first generation of these families has a wider range of choice, but at the same time may be embittered or confused by the necessity of choice & especially by women's inability to benefit from their mothers' experiences. 5 Tables, 12 Figures, 3 Appendixes, 146 References. Modified HA

88T2728

Nevo, Naomi, Unpaid Work in the Rural Family in Cooperative Farming, Israel Social Science Research, 1986, 4, 1, 44-50.
¶ Unpaid work in the Ru family in cooperative farming communities in Israel (moshavim) is mainly performed by women. The ideology of communities before statehood (1921-1947) emphasized equal participation by men & women in farm labor. However, with rapid changes in economic & social life after the foundation of the state in 1948 & mass migrations from Islamic countries, women retreated from the farm to the house. 3 Figures, 5 References. Modified HA

88T2729

Nr, Shoshana (Rutgers U, New Brunswick NJ 08903), Spouses' Perception of Their Family Functioning: Congruence and Correlates, Dissertation Abstracts International, A The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 47, 11, May, 4200-A.
Available from UMI, Ann Arbor MI. Order No. DA8704093.

88T2730

Oh, Sunjoo (Dept Sociology State U New York, Stony Brook 11794-4356), Remarried Men and Remarried Women: How Are They Different?, Journal of Divorce, 1986, 9, 4, summer, 107-113.
¶ Employing 1972-1982 US General Social Survey data, regression techniques are used to investigate the relationship between SE variables & the state of remarriage for divorced men & women. The hypothesis is tested that for men, education, occupation, & income level are positively related to remarriage, while for women, these variables are inversely associated with remarriage. As hypothesized, highly educated divorced women are less likely to be remarried, as is also true for divorced women who are occupationally & financially independent. The important factor for divorced women considering remarriage is whether or not they are working. Divorced men, on the other hand, are likely to be remarried when they are older & have higher incomes. Unexpectedly, education is inversely related to remarriage for divorced men. 1 Table, 10 References. Modified HA

88T2731

Paydarfar, Ali A. (Dept Nutrition School Public Health U North Carolina, Chapel Hill 27514), Marital Fertility and Family Structure among the Urban Population of Iran, Journal of Comparative Family Studies, 1987, 18, 3, autumn, 389-402.

¶ After briefly summarizing three contradictory positions on the relationship between type of family structure & marital fertility, the effect of coresidence (extended or nuclear) on the fertility behavior of couples in 852 households in Shiraz, Iran, is investigated. Multivariate analysis of data from structured interviews conducted during 1968/69 reveals that the fertility of couples in nuclear families is substantially higher than that of couples in extended ones, independent of the effect of intermediate variables such as husband's/wife's marital age, marriage duration, & wife's education/occupation. Economic & psychosocial explanations are offered. 7 Tables, 1 Figure, 28 References. K. Hyatt

88T2732

Payne, Joann (Barnett House Wellington Square, Oxford OX1 2FR England), Does Unemployment Run in Families? Some Findings from the General Household Survey, Sociology, 1987, 21, 2, May, 199-214.

¶ Data from the 1980 & 1981 General Household Surveys are used to examine patterns of economic activity in families of origin of a national sample of economically active youth aged 16-19 in GB. It is shown that unemployed young people are much more likely than their working peers to have another member of their family out of work, in both the parental & the sibling generations. There is also an association between youth unemployment & economic inactivity in the family. Logistic regression shows that family employment characteristics contribute to the prediction of individual youth unemployment when other variables associated with unemployment are controlled. Reasons are considered for supposing a causal link between parental & youth unemployment. The findings have implications for how the burden of unemployment is shared in GB & for the attitudes of some groups of young people toward work. 4 Tables, 22 References. HA

88T2733

Plakans, Andrejs (Iowa State U, Ames 50011), Interaction between the Household and the Kin Group in the Eastern European Past: Positing the Problem, Journal of Family History, 1987, 12, 1-3, Jan-July, 163-175.

¶ The households of traditional eastern Europe were frequently complex, containing a variety of kin beyond the members of the head's conjugal family unit. In these households, the domain of family roles was fused with the domain of kin roles. The interaction between the household & the kin group therefore means, in these coresidential units, the interaction of different role domains. To understand this interaction, more must be known about the nature of each domain & about how roles were enacted. This appears to be the next step in microlevel structural research for Eastern Europe. 37 References. HA

88T2734

Pretorius, Ronelle (Dept Kriminologie U Pretoria, 0002 Republic South Africa), Stereotipes en die realiteit van vrouemishandeling (Stereotypes and the Reality of Wife Abuse), Suid-Afrikaanse Tydskrif vir Sosiologie/The South African Journal of Sociology, 1987, 18, 3, Aug, 102-109 (AFR).

¶ An evaluation of several of the major theories of wife abuse & of the popular stereotypes they reflect. Psychoanalysis, which attributes the wife's continuing to suffer to masochism & disregards the SE costs of leaving, promotes an attitude of blaming the victim, as does frustration-aggression theory with its assumption that husbands are reacting to provocation from wives. Mental illness can explain a minority of cases, but daughters became far more likely to receive the names of parents or grandparents. It is not immediately evident what this population had in common with others, such as blacks, where repeated use of family names increased in this period, the question merits further attention by family historians concerned with a counterpart to the general tendency of history. Table. W. H. Stoddard

88T2714

Maher, Thomas F. (U Louisville, KY 40292), The Loneliness of Parenthood, U The Social Service Review, 1987, 61, 1, Mar, 91-101

¶ Drawing on various theoretical works by Jurgen Habermas, it is argued that transformations of the social order negate a meaningful community & public life & ultimately distort the internal relationships of family members. The historical separation of production from community & family life causes a privatization of the public domain & gives the family a social form of privacy. Consequently, parents bear an increased economic & psychological burden, & the quality of their emotional bonds with their children is damaged. Modified HA

88T2719

Marshall, Iris Ann (Kent State U OH 44242), A Sociological Inquiry Regarding the Effects of Having A Disabled Child in the Family,  Dissertation Abstracts International - U The Humanities and Social Sciences*, 1987, 47, 12(1), June, 4521-A

Available from U MI, Ann Arbor MI, Order No. DA8705811.

88T2720

Millardo, Robert M. (Child Development & Family Relationships U Maine, Orono 04469), Changes in Social Networks of Women and Men following Divorce, Journal of Family Issues, 1987, 8, 1, Mar, 78-96

¶ A theoretical critique & literature review is presented concerning the character & consequences of changes in the social networks of spouses following separation & divorce. For men, cultural traditions that prescribe the duties & obligations of husbands are thought to encourage the development of personal friendships while simultaneously encouraging independence, thus insulating men from the possible benefits of social support following divorce. For women, the duties & obligations of wives as they are traditionally defined encourage women to accept responsibility for "kinkeeping" during & after marriage while simultaneously discouraging bonds with friends. These circumstances are thought to isolate women from the unique benefits of personal friendship & ensure networks that are dominated by kin, which typically are high in exchanges of both social support & interference. Important distinctions are drawn between the character of relationships with kin & friends, as well as between the concepts of social support & social interference. 58 References. HA

88T2721

Miller, Richard (U Southern California, Los Angeles 90007), Trends in Marital Happiness in Provo, Utah: 1955 to 1983, U Sociology and Social Research, 1987, 71, 4, July, 294-297

¶ Results of a survey on perceptions of marital happiness conducted in 1955 (Canning, R. R. Changing Patterns and Problems of Family Life in Provo, Utah, 1905-1955, unpublished doctoral dissertation, U of Utah, Salt Lake City) with families living in Provo, Utah, are compared to findings of a 1983 replication of that study, in which questionnaire data were collected from 255 Provo families. Findings indicate an overall decline in marital happiness. 2 Tables, 7 References. Modified HA

88T2722

Mir-Hosseini, Ziba (Dept Social Anthropology U Cambridge, CB3 9AL England), Impact of Wage Labour on Household Fission in Rural Iran, U Journal of Comparative Family Studies, 1987, 18, 3, autumn, 445-461

¶ The nature & direction of changes in family formation & structure among households in 4 Ru villages of Kalardasht District, Iran, are investigated as a function of pre-existing differences in SE position, with focus on the effects of available work opportunities on precipitating household fission. Data gathered during fieldwork in 1977/78 reveal that (1) the degree of conformity to commonly held ideals regarding family structure varies in response to economic requirements & constraints, (2) the consequences of a cash economy vary among SE groups, & (3) different forms of the domestic economy (the landless, herders, & landed households) vary in their adaptation to economic change. 7 Tables, 11 References. Modified HA

88T2723

Mirowsky, John & Ross, Catherine E. (Dept Medical Information Science & Sociology U Illinois, Urbana 61801), Belief in Innate Sex Roles: Sex Stratification versus Interpersonal Influence in Marriage, U Journal of Marriage and the Family, 1987, 49, 3, Aug, 527-540.

¶ Harriet Holter (Sex Roles and Social Structure, Oslo: Universitetsforlaget, 1971) interprets belief in innate sex roles as an ideological prop for an ascriptive sexual stratification favorable to men, which implies that men should be likelier than women to hold such beliefs. Recognition of the emotional & instrumental interdependence of married couples suggests that they may exhibit less disagreement than this theory would suggest. Analysis of telephone interview data from 680 US married couples indicates that husbands believe in innate sex roles significantly more than their wives do, but that each partner's beliefs also influence the other's controlling for age, education, & religion. This mutual influence reduces disagreement between husbands & wives on innate sex roles by 30.8% as compared to similar nonmarried pairs. 5 Tables, 1 Figure, 37 References. Modified HA

88T2724

Moen, Phyllis & Dempster-McClain, Donna I. (Dept Human Development & Family Studies Cornell U, Ithaca NY 14853), Employed Parents: Role Strain, Work Time, and Preferences for Working Less, U Journal of Marriage and the Family, 1987, 49, 3, Aug, 579-590

¶ Interview data from the 1977 Quality of Employment Survey are used to examine the work-time preferences of 224 dual-earner US couples with children aged 12 & under. Approached from the perspective of role strain, it is hypothesized that 6 factors are related to an employed parent's stated preference for fewer work hours: gender, family obligations, current work hours, perceived work-family interference, occupational status, & job flexibility. Multivariate (logit) analysis techniques reveal that gender is significantly related to work-hour preferences for both self & spouse, with the wish of wives to work fewer hours, endorsed also by husbands who want their wives to work fewer hours. As expected, perceived work-family interference is related to a desire for a reduced work schedule for both self & spouse. 2 Tables, 5 Figures, 55 References. Modified HA de Moraes, Maria Lygia Quartim (Dept Sociologia U Estadual São Paulo, 14800 Araraquara Brazil), Família e feminismo: o encontro homem/mulher como perspectiva (Family and feminism: The encounter between Man and Woman as a Perspective), Perspectivas, 1985, 8, 143-152 (POR)

88T2725

¶ A first-person narrative of the Brazilian feminist movement that began with expatriate intellectual discussions in Paris, France, in 1973/74. For some women at that time, feminist views were closely linked to socialist political views unacceptable to the rightist military dictators. The issue of reproductive freedom & women's participation in labor outside the home are becoming important in Brazil as in other industrialized nations providing the possibility for women to become financially independent & men & to separate sexuality from reproduction. Special attention is given to maternity & paternity as affective categories. 10 References. M Meeks

88T2726

Morioka, Kiyomi (Faculty Literature & Arts Seijo U, Tokyo Japan), A Japanese Perspective on the Life Course: Emerging and Diminishing Patterns, U Journal of Family History, 1987, 12, 1-3, Jan-July, 243-260

¶ The period after WWII witnessed in Japan the emergence of new family characteristics, including a life-course pattern that includes substantial periods of extrafamilial existence. Affecting at this time only a minority of contemporary Japanese, the new pattern is particularly noticeable among young adults & among the old, especially old women. It appears to be related to the widespread acceptance of the conjugal family system among the younger generations & the development of welfare policies aimed toward the old. Available sources permit an examination of the new pattern through contrasts with the pre-WWII period (where the ie system dominated) & through the study of familial settings of relevant cohorts in the past two decades. 11 Figures, 17 References. HA

88T2727

Možný, Ivo, Rodina vysokoškolských vzdělaných manželů (The Family mate selection criteria used by random samples of 936 Indian immigrants in the USA & 943 of their counterparts in India. Data were collected via content analyses of matrimonial advertisements published 1974-1980 in India Abroad (an English weekly newspaper published in New York City), & in 4 major daily English newspapers published in India. The major findings were that occupation was not an important criterion in mate selection in either of the samples, & that personal income, religion, & caste were more significant in mate selection in India than in the US. Gender differences in mate selection were maintained regardless of locale. 5 Tables, 15 References. Modified HA

88T2744

Sigel, Irvin E. & Parke, Ross D. (Educational Testing Service, Mail Stop 07-R Princeton NJ 08541-0001), Structural Analysis of Parent-Child Research Models, Journal of Applied Developmental Psychology, 1987, 8, 2, Apr-June, 123-137

† A study of structural models describing interactive patterns & directions of influence among family members. Three issues are addressed: (1) models currently employed in parent-child research, (2) concepts used in studying parent-child interactions, & (3) steps that might lead to the creation of subsets of knowledge. It is suggested that structural analysis of conceptual models of the family can provide a heuristic procedure that helps identify the components of family interaction. Also, though there still conceptual & statistical issues to be resolved, such analysis will permit research with families to move in the direction of greater complexity. 1 Table, 6 Figures, 29 References. Modified HA

88T2745

Somlai, Peter, A családi stabilitás kapcsolati szemlélete (Relationship Concepts and Family Stability), Szociológia, 1982, 4, 503-520. (HUN)

† Two different theoretical approaches to the concept of family stability are discussed: consensus theories, which focus on how far family members succeed in reconciling their roles, tasks, & behavioral norms, & conflict theories, which emphasize the interchangeability of roles & points of open communication. Both are rejected, based on observation & other empirical evidence. It is argued that enduring agreements on roles frequently lead to rigid structures & overorganized family life, & that open communication is only relevant in the case of explicit rules, whereas implied contexts of communication are more important. The level of understanding among family members, which has become the most important criterion of stability in modern society, depends on relationship contexts, & can be understood by examining the deep structures of these contexts. Four kinds of deep structures are identified: bilateral motivation, interpersonal relations of competency, coalitions, & mediator roles. 39 References. Modified HA

88T2746

Somorjai, Ildiko & Tausz, Katalin, A Béres család (1930-1980) (The Béres Family (1930-1980)), Szociológia, 1982, 1, 51-68. (HUN)

* Abstract not currently available

88T2747

Staples, Robert (Dept Social & Behavioral Sciences U California, San Francisco 94143), Social Structure and Black Family Life: An Analysis of Current Trends, Journal of Black Studies, 1987, 17, 3, Mar, 267-286

† Elements in the social structure that impact on black family lifestyles are discussed in the context of theories regarding the black family, its history, the effect of education, employment, & income, changing patterns of black family life, & the decline of the nuclear unit within black families. It is concluded that certain sociocultural forces have operated to force black Ms out of the LF & the family. The result of an institutional decimation of black Ms has been the disintegration of the black family. 18 References. Modified AA

88T2748

Starkie, Kinty (Clemson U, SC 29631), Framework for Comparing Approaches to Family Therapy, Journal of Social Casework, 1986, 67, 10, Dec, 613-621.

† A framework for examining approaches to family therapy is presented that is organized solely around the principal methods & goals of intervention, rather than particular "schools" of therapy. A therapy problem & nineteen different solutions are provided as a way of illustrating the framework. 3 Tables. AA

88T2749

Teachman, Jay D., Polonko, Karen A. & Leigh, Geoffrey K. (Dept Sociology Old Dominion U, Norfolk VA 23508), Marital Timing: Race and Sex Comparisons, Journal of Social Forces, 1987, 66, 1, Sept, 239-268

† An exploration of the determinants of marital timing for Ms & Fs, separately by race, using a sequential model. Results indicate that background factors are relatively unimportant in determining directly when marriage will occur, while current circumstances & events are stronger determining factors. In addition, the factors important in determining marital timing vary systematically according to sex & race. The models for blacks are distinct in that few measured predictors of marital timing show consistently significant effects, contrary to the case for whites. This suggests a much different marriage market for each of the races. 6 Tables, 2 Figures, 34 References. Modified HA

88T2750

Tilly, Charles (Center Studies Social Change New School Social Research, New York NY 10011), Family History, Social History, and Social Change, Journal of Family History, 1987, 12, 1-3, Jan-July, 319-330

† The renewal of social history in the 1960s & thereafter challenged the standard historical emphasis on explanation by motive, validation by motive-revealing texts, & explication by narrative. Social historians divided, however, in their relative emphasis on reconstitution of lives as people lived them, & on establishment of connections between ordinary people's behavior & large social processes, such as industrialization. The standard method of social history: collective biography aids the study of connections more than it aids reconstitution, although its uncritical use often suggests false connections, & many borrowings from the social sciences lead to erroneous analogies. Family history illustrates these points as an exemplar for the study of large-scale social change, as a direct contribution to that study, & as a challenge to its improvement. Among the challenges faced by family history & by social history as a whole are the (1) shift of analyses from calendar time sequences, (2) identification of coherent social units, & (3) specification of regularities in the behavior of those units. Several examples of each point are given. 25 References. HA

88T2751

Tokareva, Elena Konstantinovna, Uzy braka i uzy svobody (Marriage Ties and Bonds of Freedom), Sotsiologicheskie Issledovaniya, 1987, 14, 2, Mar-Apr, 83-91. (RUS)

† Most USSR studies on marriage focus on the dynamics of couples who are engaged, married, or in the process of divorce. Here, bachelors are examined based on analysis of letters contributed by bachelors (N not given) reluctant to give up their freedom & by the single women unable to solicit proposals from them. Results reveal that many confirmed bachelors fall in love with an image of the perfect woman during early adolescence, since no woman they will ever meet will be perfect, they cling to this ideal rather than face a relationship with a real woman. Rationalization strategies of the men are explored. G. Prostavov

88T2752

Trost, Jan (Dept Sociology Uppsala U, 751 05 Sweden), Custody: An Attempt toward a Conceptual Clarification, Journal of Comparative Family Studies, 1987, 18, 3, autumn, 417-426

† A comparison of recent laws concerning child custody, with focus on those of Norway, Sweden, & the US. Differences between legal & physical custody are examined along with the different varieties of sole vs joint custody. Confusion about the joint custody concept has arisen due to the fact that in the US, the debate usually concerns divorcing couples, while in Sweden, it is a concern of those who are cohabitating or separated after cohabitating without having been married. 2 Tables, 12 References. Modified HA

88T2753

Truesdell, Donna L., McNeil, John S. & Deschner, Jeanne P. (c/o McNeil-Graduate School Social Work U Texas, Arlington 76019), Incidence of Wife Abuse in Incestuous Families, Journal of Social Work, 1986, 31, 2, Mar-Apr, 138-140.

† The incidence of spousal violence in incestuous families (N = 30) & a randomly selected national sample of families (N = 2,143) were compared via analysis of interview & questionnaire data, respectively. Sex responses are reported for each of 4 major categories: healthy response, psychological abuse, physical abuse, & life-threatening violence. Results indicate that professionals should seriously consider the mother's own victimization in the family as a possible cause of her failure to protect her child from incest abuse. 1 Figure. F. Rasmussen its application to all cases is tautological. Subcultural theory claims that abuse is typical of the Lcs as a result of their adherence to ideals of machismo. While these models have some merit, the model of patriarchal domination is more acceptable, with its connection of wife abuse to M dominance & patriarchal ideology. 16 References. Modified HA

88T2745

Rauf, Abdul (Dept Sociology & Anthropology Algoma University Coll, Sault Saint Marie Ontario P6A 2G4), Rural Women and the Family: A Study of a Punjabi Village in Pakistan. Journal of Comparative Family Studies 1987, 18, 3, autumn, 403-415.

¶ Some important aspects of the lives of Ru women in a Punjabi village in Pakistan are investigated using data from personal observations, interviews with a random sample of 81 heads of household (primarily Ms), & related studies. Focus is on patterns of F's property inheritance, their position in the authority structure & role in farm operations, family eating patterns, health & leisure activities, & the purdah system. Results reveal how gaps between general attitudes & practices with respect to F's status, along with structural constraints, interact to perpetuate F dependency on Ms & the larger society. 6 Tables, 16 References. Modified HA

88T2746

Rihtman-Augustin, Dunja (Instit filologiju i folkloristiku Zagreb Yugoslavia), Modeli obitelji u etnologiji i sociologiji (The Model of Family in Ethnology and Sociology). Revija za Sociologiju 1984, 14, 3-4, July-Dec., 331-338. (S, R)

¶ Sociology & ethnology often use similar concepts & study similar phenomena, but are unaware of each other's results & lack objective mutual criticism. One example is the concept of 'folk' whose romantic definition underwent serious criticism & revision in modern German & Croatian ethnology, but was totally unacknowledged by sociologists. A similar situation exists with the romantic model of the extended Croatian peasant household (zadruga). Traditional ethnology dealt only with the idealized, normative aspect of such households (eg, harmony, collective property, M patriarchal dominance, & family autarchy), ignoring their practical, real aspects (eg, conflicts, individual property, women's subculture, communications with the larger social environment, etc). Sociology has uncritically adopted the idealized, romantic model of the extended family, presenting tradition as a fixed state. Modern research on the Ur family should examine its Ru roots & bourgeois ideals. 12 References. Modified HA

88T2747

Rosenzweig, Mark R. (U Minnesota, Minneapolis 55455), Program Interventions, Intrahousehold Distribution and the Welfare of Individuals: Modeling Household Behavior, World Development, 1986, 14, 2, Feb., 233-243.

¶ A review of the implications for intrahousehold distribution of resources derived from economic models of household behavior that treat the household as maximizing a single welfare function. Particular attention is given to the within family allocation of time & food & to the effects of these resources on the schooling, earnings, & health status of individuals as they are affected by direct food-intervention & F-employment schemes & price-altering policies. Empirical applications are provided from household survey data sets from India, Indonesia, & the Philippines ($N = 979, 2,847, & 1,829$, respectively) to illustrate the power & limitations of such models for illuminating household interventions & for placing restrictions on data. 3 Tables, 28 References. HA

88T2748

Scanlon, John & Arnett, Cynthia (U North Carolina, Greensboro 27412), Enlarging the Understanding of Marital Commitment via Religious Devoutness, Gender Role Preferences, and Locus of Marital Control, Journal of Family Issues, 1987, 8, 1, Mar., 136-156.

¶ An examination of whether, given the continuing changes in F/M relationships over the past 20 years, factors stemming from those gender-based changes might gradually become part of a syndrome affecting the nature of the marital bond. Theoretical arguments supporting this gradual evolutionary emergence are presented. An exploratory study based on questionnaire & scale data collected from 225 US couples supports the concept of an emerging syndrome of factors, including gender role preferences, religious devoutness, & locus of control in marriage. Suggestions for future research are proposed. 2 Tables, 1 Figure, 30 References. Modified HA

88T2739

Segalen, Martine (Centre national recherche scientifique, 75700 Paris France), Life-Course Patterns and Peasant Culture in France: A Critical Assessment, Journal of Family History, 1987, 12, 1-3, Jan-July, 213-224.

¶ French scholars of the family & peasant culture have made little use of the life-course framework of analysis. It is argued that the concept of life course is not neutral & implies the possibility of free choice for the individual. Postulating such choices conflicts with the social organization of peasant society where individuals' lives are embedded in the family & the group. Examining the various stages of the life cycle, examples are given of the collective aspects of social life, & its various economic & cultural facets. Factors leading to the break-up of communal life & the rise of individualism, which made use of the life-course concept relevant to analysis, are investigated. 18 References. HA

88T2740

Shamgar-Handelman, Lea & Belkin, Ruth (Dept Sociology School Education Hebrew U Jerusalem, Mount Scopus 91905 Israel), The Place of Children in Household Division of Labor, Israel Social Science Research 1986, 4, 1, 65-83.

¶ An extension of classical studies of household DoFL to consider the contribution of children's unpaid work based on survey data from 165 low-SES families in Jerusalem, Israel. The families in which children performed work stressed the real benefits derived from this work. In these families, the children were assigned specific slots within the DoFL. Determinants of the nature & degree of children's participation included sex, age, birth order, & size of household. Labor was not only expected in most families, but was appreciated & rewarded. The same type of independence recognized for husbands & wives exists for parents & children in this population. The need to include the labor of children in analytic models of the household is argued. 6 Tables, 33 References. Modified HA

88T2741

Shanks, Amanda (Instit Irish Studies Queen's U, Belfast BT7 1NN Northern Ireland), The Stem Family Reconsidered: The Case of the Minor Gentry of Northern Ireland, Journal of Comparative Family Studies 1987, 18, 3, autumn, 339-361.

¶ The stem family is a three-generational family structure designed to prevent the splitting of family property. Some of the conflicting social historical & anthropological literature on stem families is reviewed, with focus on the Northern Irish gentry. Data from participant observation, semistructured interviews, detailed genealogies, & marriage/property records are used to examine the structure of 14 gentry families in North Antrim. These families are compared to families in other parts of the province & to the English gentry. Analyses of marriage, inheritance, & residence patterns reveal that the stem family structure is prevalent. Since the culture of the Northern Irish gentry is essentially English, the notion that the stem family never existed in GB (see Laslett, Peter, "Size and Structure of the Household in England over Three Centuries," Population Studies 1969, 23, 199-223) is likely erroneous. 45 References. Modified HA

88T2742

Shukla, Archana (Dept Psychology U Lucknow, 226007 Uttar Pradesh India), Decision Making in Single- and Dual-Career Families in India, Journal of Marriage and the Family, 1987, 49, 3, Aug., 621-629.

¶ Based on questionnaire data gathered from 47 single-career & 54 dual-career families in India, the relative authority of husbands & wives in various areas of decision making was explored. The findings reveal that (1) husbands in single-career families had greater power than those in dual-career families, (2) wives in dual-career families had greater power than those in single-career families, (3) the relative power of spouses was not significantly different in the two types of families; & (4) dual-career families were more egalitarian than single-career families. The results are explained in light of theoretical formulations relating to resources & norms. 1 Table, 3 Figures, 18 References. HA

88T2743

Siddiqi, Masab U. & Reeves, Earl Y. (Kutztown U, PA 19530), Comparative Study of Mate Selection Criteria among Indians in India and the United States, International Journal of Comparative Sociology, 1986, 27, 3-4, Sept-Dec., 226-233.

¶ An investigation of the effects of the modernization process on the peer group entry task, & (2) 79 well-adjusted/clinically referred aggressive second through fourth graders were observed as they participated in peer group entry & another social domain—responding to provocation by a peer. Results support the hypotheses & suggest a reciprocal influence model of the relation between social formation processing patterns & children's social behavior that is domain-specific. In Merging Social Cognition and Social Behaviors, John M. Gottman (U of Washington, Seattle) hails the methodological & theoretical contributions of Dodge et al but stresses the need for a more comprehensive developmental view of children's social relations. 8 Tables, 3 Figures, 3 Appendixes, 91 References. Modified HA

8812763

Kolodner, Anna (Boston U, MA 02215), The Socialization of Children of Concentration Camp Survivors, * Dissertation Abstracts International: A The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 47, 12(1), June, 4521-A.

Available from UMI, Ann Arbor MI. Order No. DA8707066.

88T2764

Kruijt, C. S., Een tweede proef op de som van Van Houwelingen, Tazelaar en Verbeek (A Second Verification of Van Houwelingen, Tazelaar and Verbeek), ♦ Sociologische Gids, 1987, 34, 1, Jan, 62-69 (DUT)

¶ A discussion of the validity of the conclusions reached by J. van Houwelingen, F. Tazelaar, & A. Verbeek as reported in "Werkloosheid, gezondheid en sterfte in naoorlogs Nederland" (Unemployment, Health, and Mortality in Post-War Netherlands [see SA 32 3/8400139]). A reformulation of their main conclusion is suggested, based on a recalculation of the statistics used. Their recommendation for microsociological research regarding support for specific groups is reinforced. 2 Tables. M. Barker

77 birth control (abortion, contraception, fertility, & childbearing)

8812765

Grady, William R., Hirsch, Marilyn B., Keen, Nelma & Vaughan, Barbara (Office Population Research Princeton U, NJ 08544), Contraceptive Failure and Continuation among Married Women in the United States, 1970-75, Studies in Family Planning, 1983, 14, 1, Jan, 9-19

* Data from the 1973-1975 cycles of the National Survey of Family Growth were used to investigate differentials in contraceptive use-failure & continuation among married women aged 15-44. Failure rates differed by contraceptive intention, & within categories of intention, these rates differed by method, age, race, & parity. Users of modern methods had higher continuation rates than users of traditional methods. These results indicate that a woman's motivation is an important factor in long-term successful use of available contraceptive methods & that more effective & easier to use methods need to be developed. 8 Tables, 1 Appendix. HA

8812766

Huinink, Johannes (Max-Planck-Institut Bildungsforschung, Lentzeallee 94 D-1000 Berlin 33 Federal Republic Germany), Soziale Herkunft, Bildung und das Alter bei der Geburt des ersten Kindes (Social Origins, Education and Age at the Birth of the First Child), Zeitschrift für Soziologie, 1987, 16, 5, Oct, 367-384 (GER)

* An investigation of the impact of differing social origins, level of education, vocational training, & other factors on the age at which people first become parents, based on data from a survey of 2,171 West German Ms & Fs in 3 age cohorts (1929-1931, 1939-1941, & 1949-1951). By controlling for education & professional training, the relevance of other variables affecting the decision can be determined. There are considerable differences among the age cohorts. Overall, level of education is the most important factor. The decline in the birthrate since the 1960s corresponds to a dramatic increase in F participation in professional training programs & a sharp increase of childlessness among Fs with higher education. 4 Tables, 3 Figures, 48 References. Modified HA

8812767

Jurich, Joan Anne (Purdue U, West Lafayette IN 47907), The Relationship of Social Support and Social Networks to Anxiety During Pregnancy, * Dissertation Abstracts International: A The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 1, July, 224-A

Available from UMI, Ann Arbor MI. Order No. DA8709818.

8812768

Kowalski, Gregory S., Faupel, Charles E. & Starr, Paul D. (Dept Sociology Auburn U, AL 36849), Urbanism and Suicide: A Study of American Counties, ♦ U Social Forces, 1987, 66, 1, Sept, 85-101

* An examination of the effects of urbanism & a number of other variables on suicide, using US government data from the 1970s on 3,108 counties. Grouping the counties into three categories (most Ur, middle, & Ru) reveals a surprising difference in the relative capacity of sociological variables to explain the incidence of suicide within each context. Most sociological explanations for suicide apply primarily to Ur environments & not Ru ones. As Claude S. Fischer has shown (To Dwell among Friends: Personal Networks in Town and City, Chicago: U of Chicago Press, 1982), types of relations that prevail in Ur communities may be better conduits for social structural influences than those in Ru environments. Structural explanations for suicide, therefore, may be best suited for Ur environments & may be largely limited to them. 2 Tables, 72 References. Modified HA

88T2769

Marcel-Gratton, Nicole (Groupe recherche démographique québécoise U Montréal, Québec H3C 3J7), Le Recours précoce à la ligature des trompes au Québec: des suites indésirables? (Early Recourse to Tubal Ligation in Quebec: Are There Undesirable Consequences?), ♦ Sociologie et Sociétés, 1987, 19, 1, Apr, 83-95 (FRE)

¶ The attitude of Fs who have undergone sterilization by tubal ligation are investigated, based on data from telephone interviews conducted in 1985 with a representative sample of 497 Montreal (Quebec) Fs aged 25-44 who had had a tubal ligation. Demographic characteristics, reasons for having had the operation, & subsequent regrets are examined. Age is shown to be an important factor. 20% of Fs who had been sterilized before age 30 later wished they could have had another child. 5 Tables, 2 Figures, 1 Appendix. Modified HA

88T2770

Okolski, Marek (U Warsaw, PL-00-325 Poland), Abortion and Contraception in Poland, Studies in Family Planning, 1983, 14, 11, Nov, 263-274.

¶ The abortion law in Poland is among the most liberal in the world. Poland is also a predominantly Roman Catholic country with a relatively high % of well-educated people. In these circumstances, a peculiar contraceptive pattern has developed: most couples, irrespective of their education & other SE characteristics, rely on inefficient methods of contraception, & the incidence of induced abortion is very high. The prevailing contraceptive pattern is examined, disaggregated by method & educational level, using official statistics & data from national surveys conducted between 1960 & 1980. It is concluded that the over-reliance on abortion is due to lack of effective contraception rather than ignorance or negligence. 9 Tables. Modified HA

88T2771

Secret, Philip E. (Coll Public Affairs & Community Service U Nebraska, Omaha 68182), The Impact of Region on Racial Differences in Attitudes toward Legal Abortion, U Journal of Black Studies, 1987, 17, 3, Mar, 347-369.

¶ Recent research has shown that, on a nationwide basis, blacks are less likely to approve of abortion legalization than are whites. This line of research is expanded into an examination of racial differences in attitudes toward abortion legalization by region (North/South). Nationwide data derived from NORC General Social Surveys for 1976-1980 are used to compare black & white attitudes toward legalized abortion by region; also, the strength of the r between abortion attitudes & several variables is measured for both groups. Multiple regression analysis is employed to

88T2754

Umberson, Debra (Survey Research Center Instit Social Research U. Michigan, Ann Arbor 48106-1248). Family Status and Health Behaviors: Social Control as a Dimension of Social Integration. U Journal of Health and Social Behavior 1987, 28, 3, Sept., 306-319.

* The mechanisms by which social support or integration may be linked to lower mortality rates among married individuals & parents is explored. One mechanism may involve health behaviors: the family relationships of marriage & parenting may provide external regulation & facilitate self regulation of behaviors that can affect health. Scale data from a national sample of US adults gathered in 1974/75 (N = 2,246) are used to examine the relationships of marital & parenting status to a variety of health behaviors. Results indicate that marriage & presence of children in the home have a deterrent effect on negative health behaviors. It is suggested, within the theoretical framework of social integration, that family roles promote social control of health behaviors, which affect subsequent mortality. 3 Tables, 1 Figure, 2 Appendixes, 57 References. Modified HA.

88T2755

Vuchinich, Samuel (Oregon Social Learning Center, 207 East Fifth Ave Ste 707 Eugene 97401). Starting and Stopping Spontaneous Family Conflicts. U Journal of Marriage and the Family 1987, 49, 3, Aug., 591-601.

* How nondistressed families manage spontaneous verbal conflicts that occur during family dinners in the home is examined based on videotapes of 64 family dinners recorded in the homes of 52 different families in 5 states (Pa., South Carolina, Ind., Ill. & Ga.). Focus is on who starts the conflicts, how long they are continued, & how long before they are brought to a close. The involvement of basic family roles in conflict management is described. Analysis reveals that overall conflict initiation was evenly distributed across family roles, the extension of conflict was constrained by a constant probability of a next conflict move occurring, most of the conflicts ended with no resolution, & mothers were most active in closing off conflicts. 4 Tables, 41 References. HA.

88T2756

Wall, Natalie Chun (U. California, Santa Barbara 93106). The Effect of the Passage of Domestic Violence Legislation on 1981 Divorce Rates in California Counties. * Dissertation Abstracts International, A The Humanities and Social Sciences 1987, 47, 11, May, 4201-A.

Available from U MI, Ann Arbor MI. Order No. DA8703675.

88T2757

Warren, Clay & Neer, Michael (Dept Communication University Coll Cape Breton, Sydney Nova Scotia B2P 6L2). Family Sex Communication Orientation. U Journal of Applied Communication Research 1986, 14, 2, Fall, 86-107.

* The US leads all industrialized countries in unintended teenage pregnancies, births, & abortions. Despite the seriousness of this problem, family communication researchers have excluded it from the discipline's research agenda. Results are presented of a study involving 93 M & 94 F undergraduate students aged 18-24 conducted to consolidate & examine a measure of children's attitudes toward family sex communication on the dimensions of comfort, information, & value: the Family Sex Communication Quotient scale (FSCQ). Tentative findings suggest: (1) family sex communication in general is infrequent & ineffective, (2) frequent & effective family sex communication may serve as a contextual model for children's communication patterns, (3) a strong family sex communication orientation, particularly as measured by the FSCQ, which tested out to be a reliable measure & a significant & consistent mediator, seems to facilitate children's open discussion with dating partners & parents, & to develop responsible preparenting attitudes, & (4) discussing sex in the family does not promote an attitude of sexual license. 4 Tables, 66 References. Modified HA.

88T2758

Watts, Rob (Phillip Instit Technology, Bundoora Victoria 3083 Australia). Family Allowances in Canada and Australia 1940-1945: A Comparative Critical Case Study. U Journal of Social Policy 1987, 16, 1, Jan., 19-48.

* A critical-historical comparative case study based on archival research of the introduction of child endowment in Australia (1941) & of family allowances in Canada (1944), reveals the interplay between structural constraints & human agency in the history of welfare states. Detailed analysis suggests that institutionalized arrangements in Australia after 1905 to resolve capital-labor conflict via arbitral & wage fixation mechanisms put the question of the adequacy of wages in meeting family needs, & with it proposals for child endowment onto the public agenda as early as 1920. In Canada, the absence of such mechanisms, & alternative welfare arrangements to deal with family welfare, combined to keep such proposals off the public agenda. After 1939, the development of war economies in Australia & Canada created common contradictions for governments trying to maintain both industrial peace & anti-inflation policies, which the introduction of family allowances in both countries were attempts to resolve. Consideration is also given to a range of political problems & contexts in both countries, which this particular policy measure attempted to address. 104 References. HA.

88T2759

Weingarten, Helen R. (School Social Work U Michigan, Ann Arbor 48109). Strategic Planning for Divorce Mediation. U Social Work 1986, 31, 3, May/June, 194-200.

* Interest in developing mediation as an alternative to adversarial litigation in divorce has become widespread. A theoretical model for mediation is proposed that focuses attention on the multiple life areas that divorce disrupts, the emotional stages of divorce, & the interpersonal dynamics of separating couples. The implications of these factors for strategically planning & conducting the mediation process are discussed. Modified HA.

88T2760

Yehma, Paul (Dept Communication Western Michigan U, Kalamazoo 49008). Marriage vs. Cohabitation: Couples' Communication Practices and Satisfaction. U Journal of Communication 1986, 36, 4, autumn, 94-107.

* A study of married couples (N = 43) & cohabitating couples (N = 49) aged 20-74, utilizing questionnaire data to assess how verbal, nonverbal & sexual communication might play a role in partner's satisfaction with the relationship. Findings indicate that verbal & sexual communication practices of intimates are influenced more by their chronological age than by whether they are married or cohabitating. Younger married couples were both more communicative & more satisfied than younger cohabitating couples or older married or cohabitating couples. 1 Table, 1 Figure, 55 References. F. Rasmussen.

88T2761

Ziner, Andrew Scott (North Texas State U, Denton 76203). On Parent-Child Relations: Toward the Construction of a Theory of Filial Exchange. * Dissertation Abstracts International, A The Humanities and Social Sciences 1987, 47, 11, May, 4206-A.

Available from J. MI, Ann Arbor MI. Order No. DA8705173.

76 socialization

88T2762

Dodge, Kenneth A., Pettit, Gregory S., McClaskey, Cynthia L. & Brown, Melissa M. (Vanderbilt U, Nashville TN 37240). Social Competence in Children. U Monographs of the Society for Research in Child Development 1986, 2(213), 1-80.

Commentary by John M. Gottman, 81-85.

* The concept of social competence is expanded to include a social exchange dimension, & a model developed that views children's social behavior as a function of their processing of environmental cues. It is hypothesized that this processing occurs in five separable, sequential steps & that skillful processing at each step increases the probability of child's behaving in a manner that will be judged socially competent by adults & peers; these judgments, in turn, will determine behavioral responses in the child. Two experiments were conducted in a small midwestern US community: (1) 43 socially competent/incompetent children in kindergarten to second grade were observed as they participated in 2000 sociology of health and medicine

45 sociology of medicine (public health)

88T2777

Allsop, Judith (Polytechnic South Bank, London SE1 0AA England), Primary Health Care—The Politics of Change, Journal of Social Policy, 1986, 15, 4, Oct, 489-496

* Two recent reports on primary health care & community & family practitioner services, from the GB Dept of Health & Social Security, that mark the beginning of a policy debate are reviewed. The Cumberlege Report on community nursing aims to increase the role & professional identity of community nurses. A neighborhood based management structure incorporating all nurses outside the hospital is proposed. Nurse managers could then anticipate, stimulate, & respond flexibly to consumer demand. The Discussion Paper on Primary Care recommends modifications in the terms & conditions of service of MDs, dentists, pharmacists, & opticians, who are under contract to the National Health Service. The reports reflect opposing professional interests, & neither addresses issues of the purpose of primary care, or strategies for improving health status & well-being, however, they do create a basis for negotiation between professional interests & the state. 16 References. Modified AA

88T2778

Altenstetter, Christa (City U New York, NY 10021), An End to a Consensus on Health Care in the Federal Republic of Germany, Journal of Health Politics, Policy and Law, 1987, 12, 3, fall, 505-536

* Over the past fifteen years, the national government in the Federal Republic of Germany has animated the political debate about rising health care expenditures. However, it has only provided health policy leadership by shifting the burden of financing health & medical care to others. Three cases are presented that illustrate the political & institutional constraints inherent in the German policy process that limit the proposal & implementation of appropriate policy solutions to rising health care costs. Cost controls have been inhibited because of the near-universal entitlement of national health insurance, the access all social groups have to advanced medical care, & policies targeted at providers rather than users of health services. The past & future importance of regional policy coalitions in shaping national health policy is also emphasized. 6 Tables, 127 References. HA

88T2779

Alubo, S. Ogoh (Dept Sociology U Jos, Plateau State Nigeria), Power and Privileges in Medical Care: An Analysis of Medical Services in Post-Colonial Nigeria, Social Science and Medicine, 1987, 24, 5, 453-462

* The influence of SS on access to Western medical services in Nigeria is assessed based on data collected via observations of treatment facilities, crowding, & management of health care centers in Benue State, interviews of staff members (no N given) at these locations, & interviews with policymakers/administrators in the Ministry of Health & Health Services Management Board (N = 100). It is concluded that in contemporary Nigeria, status, power, & privileges determine whether one gets Western medical services & what type of services received. Further, medical services for the general population have remained a secondary priority, with the care for state employees & other elites taking precedence. Nigeria's current health care system is concluded to impede "health-for-all-by-2000" proposals. 2 Tables, 49 References. Modified HA

88T2780

Annas, George J. & Glantz, Leonard H. (Schools Medicine & Public Health Boston U, MA 02118), The Right of Elderly Patients to Refuse Life-Sustaining Treatment, The Milbank Quarterly, 1986, 64(supplement 2), 95-162

* Some legislation has addressed the problem of decisions regarding life-sustaining treatment for the elderly. Most of the developing law on the subject is, however, being made by the courts, often in prospective decisions about treatment. These rulings have followed a variety of approaches aimed at protecting incompetent patients & enforcing the right of the competent to make their own decisions. These approaches are reviewed,

& several model statutes are examined in detail. 2 Appendixes, 38 References. Modified HA

88T2781

Anspach, Renee R. (Dept Sociology U Michigan, Ann Arbor 48109-1382), Prognostic Conflict in Life-and-Death Decisions: The Organization as an Ecology of Knowledge, Journal of Health and Social Behavior, 1987, 28, 3, Sept, 215-231

¶ An examination of prognostic conflict in life-&-death decisions in intensive care units for newborn infants, based on data collected during 16 months of participant observation in 2 dissimilar nurseries, & interviews with 58 staff members & 16 parents. The relationship between knowledge involved in prognosticating & reaching life-&-death decisions & the social organization of the newborn intensive care unit is explored from the perspective of the SSK. MDs & nurses, because of their differing work experiences, may develop conflicting conceptions of the future of infants whose life is in question, ie, each set of participants approaches the life-&-death decision from a partial knowledge base. It is suggested that changes in some organizational features might result in more informed & equitable decision making. 2 Tables, 25 References. Modified HA

88T2782

Barnes, Deborah M., AIDS: Statistics but Few Answers, Science, 1987, 236, 4807, 12 June, 1423-1425

¶ Recent epidemiological studies of acquired immune deficiency syndrome (AIDS) have brought forth great quantities of data, but have not yielded a comprehensive picture of its total social impact. Studies from Africa, & studies from the US on intravenous drug users, heterosexuals, hemophiliacs, & military populations reveal several indications of increasing prevalence of HIV (human immunodeficiency virus) infection. The progression from HIV infection to AIDS, the infectibility of health workers, & the total prevalence of AIDS remain uncertain. 1 Illustration. W. H. Stoddard

88T2783

Barnes, Deborah M., Brain Damage by AIDS under Active Study, Science, 1987, 235, 4796, 27 Mar, 1574-1577.

¶ The 1985 discovery that the acquired immune deficiency syndrome (AIDS) virus can enter the brain itself has stimulated extensive research on the mechanisms by which AIDS damages the central nervous system. Published research on this question is reviewed, & a variety of cell types that are subject to AIDS effects are noted. Further research may reveal similarities between the effects of AIDS on the nervous system & on the immune system. 3 Illustrations, 13 References. W. H. Stoddard

88T2784

Barnes, Deborah M., New Database for AIDS Research, Science, 1987, 235, 4789, 6 Feb, 634

¶ In response to the rapid generation of new information about the AIDS virus's gene sequences & proteins, the National Inst of Allergy & Infectious Diseases has awarded a three-year grant to Gerald Myers of Los Alamos National Laboratory (NM) to create a computerized data bank. The data bank will also contain information on related viruses. W. H. Stoddard

88T2785

Bates, Maryann S. (Dept Anthropology U Massachusetts, Amherst 01003), Ethnicity and Pain: A Biocultural Model, Social Science and Medicine, 1987, 24, 1, 47-50

¶ A biocultural model combining elements of social learning & social comparison theories & the gate-control theory (Melzack, R., & Wall, P. D., "Pain Mechanisms: A New Theory," Science, 1965, 150, 971-979) is proposed to explain cultural influences on human pain perception & response. Learned values are hypothesized to affect one's attention to & memory of painful stimuli. Laboratory studies (eg, J. A. Lipton's & J. J. Marbach's clinical work (see SA 33 4/85Q0684)) indicate that neurophysiological processes & tolerance, & psychological & behavioral responses to pain vary between ethnic groups. References that provide indirect clinical evidence are cited. 2 Figures, 22 References. Modified HA test for racial differences in abortion attitudes in both the North & South, once the combined impact of several confounding factors is taken into account. The findings indicate that, after controlling for various SE, demographic, & religious differences, in recent years, there have been no significant differences in black/white approval of abortion legalization in the North; however, differences do persist in the South, controls notwithstanding. Some possible explanations for these findings are discussed. 4 Tables, 22 References. AA

88T2772

Smith, Daniel Scott (History Dept U. Illinois, Chicago 60625). "Early" Fertility Decline in America: A Problem in Family History. U Journal of Family History, 1987, 12, 1-3, Jan-July, 73-84.

† A striking peculiarity of US demographic history is its comparatively early decline in fertility. Although some of the decrease before the Civil War may be attributed to later & less universal marriage, marital fertility also fell. Past scholarship on the subject has focused on alternative explanations & statistical approaches to cross sectional variations in the child-woman ratio. After showing the inherent limitations of this approach, particularly at the level of states, the findings of historians of political behavior & women's activities are drawn on to suggest that the understanding of the early decline in marital fertility in the US may be most profitably pursued through the study of the fertility behavior & values of the principal action groups of antebellum US: religious, ethnic, & economic. This hypothesis contends that the motivations for & possibly the techniques of family limitation were transmitted & sustained through membership & participation in these groups. 2 Tables, 46 References. HA

88T2773

Vandeleur, Louise (Dept sociologie U. Quebec, Montreal H3C 3P8). Sexes et technologies de procréation: "meres proteuses" ou la maternité déportée par la langue... (The Sexes and the Technologies of Procreation "Surrogate Mothers" or the Appropriation of Motherhood through Language). ♦ Sociologie et Sociétés, 1987, 19, 1, Apr 97-115 (FRE).

† An epistemological critique & semantic analysis of the lexical construction of the phenomenon of contractual motherhood exploring one facet of the transformation of the relationships between the sexes in the context of procreation, as observed in the developments of the technology of reproduction. Language referring to "surrogate mothers" in media reports, classified ads, & the discourse of lawyers, MDs, & psychologists is found to be dominated by masculine body metaphors, fantasies, & codes. This amazing linguistic operation, which robs the mother of responsibility for childbearing, is an example of the collusion of the three dominant powers of modern society: administration (the lawyers, courts, & agencies), the media, & science to assimilate childbearing to masculine patterns of sexuality & fathering, to the profit of the begetter-buyer. 42 References. Modified HA

78 sociology of death & dying

88T2774

Arnetz, B. B., Horte, L. G., Hedberg, A., Theorell, T., Allander, E., & Møller, H. (Harvard School Public Health, Boston MA 02115). Suicide Patterns among Physicians Related to Other Academics as Well as to the General Population: Results from a National Long-Term Prospective Study and a Retrospective Study. ♦ Acta Psychiatrica Scandinavica, 1987, 75, 2, Feb, 119-143.

† A national cohort of Swedish MDs, academics, & members of the general population from the 1960 census were followed for the period 1961-1970, & their suicide rates compared (N not given). Also the suicide rates among four major medical specialist groups (general practitioners, internists, psychiatrists, & general surgeons) were compared with rates among other medical specialists (N not given) based on 1969-1983 National Board of Health & Welfare files. Results show an elevated standardized mortality ratio for suicide among F MDs compared to other academics, as well as to the general population. M MDs exhibit an elevated suicide rate only when compared to other academics. Among the various specialists, general surgeons exhibited a significantly higher suicide rate. 1 Table, 2 Figures, 17 References. Modified HA

88T2775

Bowling, Ann (Instit Social Studies Medical Care, 14 South Hill Park London NW3 England). Mortality after Bereavement: A Review of the Literature on Survival Periods and Factors Affecting Survival. Social Science and Medicine, 1987, 24, 2, 117-124.

† Survival rates among the widowed, especially widowers, as compared to married individuals of the same age are analyzed, based on a review of pertinent literature. The data reveal higher mental disturbances, particularly depression, among the widowed, & suggest that stress alone can increase physical disorders severe enough to result in death. Modified HA

88T2776

Greeley, Andrew M. (U. Arizona, Tucson 85721). Hallucination among the Widowed. ♦ U Sociology and Social Research, 1987, 71, 4, July, 258-265.

† An attempt to replicate & explicate the finding by P. Richard Olsen et al of the high incidence of hallucinations or "contacts with the dead" reported by widowed nursing home residents ("Hallucinations of Widowhood," Journal of Medical & Geriatric Sociology, 1985, 33, 543). Sinoglinear models are fitted to data from the 1984 General Social Survey in which 129 F & 120 M widowed Rs reported having experienced some sort of contact with the dead. Though only age was statistically significant, a higher incidence of hallucinations was found among Catholics & Baptists, blacks, Fs, & those with education less than the graduate school level. It is suggested that the widowed report more contacts with the dead spouses because they are older & hold a religious response to death in which God is viewed as benign rather than judgmental. The explanatory power of such a model for incidences of reported contact with dead siblings is discussed. 8 Tables, 1 Figure, 3 References. K Hyatt Practices and Social Reality. ♦ UM Sociology and Social Research, 1987, 71, 4, July, 275-279.

* An examination of changing norms regarding circumcision of infant boys in the US via 1984 questionnaire data from a subgroup believed to be predisposed to low medical intervention: families in prepared or natural childbirth classes who gave birth to sons ($N = 133$). The social norm of circumcision was found to be very strong. Even in this group 62% still circumcised, although the issue generated considerable discussion. The stated reasons for circumcising were profoundly social (eg, resembling other Ms, especially the father) & not medical. The influence of social reality on this medical procedure & the prospects for change are discussed. 2 Tables, 17 References. Modified AA

88T2796

Brooks, Nancy A. & Matson, Ronald R. (Dept Sociology Wichita State U, KS 67208), Managing Multiple Sclerosis, Research in the Sociology of Health Care, 1987, 6, 73-106

* A contribution to the growing sociological analysis of illness as experienced by the person rather than as directed by medical professionals or institutions. Interview data from a longitudinal study of the social-psychological aspects of multiple sclerosis completed between 1974 & 1981 present the experience of managing this chronic illness. Analyses of 19 semistructured interviews conducted in 1981 are reported, showing the "insider's perspective" of managing three major areas: (1) physical & medical tasks, (2) social relationships, & (3) the person's own social-psychological responses. Managing multiple sclerosis emerges as an ongoing process of learning & adaptation, rather than as acquiring a set of static techniques. 47 References. Modified AA

88T2797

Brown, M. Craig & Halaby, Charles N. (State U New York, Albany 12203), Machine Politics in America, 1870-1945, ♦ UM The Journal of Interdisciplinary History, 1987, 17, 3, winter, 587-612

* The concept of boss-reformer conflict has dominated the study of machine politics in nineteenth-century US cities. Here, a system for codifying machine politics is developed & applied to the history of 30 cities over the years 1870-1945. Analysis of trends shows an increase in machine politics up to 1890 & then a decline, throughout this period, dominant machines became more prevalent relative to factional machines, until by the 1940s their numbers were roughly equal. The factors that could account for these changing trends are explored. 5 Tables, 2 Figures. W. H. Stoddard

88T2798

Buchanan, Allen & Brock, Dan W. (Dept Philosophy U Arizona, Tucson 85721), Deciding for Others, The Milbank Quarterly, 1986, 64(supplement 2), 17-94

* Decision making for incompetent elderly people is an increasingly serious issue for US society. A theoretical framework for addressing the problems involved is offered. The decision-making processes chosen will reflect choices among a number of ethical principals—those specifying the purpose of substituted judgment, those guiding the surrogate decision-maker, & those used in choosing the surrogate—& also depend on the way the concept of decision-making competence is construed. 1 Table, 42 References. Modified HA

88T2799

Chappell, Neena L. & Blandford, Audrey A. (Dept Sociology U Manitoba, Winnipeg R3T 2N2), Health Service Utilization by Elderly Persons, ♦ Canadian Journal of Sociology/Cahiers canadiens de sociologie, 1987, 12, 3, fall, 195-215

* Interviews conducted with 250 elderly persons in Winnipeg, Manitoba, are used to examine the correlates of health service utilization, focusing on the use of home care, MD, & hospital services. Independent variables are classified according to a schema of predisposing, enabling, & need factors proposed by R. Andersen & J. F. Newman ("Societal and Individual Determinants of Medical Care Utilization in the United States," Milbank Memorial Fund Quarterly, 1982, 51, 95-124). Multiple regression analyses indicate that in all cases, except MD services, need is the most significant correlate of utilization, more specifically, the functional ability component of the need factor emerges as significant in the use of services. The findings are discussed in terms of deviation from normal life activities & individuals' own definition of the need for care. 3 Tables, 3 Charts, 35 References. Modified HA

88T2800

Clark, W. A. V., Freeman, H. E., Kane, R. & Lewis, C. E. (U California, Los Angeles 90024), The Influence of Domestic Position on Health Status, Social Science and Medicine, 1987, 24, 6, 501-506

† Data from the Robert Wood Johnson Foundation 1982 survey (for a report on this survey, see SOPODA 8:2/86P5567) of access to health care are used to examine the influence of household composition & members' domestic position—eg, age, sex, marital status, & presence of children—on health status & use of health services. A hierarchical analysis of a subsample of Ss ($N = 4,809$ Rs aged 17-64) was utilized to sort groups of individuals & households on the basis of domestic structure. Results suggest that, after controlling for age, domestic position & household arrangements are significant explanatory variables. Ways to refine the approach are discussed. 3 Tables, 6 Figures, 13 References. Modified HA

88T2801

Cogswell, Betty E., Aluise, John J., Shahady, Edward J. & Thomas, Krista K. (Dept Family Medicine U North Carolina, Chapel Hill 27514), Family Medicine from Consumers' Perspectives, Marriage and Family Review, 1987, 10, 3-4, spring-summer, 165-189

† By reviewing existing reports & studies, the progress of the integration of consumers' priorities into family MD's styles of practice is assessed. The value of different types of research for identifying consumers' perspectives is discussed, & studies that compare MDs' & patients' perspectives are examined. Findings show that MDs are poor predictors of consumers' attitudes, & that there are significant differences between the perspectives of each. Patient satisfaction studies that have proliferated since the early 1970s generally report such high levels of satisfaction that findings become questionable. Qualitative studies (open-ended interview & participant observation) are proposed as excellent methods for ascertaining consumers' perspectives. 2 Tables, 38 References. Modified AA

88T2802

Collier, Jo Ann Herring (U Akron, OH 44325), Adjustment to Diabetes in a Hospital-Based Self-Care Training Program and Its Relationship to Regimen Adherence, * Dissertation Abstracts International, A: The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 47, 11, May, 4194-A

Available from UMI, Ann Arbor MI. Order No. DA8704728.

88T2803

Conrad, Peter (Dept Sociology Brandeis U, Waltham MA 02254), The Experience of Illness: Recent and New Directions, Research in the Sociology of Health Care, 1987, 6, 1-31

† A review & reconceptualization of the sociological literature on the experience of illness. The nascent experience of illness perspective is described, some current themes in the research are reviewed, several problematic issues are discussed, & directions for further reconceptualization are indicated. After presenting the experience of illness framework, seven recurrent themes in illness experience research are discussed: uncertainty, careers, stigma, biographical work & reconstitution of self, managing regimens, information awareness & sharing, & family relations. Several methodological issues in such research are discussed: sampling, social & economic resources, & pitfalls to avoid. In conclusion, a discussion of the usage of medical & sociological categories leads to provisional reconceptualization of chronic illness as "lived-with," "morbid," & "at risk" illness. Implications for research are discussed. 85 References. AA

88T2804

Culpepper, Larry & Becker, Lorne A. (Dept Family Medicine Brown U, Providence RI 02912), Family Medicine Research: Two Decades of Developing Its Base, Marriage and Family Review, 1987, 10, 3-4, spring-summer, 129-164

† The intellectual development of family medicine as a research & teaching discipline in the US is examined from the early 1960s to present. Efforts to develop an organizational base to support research activities are detailed, with focus on three primary goals: (1) the development of a scientific community, (2) the development of supportive research environments with academic departments & residencies, & (3) the identification of funding sources. The conceptual evolution of family medicine research is discussed, & two themes are found to predominate: the applicability of research to clinical practice in community settings, & a biopsychosocial approach that integrates biological changes with individual characteristics & community interactions. Some results from preliminary studies in these areas are presented, & a biaxial classification of other potential research is developed. 1 Figure, 110 References. K. Hyatt

88T2786

Bayer, Ronald (Hastings Center, 360 Broadway Hastings-on-Hudson NY 10706). AIDS, Power, and Reason, The Milbank Quarterly, 1986, 64(supplement 1), 168-182

¶ The acquired immune deficiency syndrome (AIDS) epidemic at once challenges the biological, social, & political fabric of US life. Individual liberty & communal welfare are always in a state of tension in public health policy. AIDS-specific fears, merged with common distrust for scientific authority, have led to appeals to coercive state power. Others counter with equally illusory promises of voluntarism & education. In fashioning new policies, a social capacity for reasoned analysis & public discourse must be preserved. 33 References. HA

88T2787

Beinecker, Annlee F. Elizabeth Burns (U Wisconsin, Madison 53706). Patients' Role Perceptions and Communication Behavior in Interaction with Doctors. * Dissertation Abstracts International, A: The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 1, July, 222-A

Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8702286.

88T2788

Bell, Susan E. (Dept Sociology & Anthropology Bowdoin Coll, Brunswick ME 04011). Changing Ideas: The Medicalization of Menopause, Social Science and Medicine, 1987, 24, 6, 535-542

¶ The intellectual roots of the medicalization of menopause in the 1930s & 1940s are examined, based on an analysis of published papers written by 32 US medical specialists. The findings reveal 3 models that were developed to explain menopause: biological, psychological, & environmental. The papers, combined with the paradigm of sex endocrinology & the availability of the drug DES in 1938, resulted in menopause being labeled a deficiency disease. Thus, a small segment of elite specialists overtly influenced societal attitudes toward women's experiences. The impact on medical authority & the issue of women's vulnerability to medicalization are discussed. Modified HA

88T2789

Bellin, Lowell Eliezer (School Public Health Columbia U, New York NY 10032). The Shrinking Autonomy of the Practicing Physician and Its Impact on Quality. ♦ UM Journal of Community Health, 1986, 11, 3, fall, 155-164

¶ Public & quasi public funding of personal health services & the resulting impact on the professional autonomy of the MD are discussed in terms of their effect on the patient-MD relationship & the implications for health care quality. Mistrust is seen as an inevitable outgrowth of third-party & government payment, & the history & significance of Medicare, Medicaid, & the Professional Standards Review Organization on MD-patient relations are analyzed. The promulgation of national health insurance will add to the regulatory activities & restrictions. Society seems ready to sacrifice autonomy of its healers to intervene financially & qualitatively on behalf of the categorically needy. F. Rasmussen

88T2790

Benoit, Cecilia (Memorial U Newfoundland, Saint John's A1C 5S7). Uneasy Partners: Midwives and Their Clients. ♦ Canadian Journal of Sociology/Cahiers canadiens de sociologie, 1987, 12, 3, fall, 275-284

¶ The current state of flux of maternity care in Canada has encouraged discussion of the legalization of midwifery. Interviews with active nurse-midwives & retired granny midwives in Newfoundland & Labrador (N not provided) are used to assess the validity of the claim that midwives have the capacity to achieve harmony of interests with their clients & to avoid the proletarianization of their profession. It is argued that the subculture to which the client belongs profoundly influences her attitudes to pregnancy & childbirth in ways that may create problems for the midwife. In addition, midwives' concerns with timetables, staffing, emergencies, & mistakes can interfere with their relationships with clients. The ideological assumptions that support recommendations for the legalization of midwifery are not borne out by these findings. 26 References. W. H. Stoddard

88T2791

Berk, Richard A. (Dept Sociology U California, Los Angeles 90024). Anticipating the Social Consequences of AIDS: A Position Paper. ♦ The American Sociologist, 1987, 18, 3, fall, 211-227

Comments, 228-238, Reply, 238-241.

¶ A discussion of the social consequences of the acquired immune deficiency syndrome (AIDS) epidemic focusing on the role available to sociologists in anticipating & evaluating the long-range social impact of the disease. Intelligent planning is seen as impossible without a reduction in the uncertainty regarding the future, & efforts should be expended to fill this void in information. In Comment I, Alice S. Rossi (U of Massachusetts, Amherst) agrees with Berk's appeal for greater involvement of the social sciences in research & policy formation regarding the AIDS epidemic, but is concerned with the specific proposals he makes for the social organization of such an endeavor. In Comment II, Nancy Stoller Shaw (U of California, Santa Cruz) also endorses a project to evaluate the social consequences of the AIDS epidemic, but questions the formation & focus of the program. In Comment III, Karolynn Siegel (Memorial Sloan-Kettering Cancer Center, New York, NY) commends Berk for the thoughtful & compelling proposal, raises several specific points about the scope of the project, & identifies additional concerns about AIDS that should be addressed. In Richard A. Berk Responds, Berk confirms the consensus among the four authors, & discusses concerns raised by the contributors. F. Rasmussen

88T2792

Black, Clifford M., Enos, Richard & Holman, John A. (School Community Service North Texas State U, Denton 76203). The Sociological Practitioner as a Change Agent in a Hospital Setting: Application of Phenomenological Theory and Social Construction of Reality Theory. Clinical Sociology Review, 1987, 5, 145-157

¶ The utility of two theories: phenomenological & social construction of reality for sociological practice is discussed, & illustrated via a case study of their application within a hospital bureaucracy. Interpersonal communication problems between hospital administrators & staff prompted the hospital board of trustees to engage a sociological practitioner to teach a required 22-session course in human relations. The structure, process, goals, & outcomes of this intervention are detailed with focus on the practitioner's role. 13 References. K. Hyatt

88T2793

Bloor, M., Samphier, M. & Prior, L. (MRC Medical Sociology Unit 6 Lilybank Gardens Glasgow G12 8QQ Scotland). Artefact Explanations of Inequalities in Health: An Assessment of the Evidence. Sociology of Health and Illness, 1987, 9, 3, Sept, 231-264

¶ A review of the evidence on artefact explanations of SC differences: specific-cause & all-cause mortality data, & of differentials by occupation, geography, & gender. Defined as seeking explanations for sociodemographic variations in morbidity & mortality by reference to parallel variations in the social processes by which those statistics are produced, artefact explanations are discussed & related to descriptions reported Douglas Black in "The Black Report" (Inequalities in Health: Report of a Research Working Group, London: DHSS, 1980). Evidence from previous research & Irish & English censuses (1981 & 1970-1972, respectively) suggest a large role for artefact explanations in the understanding of mortality rates for degenerative & occupational disease, geographical imbalances in mortality rates, & SC imbalances in mortality rates, & trends in mortality rates over time. 1 Table, 57 References. Modified HA

88T2794

Boutté, Marie L. (Dept Anthropology U California, Berkeley 94720). The Stumbling Disease: A Case Study of Stigma among Azorean-Portuguese. Social Science and Medicine, 1987, 24, 209-217

¶ Drawing on the work of Erving Goffman (Stigma: Notes on the Management of Spoiled Identity, Englewood Cliffs, NJ: Prentice-Hall, 1963) & labeling theory, the social & cultural processes of stigmatization involved with the "stumbling disease" found in Azorean-Portuguese populations are examined. The malady, referred to in medical literature as Machado-Joseph disease, is biologically inherited. Interviews were conducted with approximately 70 sufferers in northern Calif & in the Azores Islands. The cultural context of a small, face-to-face, homogeneous land setting is contrasted with that of the heterogeneous, anonymous setting of the US to illuminate various aspects of the stigma configuration. The cultural context is concluded to have important implications for stigma definitions, modes of social control, & management strategies of stigmatized. 20 References. Modified HA

88T2795

Brodgar-Nemzer, Jay, Conrad, Peter & Tenenbaum, Shelly (Conrad-Brandeis U, Waltham MA 02254). American Circumci-

The concepts of health & disease underlying each system are discussed, & various indicators proposed by which to examine the context in which they are embedded. Drawing largely on two extant typologies of health care systems (see Mark Field's "Comparative Health Systems: Differentiation & Convergence," unpublished paper; & Milton Terris's "The Functions & Structures of Health Departments in a National Health Service: Experience in Other Countries," presented at the annual meeting of the American Public Health Assoc, Los Angeles, Calif, 1978), each country's system is categorized. Extensive evidence is provided to support the argument that the development of a health care system from one type to a higher type depends on the SE & sociopolitical context. It is concluded that it is nearly impossible to compare the health care systems of developing & industrialized countries. Finally it is recommended that social actors in health policy must be identified & stable alliances established between MDs, administrators, & the public if successful health care programs are to be implemented. 8 Tables, 66 References. K. Vall

88T2814

Ferreira, Monica (Instit Sociological & Demographic Research Human Science Research Council, Private Bag X41 Pretoria 0001 Republic South Africa), Medicinal Use of Indigenous Plants by Elderly Coloureds: A Sociological Study of Folk Medicine, ♦ Suid-Afrikaanse Tydskrif vir Sosiologie/The South African Journal of Sociology, 1987, 18, 4, Nov, 139-143.
An examination of the adaptive significance & potential of the medicinal use of indigenous plants among the elderly colored population in Ruens of South Africa's Cape Province. Data collected during in-depth interviews with a sample of 90 Rs aged 65+ are used to describe the extensive range of indigenous plant remedies, & their preparation, & use in the treatment of various illnesses. The matrix of cultural & symbolic significance surrounding these practices is discussed. Some reasons why these elderly persist in self-treatment through home remedies, even when modern health care services are available, are explored. Potential ways that indigenous & Western therapeutic systems can be combined to offer the most effective health care are suggested. 16 References. K. Hyatt

88T2815

Fox, Daniel M. (Health Sciences Center State U New York, Stony Brook 11794), AIDS and the American Health Polity: The History and Prospects of a Crisis of Authority, The Milbank Quarterly, 1986, 64(supplement 1), 7-33.
In 1981, a crisis of authority was transforming the US health polity. Changing priorities between infectious & chronic diseases, communal & individual responsibilities for health, & comprehensive services & cost control created a fragmented health polity, leaderless & ill-equipped to address the acquired immune deficiency syndrome (AIDS) epidemic. The US health polity may best serve the public interest when institutions within it do not accept fragmentation as the goal & the norm of health affairs. 48 References. HA

88T2816

Fujimurta, Joan H. (Dept Sociology Stanford U, California 94305), Constructing 'Do-able' Problems in Cancer Research: Articulating Alignment, Social Studies of Science, 1987, 17, 2, May, 257-293.
A framework for analyzing scientists' efforts to construct "do-able" research problems is presented. A problem is do-able when scientists can assign tasks to three levels of work organization—experiment, laboratory, & social world. Articulation is the planning & coordination needed to assign levels. The framework is used to analyze data from a study of basic cancer research. Its usefulness is illustrated by a case study of oncogenic antibody research in a biotechnology company. The role of modularity & standardized packages of tasks in facilitating do-ability are discussed. The findings suggest that attention to articulation work in the training & work processes of scientists, & to the conditions affecting alignment of levels of work organization, is necessary if do-able problems are to be constructed. 2 Figures. HA

88T2817

Gillespie, Gilbert Wayne, Jr. (Cornell U, Ithaca NY 14853), Antibiotic Animal Feed Additives and Public Policy: Farm Operators' Beliefs about the Importance of these Additives and Their Attitudes Toward Government Regulation of Agricultural Chemicals and Pharmaceuticals, ♦ Dissertation Abstracts International, A: The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 1, July, 223-A.
Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8708936.

88T2818

Godt, Paul J. (American Coll Paris, 75007 France), Confrontation: Consent, and Corporatism: State Strategies and the Medical Profession in France, Great Britain, and West Germany, ♦ Journal of Health Politics, Policy and Law, 1987, 12, 3, fall, 459-480.
The economic disorders of the last decade have compelled European welfare states to seek more stringent controls over costly social policies such as health care, thus circumscribing professional sovereignty. However, several factors—institutional structure, cultural values, political economic circumstances, & patterns of state/professional relations—constrain the policy alternatives available to governments; make fundamental reform difficult to achieve. After analyzing these factors & the reform policies adopted in France, GB, & West Germany, strategies used to meet professional resistance to change are examined. 2 Figures, 37 References. HA

88T2819

Goedert, James J. (National Cancer Instit, Bethesda MD 20895), What Is Safe Sex? Suggested Standards Linked to Testing for Human Immunodeficiency Virus, ♦ The New England Journal of Medicine, 1987, 316, 21, 21 May, 1339-1341.
The rapid spread of acquired immune deficiency syndrome (AIDS) brought a concern for safe sex. It is recommended that this concern be linked to voluntary testing of human immunodeficiency virus (HIV) antibody status. Standards for risk elimination & risk reduction are proposed for all combinations of HIV-antibody testing results between partners. 1 Table, 10 References. W. H. Stoddard

88T2820

Graham, Saxon (State U New York, Buffalo 14214), Alcohol and Breast Cancer, ♦ The New England Journal of Medicine, 1987, 316, 19, 7 May, 1211-1213.
A critical review of research on the relationship of alcohol intake and breast cancer that used case-control & cohort methods. Almost all of the acceptable studies have shown a 40%-60% increase in risk associated with moderate drinking. Implications of this finding for health recommendations for women are considered. 4 References. W. H. Stoddard

88T2821

Gunn, William Bessent, Jr. (Virginia Polytechnic Instit & State Blacksburg 24061), Psychosocial Factors Affecting Adaptation of Patients and Spouses to Myocardial Infarction, ♦ Dissertation Abstracts International, A: The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 47, May, 4199-A.
Available from UMI, Ann Arbor MI. Order No. DA8704674.

88T2822

Ityavysar, Dennis A. (Dept Sociology U Jos, Plateau State Nigeria), Background to the Development of Health Services in Nigeria, Social Science and Medicine, 1987, 24, 6, 487-499.
A discussion of (1) the nature of politics, the economy, & health precolonial Nigeria, (2) the imperial penetration by GB, & (3) the role of imperialism in SC formation in Nigeria. The impact of each issue on the history of MD training in Nigeria, & the circumstances of MD involvement in the politics of nationalism are assessed. The role of WWI & WWII in the development of Nigerian national movements is also addressed. It is concluded that the nationalists involved in Nigeria's political independence eventually became the ruling class that currently controls the state. 5 Tables, 2 Figures, 42 References. Modified HA

88T2823

Kapp, Marshall B. & Lo, Bernard (Dept Medicine in Society Sch of Medicine Wright State U, Dayton OH 45401), Legal Perceptions and Medical Decision Making, The Milbank Quarterly, 1986, 64(supplement 2), 163-202.
Medicine & law are more closely intertwined than ever before, particularly regarding issues of life-sustaining treatment for the elderly. The legal system's potential as a positive force in medical decision making has been limited by pervasive misperceptions by MDs of its processes & role. Identifying these myths & misperceptions is a first step toward a more effective partnership of medicine & law on behalf of the dying or imminently dying patient. 83 References. HA

88T2824

Kinne, Susan (U Washington, Seattle 98195), Explaining Type I Emergency Ambulance Service: The Washington Case, ♦ Dissertation Abstracts International, A: The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 47, 12(1), June, 4523-A.
Available from UMI, Ann Arbor MI. Order No. DA8706605.

88T2805

Dalton, Peter R., Sociocultural and Ecological Factors Influencing Schistosomiasis in St. Lucia, Studies in Third World Societies, 1984, 30, Dec, 37-53

¶ An examination of the impact of sociocultural & ecological factors on the transmission of schistosomiasis, water borne intestinal disease common to the Caribbean tropics, with focus on the island of St. Lucia (Windward Islands), where the disease has spread most rapidly. After describing the history of the disease on St. Lucia from the 1950s to the present, & examining its life cycle, a qualitative model of the various socioecological subsystems involved in its transmission is presented. Two alternative explanations of the disease's rapid increase during the 1950s & 1960s are suggested: (1) an increase in population movement arising from new capital inputs associated with the introduction of bananas as a cash crop, & (2) SE & ecological changes associated with new agricultural practices. Data accumulated during participation in a control scheme between 1968 & 1974 suggest that a decreased banana industry as well as the deliberate manipulation of health education & community awareness programs were both responsible for reducing disease transmission. However, with recent increases in population & food production, water schemes are accelerating & again increasing the risk of infection. Detailed microanalyses of the total socioecological situation are needed to guide public health decisions. 4 Figures. K. Hyatt

88T2806

Darity, William A. (School Health Sciences U. Massachusetts, Amherst, 01003), Socio-Economic Factors Influencing the Health Status of Black Americans, International Quarterly of Community Health and Education, 1986, 1987, 7, 2, 91-108

¶ A discussion of the differential deficit ratio (DDR) & its application to the assessment of the health status of black Americans. The development of the DDR analytical procedure is described, & changes in the incidence of selected diseases as compared by race, ethnicity, & sex demonstrate the widening gap between the black & white populations in the US. A number of examples are presented, & future implications are considered. The importance of a preventive/promotive health model is emphasized. 8 Tables, 2 Figures. 16 References. Modified HA

88T2807

Davis, Ronald M. (Office Smoking & Health Center Health Promotion & Education Centers Disease Control, 5600 Fishers Lane Park Bldg Rm 1-10 Rockville MD 20857), Current Trends in Cigarette Advertising and Marketing, U. The New England Journal of Medicine, 1987, 316, 12, 19 Mar, 725-732

¶ Current trends in US cigarette advertising & marketing are examined. According to the Federal Trade Commission, total cigarette advertising & promotional expenditures reached $2.1 billion in 1984. From 1974 through 1984, total expenditures increased approximately sevenfold, or threefold after adjustment according to the consumer price index. In 1985, cigarette advertising expenditures accounted for 22.3%, 7.1%, & 0.8% of total advertising expenditures in outdoor media, magazines, & newspapers, respectively. When all products & services were ranked according to national advertising expenditures, cigarettes were first in the outdoor media, second in magazines, & third in newspapers. The proportion of total cigarette advertising & promotional expenditures devoted to promotional activities has increased steadily, from 25.5% in 1975 to 47.6% in 1984. The proportion of expenditures for cigarettes yielding 15 mg or less of "tar" has increased substantially & has consistently exceeded the domestic market share of these cigarettes. The fastest growing markets are discounted cigarettes & brands containing 25 cigarettes per pack. Several advertising campaigns have targeted women, minorities, & blue collar workers. The study of these marketing trends should assist health officials in identifying & predicting patterns of cigarette use & in developing health promotion programs that counteract the influence of advertising by incorporating similar, effective techniques. 3 Tables, 2 Figures, 90 References. HA

88T2808

Donnelly, William J. (Stritch School Medicine Loyola U. Chicago IL 60611), Medical Language as Symptom: Doctor Talk in Teaching Hospitals, U. Perspectives in Biology and Medicine, 1986, 30, 1, autumn, 81-94

¶ Presented is an analysis based on informal observation of language used by attending MDs, MDs in training, & medical students in teaching hospitals. Many communication problems arise because of the unstated assumption that the scientific way of knowing is the only way of obtaining information relevant to the MD's task. Objectivity is the most striking characteristic of "clinical vernacular," i.e., the language used to & about patients in a formal or semiformal setting. It is argued that MDs should revise their language to reflect the fact that medicine is just a body of scientific knowledge, but an application of that knowledge to human beings. 25 References. B. Annesser Murray

88T2809

Dressler, William W. (Coll Community Health Sciences U. Alabama University 35486), Hypertension and Culture Change in the Caribbean, Studies in Third World Societies, 1984, 30, Dec, 69-93

¶ The effect of psychological & behavioral factors on arterial blood pressure in a modernizing community is described, based on a survey of middle-aged persons (see Dressler, W. W., Hypertension and Culture Change: Acculturation and Disease in the West Indies, South Salem, NY: Redgrave Publishing, 1982) conducted on St. Lucia, in the east Caribbean. St. Lucia enjoyed three decades of modest economic growth as a result of the development of the banana industry & tourism. This growth led to substantial changes in individual lifestyles, especially, emphasis on obtaining higher-status consumer goods. Where this lifestyle change exceeded available economic resources, blood pressure was elevated independently of age, sex, or obesity. Individuals with adequate economic resources had higher blood pressures if they also perceive greater life stress. Conversely, persons were protected from the deleterious effects of modernization if they had an active coping style. Implications of these results for the prevention & treatment of high blood pressure are discussed. 1 Table, 4 Figures, 30 References. AA

88T2810

Dworkin, Ronald (Law School New York U. NY 10012), Autonomy and the Demented Self, The Milbank Quarterly, 1986, 64(supplement 2), 4-16

¶ A person who becomes demented can be considered as he presently is a demented person, or in light of his entire life, of which dementia is but the final stage. These two perspectives can provide conflicting determinations of the person's interests & preferences, since what is best for a demented person at the time may not make his life better overall & may be directly contrary to preferences expressed while competent. Reflection on the concept of autonomy: what faculties it requires, what its objects are, provides a clearer understanding of the rights of the demented patient. 3 References. HA

88T2811

El-Bolkiny, Mohamed Iawfik (U. Connecticut, Storrs 06268), A Demographic Analysis of Heterogeneous Coronary Heart Disease Mortality Rates Over Space and Time, Dissertation Abstracts International, 4, The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 1, Jun, 221-A. Available from U. MI, Ann Arbor, MI, Order No. DA8709026.

88T2812

Elford, Jonathan (Dept. Clinical Epidemiology & General Practice, Royal Free Hospital School Medicine, Rowland Hill St. London N1 2PJ, England), Moral and Social Aspects of AIDS: A Medical Students' Project, Social Science and Medicine, 1987, 24, 6, 543-54

¶ The implications of a purported increase in the number of acquired immune deficiency syndrome (AIDS) cases in GB for health service workers are assessed. A group of preclinical students at the Royal Free Hospital School of Medicine, London, undertook a project in which they explored some of the sociological & epidemiological aspects of AIDS. Particular attention was paid to any stigma that may surround the disease. It is suggested that management of AIDS patients & those who are HIV antibody positive, will require both health care staff & students to carefully consider their own beliefs regarding the disease & those most at risk. 3 Tables, 29 References. Modified HA

88T2813

Ertler, Wolfgang, Schmidl, Hannes, Treytl, Johannes M., & Wimmerberger, Helmut (Austrian Federal Inst. Public Health, Vienna), Social Dimensions of Health and Health Care: An International Comparison, Research in the Sociology of Health Care, 1987, 5, 1-6

¶ A comparative analysis of health care systems in 7 countries, based on World Health Organization statistics: 3 developing—Cuba, Nicaragua & Bangladesh, 3 Western industrialized—Austria, the UK, & Italy, & socialist—the German Democratic Republic. Focus is on the influence of a country's historical, SE, & political context on its policy & practice.

88T2836

Madge, Nicola & Marmot, Michael (c/o Marmot-Dept Community Medicine University Coll London, WC1E 6BT England), Psychosocial Factors and Health, The Quarterly Journal of Social Affairs, 1987, 3, 2, Apr, 81-134

* The importance of psychosocial factors for both good & poor health is examined through a review of the literature. Particular attention is paid to the impact of SC, stressful life events, early experiences, social support, stress at work, unemployment, & personal characteristics. Despite an abundance of research, it is necessary to be cautious in drawing conclusions. It appears that premature death, especially among men, may be at least partly attributable to psychosocial stress, but it is hard to say much more. There are enormous problems involved in defining & measuring both psychosocial stress & health, & in establishing how the former might affect the latter; also, studies in the field are of variable quality. It is suggested that future investigations should address these methodological issues & should involve greater collaboration between medical & social researchers. 226 References. Modified AA

88T2837

McKnight, A. (Queen's U, Belfast BT7 1NN Northern Ireland), An Analysis of Antenatal Care in Belfast with Special Emphasis on Health Education and Consumer Opinion, * Dissertation Abstracts International C European Abstracts, 1987, 48, 2, summer, 287. Unavailable from UMI; contact the degree-granting university.

88T2838

Mulkay, Michael, Pinch, Trevor & Ashmore, Malcolm (Dept Sociology U York, Heslington YO1 5DD), Colonizing the Mind: Dilemmas in the Application of Social Science, Social Studies of Science, 1987, 17, 2, May, 231-256

* Health economists see their practice as the application of economics to the field of human health. One of the forms that the practical application of health economics takes is the attempt to persuade professionals in health care to accept & implement economists' recommendations for changes in their practice. Here, one such attempt is examined by means of a detailed textual analysis of a series of articles written for MDs by health economists. The dilemma of application faced by these authors is that if they are to persuade MDs to accept the positive benefits of economics, they must also persuade them to accept deficiencies in their current practice. This dilemma encourages the use of textual strategies such as avoiding confrontation & criticism without offense. This kind of rhetoric of application is seen to stem from the authors' skillful deployment of two distinct, though intertwined, programs for health economics—ie, the strong & the weak. Modified HA

88T2839

Nievaard, A. C. (Instit Sociale Geneeskunde U Amsterdam, NL-1012 WX Netherlands), Artsen, verplegenden en patienten in triadisch perspectief (A Triadic Perspective on Doctors, Nurses and Patients), UM Mens en Maatschappij, 1987, 62, 3, Aug, 228-245 (DUT)

* An examination of how social relationships between & within teams of MDs & nurses influence the person-orientedness of their relationships with hospital patients. Interview data from 142 MDs & nurses & 295 patients in 2 hospitals in the Randstad area of the Netherlands reveal the existence of a general triadic mechanism—problem shifting—whereby problems in cooperation & group atmosphere translate into negative attitudes toward patients, who, in turn, report more problems during their stay in the hospital. 3 Tables, 29 References. Modified HA

88T2840

O'Reilly, Patrick (Boston U, MA 02215), Role of Support Networks on Cardiovascular Risk Status, * Dissertation Abstracts International A The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 47, 12(1), June, 4521-A

Available from UMI, Ann Arbor MI. Order No. DA8707071.

88T2841

Patel, Mahesh S. (Instit Universitaire médecine sociale et préventive, 17 rue du Bugnon 1005 Lausanne Switzerland), Evaluation of Holistic Medicine, Social Science and Medicine, 1987, 24, 2, 169-175

Traditional structures of clinical & economic evaluation of health care are reviewed & a particular set of specific problems that would be encountered in applying these techniques to holistic medicine are described under the headings "reductionism" (bias from excluding certain categories of effects), "taxonomic difficulties" (problems inherent in the choice of diagnostic criteria), & "logical basis for comparison" (procedural difficulties). The implementation of evaluative techniques within holistic medicine—eg, the use of trial by placebo, control groups, & blind tests—is concluded to be the most promising method for establishing a traditionally acceptable framework for the field since: (1) taxonomic problems, some of the worst effects of reductionism, & their associated biases may be avoided, (2) the cooperation of the scientific medicine sector could be engendered, & (3) results could be described in conventionally accepted scientific terms. 1 Table, 44 References. Modified HA

88T2842

Pill, Roisin (Dept General Practice Coll Medicine U Wales, Cardiff CF3 7PN), Models and Management: The Case of 'Cystitis' in Women, Sociology of Health and Illness, 1987, 9, 3, Sept, 265-285

¶ The example of cystitis in women is used to explore how theoretical models are developed, & the relationship between these models & the actual models used in daily clinical practice, based on a review of the literature, participant observation in the Dept of General Practice of the U of Wales Coll of Medicine, & interviews with patients with urinary tract symptoms (N = 32) & a control group (N = 26). Emphasis is on the way patients & MDs construct the symptoms as a social reality, & the implications of their differing perspectives on the continuing MD-patient relationship. Problems are seen to occur because both patients & MDs become committed to the same explanatory model of underlying organic pathology & are thus unable to consider other potential causes or address the wider question of coping with the patient's illness. 3 Tables, 21 References. Modified HA

88T2843

Rahav, Michael, Goodman, Ann B., Popper, Miriam & Lin, Shang P. (c/o Goodman Nathan S. Kline Instit, Orangeburg NY 10962), Distribution of Treated Mental Illness in the Neighborhoods of Jerusalem, UM The American Journal of Psychiatry, 1986, 143, 10, Oct, 1249-1254

¶ The rates of treated mental illness among ethnically advantaged Ashkenazic Jews & ethnically disadvantaged Sephardic Jews in 4 areas of Jerusalem defined by SES are compared, using data from case records of 1,446 persons hospitalized in Israeli psychiatric facilities in 1977. It is found that the rates of illness were higher in areas of lower SES, that the Ashkenazim had higher rates of illness than the Sephardim in the areas of lower SES, & that there was a comparatively high rate of illness among the Ashkenazim in the very religious Jewish neighborhoods. Findings are interpreted using theories of social causation & social selection, including genetic transmission. 1 Table, 34 References. Modified HA

88T2844

Reade, Julia M. & Ratzan, Richard M. (16 Spruce St No 1, Watertown MA 02172), Yellow Professionalism: Advertising by Physicians in the Yellow Pages, UM The New England Journal of Medicine, 1987, 316, 21, 21 May, 1315-1319

¶ Comparison of specialty listings of MDs in the Yellow Pages of the 1983 Hartford, Conn, telephone directory (1,179 listings by 946 MDs under 61 headings) with board certifications in medical specialties (including 40 of the 61 headings) revealed that a mean of 12% of MDs in certifiable specialties listing in the Yellow Pages were not board-certified. This finding indicates that specialty advertising in the Yellow Pages is potentially misleading to medical consumers. It is recommended that member boards of the American Board of Medical Specialties should consider ways to diminish this possible misrepresentation. 1 Table, 20 References. W H Stoddard

88T2845

Riley, James C. (History Dept Indiana U, Bloomington 47405), Disease without Death: New Sources for a History of Sickness, UM The Journal of Interdisciplinary History, 1987, 17, 3, winter, 537-563

¶ Sickness—a phenomenon troubled by ambiguity of definition & measurement problems—acquires definition & measurability in historical sources reporting time lost from work because of illness & injury & time at risk. Examples of such sources are presented, including the cases of printers & typesetters in Antwerp, Belgium, during 1654-1782 & of members of large-scale friendly societies in England & Wales during the nineteenth century. The examples show the form in which historical data about level & trend of sickness may be recovered. They also illustrate

88T2825

Kolata, Gina. Mathematical Model Predicts AIDS Spread. W Science, 1987, 235, 4795-20 Mar, 1464-1465

¶ Two researchers, Robert May of Princeton U., NJ, & Roy Anderson of Imperial Coll, London, England, have developed a mathematical model for the epidemiology of AIDS. Actually estimating the model raises a number of problems of measurement, since the actual data are often limited or ambiguous. However, it appears that virtually everyone in the core populations may now be infected, & that the spread of AIDS to less sexually active groups may be much slower, limiting the epidemic character of AIDS. It is possible to estimate that the number of new infections started by each person with the virus is greater than five among homosexuals; this number is not known among heterosexuals. Efforts to control AIDS need to concentrate on the core group of sexually active homosexuals & on any other core groups that may be identified. 1 Illustration. W. H. Stoddard

88T2826

Krentel, David Paul (Dallas Theological Seminary). The Care of the Geriatric Mentally Retarded. * Dissertation Abstracts International: A The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 1, July, 225-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8709913

88T2827

Krim, Mathilde (AIDS Medical Foundation, 230 Park Ave Suite 1266 New York NY 10169). AIDS: The Challenge to Science and Medicine. ♦ Quality Review Bulletin (QRB), 1986, 12, 8, Aug, 278-283

¶ First recognized in 1981, acquired immune deficiency syndrome (AIDS) has become a major public health problem, potentially comparable to the influenza pandemic of 1918. It has been shown that it is related to infection with Human T Cell Lymphotropic Virus type III (HTLV-III), though the causal link remains unclear. HTLV-III is a retrovirus that can incorporate itself permanently into human DNA, it is not effectively neutralized by the antibody whose production it stimulates, & it mutates easily, making it difficult to develop a vaccine against it. Epidemiological evidence shows that AIDS originated in central Africa, where it is prevalent equally among Ms & Fs, though it currently primarily affects homosexual Ms in the US; it can be expected to spread into the heterosexual community by several paths, & to grow rapidly more prevalent in the general population. It must be considered a worldwide threat to public health that will test the quality of civilization. 24 References. W. H. Stoddard

88T2828

Kuller, Lewis H. & Kingsley, Lawrence A. (Dept Epidemiology Graduate School Public Health U Pittsburgh, PA 15261). The Epidemic of AIDS: A Failure of Public Health Policy. The Milbank Quarterly, 1986, 64(supplement 1), 56-78

¶ The acquired immune deficiency syndrome (AIDS) epidemic in the US was introduced on a substantial & rising epidemic of sexually transmitted diseases. Complex social, political, & professional factors are examined based on previous studies with a single risk group, homosexual men, to illuminate the initial & continuing failure to combat the epidemic. Selective traditional public health control measures, applied vigorously & creatively within a new legal framework, are still appropriate. 42 References. HA

88T2829

Kulys, Regina & Davis, M. Adrian (Jane Addams Coll Social Work U Illinois, Chicago 60680). An Analysis of Social Services in Hospices. W Social Work, 1986, 31, 6, Nov-Dec, 448-456

¶ An examination of social services provided at 34 US hospices, based on interviews conducted with the director of each hospice, along with scale data collected from 29 social workers, 33 nurses, & 30 volunteers. Results indicate that social workers were employed on a part-time basis, & provided minimal services. Nurses, however, were employed full time & provided services normally associated with social work practice. Implications for the future of social workers in hospice settings are discussed. 4 Tables. 1. Rasmussen

88T2830

Kutner, Nancy G. (Center Rehabilitation Medicine School Medicine Emory U, Atlanta GA 30322). Social Worlds and Identity in End-Stage Renal Disease (ESRD). Research in the Sociology of Health Care, 1987, 6, 33-71

¶ People with end-stage renal disease (ESRD) have suffered irreversible loss of normal functioning of their kidneys, & their survival depends on receipt of a kidney transplant or on dialysis therapy that simulates normal kidney function. Here, the ways in which the ESRD sufferer's illness experience is shaped by & shapes his/her relevant social worlds are examined based on longitudinal interviews (N = 150 Rs) conducted in a southeastern US metropolitan area from 1978 to 1982. The social world that existed before ESRD onset, shaped primarily by relationships to family, friends, & work, must be reshaped to incorporate the changed health status & required treatment regimen. People with ESRD must depend heavily on supportive relationships with others to help them manage their illness & to give them reasons to want to survive. Many rely on support from an emergent social world that revolves around dialysis peers & dialysis caregivers that may extend over several years. Social support enables people suffering from ESRD "not to stop doing," i.e., to value survival & arrive at ways to manage their lives. 2 Tables, 51 References. Modified AA

88T2831

Lachmund, Jens (Fakultät Soziologie U Bielefeld, D-4800 1 Federal Republic Germany). Die Profession, der Patient und das medizinische Wissen: Von der kurativen Medizin zur Risikoprävention. (The Profession, the Client, and Medical Knowledge: From Curative Medicine to Risk Prevention). Zeitschrift für Soziologie, 1987, 16, 5, Oct, 353-366. (GFR)

¶ A general discussion of the role of the patient, & of the relationship between the patient & the medical profession. The increasing tendency to mobilize the patient's potential to act reveals a paradoxical situation in modern medicine: the achievement of professional autonomy results in the exclusion of the patient from the control of medical knowledge, yet as a service profession, medicine aims at giving the patient a sense of orientation, based on prevailing medical knowledge. The tension between these two considerations increases in certain contexts, eg. the concept of risk factor & the increased mobilization of the patient. The new discourse concerning the patient's compliance is discussed. 86 References. Modified HA

88T2832

Laderman, Carol (Dept Sociology & Anthropology Fordham U Bronx NY 10458). The Ambiguity of Symbols in the Structure of Healing. Social Science and Medicine, 1987, 24, 4, 293-301

¶ The effect of incantations of a myth concerning a woman in labor is explored. Following a brief discussion of Cuna (Panama) & Malay birthing incantations, the interpretation of an incantation (yampi) tape-record in Trengganu, Malaysia, is presented. The nonsemantic aspects of the incantation & the extent to which the patient shares the interpretation of the healer in both the Malay & Cuna societies are then discussed. Recent biomedical studies are cited concerning the physiological & biochemical effects of myth in the management of childbirth. It is suggested that incantations aid the birth experience by lowering anxiety, which results in increased contractile activity & shorter phase two labor. 42 References. Modified HA

88T2833

Lerner, Debra J. (Boston U, MA 02215). Quality of Working Life after Myocardial Infarction. * Dissertation Abstracts International: The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 47, 12(1), Ju, 4514-A

Available from UMI, Ann Arbor MI. Order No. DA8707068.

88T2834

Levin, Betty Wolder (Columbia U, New York NY 10027). Cal Choices: Decision Making about Treatment for Catastrophically Newborns. * Dissertation Abstracts International: A The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 47, 11, May, 4202-A

Available from UMI, Ann Arbor MI. Order No. DA8703054.

88T2835

Lynott, Robert Joseph (Loyola U, Chicago IL 60611). The Grimmers of the Old Age Problem: From Activity Theory to Alzheimer Disease. * Dissertation Abstracts International: A The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 47, 11, May, 4205-A-4206-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor MI. Order No. DA8704849.

88T2853

Stephens, G. Gayle (Dept Family Practice U Alabama, Birmingham 35294). Developmental Assessment of Family Practice: An Insider's View. Marriage and Family Review, 1987, 10, 3-4, spring-summer, 21.

* A participant-observer's view of the development of family practice in the US since its designation as a medical specialty in 1969. It is argued that family practice cannot be understood apart from the history of general practice & its professional organizations & the social changes that have shaped them. Differences between "family medicine" & "family practice" are illuminated. Specific attention is devoted to the successes & failures of family practice as both a career specialty & academic discipline, its impact on health care, academic medicine, & society, & the current & future issues it faces. It is argued that the survival of family practitioners demands that they become increasingly political & economic while remembering their roots as social reformists. 2 Figures, 18 References. K Hyatt

88T2854

Stevens, Beth (New York U, NY 10003). For-Profit Medicine. ♦ Journal of Health Politics, Policy and Law, 1987, 12, 3, fall, 569-576.

* A review essay on a report published by a special committee of the US Institute of Medicine For-Profit Enterprise in Health Care (Washington, DC: National Academy Press, 1986 [see listing in IRPS No. 41]), an exploration of concerns regarding for-profit institutions' increasing prominence in the US health care sector. This intellectually stimulating consideration of many of the problems posed by the increasing commercialization of health care goes beyond the impact of financial arrangements to contrast the resulting mechanisms of social control. The combination of economic imperatives & efficient care delivery with noneconomic values of service, scientific knowledge, & emotional/ethical considerations is discussed. The major achievement of the report is that it transcends the debates of economic theories & the assurances of altruism to collect & evaluate empirical evidence. 5 References. J. Rasmussen

88T2855

Taylor, Kathryn M. & Kelner, Merrijoy (Dept Behavioural Science U Toronto, Ontario M5S 1A8). Informed Consent: The Physicians' Perspective. Social Science and Medicine, 1987, 24, 2, 135-143.

MDs' attitudes & behavior toward informed consent are examined in the case of breast cancer treatment, based on a survey of 170 oncologists from 8 countries, representing 3 medical specialties. MD responses indicate that they regard informed consent as an intrusion into the MD-patient relationship. Problems identified by Rs include decreasingly effective MD-patient communication, less personalized relationships with patients, & curtailed freedom with regard to disclosure procedures. They also viewed the informed consent regulation as having a negative impact on their patient care. The constraints of obtaining informed consent reduced MDs' willingness to participate in scientific experiments. The conclusion was seen to highlight their dual role as caregiver & scientific investigator, & made them uncomfortable in dealing with patients. Findings are used to illuminate ways in which legal restrictions associated with the introduction of new technologies critically affect the practice of medicine. 8 Tables, 43 References. Modified HA

88T2856

Valdmanis, Vivian Grace (Vanderbilt U, Nashville TN 37240). Hospital Care for the Poor: A Comparison of Public and Private Production. ♦ Dissertation Abstracts International, A The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 47, 11, May, 4202-A.
Available from UMI, Ann Arbor MI. Order No. DA8703898.

88T2857

van den Hoogen, Lisette (State U Utrecht, NL-3508 TC Netherlands). 'Gezegend onder de vrouwen': rituele genezeressen in Katholiek Minas Gerais, Brazilie ('Blessed Art Thou amongst Women: Female Ritual Healers in Roman Catholic Minas Gerais, Brazil'). ♦ Sociologische Gids, 1987, 34, 4, July-Aug, 248-270. (DUT)

* Most studies of women in Roman Catholicism emphasize sexual repression, subordination, & passivity. In contrast, attention is given here to women's active participation in healing rituals, their creative role as ritualizers, & their deftness in maneuvering to gain access to sources of ideological power. A special relationship to the supernatural is one of the few roads to power & prestige open to women in a small town in Minas Gerais, Brazil. Following orthodox precepts by verbal acquiescence,

& exemplary behavior, some women during the last decades have achieved a legitimization of traditional healing practices formerly condemned by the clergy. Overt or radical changes in the balance of power between the sexes are not advocated, or even tolerated, & in many ways healers often confirm & underpin the status quo. Yet, within given constraints, they enhance the prestige of women by demonstrating a way to convert powerlessness into power. For individual clients they often achieve practical advantages. 37 References. Modified HA

88T2858

Wanderer, Jules J. & Rivera, George, Jr. (U Colorado, Boulder 80309). Black Magic Beliefs and White Magic Practices: The Common Structure of Intimacy, Tradition, and Power. The Social Science Journal, 1986, 23, 4, Oct, 419-430.

* Black magic beliefs & white magic practices among a group of Mexican-American women in Brighton, Colo (N = 70, who completed a self-administered questionnaire regarding their use of traditional health care practices) are shown to share common multidimensional organizing principles, uncovered in a smallest space analysis to be intimacy, tradition, & power. A subsequent analysis of intimacy permits a reexamination of the role-location of the curandera in the healing hierarchy. 1 Figure, 1 Appendix. HA

88T2859

Willett, W. C., Stampfer, M. J., Colditz, G. A., Rosner, B. A., Hennekens, C. H. & Speizer, F. E. (Channing Laboratory, 180 Longwood Ave Boston MA 02115). Moderate Alcohol Consumption and the Risk of Breast Cancer. ♦ The New England Journal of Medicine, 1987, 316, 19, 7 May, 1174-1180.

* In 1980, 89,538 US Fs aged 34-59 with no history of cancer completed an independently validated dietary questionnaire that included a measure of alcohol consumption. During the following 4 years, 601 cases of breast cancer occurred among Rs. Analysis of the data shows that consumption of 5-14 grams of alcohol daily was associated with a relative risk of 1.3, while consumption of 15+ grams daily was associated with a relative risk of 1.6. Adjustment for known risk factors & dietary variables did not significantly alter this relationship. Beer & hard liquor, considered separately, were significantly associated with breast cancer. Among women without breast cancer risk factors who were aged under 55, the relative risk associated with consuming 15+ grams of alcohol daily was 2.5. These data, combined with results of several previous case-control studies, suggest that alcohol intake may contribute to the risk of breast cancer. 4 Tables, 2 Figures, 33 References. Modified HA

88T2860

Wilsford, David (U Oklahoma, Norman 73019). The Cohesion and Fragmentation of Organized Medicine in France and the United States. ♦ Journal of Health Politics, Policy and Law, 1987, 12, 3, fall, 481-503.

* French & US medical professions share similar historical bases for strong political & economic market positions. As professions, the attributes of common education, ethics, & mission tend to keep MDs together in their political organization. But the medical professions in both France & the US are also subject to divisive intraprofessional forces. Despite these commonalities, the French profession tends toward organizational particularism, which serves to splinter it in ways inimical to the interests of the medical profession, while the US medical profession tends toward an organizational base of unity & accommodation toward the divergent interests of MDs. Thus, organized medicine in the US has more easily fought off political & economic pressures coming from government & the private sector but by no means with total success. On the other hand, highly fragmented organized medicine in France has experienced an almost linear decline in the face of pressures coming from a determined & strong state. 25 References. Modified HA

88T2861

---- Anthropologie hors les murs: ethnologues que faisons-nous de votre savoir? (Anthropology Outside the Walls: Ethnologists, What Are We Doing with Your Knowledge?). ♦ Cahiers de Sociologie Economique et Culturelle, Ethnopsychologie, 1987, 7, June, 131-140. (FRE)

* A colloquium of 11 social & hospital workers who had taken a course entitled "Introduction to Ethnopsychiatry & the Anthropology of Illness," organized by a hospital in Le Havre, France. The participants discuss: (1) reasons for their interest in ethnology, (2) their questions & reactions provoked by the ethnologists' approaches & intellectual contributions; & (3) the implications of the course for their professional & personal lives. Modified HA leading problems in the use of these data, especially factors influencing the distribution of sickness rates within a given population. Comparing age-specific sickness trends are inferred for nineteenth-century GB. These trends suggest that morbidity moved inversely to mortality, & they are at odds with ordinary assumptions about health trends during British industrial modernization. Reasons are suggested for these unexpected findings. 1 Table, 4 Figures. AA

88T2846

Rosenberg, Charles E. (Dept History & Sociology Science U Pennsylvania, Philadelphia 19104 6310). Disease and Social Order in America: Perceptions and Expectations. The Milbank Quarterly 1986, 64(supplement 1), 34-55.

¶ Views of disease, especially of epidemics, among laymen & MDs in the US underwent changes in the nineteenth & twentieth centuries between extremes of reductionism & relativism. Both society & the medical profession accommodated to reciprocal changes in roles & authority. With each revision, the structure of choices for individuals & society changed. The acquired immune deficiency syndrome (AIDS) epidemic illustrates both a continuing dependence on medicine & the way in which disease necessarily reflects & lays bare every aspect of the culture in which it occurs. 24 References. HA

88T2847

Rosenthal, Marylin M. & Frederick, Deborah (Dept Behavioral Science U Michigan, Dearborn 48128). Physician Maldistribution in Cross-Cultural Perspective: United States, United Kingdom, Sweden and the People's Republic of China. Research in the Sociology of Health Care, 1987, 5, 101-136.

¶ World Health Organization statistics & other official data on four health care systems (the US, the UK, Sweden, & the People's Republic of China) were used to address two questions: (1) the effect of the organizational features of health care systems on their ability to deal with the problem of MD maldistribution; (2) the effects of MD distribution on the health status of populations. It was found, first, that all systems perceived similar problems of MD maldistribution & drew on a repertoire of similar solutions, none of which was altogether responsive to the problem. Second, the relationship of MD distribution to health status was found to be ambiguous, with some evidence that MD-population ratios may affect some health measures but not others. 6 Tables, 3 Figures, 1 Appendix, 34 References. Modified AA

88T2848

Routin, Anthony (Children's Hospital Philadelphia, PA 19104). Deciding to Forgo Life-Sustaining Treatment in the Intensive Care Nursery: A Sociologic Account. W Perspectives in Biology and Medicine 1986, 30, 1, autumn, 117-134.

¶ Qualitative social research methods are employed to investigate decisions to discontinue life support for infants in the intensive care nursery (ICN). Based on personal experiences as a pediatric resident & liaison consultant to several ICNs over a 5 year period, 20 cases are examined in which a decision was considered to terminate life support. Salient features of the ICN environment are identified as high technology, hierarchical staff, professional control of information, "pressure cooker" atmosphere, lack of privacy, rotating medical staff, & a prevailing ethos to preserve life. Major factors in decision making considered relevant by participants include: the clinical assessment of the infant, his or her potential for intellectual development, the availability & feasibility of treatment options; the amount of uncertainty involved, the degree of consensus of medical opinions, parents' attitudes & wishes, financial, legal, & administrative concerns, ethical dimensions, & the participants' hierarchy of values. Social & cultural influences on the decisionmakers include the leadership qualities of the attending MD, the structural strains among team members, the emotional climate of the unit, the nature of the relationship between ICN staff & parents, & the effects of recent sociopolitical developments. 12 References. AA

88T2849

Sachs, Lisbeth (Karolinska Inst Box 60400, S-10401 Stockholm Sweden). Evil Eye or Bacteria: Turkish Migrant Women and Swedish Health Care. Research in the Sociology of Health Care, 1987, 5, 249-301.

¶ A response to Swedish MDs' desire to understand their Turkish patients in the light of the latter's cultural antecedents, aiming to elucidate how women from Ru Turkey handle illness in an alien environment. Data gathered in Tensta, Sweden, in 1976-1981 from Swedish MDs & F

Turkish immigrants from Kulu, a Ru district in Turkey, via participant observation & from informants, provide the basis for an initial case study on the concepts of illness & health care in different cultural contexts. The customary life of the women in Kulu & the health care system they employ there are described, along with their traditional remedies against evil powers. An account of the women's life in Tensta reveals a gradual adjustment to the new circumstances, with many of their traditional beliefs coexisting with impressions from the new community. In conclusion an analysis of some illness processes indicates how these conceptions are strengthened, or weakened, by encounters with Swedish health care, providing an opportunity to describe the diagnostic & therapeutic role of Swedish MDs. 2 Tables, 50 References. Modified AA

88T2850

Schatzkin, Arthur, Jones, D. Yvonne, Hoover, Robert N., Taylor Philip R., Britton, Louise A., Ziegler, Regina G., Harvey, Elizabeth B., Carter, Christine L., Licitra, Lisa M., Dufour, Mary C. & Larson David B. (National Cancer Inst, Bethesda MD 20892). Alcohol Consumption and Breast Cancer in the Epidemiologic Follow-Up Study of the First National Health and Nutrition Examination Survey. The New England Journal of Medicine, 1987, 316, 19, 7 May, 1169-1173.

¶ An investigation of the relationship between alcohol consumption & breast cancer in Fx, based on interview & medical examination data from 7,188 Fx in the US aged 25-74 who took part in the 1981-1984 Epidemiologic Follow-Up Study to the 1971-1975 National Health & Nutrition Examination Survey. Analysis of hospital records & death certificate identified 121 cases of breast cancer that developed after the baseline examination. A relative-risk estimate for any amount of drinking relative to no drinking was 1.5; relative-risk estimates for 3 levels of consumption from lowest to highest, were 1.4, 1.5, & 1.6. These estimates were not materially affected by adjustment for known risk factors for breast cancer or for several dietary factors. These results suggest that moderate alcohol consumption is associated with a 50%-100% increase in the risk of breast cancer. 4 Tables, 35 References. Modified HA

88T2851

Spruit, Ingeborg P. (Inst Social Medicine Leiden U, NL-2333 A Netherlands). Moroccan Immigrants and Health Care in the Netherlands: A Confrontation of Cultural Systems. Research in the Sociology of Health Care, 1987, 5, 201-247.

¶ The question of why a highly sophisticated system of health care do not function satisfactorily among a recently formed category of ethnic minorities is addressed using the example of Moroccan immigrants in the Netherlands. Based on a review of the literature, assumptions on the role of culture are compared to medical anthropological analyses of the Moroccan health care system, & deficiencies in analysis are traced. The concept health care system not only includes the provision of medical care but also values, attitudes, & beliefs with regard to illness perception, sickness behavior, MD-patient contact, & the healing process. Moroccan & Dutch health care systems are compared, & the structural, organizational, social, cultural origins of the difficulties encountered by Moroccan patients are outlined. 1 Table, 5 Figures, 2 Cartoons, 93 References. Modified AA

88T2852

Stein, Howard F. (Health Sciences Center U Oklahoma, Oklahoma City 73190). Polarities in the Identity of Family Medicine: A Psychoanalytic Analysis. Marriage and Family Review, 1987, 10, 3 spring-summer, 211-233.

¶ An ethnographic interpretation of the vicissitudes of family medicine identity as a social movement, academic discipline, & medical specialty (established in 1969) in the contexts of US biomedicine & wider psychohistorical & cultural currents, based on participant observation in a behavioral science department & in a family medicine department, on participation in local & national family medicine conferences, & on a longitudinal study of organizing images & metaphors in family medicine literature (journals, newspapers, etc). The framework of Erik Erikson on relationship between individual & group identity was used in analyzing family medicine's chronic status anxiety & in understanding the meaning of value & ideological choices to resolve that anxiety. The tension in family medicine between sameness/difference from other biomedical specialties is discussed. A distinction is made between family medicine's espoused ideal values & its actual, operant ones, & value polarities identified. The group psychohistory of family medicine is compared to that of various Euro-American ethnic groups, with special reference to identification with the aggressor & the power quest within the social hierarchy. 1 Figure, 47 References. Modified AA age families. The proportion of single & childless patients was higher than that in the population as a whole, a trend that intensified for men & weakened among women. The mean age stayed constant for M patients but increased for women, while unemployment increased for men & decreased for women, suggesting a trend toward a mitigation of the morbid process in women & the opposite in men, or a possible sign of increased social tolerance toward mentally ill women than men. 13 Tables. Modified HA

88T2870

Graham, A. (High Point Hospital, Rye Brook Port Chester New York NY 10573). Caution against 'The Asylum'. ♦ Psychiatric Journal of the University of Ottawa/Revue de Psychiatrie de l'Université d'Ottawa, 1986, 11, 3, Sept, 150-152

* A discussion of the problems inherent in the deinstitutionalization of psychiatric patients when adequate care & supportive services are not available in the community. Focus is on Leona Bachrach's commentary "Asylum and Chronically Ill Psychiatric Patients" (American Journal of Psychiatry, 1984, 141, 8, Aug, 975-978). Though long an advocate of community care & of deinstitutionalization, Bachrach allows that although the concept of total hospital care was not a failure, its implementation was. It is recognized that deinstitutionalization has generally failed, & the question is raised as to where asylum can best be provided for these patients. 7 References. Modified HA

88T2871

Hollander, Russell (Saint Martin's Coll, Lacey WA 98503). Mental Retardation and American Society: The Era of Hope, in The Social Service Review, 1986, 60, 3, Sept, 395-420

* An exploration of the origins of US public policy toward the mentally retarded in the mid-nineteenth century. Initial efforts to help mentally retarded people are placed within the context of a larger mission among anthropologists to encourage a moral transformation within US society. Such factors as fear of the mentally retarded, a religious duty to help them, an aesthetically based dislike of this group, & public apathy are identified as major forces influencing policy. The debate between advocates of short-term schooling & long-term incarceration is examined. Finally, the question of how best to make provision for mentally retarded adults, which became a focal point for resolving the debate, is explored. 11 References. Modified HA

88T2872

Kostrzewa, Tadeusz, Koziol, Andrzej, Mijal, Krystyna, Pankow, Tadeusz, Pluzek, Zenomona & Wilk, Zbigniew. Samobojstwa usilowane na terenie miasta Krakowa (Praca porownawcza) (Suicide Attempts in the City of Cracow [A Comparative Study]), Psychiatria Polska, 1982, 16, 3, May-June, 167-174 (POL)

* A comparative analysis of suicide attempts in Cracow, Poland, in 1960, 1962, 1966, 1967, 1969, & 1974 (N = 590 Ms & 614 Fs). Distribution factors for age groups & years are analyzed, along with data on educational, professional, & civil status of attempters. Methods used to commit suicide are analyzed with respect to frequency of implementation, & sex. The direct causes of suicidal attempts are derived from data obtained directly from the patients or their families. 6 Figures. Modified HA

88T2873

Li, Virginia Cheng (School Public Health U California, Los Angeles 90024). Critical Public Health Problems Perceived by Urban Chinese Health Workers, International Quarterly of Community Health and Education, 1985-1986, 6, 4, 297-308

* Chinese health workers' perceptions of problems, needs, & priorities in health care delivery were investigated via an open-ended questionnaire administered in 1984 to practitioners in Shanghai health facilities. 100 students/faculty from 6 health management training centers (50 males & 50 females). Eleven categories of problems were identified: disease prevention, health education of the public, health services administration, environmental health, family planning & maternal/child health, medical education, industrial health, research, & nutritional problems among young adults & the elderly. Family planning & maternal/child health were perceived as the most critical societal health problems affecting the welfare of the state, but heart disease, cancer, dysentery, hepatitis, & tuberculosis were perceived as personal health problems critical to the individual & the public. Proposed solutions to these critical problems were more often in the form of combined measures of health education, policy regulation, & medical care, than in single measures. 2 Tables, 1 Appendix, 11 References. Modified HA

88T2874

Loachen, Earl L. (School Medicine Southern Illinois U, Springfield 62702). The Challenge of Providing Quality Psychiatric Services in a Rural Setting. ♦ Quality Review Bulletin (QRB), 1986, 12, 11, Nov, 376-379.

* The development of a system of services that addresses the medical, psychiatric, & social needs of mentally ill persons may be particularly difficult in Ru areas because of environmental, sociocultural, & program issues different from those in Ur settings. The quality of Ru mental health care must be evaluated in light of these unique needs & resources. Problems in delivery of services, including environmental, denial, confidentiality, costs, & human resources, are identified & discussed, & responses to these problems are outlined. 20 References. HA

88T2875

Luske, Bruce Douglas (U California, Santa Cruz 95064). Border Patrol: Labeled Psychotics as Reverse Role Models for Psychiatric Staff, ♦ Dissertation Abstracts International, 4 The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 1, July, 225-A

Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8709131.

88T2876

Masserman, J. H. (8 South Michigan Ave Suite 1404, Chicago 11-60603). Systems Theory and Holism in Social Psychiatry, a Philosophic-Integrative Commentary. ♦ Psychiatric Journal of the University of Ottawa/Revue de Psychiatrie de l'Université d'Ottawa, 1986, 11, 3, Sept, 127-131

* Through the application of a philosophic-integrative perspective to an analysis of social-psychiatric concepts, psychiatry is defined as a dynamically holistic humanistic organon. Systems theory & holism are reviewed, & systemic & operational cognition are considered. The broader interrelationships of systems & holistic concepts are illustrated, & clinical & therapeutic implications are discussed. 21 References. F. Rasmussen

88T2877

Nagla, B. K. (Dept Sociology Maharishi Dayanand U, Rohtak, 124001 Haryana India). Etiology of Schizophrenic Symptoms—A Sociological Analysis. ♦ Guru Nanak Journal of Sociology, 1986, 7, 2, Oct, 125-137

* An exploration of sociological factors in the origins of schizophrenia, using case records on patients admitted to the Rohtak Medical Coll Hospital in Haryana State, India, during 1972-1978, & part of 1979 (N = 11, 570). Social conditions that can generate distortions of reality including delusions & hallucinations are described, with emphasis on high rates of schizophrenia among persons in disadvantaged social positions. 4 Tables, 33 References. Modified HA

88T2878

Selye, Hans (International Instit Stress U Montreal, Quebec H3C 3J7). Stress and Health. ♦ Journal of Comparative Sociology and Religion/Bulletin de sociologie et de religion comparées, 1979-80, 6-7, 10-37

* An examination of the nature of psychobiological stress & a presentation of guidelines for coping with it advantageously. Stress is the nonspecific response of the body to any demand; it may be associated with either desirable or undesirable effects. The stress reaction includes three basic stages: alarm reaction, resistance, & exhaustion. Stress can be coped with in four ways: removing stressors, preventing neutral events from becoming stressors; learning to cope with unavoidable conditions, & relaxation or diversion. Ethical guidelines are also proposed for coping with stress. 1 Figure, 3 References. W. H. Stoddard

88T2879

Shapiro, Stanley & Shapiro, Martin F. (c/o M. Shapiro-Dept Medicine U California, Los Angeles 90024). Identification of Health Care Problems in a County Jail. ♦ Journal of Community Health, 1987, 12, 1, spring, 23-30

* The ability of a questionnaire administered at the time of arrest to identify offenders' medical problems & to predict subsequent use of care is evaluated via the responses of 594 inmates incarcerated in a county jail in Calif. Analysis reveals that only 54% of Ss had completed such a ques-

46 social psychiatry (mental health)

88T2862

de Almeida-Filho, Naomar (Dept Preventive Medicine FMUFBA, Canela-Salvador Bahia Brazil CEP 40000), Social Epidemiology of Mental Disorders: A Review of Latin-American Studies, ♦ Acta Psychiatrica Scandinavica 1987, 75, 1, Jan, 1-10.

- ¶ A review of Latin American literature about the relationships between cultural change & psychopathology. Analyses of 22 epidemiological studies shows how culture has been traditionally viewed by social-psychiatric research in Latin America as an independent variable associated with the prevalence of mental disorders. Two basic approaches found in this literature are analyzed: one of anthropological origin, & the other based on sociological explanations. The hypotheses of cultural shock, stress of acculturation, & cultural marginalization belong to the first approach, while the second one is distinguished by the notions of Ur stress, life change, social support, & goal striving stress. Methodological weaknesses are evident in much of the research. 11 References. Modified HA

88T2863

Aneshensel, Carol S., Estrada, Antonio L., Hansell, Mary Jo & Clark, Virginia A. (School Public Health Center Health Sciences U California, Los Angeles 90074), Social Psychological Aspects of Reporting Behavior: Lifetime Depressive Episode Reports, ♦ Journal of Health and Social Behavior 1987, 28, 3, Sept, 232-246.

- ¶ How social psychological states influence reports of lifetime depressive disorder is examined, based on data from 5 waves of interviews with a sample ($N = 601$) of Los Angeles County, Calif, adults between 1979 & 1983. Approximately 25% gave responses to a lifetime screening question at follow up that were inconsistent with reports made 3-4 years earlier, the predominant type of inconsistency was failure to report a previously reported depressive episode. The presence of either internal symptom cues or external stress cues appeared to prompt recollection of past disorder. This tendency was most pronounced among the previously asymptomatic or among those who made earlier depressive episode reports in conjunction with stress reports. Rs appeared to alter their reports of past psychological disorder to make past states consistent with current states. 3 Tables, 32 References. Modified HA

88T2864

Borzecki, M. & Wormith, J. S. (c/o Wormith Research Division Ministry Solicitor General Canada, 340 Laurier Ave West Ottawa, Ontario K1A 0P8), The Criminalization of Psychiatrically Ill People: A Review with a Canadian Perspective, ♦ Psychiatric Journal of the University of Ottawa/Revue de Psychiatrie de l'Université d'Ottawa 1985, 10, 4, Dec, 241-247.

- ¶ There is increasing concern that psychiatrically ill persons who were formerly treated within psychiatric settings are now being processed within the criminal justice system. Three main social & historical factors have been proposed as contributing to this process of "criminalization": the increased prevalence of the psychiatrically ill within the community, changes in police handling of the psychiatrically ill, & the emergence of a subgroup of psychiatrically ill persons who are unable to gain access to treatment. Empirical studies that have considered this issue are critically reviewed, & differences between the Canadian & US situations are considered. Although most research is methodologically weak, it still provides some evidence for the criminalization of the psychiatrically disordered in the US. Further research is recommended to determine more conclusively whether such a phenomenon exists in the US &, especially, in Canada. 1 Table, 43 References. HA

88T2865

Brown, Barbara, Stress: The Role of Information and the Intellectual Mechanisms, ♦ Journal of Comparative Sociology and Religion/Bulletin de sociologie et de religion comparées, 1979-80, 6-7, 38-77.

- ¶ An interpretation of stress & stress-related pathology in terms of cognitive processes. Current conceptions of stress suffer from numerous inconsistencies. It is proposed that a more useful concept be based on an information model, in which nonphysical stress is defined as a perception of social dynamics that threaten social well-being. The stress process includes: stages of mismatch between expectations & perceptions; worry & problem solving activity, & such consequences of frustrated problem-solving activity as uncertainty, mental imagery, & eventual focus on the state of distress rather than the problem. Applications of this model: stress therapy are outlined. 1 Table, 1 Figure, 9 References. W. H. Steward

88T2866

Brown, Julie V. (Dept Sociology U North Carolina, Greensboro 27412-5001), Peasant Survival Strategies in Late Imperial Russia: The Social Uses of the Mental Hospital, ♦ Social Problems, 1987, 34, Oct, 311-329.

- ¶ The social functions of the asylum in late imperial Russia are examined, based on analysis of asylum annual reports & related documents. Seasonal variations in patient admissions & discharges suggest that the use of asylums fluctuated relative to the peasant economy. Evidence also indicates that the asylum fulfilled essentially the same functions for workers & patients, & that to a certain extent, the two statuses were interchangeable. While the asylum remained a powerful & coercive means of social control, the beleaguered peasant population managed to incorporate the institution into its increasingly desperate strategies for survival. 1 Figure, 90 References. HA

88T2867

Chavez, Deborah June (U California, Riverside 92521), Ethnic Differences in Adaptive Behavior: Life-Cycle Profiles of Mildly Mentally Retarded People, ♦ Dissertation Abstracts International: A The Humanities and Social Sciences 1987, 47, 12(1), June, 4523-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor MI. Order No. DA8706983.

88T2868

Fentiman, Linda C. (Law School Suffolk U, Boston MA 0211), Whose Right Is It Anyway?: Rethinking Competency to Stand Trial: Light of the Synthetically Sane Insanity Defendant, ♦ University of Miami Law Review 1986, 40, 5, Sept, 1109-1169.

- ¶ A reexamination of the historical legal prohibition against the trial of a mentally incompetent criminal defendant in the context of a defendant asserting an insanity defense who can only be made competent if he is medicated with psychotropic drugs. Such forcible medication of the defendant permits him to appear more lucid & "normal" at trial, but at high cost: the violation of his constitutional right to present a defense, privilege against self-incrimination, & his fundamental right to privacy & control of his own body. First & foremost, the very fact of the defendant's pharmaceutical restoration to competency may significantly undercut his primary defense—that he was insane at the time of offense—by precluding the jury from seeing him as he was at the time of the crime, the moment for which the jury's assessment of his mental state is critical. Further, the defendant's enforced medication may preclude him from understanding the testimony presented against him or in other wise assisting his counsel in presenting a defense. Second, the state's insistence that the defendant stand trial while medicated violates the fundamental Fifth Amendment principle that the state must establish its case against the defendant independently, rather than by forcing him to speak against himself. Third, such forcible medication violates both the defendant's common law & constitutional rights to privacy & to refuse unwanted medical treatment. Finally, after an examination of the poses of the incompetence prohibition, it is argued that in light of the magnitude of the defendant's constitutional interests in not being medicated, the state's interest in assuring his competency to stand trial must give way if the defendant knowingly & intelligently chooses to waive his right to be tried while competent. AA

88T2869

Gerard, Kira, Zmiany w strukturze społeczno-demograficznej zbiorowości pacjentów hospitalizowanych po raz pierwszy z powodu schizofrenii (Changes in the Sociodemographic Structure of Cohorts of Patients First Hospitalized for Schizophrenia), Psychiatria Polska, 1981, 15, 1, Jan-Feb, 29-36 (POL).

- ¶ Changes in the sociodemographic structure of cohorts of Polish schizophrenic patients ($N = 1,421$) hospitalized for the first time in various periods from 1927/28 to 1967/68 are examined. The % of farm-laborers with a low educational level was found to have decreased, that of white-collar workers & the better educated increased, consistent with general social transformations. There were also fewer mem-comparable variations were found in the medical services provided. Factors determining the differences in staff & services are discussed. 4 Tables, 1 Figure, 14 References. Modified HA

T2888

Brand-Jacobi, J. (U Göttingen, D-3400 Federal Republic Germany). Zur Ausenreizabhängigkeit von Alkoholikern: Experimentelle Untersuchungen zum Triakverhalten, zur motorischen Steuerung und zum Leistungsverhalten von Alkoholabhängigen, Abstinente und sozialen Trinkern (Alcohol Dependence: Experimental Investigation into Drinking Behavior, Motor Control, and Productivity in Abstinent Alcoholics and Social Drinkers). * Dissertation Abstracts International C European Abstracts, 1987, 48, 2, summer, 286 (GER) Unavailable from UMI; contact the degree-granting university.

T2889

Brenner, Gabrielle A. (Institut économique appliqué Ecole hautes études commerciales, 5255 ave Decelles Montreal Quebec H3T 1V6). Why Do People Gamble? Further Canadian Evidence. Journal of Gambling Behavior, 1986, 2, 2, fall-winter, 121-129. In previous studies, attempts have been made to examine predictions issued from R. Brenner (The Human Gamble, Chicago: U of Chicago Press, 1983) on the characteristics of lottery ticket buyers. Here, additional, more detailed data are presented from a 1974-1978 survey of 93 Canadian winners of big lottery prizes, & from statistics on various types of Canadian & US buyers of lottery tickets. The image of the lottery ticket buyer that emerges is of a person who, perceiving all other avenues of success to be closed, turns to lotteries as a recourse. 2 Tables, References. Modified HA

T2890

Brown, R. I. F. (Dept Psychology U Glasgow, G12 8RT Scotland). Dropouts and Continuers in Gamblers Anonymous: Life-Context and Other Factors. Journal of Gambling Behavior, 1986, 2, 2, fall-winter, 130-140.

The design, aims, & rationale are outlined of a follow-up study of dropouts from Gamblers Anonymous in Scotland. Of a cohort of those attending for the first time who dropped out after more than one meeting, 10 agreed to a structured interview examining factors that might have contributed to their decisions to drop out. A comparison group of 12 continuers from the same meeting who had been totally abstinent for at least 1 year responded to the same structured interviews. The results are used to examine life context factors making it more difficult to maintain attendance, commitment to the treatment program, perceived premeeting expectations & reasons for coming, impacts of the first meeting, effects of pressures to maintain attendance, & the influence of spouses. 8 References. Modified HA

T2891

Caetano, Raul (Inst Epidemiology & Behavioral Medicine Medical Research Inst San Francisco, 1816 Scenic Ave Berkeley CA 94709). Public Opinions about Alcoholism and Its Treatment. ♦ U Journal of Studies on Alcohol, 1987, 48, 2, Mar, 153-160.

Views about alcoholism as an illness, support for treatment, treatment recommendation, & stigma surrounding alcoholics are examined based on interview data from a random sample of the population of Contra Costa County, Calif (N = 482). About 91% of the Rs agree with the notion that alcoholism is an illness, but 40% also agree that alcoholics drink because they want to. More women than men support the idea that, to overcome alcoholism, will have to quit drinking forever. The contrary is true for the idea of controlled drinking. Education & income are negatively associated with items on loss of control & controlled drinking. Rs who have had their lives deeply affected by an alcoholic & those who report a drinking problem of their own do not differ in their opinions about alcoholism from those who do not have these characteristics. Alcoholics Anonymous is the most common form of treatment recommended by the Rs. In general, results show considerable support for treatment, but ambivalence regarding the disease concept. 2 Tables, 30 References. Modified HA

T2892

Castro, Felipe G., Maddahian, Ebrahim, Newcomb, Michael D. & Bentler, P. M. (Dept Psychology U California, Los Angeles 90024). A Multivariate Model of the Determinants of Cigarette Smoking among Adolescents. ♦ U Journal of Health and Social Behavior, 1987, 28, 3, Sept, 273-289.

A multivariate stress-coping model was used to test a set of hypotheses about antecedents to cigarette smoking in adolescents (N = 810) using scale data. Corroborating other studies, peer influence was found to be the strongest predictor of cigarette smoking. However, the data support a more complex mediational model in which social conformity, along with peer influence, are mediators between stress factors (disruptive family events & perceived stressfulness) & the coping response factor of cigarette smoking. In addition, ethnic group comparisons between white, black, Hispanic, & Asian Pacific adolescents suggest important cultural differences. Results also indicate that smoking prevention/cessation programs should do more than teach resistance to social influence, & address problems such as disruptive or stressful family environments, deficits in stress-coping skills, & aspects of personality such as nonconformity/rebelliousness. 3 Tables, 3 Figures, 53 References. Modified HA

88T2893

Cosper, Ronald L., Okraku, Ishmael O. & Neumann, Brigitte (Dept Sociology Saint Mary's U, Halifax Nova Scotia B3H 3C3). Tavern Going in Canada: A National Survey of Regulars at Public Drinking Establishments. ♦ U Journal of Studies on Alcohol, 1987, 48, 3, May, 252-259.

The results of a national interview survey of 1,708 Canadian tavern goers are reported, special attention is paid to drinking patterns, reasons for going, types of places frequented & social characteristics of the "regular" (ie, the person who usually goes to one establishment with some frequency). Most Canadians make some use of pubs, but only a few are regulars. Regulars are young, unmarried, & heavier than average drinkers. Persons going to taverns, lounges, nightclubs, & private clubs differ in social characteristics; these attributes are related to the activities & social functions associated with the various types of public drinking establishments. 6 Tables, 28 References. HA

88T2894

DeFoe, James R. & Breed, Warren (c/o Breed Prevention Research Center, 2532 Durant Ave Berkeley CA 94704). The Family, Research, and Prime-Time Television in Alcohol Education. International Quarterly of Community Health and Education, 1986-1987, 7, 1, 33-40.

TV programs contain materials relevant to health practices generally, & to drinking problems in particular. Research has found that these materials are often inaccurate & misleading. A method called "cooperative consultation" (Breed, W., & DeFoe, J. R., "Effecting Media Change: The Role of Cooperative Consultation on Alcohol Topics," Journal of Communication, 1982, 32, spring, 88-99) has succeeded in transmitting these findings to writers & producers in the industry, & their response has been encouraging. The method is illustrated via examination of 2 made-for-TV movies & their contrasting depiction of how family members respond to an alcoholic husband & father. 11 References. HA

88T2895

Eisenbach-Stangl, Irmgard, Nuchterne Frauen-berauschte Männer. Geschlechtsspezifischer Drogengebrauch in Österreich (Sober Women Intoxicated Men: Gender-Specific Drug Use in Austria). Österreichische Zeitschrift für Soziologie, 1986, 11, 4, 52-67 (GER).

The belief that, as women's patterns of employment have approached those of men, their consumption of alcohol, cigarettes, & other drugs has done likewise, is examined. Austrian health & criminal statistics are used to indicate postwar patterns of alcohol & drug consumption among men & women, while consumer studies provide data on consumption of coffee, tea, & medications. A significant shift in the proportions of M & F consumption is found only in the case of tobacco; this change is attributed to increased performance of mental labor by women & the symbolic status of smoking. The drinking patterns of women are found to approximate those of men much more in Ur than Ru areas; this is said to be due to a change in the function of alcohol. Results are said to show that, although professional opportunities mean greater freedom, women's enjoyment is more strictly limited than men's. 5 Tables, 42 References. J. Anderson

88T2896

Faupel, Charles E. (Auburn U, AL 36849). Drug Availability, Life Structure, and Situational Ethics of Heroin Addicts. ♦ U Urban Life, 1986-87, 15, 3-4, Oct-Jan, 395-419.

The ethical dynamics associated with distinct situations of heroin use are examined here with data obtained from extensive life history intertionnaire, & only 48% of persons who subsequently sought care for major problems were identified by the questionnaire. Health care for inmates would be better served by universal screening & follow up, targeted to such problems as drug & alcohol abuse & psychiatric disorders. 2 Tables, 9 References. Modified HA

88T2880

Shepa, Samuel B., Schechter, Martin I. & Prefontaine, Ren G. (Dept Health Care & Epidemiology U British Columbia, Vancouver V6T 1W5). Prison Health Services: A Utilization Study. Journal of Community Health 1987, 12, 1, spring, 4-22.

† A prospective study of health service utilization of 1,429 inmates of Regional Institutions of the Pacific Region of the Correctional Services of Canada. Of 7,449 visits recorded during the study period, the majority took less than 5 minutes, most often resulted in treatment with medication, & did not require scheduled follow up. The data strongly suggest that health care in prisons closely corresponds to primary care. Future studies of this health care setting should approach issues in utilization from this perspective. 9 Tables, 1 Figure, 14 References. Modified HA

88T2881

Singer, Merrill, Fitzgerald, Maureen H., Madden, Lyn, von Legat, Christa F., Voight & Arnold, Carol D. (Hispanic Health Council, 98-1A Cedar St Hartford CT 06106). The Sufferer's Experience of Hypoglycemia. Research in the Sociology of Health Care 1987, 6, 147-175.

† The understanding of illness as a social & personal phenomenon continues to be hampered by the dominance of the biomedical disease model in almost all contemporary thinking about sickness in Western society. Here, the illness of hypoglycemia is focused on, illustrating the conflict between sufferers & members of the medical professions, based on interviews with 30 hypoglycemia sufferers conducted in 1981 by researchers from the American U (Washington, DC). A sufferer-center perspective is adopted to provide an insider's view of hypoglycemia & to extend conception of health issues beyond the complex of values & conceptions held by biomedicine. Examined are the sufferers' experiences of symptoms, initial coping strategies, help seeking behaviors, experience with MDs, impact on personal life, impact on occupational life, & conception of hypoglycemia. A considerable gap between the MD's view of the hypoglycemia sufferer & the sufferer's own account is demonstrated. 27 References. Modified AA

88T2882

Swanson, David W. & Swanson, David K. (Mayo Clinic, 200 First SW Rochester MN 55905). Paranoid Disorder: The Soviet Viewpoint. The American Journal of Psychiatry 1986, 143, 7, Ju, 825-830.

† The Russian-language psychiatric literature on the paranoid disorder as cited in Index Medicus from Jan 1974 through Dec 1983, is reviewed. Authors were from a variety of facilities & geographic locations, with 3:1 M:F ratio. Bibliographic references were primarily European, though 41% of the articles included references to US publications. There was extensive longitudinal study of the disorders, epidemiologic investigations, diagnostic classification, pharmacotherapy, treatment outcome & etiologic theories allowed comparison with these issues in the US, revealing a similarity between the paranoid population in both countries. 40 References. Modified HA

88T2883

Tomes, Nancy (Dept History State U New York, Stony Brook 11794-4348). The Anatomy of Madness: New Directions in the History of Psychiatry. Social Studies of Science 1987, 17, 2, M, 358-371.

† A review essay on Anne Digby's Madness, Morality and Medicine: A Study of the York Retreat 1796-1914 (Cambridge: Cambridge U Pr, 1985), & The Anatomy of Madness: Essays in the History of Psychiatry (Brynau, W. F., Porter, Roy, & Shepherd, Michael [Eds.] London & New York: Tavistock Publications, 1985 [see listings in IF No. 41]). These two works illustrate new trends in the history of psychiatry that are sharply divided from previous trends. Digby's work is a large scale analysis of one of the most famous early nineteenth-century asylums that has been a frequent focus in the past of both pro- & anti-psychiatric accounts. The Anatomy of Madness brings together two three recent papers on psychiatric & related topics, which are grouped thematically under "People and Ideas" & "Institutions and Society." Rasmussen.

88T2884

Wintersteen, Richard T. (Dept Sociology & Social Work Man State U, MN 56001). Rehabilitating the Chronically Mentally Ill: Social Work's Claim to Leadership. Social Work 1986, 31, 5, Oct, 332-337.

† The processes involved in helping people cope with mental illness essentially psychosocial in nature. Here, the salient characteristics of chronic mental illness are described along with how these may be addressed by a rehabilitative model of service. Social work's personal environment framework is shown to correspond most closely to the requirements of appropriate service provision for the chronically mentally ill. 1 Table. AA

79 substance use/abuse & compulsive behaviors: (drug abuse, addiction, alcoholism, gambling, eating disorders, etc.)

88T2885

Adriaanse, Hans & van Reek, Jan (Dept Health Education, PO Box 616 NL-6200 MD Maastricht Netherlands). Teachers' Smoking Worldwide: A Review of Nineteen Countries (1966-1983). International Quarterly of Community Health and Education 1986-1987, 7, 1, 3-17.

† A secondary analysis of 38 investigations of teachers' tobacco consumption that were carried out in 19 countries between 1966 & 1983. An overview is provided of teachers' smoking behavior as compared to that of the general population, by gender & country, & over time. Focus is on the nonsmoking teacher as a role model. Nonsmokers were found to be more likely to affirm the importance of nonsmoking teachers as role models for students, few smokers recognized the importance of this role. Suggestions for further research & the creation of smoking cessation programs for teachers are offered. 3 Tables, 66 References. Modified HA

88T2886

Baggot, Rob (ESRC Addiction Research Centre Dept Social Policy & Professional Studies U Hull, HU 6 7RX England). Alcohol, Politics and Social Policy. Journal of Social Policy 1986, 15, 4, Oct, 467-488.

† While growing awareness of the importance of lifestyle factors in prevention of ill health has stimulated policy studies in the UK over the decade, alcohol misuse has been comparatively neglected. An attempt is made to fill this gap with a case study of the development of alcohol policy & the alcohol issue over the last three decades. Three potential explanations for the rejection of a more comprehensive alcohol policy by successive UK governments are tested: opposition by powerful interest groups, the hostility of voters & politicians, & opposition by government bureaucracies. While the evidence supports all three, voter opposition appears the most powerful explanation. 67 References. Modified HA

88T2887

Bail, John C., Corty, Eric, Petroski, S. Paul, Bond, Henrietta, Masello, Anthony & Graff, Harold (Dept Epidemiology & Prev Medicine School Medicine U Maryland, Baltimore 21201). Medical Services Provided to 2,394 Patients at Methadone Programs in States. Journal of Substance Abuse Treatment 1986, 203-209.

† A study of medical services provided to 2,394 patients in methadone programs based on on-site interview data from 49 treatment staff members at 7 programs in 3 states. Marked differences existed in both type & number of medical staff that serve these methadone proios, in The Psychological Record, 1986, 36, 1, winter, 3-17

 ¶ To determine the psychological impact of being stopped at a police driving while intoxicated (DWI) roadblock, 270 U students, divided into 3 experimental groups & 1 control group, rated their emotional reactions to 3 written scenarios describing either a roadblock stop or a neutral driving condition. The roadblock descriptions varied along three dimensions: whether the stop was random or nonrandom, whether the delay was long or short, & whether many or few questions were asked. Results indicate that all roadblock conditions were rated by the participants as producing greater anxiety, guilt, & arousal, & less feelings of pleasure & dominance than the neutral driving condition. Nonrandom stopping produced a greater emotional impact than did random stopping. A long wait before entering a roadblock produced greater feelings of guilt & less feelings of pleasure than a short wait. The results are discussed in terms of providing guidelines for future court decisions. 7 Tables, 25 References. HA

88T2907

Klingemann, Harald (Schweizerische Fachstelle Alkoholprobleme (SFA); Forschungsabteilung, Postfach 870 CH-1001 Lausanne Switzerland), Unerwünschte Nachbarn? Therapeutische Wohngemeinschaften für Drogenabhängige in der Gemeinde (Unwanted Neighbors? Therapeutic Drug Communities in the Community), Kolner Zeitschrift für Soziologie und Sozialpsychologie, 1987, 39, 2, June, 347-366. (GER)
 ¶ The reactions of residents in 3 small Swiss communities to the potential actual establishment of a home for the treatment of drug addicts were investigated. Interviews were conducted with 576 Rs chosen as representative of 3 segments of the community: persons directly affected by the project, community leaders, & ordinary residents. It was found that level of acceptance was generally high, & that the individual tendency to reject such projects is influenced above all by the perceived climate of opinion. The practical consequences of these findings for the policy implementation process are discussed, & a suggestion is made for a 2-stage strategy of implementation. 7 Tables, 1 Appendix, 32 References. Modified HA

88T2908

Knibbe, R. A., Drop, M. J. & Muytjens, A. (Dept Medical Sociology State U Limburg, NL-6200 MD Maastricht Netherlands), Correlates of Stages in the Progression from Everyday Drinking to Problem Drinking, Social Science and Medicine, 1987, 24, 5, 463-473
 ¶ Data culled from population surveys conducted in the province of Limburg (N = 1,980) & the city of Rotterdam (N = 2,150), the Netherlands, were used to examine (1) social characteristics associated with differences in drinking style, (2) variables correlated with intensified consumption; & (3) variables, other than consumption level, correlated with harmful effect of alcohol. Focus is on the impact of status, positional, & situational roles on alcohol consumption. Analysis indicates that status groups tend to differ in drinking style, & that, because of these differences, these groups differ also in the degree to which drinking is associated with harmful effects. Also, people with less structured everyday life are inclined to intensify their consumption & are more vulnerable to harmful effects. Gender & integration of alcohol use are suggested to be intervening variables concerning the effect of the structure of everyday life on intensified consumption & on harmful effects. 9 Tables, 3 Figures, 31 References. Modified HA

88T2909

Mehrabian, Albert & Riccioni, Mona (Dept Psychology U California, Los Angeles 90024), Measures of Eating-Related Characteristics for the General Population: Relationships with Temperament, in Journal of Personality Assessment, 1986, 50, 4, winter, 610-629.
 ¶ A questionnaire that assessed a broad range of eating-related characteristics for 260 unselected, U of California students was factor analyzed in a 2-step process proposed by A. L. Comrey ("Comparison of Two Methods to Identify Major Personality Factors," Applied Psychological Measurement, 1984, 8, 397-408). Twelve factored homogeneous item dimensions were identified first & yielded 3 primary-level factors in a second factor analysis: predisposition to obesity (including dieting & preoccupation with, & fear of, gaining weight), uncontrollable urges to eat (including eating momentum beyond control, food as panacea & constant temptation, & secret binging), & predisposition to anorexia (including insufficient eating obvious to others, food phobia, inability to eat, & vomiting after meals). The 3 primary-level factors were positively intercorrelated & exhibited significant positive, though weak, correlations with a measure of trait arousability. Also, weak results tentatively indicated that individuals with more pleasant &/or more arousable temperaments were less likely to be overweight. Ss reported sharply higher levels of food consumptions when feeling depressed (ie, bored, lonely, sad) than when feeling distressed (ie, uncomfortable, anxious, in pain). Uncontrollable urges to eat correlated positively & significantly with self-reports of food consumption while depressed, showing that those lacking control over eating ate especially more while feeling bored, lonely, or sad. Predisposition to obesity correlated negatively & significantly with self-reports of food consumption while distressed, showing that those tending more toward obesity ate less while upset or anxious. 4 Tables, 25 References. HA

88T2910

Newcomb, Michael D. & Bentler, P. M. (Dept Psychology U California, Los Angeles 90024), The Impact of Late Adolescent Substance Use on Young Adult Health Status and Utilization of Health Services: A Structural-Equation Model over Four Years, Social Science and Medicine, 1987, 24, 1, 71-82

¶ The impact of adolescent substance use on young adult health status & health service utilization is examined, based on data from 654 Ss questioned during late adolescence & again 4 years later. Latent-variable models were used to determine what effect, if any, adolescent drug use had on later health. Results indicated that drug use was not directly related to later physical symptomatology, subjective health problems, or health service utilization. General cigarette use & amount of cigarette smoking were significantly related to a range of health outcomes including increased psychosomatic symptoms, respiratory symptoms, reporting trouble with health, nights spent in the hospital, & health service utilization, as well as decreased subjective physical hardness. Early cannabis use decreased later subjective physical hardness & increased health problems experienced over the 4 years. Hard drug use was associated with increased emergency MD visits during adolescence & increased perceived trouble with health as young adults. 4 Tables, 2 Figures, 63 References. Modified HA

88T2911

Page, Richard C. & Mitchell, Sam (U Georgia, Athens 30602), A Comparative Study of the Attitudes of College Students and Drug Treatment Center Residents toward Drugs, Other Drug Users and Themselves, Journal of Offender Counseling, Services and Rehabilitation, 1986, 10, 3, spring, 83-95

¶ Questionnaire data are used to compare the attitudes of Coll students vs drug treatment center residents with histories of using marijuana & amphetamines (N = 14 white Ms in each group). Several adjective pairs of the semantic differential concepts "drugs I used," "others who use drugs," & "my real self" were used in the comparisons. The drug treatment center residents tended to devalue themselves, drugs, & peers in the drug culture to a greater extent than did the students. Modified HA

88T2912

Parker, Howard & Newcombe, Russell (Dept Social Work Studies U Liverpool, L69 3BX England), Heroin Use and Acquisitive Crime in an English Community, in The British Journal of Sociology, 1987, 38, 3, Sept, 331-350.

¶ An examination of the possible linkage between a widespread heroin epidemic & a parallel & unprecedented rise in acquisitive crime in a community in northwestern England between 1981 & 1986. A very close relationship between the "extra" crime being generated & the presence of a large number of young, unemployed heroin users was established through analysis of national statistics on crime & narcotic addiction. It was found that 50% of a sample of young adults convicted of domestic burglaries during 1985 were also known heroin users. Among this subsample two distinct groups emerged: (1) those (the majority) who had a criminal record prior to heroin use but began committing more acquisitive crime after becoming users, & (2) those who had no criminal record prior to heroin use, but subsequently became deeply involved in crime. 8 Tables, 4 Figures. Modified HA

88T2913

Perkins, H. Wesley (Hobart & William Smith Colls, Geneva NY 14456), Parental Religion and Alcohol Use Problems as Intergenerational Predictors of Problem Drinking among College Youth, in Journal for the Scientific Study of Religion, 1987, 26, 3, Sept, 340-357.

¶ Relationships between religiosity & alcohol use & between parental alcohol abuse & that of children, particularly in the context of problem views conducted in 1980/81 with 30 hard-core criminal addicts in the Wilmington Del. area. Addicts tended to violate the ideal norms of their own subculture under circumstances directly related to two contingencies: drug availability & life structure. Although novice addicts may violate subcultural standards out of ignorance, the greatest potential for deviation from these normative ideals occurs when low levels of drug availability are combined with a lack of daily routine & life structure, a combination typical of the "street junkie" situation. 44 References. Modified HA.

88T2897

Harkins-Craven, Jo Anne (U. Minnesota, Minneapolis 55455), Adult Children of Alcoholic and Non-Alcoholic Families: Emotional Distress and Intergenerational Transmission of Distress, * Dissertation Abstracts International: A The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 1, July, 224-A.
Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI, Order No. DA8706925.

88T2898

Haver, Britt (Center Alcohol Studies Busch Campus, Piscataway NJ 08854), Female Alcoholics II: Factors Associated with Psycho-Social Outcome 3-10 Years after Treatment, ♦ Acta Psychiatrica Scandinavica, 1986, 74, 6, Dec, 597-604.

† (For Part I see SA 35 3, 87R6609.) Follow up interviews were conducted with 44 F alcoholics who had entered treatment between 1970 & 1980 at the Blue Cross Social Center in Bergen, Norway, to determine their current alcohol consumption, use of drugs, & psychosocial functioning. The interview data were supplemented by medical & police records. Childhood experiences such as having had a mentally disturbed father, a violent mother, &/or an unstable childhood environment were associated with a poor total outcome score. The same was true for alcohol abuse & violence in partner during the follow up period. Women whose children had been removed from the home by social authorities during the follow up period also had a poor outcome. Destructive patterns of interaction experienced in family of origin may repeat themselves in adult life in relationship with partner & children. The successful treatment of F alcoholics requires modification of these behavioral patterns, as well as drinking behavior. 2 Tables, 25 References. Modified HA.

88T2899

Hernandez, Anthony C. R. & Rabow, Jerome (Dept Sociology U California, Los Angeles 90024), Passive and Assertive Student Interventions in Public and Private Drunken Driving Situations, ♦ U Journal of Studies on Alcohol, 1987, 48, 3, May, 269-271.

† The types & # of interventions used to prevent drunken driving across 4 different locations are examined. In a 1980 questionnaire survey of 247 U of California, Los Angeles, students, 97 Rs indicated that someone had attempted to prevent them from driving under the influence (DUI). Results suggest that the location of the drinking modestly influences the type of intervention, that the more assertive intervention has a higher success rate, & that private & more intimate gatherings promote less assertive interventions. Directions for further research are suggested. 1 Table, 14 References. Modified HA.

88T2900

Hoffman, Fred (Scientific Analysis Corp, PO Box 26642 Los Angeles CA 90026), An Alcoholism Program for Hispanics, Clinical Sociology Review, 1987, 5, 91-101.

† An alcoholism recovery home was established in Los Angeles, Calif, in 1983 for Mariel Cuban refugees, but it soon became apparent that client selection procedures & the program itself were inappropriate. A viable alternative was found with Hispanic Alcoholics Anonymous (AA), & the program was converted to this approach. Problems of professionalism & the clinical relationship to AA emerged. Clinical interventions are inappropriate in the AA context, but sociologists may adopt the ethnographer's role. Exploration of the transcultural adaptation of AA ideas for an Hispanic population proved therapeutic when clients were placed in roles such as collaborator & cultural informant. Sociologists involved with groups in which clinical roles are inappropriate may find subjective refuge in the role of ethnographic researcher. 11 References. Modified HA.

88T2901

Holder, Harold D. & Wallack, Lawrence (Human Ecology Instit, 211 N Columbia St Chapel Hill NC 27514), Contemporary Perspectives for Preventing Alcohol Problems: An Empirically-Derived Model,

Journal of Public Health Policy, 1986, 7, 3, autumn, 324-339.

† Modern society has had a tradition of viewing drinking problems, as parts of systems but as individual limitations, characteristics, or weaknesses. In this view, dominant images & approaches to drinking problems have their roots in machine-age thinking. The historical & philosophical roots of this mechanistic view of alcohol problems are reviewed & an alternative is suggested: a systems perspective which addresses the large & more complex network in which alcohol problems occur. It is also illustrated how a systems perspective can be applied in developing a conceptual model of alcohol use & misuse at the community level. 1 Figure, 37 References. Modified HA.

88T2902

Houts, Sandra S. (Pennsylvania State U, University Park 16802), Social Learning Theory and Food Behavior, * Dissertation Abstracts International: A The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 47, May, 4195-A.
Available from UMI, Ann Arbor MI, Order No. DA8705364.

88T2903

Hughes, John R., Gust, Steven W. & Pechacek, Terry F. (Dept Psychiatry Coll Medicine U Vermont, Burlington 05405), Prevalence Tobacco Dependence and Withdrawal, U The American Journal of Psychiatry, 1987, 144, 2, Feb, 205-208.

† In a survey of 1,006 middle-aged M smokers drawn from the general population of the Minneapolis/St. Paul (Minn) metropolitan area, 9 fulfilled the American Psychiatric Assoc's DSM-III criteria & 36% fulfilled K-O Lagerstrom's criteria for tobacco dependence ("Measure Degree of Physical Dependence to Tobacco Dependence with Reference to Individualization of Treatment," Addictive Behavior, 1978, 3, 2, 241). Among the 875 who had stopped smoking in the past for at least 24 hours, 21% fulfilled DSM-III criteria & 46% fulfilled the criteria for tobacco withdrawal. Concordance of results among the criteria for diagnosing tobacco dependence & withdrawal was low. These results suggest that the DSM-II criteria for tobacco dependence are overinclusive, that there is little consensus among the definitions of tobacco dependence & withdrawal. 2 Tables, 16 References. HA.

88T2904

Hughes, John R., Hatsukami, Dorothy K., Mitchell, James F. & Dahlgren, Lisa A. (Dept Psychiatry Coll Medicine U Vermont, Burlington 05405), Prevalence of Smoking among Psychiatric Outpatients, U The American Journal of Psychiatry, 1986, 143, 8, 993-997.

† Questionnaire & survey data collected between 1980 & 1982 indicate that the prevalence of smoking among psychiatric outpatients (N = 1,441) from the U of Minnesota Medical Center was significantly higher among either local or national population-based samples (N = 1,441, 17,000) (52% vs 30% & 33%). The higher prevalence was not associated with the age, sex, marital status, SES, alcohol use, coffee use, or institutionalization of the psychiatric patients. Smoking was especially prevalent among patients with schizophrenia (88%) or mania (70%) & among the more severely ill patients. Hypotheses are presented about why psychiatric patients are more likely to smoke & why they do not have a rate of smoking-induced illnesses. 2 Tables, 1 Figure, 44 References.

88T2905

Hunt, Dana, Spunt, Barry, Lipton, Douglas, Goldsmith, Douglas, Strug, David, The Costly Bonus: Cocaine Related Crime among Methadone Treatment Clients, Advances in Alcohol and Substance Abuse, 1986, 6, 2, winter, 107-122.

† The relationship between the use of cocaine & criminal activity among 368 current methadone maintenance clients & 142 narcotics users in treatment is examined based on interview data & ethnographic material collected in 1981/82 in 3 US states. Findings include an increase in cocaine use among methadone clients in the last 10 years & the indication that cocaine plays an increasingly important role in the criminal activity of both methadone clients & users not in treatment. A direct relationship is found between escalating use of cocaine & increasing involvement in crime. The relationship is related to properties of the drug itself, its & the lifestyle associated with cocaine use. 5 Tables, 26 References.

88T2906

Kaye, Michael, Yaffe, Fred L. & Willis, Cynthia E. (School Washburn U, Topeka KS 66621), Legal and Psychological Implications of DWI Roadblocks: Emotional Reaction to Roadblock Situations,

88T2923

Wilmanek, Richard W. & Cheloha, Randall (Dept Sociology U North Dakota, Grand Forks 58202). Women's Roles and Problem Drinking across the Lifespan. Am Social Problems, 1987, 34, 3, June, 231-248

* Data from a 1981 national survey (N = 917 Fs) show that women's problem drinking is associated with different configurations of roles at different ages. For women drinkers under age 65, risks of problem drinking increase with age-specific patterns of role deprivation, eg. the lack or loss of marital, employment, & childrearing roles. The demands of multiple roles do not appear to be a major cause of women's problem drinking at any age. Close role relationships with other drinkers may become a more important factor in risks of problem drinking among women after age 50. The findings demonstrate the need for age-specific analyses of the effects of women's roles & role relationships on patterns of problem drinking. 4 Tables, 88 References. HA

88T2924

Wodarski, John S. (School Social Work U Georgia, Ath 30602). A Social Learning Approach to Teaching Adolescents about Alcohol and Driving: A Multiple Variable Follow-Up Evaluation. Journal of Behavior Therapy and Experimental Psychiatry, 1987, 18, 1, Mar, 51-60

‡ Previously reported data have demonstrated the effectiveness of Teams-Games-Tournaments (TGT) alcohol education program (Wodarski, J. S., & Lenhart, S. D., Alcohol Education by the Teams-Games-Tournaments Method, Minneapolis, Minn: Burgess Publishing, 1982). Here, a report is made on the follow-up effects of the program compared with instruction & no-instruction control groups (N not given). Follow-up assessment scale data indicate that the TGT students maintained previous positive changes while the traditional & no-instruction groups showed little or no change. Issues in the follow-up of students briefly discussed. 30 References. Modified AA

EUROPA ETHNICA

44. Jg. NATIONALITÄTENFRAGEN
Année QUESTIONS ETHNIQUES
Volume PROBLEMS OF NATIONALITIES

BRAUMÜLLER

A Quarterly for Problems of Nationalities

Containing Official News of the Federal Union of European Nationalities

and

the International Institute of Ethnic Groups' Rights and Regionalism

Annual subscription price

ATS 350,-

Address of the Editor:

WILHELM BRAUMÜLLER, Universitäts-Verlagsbuchhandlung

Ges.m.b.H.

A-1092 Vienna, Servitengasse 5 drinking among Coll students, were investigated with questionnaire data & official data from the school ($N = 866$ students, the majority of whom were aged 18-20 & residing in campus facilities). Results indicate that students are at greater risk for problem drinking if they are: (1) from Gentile religious traditions as compared with Jews (as was the case with previous generations of students); (2) not strongly attached to a particular faith; or (3) the child of an alcohol abuser. In addition to presenting "at risk" categories for students, the intergenerational transmission of alcohol problems that can occur specifically through the influence of parental religion is also analyzed. In particular, parental religion is related to these at-risk categories, suggesting that characteristics of a parent's faith may have multiple paths of impact on the young collegian's drinking experience. 8 Tables, 1 Figure, 29 References. Modified HA.

88T2914

Rocha-Silva, Lee (ISODEM Human Sciences Research Council, Private Bag X41 Pretoria 0002 Republic South Africa). Towards a More Detailed Measurement of Quantity and Frequency of Alcohol Intake in Whites in the Republic of South Africa. ♦ Suid-Afrikaanse Tydskrif vir Sociologie/The South African Journal of Sociology, 1987, 18, 4, Nov, 133-138.

¶ A detailed examination of the quantity & frequency of alcohol consumption among the white population of the Republic of South Africa. In hopes of refining previous measures of alcohol intake, a fixed choice questionnaire was designed on the Khavari Alcohol Test (KAT) ([Khavari, K. A. & Faber, P. D. "A Profile Instrument for the Quantification and Assessment of Alcohol Consumption." Journal of Studies on Alcohol, 1978, 39, 1525-1539). It permits a detailed analysis of types of beverages consumed (wine, beer, & spirits) & variability in ingestion over time & across different demographic factors (eg. age, gender, income, & marital status). Loglinear analysis of data obtained from a multistage probability sample of 390 adults during interviews in 1982 permits a more comprehensive picture of alcohol consumption than has previously been available. 5 Tables, 20 References. K. Hyatt.

88T2915

Rosecrance, John (PO Box 7000 Suite 416, South Lake Tahoe, CA 95705). Adapting to Failure: The Case of Horse Race Gamblers. Journal of Gambling Behavior, 1986, 2, 2, fall/winter, 81-94.

¶ An examination of the strategies used by horse race gamblers to deal with the consequences of monetary losses. Analysis of participant observation data, drawn from horse race track betting groups in Los Angeles, Calif., & New Orleans, La., reveals that the implementation of appropriate strategies largely determines whether gamblers can maintain participation. While these strategies are specialized, they are similar in principle to those used by non horse players. 71 References. Modified HA.

88T2916

Rosenthal, Richard J. (435 North Roxbury Dr Suite 407, Beverly Hills, CA 90210). The Pathological Gambler's System for Self-Deception. Journal of Gambling Behavior, 1986, 2, 2, fall/winter, 108-120.

¶ Many pathological gamblers fit the criteria for narcissistic personality disorder, while most show prominent narcissistic features. The building blocks of this kind of personality are described: the primitive defense mechanism of splitting, projection, idealization & devaluation, omnipotence & denial. The types of deception & self-deception observed in the clinical setting are offered as examples of these mechanisms. For therapy to be successful, it is suggested that four areas require special understanding: (1) the patients' omnipotence, (2) the confusion over boundary issues, (3) their idealization of destructiveness, & (4) their lying. 15 References. HA.

88T2917

Schilit, Rebecca (School Social Work Arizona State U, Tempe 85287). Childhood Social Support Deficits of Alcoholic Women. ♦ Social Casework, 1986, 67, 10, Dec, 579-586.

¶ Childhood social support deficits of alcoholic women were studied by comparing data from standardized interviews conducted with 101 alcoholic women from southeast Mich. & a control group of 137 nonalcoholic women. Alcoholic women reported feeling less comfortable with, & experienced less support from, both family & peer group than did the control group. 2 Tables. HA.

88T2918

Snell, William E., Jr., Bell, Sharyn S. & Hawkins, Raymond C., II (Dept. Psychology Southeast Missouri State U, Cape Girardeau 63701). Alcohol and Drug Use in Stressful Times: The Influence of the Masculine Role and Sex-Related Personality Attributes. Sex Roles, 1987, 16, 7-8, Apr, 359-373.

¶ A study of the way in which the relationship between stress & substance use is moderated by the masculine role, & by socially desirable & undesirable masculine-instrumental & feminine-expressive personality attributes based on questionnaire data from M & F U. students $N = 56$. The results indicated that during stressful episodes men characterized by socially undesirable instrumental personality attributes reported using tranquilizers & sedatives. By contrast, it was found that during stressful times, women characterized by success preoccupation reported less use of mind altering drugs & more use of tranquilizers & sedatives. In addition, it was found that socially desirable expressive attributes served to buffer the impact of stressful experiences on women's use of alcohol. 1 Tables, 5 Figures, 33 References. Modified AA.

88T2919

Taber, Julian I., Russo, Angel M., Adkins, Bonnie J. & McCormick, Richard A. (Veterans Administration Medical Center, 116B 10001 East St Reno Nevada 89520). Ego Strength and Achievement Motivation in Pathological Gamblers. Journal of Gambling Behavior, 1986, 2, 2, fall/winter, 69-80.

¶ It is argued that there are a priori reasons to extract measures of ego strength & achievement motivation from the psychometric database routinely collected from inpatient pathological gamblers in order to clarify the meaning of these constructs & to evaluate their roles in personal organization. A sample of 57 Ss engaged in a Cleveland, Ohio, inpatient treatment program for pathological gamblers in 1981/82 was studied using an ego strength scale & 2 measures of achievement motivation. Compared to the standardization group norms on these instruments, pathological gamblers are significantly deficient in both ego strength, one type of achievement motivation. Clinical impressions of gamblers' treatment suggest that narcissistic characteristics are a major problem in treatment & that future research should attempt further detailed study of ego structure in order to refine treatment objectives. 46 References. Modified HA.

88T2920

van Harberden, P. (Hogeschool Tilburg, NL-5000, 1 Netherlands). The Helping-Method of Alcoholics Anonymous. Disertation Abstracts International / European Abstracts, 1987, 48, 2, summer, 288. Text in Dutch. Unavailable from UMI, reference copy at Dutch University Libraries.

88T2921

van Wormer, Katherine (Dept. Sociology, Social Work Winona St U, MN 55987). Alcohol Abuse Interventions: A Review of the Literature. ♦ Small Group Behavior, 1987, 18, 2, May, 254-268.

¶ A comprehensive summary of relevant literature in alcohol abuse intervention, examining reoccurring themes & approaches in the literature & discussing implications for counselors practicing in the field. The psychodynamic vs. Alcoholics Anonymous-oriented disease treatment modalities are described, as are attempts to synthesize these elements in light of economic & socialization aspects; group intervention is overwhelmingly the treatment of choice. Journal reports, academic & popular, describe the wide range of techniques & approaches available. There is a need, however, for an extensive & comprehensive source to compile available data & to organize the material that is being produced. 33 References. Modified AA.

88T2922

van Wormer, Katherine (Community Alcohol Center, Longview WA 98632). The Sociology of Alcoholism Counseling: A Social Work Perspective. ♦ Journal of Sociology and Social Welfare, 1986, 3, Sept, 643-656.

¶ Still a field largely dominated by counselors who derive their status more from personal attributes—the fact of being recovered alcoholics rather than from achievement of impersonally applied standards, chemical dependency counseling is in a state of flux. Recent developments in the field are examined, with special emphasis on roles for social workers. 166 References. HA.

2100 social problems and social welfare

43 social gerontology

88T2925

Achenbaum, W. Andrew (Instit Gerontology U Michigan, Ann Arbor 48109-2007). Can Gerontology Be a Science?, Journal of Aging Studies, 1987, 1, 1, spring, 3-18

* During the last half-century, research on aging has become more scientific in its self-representations. Paradoxically, however, it is not at all self-evident that gerontology can flourish as a comprehensive science. Highlighting major trends in the internal & external history of the field's evolution reveals why this is so. Yet, retrospective analysis also provides a vehicle for creating a science of gerontology driven by cumulative, synthetic theory-building. 45 References. HA

88T2926

Beers, Mark H. (Division Aging Harvard Medical School, Boston MA 02115). Geriatric Literature: New Texts for Old Problems, Journal of Cross-Cultural Gerontology, 1987, 2, 3, July, 293-296

* A review essay on the World Health Organization's (WHO) The Uses of Epidemiology in the Study of the Elderly (Geneva, 1984), the WHO's Drugs for the Elderly (Copenhagen, 1985), Roland W. Moskowitz's & Marie R. Haug's Arthritis and the Elderly (New York: Springer, 1986), Yasukazu Tanaka's The Pathology of the Extremely Aged (Tokyo: Ishiyaku Euro America, Inc., 1984 [see listings in IRPS No. 41]). The WHO monograph on epidemiology is especially welcome because the elderly have previously been excluded from epidemiologic studies. This brief work includes data on the demographics of aging, & a review of recent literature. The WHO monograph on drugs is notably less successful, the principles of drug use among the old & a list of some drugs commonly prescribed for the elderly are included. Moskowitz's & Haug's work adds little to the existing knowledge of rheumatology & gerontology. In contrast, Tanaka's report on the autopsies of 20 centenarians is excellent in every way. 4 References. F. Rasmussen

88T2927

Chen, Paul C. Y. (Dept Social & Preventive Medicine U Malaya, 59100 Kuala Lumpur Malaysia). Family Support and the Health of the Elderly Malaysians, Journal of Cross-Cultural Gerontology, 1987, 2, 2, Apr, 187-193

* An interview study of 1,001 noninstitutionalized elderly persons in peninsular Malaysia. Focus is on their satisfaction with family support & their perceptions of the impact of family support on their health. Results indicate that most of the Rs are content with the extent of social contact with family & friends. However, dissatisfaction increases with age in both sexes. No Ur-Ru differences are found. The need for expanded social services for those elderly who require institutional assistance is discussed. 5 Tables, 8 References. F. Rasmussen

88T2928

Clark, Phillip G. (Program Gerontology U Rhode Island, Kingston 02881). Individual Autonomy, Cooperative Empowerment, and Planning for Long-Term Care Decision Making, Journal of Aging Studies, 1987, 1, 1, spring, 65-76

* Advance planning by the elderly for long-term care decisions promises to enhance personal responsibility & autonomy while improving their quality of life. Such planning becomes an extension of the concepts of client empowerment & self-care & is based on the ethical principles of individual autonomy & freedom of choice. These have clear implications for the content & process of advance planning, including the activities of effective deliberation & moral reflection. A sense of self-respect & the provision of care-provider support & social resources become key ingredients in this process, leading to the development of the concept of cooperative empowerment. Broader risk assessment methodologies are proposed to encourage the planning process, which can be given direction by the development of a personal planning guide & workshops. Attention must be drawn particularly to the importance of human values at the core of personal decisions & life plans. 41 References. HA

88T2929

Cox, Carole & Gelfand, Donald E. (4138 Red Bandana Way, Ellicott

City MD 21043). Familial Assistance, Exchange and Satisfaction among Hispanic, Portuguese, and Vietnamese Ethnic Elderly, Journal of Cross-Cultural Gerontology, 1987, 2, 3, July, 241-255

* The exchanges of services & assistance patterns of Hispanic, Portuguese, & Vietnamese immigrant elderly with their children are examined using interview data from 100 Rs in each group. The results indicate that patterns of assistance vary significantly between groups, as do parental expectations & satisfaction. Familial interaction patterns & their relation to acculturation & the demands of immigration are discussed. 5 Tables, 27 References. Modified HA

88T2930

Crystal, Stephen (Instit Health Care Rutgers U, New Brunswick NJ 08903). Elder Abuse: The Latest "Crisis", U The Public Interest, 1987, 88, summer, 56-66

* Elder abuse has emerged as a major issue of the 1980s in the US, though one as yet for which there is little empirical evidence. Elder abuse laws are typically modeled on child abuse laws, however, elder abuse is an ill-defined concept, & crucial differences exist between children & the elderly, notably that the elderly are presumed to be responsible adults able to make decisions for themselves. Most states have mandatory reporting laws that appear to conflict, eg, with MD-patient confidentiality. Elder abuse laws typically assume that the elderly as such are disabled. Such laws are not often enforced, which has saved them from constitutional challenges, they appear to be more a symbolic gesture than a genuine response to the needs of the elderly. W. H. Stoddard

88T2931

Duchesne, Lorraine, Juteau, Danielle & Laurin, Nicole (Dept sociologie U Montreal, Quebec H3C 3J7). La Longévité des religieuses au Québec, de 1901 à 1971 (The Longevity of Nuns in Quebec, 1901-1971), ♦ Sociologie et Sociétés, 1987, 19, 1, Apr, 145-152 (FRE)

* The longevity of a sample of 3,700 nuns who lived in 24 religious communities in Quebec during 1901-1971 is examined, based on statistical data. Comparisons are made with data for the general population of Fs in Quebec, & with the findings of Con J. Fecher concerning US nuns ("Health and Longevity of Today's Sister," Social Compass, 1961, 8, 347-354). It is found that the life expectancy of nuns is similar in both countries, & is higher than that of the original F population. 7 Tables, 7 References. C. Waters

88T2932

Ferlie, E. (U Kent, Canterbury CT2 7NZ England). Efficiency Improving Innovation in the Community Care of the Elderly, * Dissertation Abstracts International, C European Abstracts, 1987, 48, 2, summer, 287

Unavailable from UMI; contact the degree-granting university.

88T2933

Gary-Williams, Gene Elizabeth (U Maryland, College Park 20742). Well-Being of Retired Black Males Measured by Selected Psychosocial Variables, * Dissertation Abstracts International, A The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 1, July, 222-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8709068.

88T2934

Gibson, D. M. (School Humanities Griffith U, Nathan Queensland 4111 Australia). Interaction and Well-Being in Old Age: Is It Quantity or Quality That Counts?, International Journal of Aging and Human Development, 1986-1987, 24, 1, 29-40

* The relationship between two dimensions of social interaction—the quantity & quality of social contact & psychological well-being among the elderly is explored, controlling for the key antecedent variables of health & income. Structured interviews were conducted with a random sample of 1,050 persons aged 65+ living in Sydney, Australia, using more comprehensive indicators of social interaction than in previous research. Results indicate that it is the R's assessment of the adequacy of

SOCIOLOGY OF HEALTH & ILLNESS

Edited by Anne Murcott

'No-one interested in the sociology of health and illness can afford not to subscribe to this journal. Its articles as well as its reviews are a guide to the cutting edge of the field.'

IRVING KENNETH ZOLA, BRANDEIS UNIVERSITY

Sociology of Health & Illness is an international journal which publishes sociological articles on all aspects of health, illness and medicine—both theoretical and methodological. Although the journal's prime commitment is sociological it also carries contributions in related disciplines including anthropology, history, community medicine, education, social psychology, economics, law, and politics where these also have a sociological interest.

Articles in Volume 9, 1987 include the following:

Social constructionism and medical sociology: a reply to M R Bury

MALCOLM NICOLSON and CATHLEEN McLAUGHLIN

Coalitions and conflict in the National Health Service: some implications for general management

DAVID THOMPSON

Teamwork, information control and therapeutic effectiveness: a tale of two therapeutic communities

N P McKEGANEY and M J BLOOR

Illness as adjustment: a methodology and conceptual framework

ALAN RADLEY and RUTH GREEN

Sociology of Health & Illness is published in March, June, September, and December

Subscription Rates Volume 9, 1987

Individuals £20.75 (UK) £25.50 (overseas) US$42.50 (N. America & Japan)

Institutions £32.00 (UK) £40.00 (overseas) US$65.00 (N. America & Japan)

☐ Please enter my subscription to Sociology of Health & Illness/send me a sample copy

☐ I enclose cheque/money order made payable to Basil Blackwell

☐ Please charge my Access/American Express/Barclaycard/Diners Club/Mastercharge/Visa account number:

..... Signature

Card expiry date

☐ For payments via the National Giro Bank, the Basil Blackwell account number is 236 8053

Address

If address registered with card company differs from above, please give details.
Please return this form together with your payment if applicable to

Basil Blackwell • Journals Subscription Dept.,
108 Cowley Road, Oxford OX4 1JF, UK, or, Journals Dept., Box 1320,
Murray Hill Station, NY 10156, USA.

as an interaction term that includes marital status & age. Given the current political economy of old age institutions, it may be too much to expect this segment of the health care system to be organized "rationally." 5 Tables, 23 References. HA

88T2945

Keith, Pat M. (Iowa State U., Ames 50011). The Social Context and Resources of the Unmarried in Old Age. International Journal of Aging and Human Development, 1986, 23, 2, 81-96.

* A model of singleness in later life in the US was developed to show how the social context may influence the personal & social resources of older, unmarried persons, based on 1982/83 official statistics. The unmarried (especially the divorced) will be an increasing proportion of the aged population in the future, & they will require more services than will the married. Role transitions of the unmarried over the life course, & finances, health, & social relationships of older singles are discussed with implications for practice & future research. 2 Tables, 1 Figure, 38 References. HA

88T2946

Kumagai, Fumie (Graduate School International Relations International U. Japan, Yamato-machi Minamiuonuma-gun Niigata-ken 949-72). Satisfaction among Rural and Urban Japanese Elderly in Three-Generation Families. Journal of Cross-Cultural Gerontology, 1987, 2, 3, July, 225-239.

* For the purpose of testing an assumption on the dual nature of aging in Japanese society, 3-generation adult families in Yamato-machi, a Rural town in Niigata Prefecture in northern Japan, & in Setagaya-ku, an Urban ward in Tokyo, are compared & contrasted. The average ages of each generation in the study were 85, 60, & 35, respectively. The findings reveal regional variation in basic demographic characteristics such as population density, family size, proportions of the elderly aged 65+ & 90+, prevalence of the 3-generation family households. This supports the existence of dual patterns of aging. The data also show significant differences by region in the levels of educational & standards of living of the elderly. However, measures of life satisfaction do not reveal significant Ru-Ur differences, perhaps because only 3-generation healthy families were interviewed. 1 Figure, 31 References. Modified HA

88T2947

Lee, Jik-Joen, Asian American Elderly: A Neglected Minority Group. Journal of Gerontological Social Work, 1986, 9, 4, summer, 103-116.

* Many existing public assumptions held by Anglo social workers about Asian-American elderly are misleading. These socially & economically disadvantaged people are systematically excluded both culturally & structurally from professional social services. The negative historical experiences, racist legislation, structural difficulties, & cultural barriers that have prohibited the Asian-American elderly from obtaining needed social services since the mid-1800s are studied. 19 References. HA

88T2948

Mahajan, Amarjit (Dept Sociology Panjab U., Chandigarh 160014 Union Territory India). Problems of the Aged in Unorganised Sector: A Case Study of Old Age Pensioners in Haryana State. ♦ Guru Nanak Journal of Sociology, 1986, 7, 2, Oct., 109-123.

* An examination of the situation of the aged in India based on 1981 interview data with 749 old age pensioners in Haryana State. The data indicate that the Uc family no longer acts as a support system for the elderly. Though most of the Rs were free of serious ailments, they were destitute due to lack of suitable employment opportunities. Appropriate reforms are suggested. 22 References. Modified HA

88T2949

Mangum, Wiley P. (Dept Gerontology U South Florida, Tampa 33620). But Not in My Neighborhood: Community Resistance to Housing for the Elderly. Journal of Housing for the Elderly, 1985, 3, 3-4, fall-winter, 101-119.

* Reactions of community residents to proposed or built Section 202/8 apartment complexes in 2 communities in & near Tampa, Fla, were studied through observation of 2 public hearings conducted in 1981, & data gathered in 1982 through questionnaires mailed to a probability sample of community householders (N = 139). Findings indicated that the Rs were about evenly divided between positive & negative reactions to the housing facilities. A discriminant analysis revealed that those who reacted negatively tended to be more satisfied with their own homes, to have lived longer in their homes, & to be less satisfied with their neighborhoods. Recommendations for avoiding community resistance to housing for the elderly were presented. 5 Tables, 9 References. HA

88T2950

Mitteneess, Linda S. (Medical Anthropology Program U California, San Francisco 94143). So What Do You Expect When You're 85?: Urinary Incontinence in Late Life. Research in the Sociology of Health Care, 1987, 6, 177-219.

* An ethnographic examination of the social context in which urinary incontinence occurs among the community-living elderly, the meanings attached to urinary incontinence, & the management strategies used to maintain life in the community. Fieldwork with 30 incontinent residents of subsidized apartments for seniors over a 6-month period enabled the identification of 6 lay categories of bladder control disturbance: excessive frequency, nighttime urination, nighttime accidents, lack of warning time, dribbling, & urination when sneezing or coughing. Every informant reported more than one of these types of bladder control disturbance, but most believed incontinence to be a normal part of the aging process & managed their incontinence largely without the assistance of health professionals. Incontinence was redefined from a medical definition of involuntary loss of urine to a social or personal definition that focused on the "visibility" of urine loss. The social consequences of incontinence included increasing social isolation & strong negative social sanctions when incontinence could no longer be kept secret. The linkage of incontinence & incompetence in late life is also discussed. 52 References. Modified AA

88T2951

Nissinen, Aulikki, Caiado, Jono, Tuomilehto, Jaukko, Miguel, J. Pereira, Kivela, Sirkka-Liisa, Geboers, Jeff & Puska, Pekka (Epidemiological Dept National Public Health Instit, Helsinki SF-Finland). Comparison of Health Status between Portuguese and Finnish Elderly People. Journal of Cross-Cultural Gerontology, 1987, 2, 3, July, 277-291.

* A comparison of the living situation, morbidity, & mortality & related factors of residents aged 65-74 in eastern Finland (N = about 450) & in Lisbon, Portugal (N = about 104) using government health data & follow-up questionnaires. The results show that elderly Finns have more facilities at home than Portuguese. Diabetes, stroke, & chronic bronchitis were among illnesses most prevalent in Portugal, but cardiac failure was more common in Finland. Hypertension & related drug treatment were equally prevalent in both countries, but diastolic blood pressure levels are clearly higher in Portugal. Total cardio-vascular disease mortality in this age group is higher in Finland among Ms but lower among Fs, stroke mortality is higher but ischaemic heart disease is lower among both genders in Portugal. 10 Tables, 3 Figures, 12 References. Modified HA

88T2952

Payne, Barbara P. (Gerontology Center Georgia State U., Athens 30303-3083). Sex and the Elderly: No Laughing Matter in Religion. Journal of Religion & Aging, 1986, 3, 1-2, fall-winter, 141-152.

* Two persistent myths about aging are that sex is for the young & religion is for the old. Contrary to these popular beliefs, adults do not necessarily turn to religion as they age, nor do they lose sexual interest or cease to be sexually active. The gender ratio, marital status, & sexuality of the elderly in the US are examined in relation to religious beliefs & church/synagogue participation, drawing on statistical evidence & various studies. Five demographic & social changes related to sex & aging & their implications for the church/synagogue are discussed: (1) from youthful to adult congregations; (2) from M to F congregations; (3) from married to single; (4) from either/or to multiple choice lifestyles, & (5) from exclusive to inclusive attitudes. Modified HA

88T2953

Poertner, John (School Social Welfare U Kansas, Lawrence 66044). Estimating the Incidence of Abused Older Persons. Journal of Gerontological Social Work, 1986, 9, 3, spring, 3-15.

* The problem of abuse & neglect of the elderly, though now receiving the attention it merits, is likely to increase significantly as the elderly population continues to grow. Mailed questionnaire data from a statewide sample of service providers are used to estimate the incidence of abuse & neglect in Ill. Incidence rates per 1,000 elderly are 50.8 overall, 26.3 for passive neglect, 11.2 for verbal or emotional abuse, 10.5 for intentional or severe neglect, & 2.8 for physical abuse. Policies for dealing with abuse & neglect should differentiate carefully among these subtypes. 5 Tables, 10 References. Modified HA his or her social contact, rather than the amount of social contact per se, that is a critical determinant of well being in old age. 2 Tables, 35 References. Modified HA

88T2945

Gratton, Brian (Dept History Arizona State U, Tempe 85287). Familism among the Black and Mexican-American Elderly: Myth or Reality? Journal of Aging Studies 1987, 1, 1, spring, 19-32.

¶ Familism proposes that the black & Mexican American elderly enjoy special advantages through the economic & social support of extended families. Review of the literature raises serious reservations about this hypothesis, especially for the black aged. Analysis of 1984/85 census data on households indicates that older Spanish origin IVs are distinctive for extending their own households to children & grandchildren, bearing child-care & housekeeping responsibilities into old age. Rather than being products of historical minority cultures, unusual family & household patterns are probably consequences of economic dislocation, migration, & urbanization & thus reflect SE need in minority populations. Familistic theory may obscure the recognition of such need. 3 Tables, 63 References. HA

88T2946

Greenberg, Jan Steven (U Minnesota, Minneapolis 55455). Aging-Fathers' and Aging-Mothers' Perceptions of Relationships with Their Adult-Children. * Dissertation Abstracts International 4, The Humanities and Social Sciences 1987, 48, 1, July, 223-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8710298.

88T2947

Gul, Shi-xun, Li, Li-kui, Shen, Zhe-ning, Di, Jue-xin, Gu, Qun-zhong, Chen, Yang-ming & Qian, Fang (Instit Population Research East China Normal U, Shanghai People's Republic China). Status and Needs of the Elderly in Urban Shanghai: Analysis of Some Preliminary Statistics. Journal of Cross Cultural Gerontology 1987, 2, 2, Apr, 171-186.

¶ In 1982, 12.9% of the total U1 population of Shanghai, People's Republic of China, were age 60+. Information concerning the status & needs of the elderly was sparse until a 471,000 sample survey of 6,715 elderly in Shanghai at the end of 1985. Some results of the research are presented & issues are raised that should be addressed by officials when planning for the needs of the elderly. 13 References. Modified HA

88T2948

Harel, Zev (Center Applied Gerontological Research Cleveland State U, OH 44115). Older Americans Act-Related Homebound Aged: What Difference Does Racial Background Make? Journal of Gerontological Social Work 1986, 9, 4, summer, 133-143.

¶ Racial differences in well being among 440 elderly receiving home-based services connected with Older Americans Act funded nutrition sites in the metropolitan Cleveland, Ohio, area are examined. Analysis of structured interview data indicates that, when compared with white home bound aged, black aged receiving home-based services have more limited economic resources, & live in more impoverished neighborhoods, are more impaired in their health & functional status, have fewer social resources, & have more limited knowledge of & access to services. Nonetheless, service utilization appears similar for both groups, & the life perspective of blacks is somewhat higher than that of whites. 17 References. HA

88T2949

Hatch, Laurie Russell (U Washington, Seattle 98195). A Structural Analysis of Men and Women in Retirement. * Dissertation Abstracts International 4, The Humanities and Social Sciences 1987, 47, 12(1), June, 4520-A.

Available from UMI, Ann Arbor MI. Order No. DA8706581.

88T2940

Holmes, Lowell D. (Dept Anthropology Wichita State U, KS 67208). Cultural Values and Cultural Change: A Cross-Cultural Analysis of Aging and Age Status. Journal of Cross-Cultural Gerontology 1987, 2, 2, Apr, 195-200.

¶ A review essay on Aging and Its Transformations: Moving toward Death in Pacific Societies (Counts, Dorothy Ayers & Counts, David R. (Eds), Lanham, Md: University Press of America, 1985), Colleen Leahy Johnson's Growing Up and Growing Old in Italian-American

Families (New Brunswick, NJ: Rutgers U Press, 1985); & Erdman Palmer's & Daisaku Maeda's The Honorable Elders Revisited (Durham NC: Duke U Press, 1985 (see listings in IRPS No. 41)). The work edited by Counts & Counts is a useful collection of essays by anthropologists employing field data acquired in New Zealand, the Marquesas, Marshall, & Caroline Islands, & Papua New Guinea regarding the process of aging & the changes that accompany it, & on the process of dying. Johnson's volume is an excellent study of the power of culture to ensure high status of the elderly in the context of a US ethnic group. Palmer's & Maeda's work is an update of an earlier book (reference not given) dealing with the status of the aged in modern Japan, showing the elderly of Japan are very well cared for & respected by their families, their society, & their government. 11 References. F. Rasmussen

88T2941

Hwalek, Melanie A. & Sengstock, Mary C., Assessing the Probability of Abuse of the Elderly: Toward Development of a Clinical Screening Instrument. Journal of Applied Gerontology 1986, 5, 2, Dec, 153-173.

¶ Over 100 proposed items were examined for their predictive value in discriminating cases of elderly abuse/neglect from comparable cases of elderly persons known not to be victims in order to compile a clinical screening instrument. Nine US social/health agencies collected data from case files & interviews to describe 50 cases of abuse/neglect & 4 demographically matched control cases. Through a series of discriminant function data reduction analyses, 9 items were identified that were 94% accurate in classifying cases into abuse/neglect & control groups. Implications of these findings for future research & program planning are discussed. 7 Tables, 25 References. Modified HA

88T2942

Isaksen, Lise Widding. Om krenking av den personlige bliferdighet. En studie av et nabonettverk i et trygdeboligmiljø (Violations of Personal Modesty: A Study of Neighborhood in a Public Housing Estate for the Elderly). Tidsskrift for samfunnsforskning 1987, 28, 1, 33-46. (NOR)

¶ An analysis of social networks among neighbors living in public housing for the elderly in Norway. Initially, residents in the project were self-sufficient & healthy, but with aging & declining health, the established network activity declined, & social activities formerly organized by the residents themselves ceased. Some social activities are provided by the local charity, but the number of residents in need of extensive help & care has increased, & the shortage of public health services has led to serious problems for those who need assistance as well as their neighbors who try to help them. 18 References. Modified HA

88T2943

Johnson, D. Paul & Mullins, Larry C. (International Exchange Center Gerontology U South Florida, Tampa 33620). Growing Old and Lonely in Different Societies: Toward a Comparative Perspective. Journal of Cross-Cultural Gerontology 1987, 2, 3, July, 257-275.

¶ The main argument is that the subjective experience of loneliness among older people must be analyzed in relation to the overall value system of society or the subcultural values of particular segments of society. Cultural or subcultural value systems are contrasted in terms of whether they give priority to individualistic values or to collective values such as family or community bonds. These differences in value systems result in important differences in people's social contacts & socioemotional bonding experiences as well as their level of satisfaction with a given level of social relationships. It is suggested that these differences must be looked at in relation to basic human needs for social bonding as well as need for individuation. The concept of the loneliness threshold is introduced to identify the level of social contacts that individuals desire to avoid the experience of loneliness or emotional isolation. 37 References. HA

88T2944

Kart, Cary S. & Palmer, Neil M. (U Toledo, OH 43606). How Do We Explain Differences in the Level of Care Received by the Institutionalized Elderly? Journal of Applied Gerontology 1987, 6, 1, Mar, 53-66.

¶ Based on data from the 1977 National Nursing Home Survey of U nursing home residents aged 55+ (N = 6,626), an analysis is made of factors that may be useful in explaining differences in the level of care received by the institutionalized elderly. The final model employs a log approach to loglinear modeling & includes the direct effects of marital status, source of payment, age, sex, & number of chronic illnesses, as well

* The pattern of determinants of social service use among the Mexican-American elderly is analyzed by applying a causal model of social service utilization (Anderson, R., & Newman, F., "Societal & Individual Determinants of Medical Care Utilization in the United States," Milbank Memorial Fund Quarterly, 1973, 51, 95-124) to interview data obtained from a larger 1979/80 study of social service needs among elderly US Hispanics (N = 1,164). Results indicate that knowledge of social services, need for them, perceived health status, & income have direct effects on utilization. The major findings support those of past empirical research, & validate the applicability of a causal model. Implications for policy-makers & service providers are discussed. 2 Tables, 2 Figures, 42 References. Modified HA

88T2964

Uhlenberg, Peter (Dept Sociology U North Carolina, Chapel Hill 27514), How Old Is "Old Age?", U The Public Interest, 1987, 88, summer, 67-78

* US social programs & policies for the elderly have generally used chronological age as the criterion for eligibility to special benefits. Reasons for changing this criterion, & mechanisms for doing so, are explored given social & demographic changes that have occurred & are likely to occur, maintaining a fixed chronological age as the marker of old age is generating growing social & economic problems: the cost of supporting the old is increasing, the productivity of the old is declining, & the potential for generational conflict is growing. In response to this situation, it is proposed that the beginning of old age be viewed as a variable that can change over time in response to demographic changes. Alternative formulas for establishing a variable marker of old age, based on either life expectation or population age distribution are described, & implications of adopting these changes are discussed. 1 Table. Modified AA

88T2965

Valentine, Deborah & Cash, Tim (Coll Social Work U South Carolina, Columbia 29208), A Definitional Discussion of Elder Maltreatment, Journal of Gerontological Social Work, 1986, 9, 3, spring, 17-28

* Currently, there is no uniform definition of elder mistreatment that has been generally accepted. As a first step toward achieving such a definition, a differentiation is made between existing legal & social work definitions. A classification system for defining elder maltreatment from a social work perspective is proposed, which includes three major categories of maltreatment: abuse, neglect, & violation of legal rights. The use of this classification to guide assessment & intervention is considered. 12 References. Modified HA

88T2966

Vinokur-Kaplan, Diane & Bergman, Simon (School Social Work U Michigan, Ann Arbor 48109), Retired Israeli Social Workers: Work, Volunteer Activities, and Satisfaction among Retired Professionals, Journal of Gerontological Social Work, 1986, 9, 4, summer, 73-86

* A mail questionnaire returned by 147 retired professional Israeli social workers in 1979/80 revealed a gradual withdrawal from paid work & increased participation in social welfare volunteer work. Rs' satisfaction with retirement in general was related to their income & health status, while satisfaction with their retirement activities as retired social workers was related to these variables as well as their work status. Further cross-cultural comparisons of retired professionals & other workers are urged. 1 Table, 24 References. HA

88T2967

White, O. Z. (Dept Sociology Trinity U, San Antonio TX 78284), Communities within Communities, Journal of Religion & Aging, 1986, 3, 1-2, fall-winter, 193-205

* Several community assistance programs for elderly residents of San Antonio, Tex, are described. A discussion of the programs is based on Ferdinand Toennies's concept of G&G, & the satisfactions derived by the elderly from participating in programs that demonstrate some of those attributes described as "Gemeinschaft-like," as opposed to "Gesellschaft-like." Modified HA

88T2968

Wood, Juanita B., Hughes, Robert G. & Estes, Carroll L. (New School Social Research, New York NY 10011), Community Health Centers and the Elderly: A Potential New Alliance, U Journal of Community Health, 1986, 11, 2, summer, 137-146

* A review of the factors underlying the strategic advantage in expanding community health center (CHC) services to the elderly. Evolution of US federal policy toward CHCs is traced, & the response of the centers to the current policy is described. Data generated from telephone surveys of 816 Rs in 82 agencies in 1983/84 are analyzed. In response to federal policy changes, many agencies are promoting an autonomous existence & becoming competitive relative to clientele. These changes have altered the structure & mission of the CHCs. 3 Tables, 14 References. Modified HA

47 sociology of crime & victimology

88T2969

Brodt, Stephen J. (Ball State U, Muncie IN 47306), "Rape Panic": Definition of a Crime Problem and Community Response, U Free Inquiry in Creative Sociology, 1987, 15, 2, Nov, 183-187

* During fall 1984, a Coll campus in the Midwest experienced incidents of sexual assault that led to statewide concern. The role of the mass media in generating rape panic is explored on the basis of newspaper articles, city & campus police statistics, & interviews with individuals who were involved in some manner. It appears that the number of assaults is not unusually high, but that the media generated public belief in a high level of danger by defining the phenomenon as newsworthy. 1 Figure, 9 References. W H Stoddard

88T2970

Calathes, William (City U New York, NY 10021), Criminal Justice and Underdevelopment: A Case Study of the Jamaican Gun Court Act, U Dissertation Abstracts International, A The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 47, 12(1), June, 4515-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor MI. Order No. DA8708277.

88T2971

Carter, Daniel Lee, Prentky, Robert Alan, Knight, Raymond A., Vanderveer, Penny L. & Boucher, Richard J. (Research Dept Massachusetts Treatment Center, Box 554 Bridgewater 02324), Use of Pornography in the Criminal and Developmental Histories of Sexual Offenders, U Journal of Interpersonal Violence, 1987, 2, 2, June, 196-211

* Exposure to & use of pornography in the familial, developmental, & criminal histories of M sex offenders-38 rapists & 26 child molesters-incarcerated at the Massachusetts Treatment Center in Bridgewater were examined via questionnaire data. While both groups reported similar exposure to pornography in the home & during development, child molesters indicated significantly more exposure than rapists in adulthood & were significantly more likely both to use materials prior to & during their offenses & to employ pornography to relieve an impulse to act out. The findings are discussed with regard to the "catharsis hypothesis" & the role of pornography in the commission of sexual offenses for certain types of rapists & child molesters. 4 Tables, 41 References. Modified HA

88T2972

Coleman, James William (Dept Social Sciences California Polytechnic State U, San Luis Obispo 93407), Toward an Integrated Theory of White-Collar Crime, U American Journal of Sociology, 1987, 93, 2, Sept, 406-439.

* Etiological research on white-collar crime (WCC) is utilized to test the hypothesis that criminal behavior results from the confluence of appropriate motivation & opportunity. It is suggested that the interactionist theory of motivation basic to most of the social-psychological research on WCC helps in understanding WCC in terms of the offenders' symbolic construction of their social worlds; however, interactionist theory ultimately fails to explain the causes of WCC. It is argued that the origins of symbolic motivational patterns are to be found in the social structure of industrial capitalism & the culture of competition to which it gives rise. No theory of motivation, however sophisticated, is sufficient to explain the causes of WCC. An analysis of the patterns of opportunities presented to social actors in different structural positions in advanced capitalist nations is presented. 98 References. Modified HA

88T2954

Quadagno, Jill & Janzen, J. M. (Dept Sociology U Kansas, Lawrence 66045-2172). Old Age Security and the Family Life Course: A Case Study of Nineteenth-Century Mennonite Immigrants to Kansas. Journal of Aging Studies, 1987, 1, 1, spring, 33-49.

† A case study of the Mennonite family of Cornelius & Helena Richert Voht, who migrated from Russia to the Kansas plains in 1874, analyzes the role that religious & ethnic traditions & inheritance rules play in preserving family stability, providing security in old age, & shaping the family life course based on 35 years of family correspondence. It contributes to an understanding of the social determinants of life course change by illustrating how traditional Mennonite patterns of family organization & property transmission, formed during centuries of community life in Prussia & Russia, shaped the timing of life course transitions, & how the differing social, political, & economic conditions the immigrants encountered on the US frontier altered those traditional patterns. 4 Figures, 23 References. Modified HA.

88T2955

Reinhorz, Shulamit (Dept Sociology Brandeis U, Waltham MA 02254). The Embeddedness of Age: Toward a Social Control Perspective. Journal of Aging Studies, 1987, 1, 1, spring, 77-93.

† Two ways in which age is embedded in sociology & in society are discussed. Sociological theory & research have continuously developed ideas about age, & these ideas have been divided into macro- & microsociological perspectives. Age has been defined as chronology, a cultural object, a structural property of societies, & a social group. Four strands of sociological interest in age derived from these definitions are identified, & the way age is embedded in society is discussed. Integrating macro- & microsociological analyses, a rubric of social control is developed, suggesting that age-linked norms control individual behavior, emotions, & relations in the public domain. Biological processes, economic conditions, individual definitions, & the private sphere modify those norms. The interaction of these domains renders age norms flexible & subject to change. 50 References. HA.

88T2956

Rubinstein, Robert L. (Philadelphia Geriatric Center, 5101 Old York Rd PA 19141). The Construction of a Day by Elderly Widowers. International Journal of Aging and Human Development, 1986, 23, 3, 161-173.

† An examination of the way in which some elderly widowers living alone experientially organize time, based on 1981 interviews (N = 25) in Philadelphia, Pa. The results of arranging activities is placed along an experiential continuum, with the notion of a "day" as a central organizing focus & outlining the role of a "daily highlight" in organizing daily activities. The continuing role of bereavement, effects of living alone, & other factors may help structure this experiential continuum. 9 References. HA.

88T2957

Sangre, Walter H. (Center Population Studies Harvard U, Cambridge MA 02137). The Childless Elderly in Tiriki, Kenya, and Irigwe, Nigeria: A Comparative Analysis of the Relationship between Beliefs about Childlessness and the Social Status of the Childless Elderly. Journal of Cross-Cultural Gerontology, 1987, 2, 3, July, 201-223.

† Data from fieldwork in Tiriki Province, Kenya, in 1954-1956, 1961, & 1982, & Irigwe State, Nigeria, in 1963-1965 & 1980, reveal that these geographically & culturally disparate tribal groups both prescribe "parenthood" as a precondition for attainment of full adult SS & true elderhood. In Irigwe anyone of sound mind can achieve "parenthood" & therefore acceptance as an elder of high SS through foster parenthood & ritual parenthood. Foster parenthood does not suffice to affirm one's full adult & elder SS in Tiriki, however, making the social position of the elder with no living offspring very difficult. 7 References. Modified HA.

88T2958

Schuller, Tom (Dept Continuing Education U Warwick, Coventry CV4 7AL England). Second Adolescence? The Transition from Paid Employment. ♦ Work, Employment and Society, 1987, 1, 3, Sept, 352-370.

† An examination of the process by which men & women aged 50-65 retire from formal employment, based on analysis of interview data (N = 2,000 R-) & 2 case studies of workers leaving a hospital & an engineering plant in the London (England) borough of Greenwich. Results reveal that straightforward retirement is the experience of a diminishing proportion of the population. Ms in particular are experiencing considerable ambiguity. Implications both for the conception of the life cycle, & for social policy in response to labor market trends, are discussed. 4 Tables, 27 References. Modified AA.

88T2959

Sengstock, Mary C. & Barrett, Sara (Instit Gerontology Wayne State U, Detroit MI 48202). Elderly Victims of Family Abuse, Neglect, and Maltreatment: Can Legal Assistance Help?. Journal of Gerontological Social Work, 1986, 9, 3, spring, 43-61.

† An analysis of case record data from 30 cases of elder abuse, neglect, & maltreatment seen by attorneys in a legal aid agency in Detroit, Mich, between 1979 & 1981. Most of the victims suffered from more than one type of mistreatment. The most common form seen in the legal aid agency was financial abuse. Legal aid agencies can provide services other agencies cannot: court actions, noncourt actions that require the services of a lawyer, & nonlegal actions where an attorney can bring about action through the perceived threat of court action. 4 Tables, 18 References. Modified HA.

88T2960

Shifflett, Peggy A. & McIntosh, William A. (Dept Sociology Anthropology Radford U, VA 24142). Food Habits and Future Time: An Exploratory Study of Age-Appropriate Food Habits among the Elderly. International Journal of Aging and Human Development, 1986-1987, 24, 1, 1-17.

† An examination of future time perspective & its association with behavioral change, ie, good eating habits, among a random sample of 201 elderly participants in central Va nutrition sites. Demographic & social conditions under which a positive or negative future time may be associated with changes in food habits are explored using data from questionnaires, interviews, food diaries, & meal time observations. The findings suggest that the elderly make both positive & negative changes in their food habits that are associated with a positive or negative future time perspective. Influential demographic & social conditions include mode of affiliation, marital status changes, income, health status, & gender. Implications for developing programmatic interventions are discussed. 4 Tables, 39 References. Modified HA.

88T2961

Shostak, Arthur B. (Dept Psychology & Sociology Drexel U, Philadelphia PA 19104). Retirees as Technoguide: A New Role as Shaper and Makers of the Future. ♦ U Journal of Sociology and Social Welfare, 1986, 13, 2, June, 306-317.

† A discussion of the role of retirees as technoguides: paid or volunteer aides in the testing, evaluating, & adapting of new products & services to the needs of US elderly. The involvement of the elderly with modern technology is assessed & potential applications for new technologies in retirement living are surveyed. Limitations & problems facing the elderly in utilizing new technologies are evaluated. As technoguides, elderly persons could draw on decades of hard-earned insights to help evaluate new technologies, & they could provide invaluable feedback on innovations for seniors & society-at-large. F. Rasmussen.

88T2962

Simics, Andrei (Center Ur & Applied Anthropology U Southern California, Los Angeles 90089). Ethnicity as a Career for the Elderly: The Serbian-American Case. Journal of Applied Gerontology, 1987, 6, 1, Mar, 113-126.

† Fieldwork among elderly Serbian-Americans in northern Calif, 1981-1987, reveals that ethnicity for many assumes a greater importance in retirement & later life. It provides an alternative system of values to the of the US mainstream & a familiar social arena in which many of the skills learned in the larger society may be put to use. Moreover, ethnic knowledge gained during childhood can be reactivated, creating a sense of cultural continuity. In this respect, it is largely the elderly who have the time needed to maintain the complex institutions & associations that characterize the Serbian-Americans. Thus, there is a circular relationship between such core ethnics & the larger ethnic community in terms of fulfillment needs. 32 References. HA.

88T2963

Starrett, Richard A. & Decker, James T. (School Social Work Bar U, Miami Shores FL 33161). The Utilization of Social Services by the Mexican-American Elderly. Journal of Gerontological Social Work, 1986, 9, 4, summer, 87-101.

* An analysis of the recent drop in the US national index crime rate to assess the impact of changes in the age structure of the population. An age-standardization method is applied to data from the Uniform Crime Reports & the National Crime Survey, & additional data from the National Youth Survey & the Monitoring the Future Study are also considered. Results indicate that crime rates are falling, but that the downward trend began prior to the 1980-1984 period. Other age effects on the downward crime trend are considered, & crime trends forecasts to the year 2000 are presented. 2 Tables, 4 Figures, 30 References. Modified HA

88T2985

Wiener, Richard L. & Vodanovich, Stephen J. (Dept Psychology

Saint Louis U, MO 63103), The Evaluation of Culpability for Rape: A Model of Legal Decision Making, The Journal of Psychology, 1986, 120, 5, Sept, 489-500

* An analogy was borrowed from the law to develop a legal model of the attribution of responsibility for rape. According to the model, judgments of physical & psychological causality of an alleged rapist are combined into overall evaluations of attacker responsibility. An experimental test of the model was conducted with NY Coll students (N = 152), revealing that witness identification information influenced judgments of physical causality (ie, extent to which the situation was perceived as rape), & information about the relationship between the alleged attacker & victim influenced judgments of psychological causality (ie, intention to rape). Judgments of physical & psychological causality interacted significantly with overall attributions of attacker responsibility. 1 Table, 35 References. HA

48 applied sociology

88T2986

Doe, Seung Ja (Washington U, Saint Louis MO 63130), Revival of Welfare Reform, Journal of Sociology and Social Welfare, 1986, 13, 3, Sept, 613-642

* Currently, the Aid to Families with Dependent Children program fails to provide for all children & single mothers in need of public assistance. Previous attempts to reform the welfare system have been unsuccessful, but now, when the poor's right to social welfare is increasingly threatened, ideas for welfare reform need to be revived. Advocated is a three-dimensional agenda for welfare reform: universal assistance to families with children, reinforced support for children with absent parents, & targeted employment programs for single mothers. 62 References. HA

88T2987

Friedman, Norman L. & Friedman, Susan Schuller (Dept Sociology California State U, Los Angeles 90032), Occupational Sociology as Career and Employment Counseling: Patterns and Possibilities, The American Sociologist, 1987, 18, 3, fall, 284-295

* It is contended that career & employment counseling should be viewed as an aspect of the clinical practice of occupational sociology. First, the actual development of career & employment counseling is briefly traced. Then, against this backdrop, past & present linkages between occupational sociology & career/employment counseling knowledge are identified. Finally, sociology training & internship possibilities for the counseling component are suggested. 47 References. HA

88T2988

Halimi, Aleksandar (U Zagreb, 41000 Yugoslavia), Socijalni rad-na marginama znanosti (Social Work-On the Margin of Science), Revija za Sociologiju, 1984, 14, 3-4, July-Dec, 363-371 (SCR)

* The epistemology of social work is examined, focusing on three fundamental questions: (1) What are the basic scientific foundations of the discipline of social work? (2) Where does social work fit into the overall scheme of social sciences, if at all? & (3) What, if any, is the specific object of social work? A complete, systematic study is necessary before these questions can be answered. 12 References. Modified HA

88T2989

Kenig, Sylvia (Social Science Research, 924 Chester Circle Pendleton SC 29670), The Use of Theory in Applied Sociology: The Case of Community Mental Health, The American Sociologist, 1987, 18, 3, fall, 242-257

* Despite the rapid growth of applied sociology as a recognized subdiscipline in US sociology, very little attention has been focused on the use of traditional theory in applied settings. Consensual & conflictual approaches to the concept of community in the applied literature of the community mental health movement are traced & related to political/economic phases of the movement. The analysis suggests that varying forms of consensual theory dominated the early years of the movement, that conflict theory emerged during the middle years, & that consensual theory again reasserted its dominance in the late years of the movement. It is concluded that applied theory is importantly limited & directed by the political & economic interests that influence the environment in which that theory is produced & employed. 1 Table, 45 References. HA

88T2990

Lažnjak, Jasminka, Selektivna bibliografija radova iz područja primijenjene sociologije (A Selective Bibliography of Applied Sociology), Revija za Sociologiju, 1985, 15, 1-2, Jan-June, 83-87 (SCR)

* A bibliography of 75 English titles in applied sociology that should be of interest to Yugoslav readers. M. Meeks

88T2991

Marquez, Patricio V. & Joly, Daniel J. (10643 Montrose Ave, Bethesda MD 20814), A Historical Overview of the Ministries of Public Health and the Medical Programs of the Social Security Systems in Latin America, Journal of Public Health Policy, 1986, 7, 3, autumn, 378-394

* The relationship between the evolution of the two major health subsystems in Latin America & the region's economic & sociopolitical development are explored. From 1880 to 1930, national health departments, the forerunners of the present-day ministries of health, were created within the ministries of the interior in most Latin American countries. The initial mission of these departments was to combat the infectious diseases that hampered maritime trade & diminished labor productivity in the countries' export-oriented economies. During the 1930s & 1940s, changing economic & sociopolitical conditions led to the elevation of the health departments to the ministry level & the concurrent expansion of their activities to include the provision of personal health services for the unemployed & indigent populations. Similarly, the development of social security medical care programs was directly linked to the process of industrialization. In satisfying the demands of organized LFs, these programs served as an important mechanism of social stabilization. It is argued that understanding how historical conditions determined the nature & development of the two major health subsystems in Latin America is important for interpreting the problems facing the ministries of health & social security institutions today. 2 Tables, 55 References. HA

88T2992

Pepinsky, Harold E. (Dept Criminal Justice Indiana U, Bloomington 47405), Information Sharing as a Human Right, Humanity and Society, 1987, 11, 2, May, 189-211

* A comparison of the Norwegian & US experience over the past 150 years indicates that trying to repress criminal offenses & offenders escalates violence. Also, violence eg, crime, militarism, & punishment-subsidies as governments become decentralized & more participatory. 29 References. AA

88T2993

Potuchek, Jean L. (Dept Sociology & Anthropology Bates Coll, Lewiston ME 04240), The Context of Social Service Funding: The Funding Relationship, The Social Service Review, 1986, 60, 3, Sept, 421-436

* An examination of funding decision processes regarding social services for women based on interviews (N not given) with program administrators & a case study of shelters for battered women in a northeastern US city. It is argued that such decisions occur within the context of ongoing relationships between social service & funding organizations. The causes & characteristics of these relationships are examined, & it is suggested that they have important implications for the shape of social services. Modified AA

88T2973

Finn, Jerry (Social Work Dept U. North Carolina, Greensboro 27412). Men's Domestic Violence Treatment: The Court Referral Component. ♦ Journal of Interpersonal Violence, 1987, 2, 2, June, 154-165.

¶ In a follow-up to an earlier study (Finn, Jerry, "Men's Domestic Violence Treatment Groups: A Statewide Survey," Social Work with Groups, 1985, 8(3), 81-94), semistructured face-to-face or telephone interviews were conducted with 14 men's domestic violence treatment program (MDVT) directors &/or court liaisons in NC. While all programs had established a court linkage component, they differed considerably in training & function of the court liaison, frequency of referrals, sentencing patterns, accountability to the court, & court ordered fees. Program diversity was discussed in terms of laissez-faire program development & the use of discretion by court personnel. Recommendations for MDVT programs focused on community & court education, program evaluation, liaison training, & the need for data collection concerning sentencing patterns in spouse abuse cases. 15 References. Modified HA.

88T2974

Garnett, Tommy (Kansas State U., Manhattan 66506). Black Urban Residents' Participation in Anticrime Strategies: A Test of Alternate Models. ♦ Dissertation Abstracts International: A The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 47, 11, May, 4196 A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor MI. Order No. DA8705836.

88T2975

Kieplinger, Daniel H. (U. Washington, Seattle 98195). Cohort Effects and Opportunity Constraints in a Life-Cycle Model of Criminal Behavior. ♦ Dissertation Abstracts International: A The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 47, 12(1), June, 4516 A-4517-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor MI. Order No. DA8706606.

88T2976

Lang, Reuben A., Holden, Roger, Langevin, Ron, Pugh, George M., & Wu, Ray. Personality and Criminality in Violent Offenders. ♦ Journal of Interpersonal Violence, 1987, 2, 2, June, 179-195.

¶ Four groups of convicted offenders in a federal prison in Alberta: 29 murderers, 30 assaulters, 51 armed robbers, & 25 nonviolent controls were compared on measures of personality, demographic variables, & past history of violence, using 15 self-report questionnaires. Between group differences occurred mainly on the hostility & violence measures. Results show that murderers, on the whole, more often distorted their clinical profiles by minimizing their aggressiveness or propensity for violence. In contrast, the armed robbers & assaulters tended to distort primarily their self confidence & level of self consciousness. The history of violence variables were better predictors of group membership than personality indices. The findings call into question the usefulness of personality measures in assessing & understanding the violent individual. 3 Tables, 52 References. Modified HA.

88T2977

Laub, John H. (Coll. Criminal Justice Northeastern U., Boston MA 02115). Rediscovering the Importance of Cities, Neighborhoods, and Crime. Journal of Quantitative Criminology, 1987, 3, 1, Mar., 83-93.

¶ A review essay on Communities and Crime (Reiss, Albert J., Jr., & Tonry, Michael [Eds], Chicago: U of Chicago Press, 1986), The Social Ecology of Crime (Byrne, James M., & Sampson, Robert J. [Eds], New York: Springer-Verlag, 1986), & Metropolitan Crime Patterns (Figlio, Robert M., Hakim, Simon, & Rengert, George F. [Eds], Monsey, NY: Criminal Justice Press, 1986 [see listings in IRPS No. 41]). These works contain a total of 31 articles that demonstrate a revival of interest in the role that communities play in crime causation, prevention, & control. Reiss's & Tonry's collection centers on the theme of community change & community criminal careers. Byrne's & Sampson's edition attempts to refocus attention on the social ecology of crime, & its consequences as causally prior to individual effects, purely spatial issues, eg, from environmental criminology, are avoided. The work by Figlio et al is likewise ecologically oriented, metropolitan crime patterns are described which indicate that increased mobility has led to a diffusion of crime. Suggestions for future research on cities, communities, & crime are offered. 15 References. K. Hyatt.

88T2978

Mierhe, Terrence D., Stafford, Mark S., & Long, J. Scott. Errata. American Sociological Review, 1987, 52, 5, Oct., 557.

¶ Several errors that appeared in "Social Differentiation in Criminal Victimization: A Test of Routine Activities/Lifestyle Theories" (see 85 35 4/87R8664) are acknowledged. Some incorrect chi square values & clerical errors are remedied, but do not result in changes in substantive conclusions, since they do not alter the direction, relative magnitude, or statistical significance of the reported effects of lifestyle/activity variables on property victimization. 1 Table, 1 Reference. K. Hyatt.

88T2979

Perry, Josephus Daniel & Simpson, Miles E. (c/o Simpson-Norris Carolina Central U., Durham 27707). Violent Crimes in a City: Environmental Determinants. An Environment and Behavior, 1987, 19, Jan., 77-90.

¶ Longitudinal city-level data for Raleigh, NC, from 1972 through 1984 are used to examine the relationships between monthly violent-crimes against-persons offense rates & environmental factors. Pearson r & multiple regression analyses show that monthly & seasonal cycles & weather affect rape & aggravated assault, but have less influence on murder. Unemployment rates have negative effects on rape & aggravated assault. Murder & aggravated assault are negatively associated with population expansion. If these findings hold for other cities, then theories of violent crime may require reformulation. 3 Tables, 27 References. Modified HA.

88T2980

Pratt, John (Dept. Social Policy, Massey U., Palmerston North, New Zealand). Taking Crime Seriously: Social Work Strategies for Law and Order Climates. New Zealand Sociology, 1987, 2, 1, May, 36-50.

¶ An analysis of the current law & order politics in New Zealand, & the various policies & strategies generated by this political position. It is argued that there are very real dimensions to this problem, which are likely to attract popular support. It is important that social work professionals begin to make a response to these issues. Accordingly, a set of strategies are set out that do "take crime seriously." 45 References. Modified A.

88T2981

Ray, Melvin C. (Iowa State U., Ames 50010). Convicted Offender Vocabulary of Motive: Truth or Consequences. ♦ Dissertation Abstracts International: A The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 47, 11, May, 4197 A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor MI. Order No. DA86703751.

88T2982

Schweizer, Peggy A. (Fordham U., Bronx, NY 10458). Battered Women: A Phenomenological Analysis of Staying and Leaving. Dissertation Abstracts International: A The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 1, July, 226-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8709235.

88T2983

Shoham, Shlomo Giora, Rahav, Giora, Markowski, Rachel, Chai Frances, Neuman, Felicia, Ben-Haim, Martha, Baruch, Lilana, Eskin, Yehuda, Schwarzman, Zvi, Rubin, Robert, Mednick, Sarnoff, Bulckhuisen, Wouter (Faculty Law Tel-Aviv U., 69978 Israel). Parameters of Violent Prisoners. Journal of Social Psychology, 1987, 127, 1, Feb., 83-91.

¶ An attempt is made to explain the criminal offenses, particularly criminal violence, of a sample of 60 violent & 60 nonviolent prisoners, by investigating their attachment to & relationships with their families. Data from court files & several family background indices were analyzed four multiple regression analysis procedures. Results indicate that attachment to family was negatively associated with impulsive violence; parents who were described as impulsive were positively associated with relatively planned violence. 1 Table, 18 References. HA.

88T2984

Steffensmeier, Darrell J., & Harer, Miles D. (Pennsylvania State University Park 16802). Is the Crime Rate Really Falling? "Aging" U.S. Population and Its Impact on the Nation's Crime Rate 1980-1984. A Journal of Research in Crime and Delinquency, 1987, 24, 1, Feb., 23-48.

88T3004

Spergel, Irving A. (School Social Service Administration U Chicago, IL 60637). The Violent Gang Problem in Chicago: A Local Community Approach. In The Social Service Review, 1986, 60, 1, Mar., 94-131

* A pilot project to reduce gang violence in a violent neighborhood of Chicago, Ill, appears to have been modestly successful. The unique characteristics of the Crisis Intervention Services Project (CRISP) were its emphasis on crisis intervention & surveillance & street mediation of gang conflicts within a community development framework, ie, using various elements of community: former gang leaders, local conventional groups & organizations, including the police, & graduate students. A combination of strategies was employed: social control, social support, improved communication, & provision of limited opportunities. The project resulted in a reduction of serious gang-related crimes, particularly aggravated assault & battery. There was no evidence that crime or delinquency was generally reduced. The crisis & surveillance approach appears to have been more effective than a traditional counseling approach in the reduction of gang-related violence in a subgroup of serious juvenile offenders. 10 Tables. AA

88T3005

White, Helene Raskin & LaGrange, Randy L. (Rutgers U, New Brunswick NJ 08903). An Assessment of Gender Effects in Self-Report Delinquency. In Sociological Focus, 1987, 20, 3, Aug., 195-213

† Within a framework combining control & differential association theory, the relative effects of parent, school, & peer influences on M & F delinquency are investigated. Questionnaire data from 304 adolescents aged 15 selected through a random household survey in NJ reveal that M adolescents have significantly weaker bonds to their parents, school, & peers than do Fs. Ms also report engaging in significantly more delinquency. Neither control theory nor gender-role identity explanations are able to account for this gender differential in delinquency; rather, the data support a differential association explanation. Alternative explanations are also explored. 5 Tables, 1 Appendix, 58 References. Modified HA

PERIPHERIE

A QUARTERLY OF RADICAL THIRD WORLD STUDIES
(in German language)

Important Themes so far:

- Subsistence Economy, Sexual Division of Labour and The State (Nos. 2, 3, 5/6)
- Debate on Mozambique (Nos. 3 + 5/6)
- Education: The School as a Colonizing Instrument; Education and Mobility in China (No. 4)
- Debate: Beyond 'Dependencia' (No. 5/6)
- Culture and Imperialism/Imperialism of Culture (No. 8)
- Political Culture of Afghanistan (No. 9)
- National Liberation, State Power and Socialist Reconstruction (No. 10/11)
- Religion and Religious Movements (No. 12)
- Women (No. 14)
- International Economic Crisis (No. 15/16)
- Peasants and Agrarian Development (No. 17)
- Cultural Identity and Nation (No. 18/19)
- Minorities (No. 20)
- Transnational Corporations (No. 21)
- Fordism and Development (No. 22/23)
- Racism (No. 24)
- Politics of Development (No. 25/26) - forthcoming

In every issue: Book Reviews, Review of Periodicals, etc. English Summaries of the main articles.

For Subscriptions and full details write to: LN-Vertrieb
Im Mehringhof, Gneisenaustr. 2, D-1000 Berlin 61
Editorial Address: c/o Institut für Soziologie, Bispinghof 5-6, D-4400 Münster, West Germany

Subscriptions
(one year) Individuals Institutions
Normal US$ 11/DM 30 US$ 22/DM 60
Airmail US$ 16/DM 47 US$ 27/DM 77

88T2994

Wagner, David (School Social Work Columbia U, New York NY 10027). Collective Mobility and Fragmentation: A Model of Social Work History. ♦ Journal of Sociology and Social Welfare 1986, 11, 3, Sept, 657-700.

¶ Recent sociological approaches to professionalism are utilized to develop a dynamic conceptual model of the history of social work. Professionalization is understood as a social movement or "collective mobility project" of the I Mc, which has been the dominant force in social work for a century. This social movement seeks control & expansion of professional markets for services, & recognition & sanction from elites. In a period of history, however, social work professionalizers have had to struggle against popular unrest & elite criticism aimed at the field. Here, focusing on the Progressive period, the Depression years, & the 1960s/1970s, shown is how in each period the casework professionalizers were challenged by countersegments in the profession, which reflected both client unrest & elite criticism. While the structural & ideological splits within the field are frequently bemoaned by many professional leaders, it is suggested that fragmentation may not only be inevitable, but may be functional for the profession as a whole. 2 Charts. HA

88T2995

Weinbach, Robert W. & Kuehner, Karen M. (Coll Social Work U South Carolina Columbia 29208). Peer Reinforcement for Social Work Training: An Evaluation. ♦ Journal of Sociology and Social Welfare, 1986, 11, 3, Sept, 599-612.

¶ Techniques for peer reinforcement of social work training programs appear to be a promising complement to educational supervision. Income maintenance workers ($N = 32$) in a large state public welfare agency participated in a quasi-experimental evaluation of the effectiveness of such techniques for reinforcement of learning of interviewing skills. Findings indicate that peer reinforcement may have resulted in knowledge retention & use of skills superior to those demonstrated by trainees denied access to peer reinforcement techniques. Productive areas of future research are suggested. 1 Table, 6 References. Modified HA

88T2996

Zambrana, Ruth E. & Aguirre-Molina, Marilyn (School Social Welfare U California, Los Angeles 90024-1452). Alcohol Abuse Prevention among Latino Adolescents: A Strategy for Intervention. Journal of Youth and Adolescence, 1987, 16, 2, Apr, 97-113.

¶ A description of results of a unique prevention program funded by the National Inst of Alcohol Abuse & Alcoholism in 1978 for Latino youth aged 12-17 in East Harlem, NY. Existing literature on Latino youth & alcohol use is reviewed, followed by a description of the program, its setting, & its evaluative methodology. The methodological strategy entailed in-depth interviews with 80 program participants & interviews with staff. The results clearly demonstrate changes in alcohol knowledge, attitudes & behavior among consistent participants. The changes were most attributable to the intervention strategies used, namely workshops & cultural materials, as well as outreach to parents & role modeling by staff. The need for the development of creative educational methods & materials, & difficulties in the use of traditional educational curriculum with low-income Latino youth are described. 1 Table, 26 References. Modified AA

51 juvenile delinquency

88T2997

Brannigan, Augustine (U Calgary, Alberta T2N 1N4). Mystification of the Innocents: Crime Comics and Delinquency in Canada, 1931-1949. Criminal Justice History, 1987, 7, 111-144.

¶ Critics of the crime comics of the 1940s & 1950s claimed that they were causing juvenile delinquency. An analysis of the crime & delinquency trends during this period suggests that high levels of delinquency appear to have peaked during the war years, & were in a steady decline at the time when comics were controlled under obscenity laws in Canada & overseas. WWII levels of crime are examined in terms of demographic changes in the supply of youths born in the 1920s as well as in terms of changes in the nature of policing that put a premium on youth & Fs throughout the war, resulting in an increased vigilance on minor offenses until 1942. Modified AA

88T2998

Campbell, Anne (School Criminal Justice Rutgers U, Newark NJ 07102). Self-Reported Delinquency and Home Life: Evidence from a Sample of British Girls. Journal of Youth and Adolescence, 1987, 16, 2, Apr, 167-177.

¶ An examination of the r between family variables & delinquency (both self-reported & official) in a small sample of British teenage girls ($N = 64$). Factor analysis of the 72 item Home Life Questionnaire (from T. H. Hirschi's Causes of Delinquency, Berkeley U of California Press, 1969) revealed a clear four factor structure of caring & communication, discipline, pressure, & mother-daughter closeness, which cumulatively accounted for 31% of the variance. Multiple regression of these factors onto self-reported delinquency indicated the maternal factor to be most powerful, explaining 25% of the variance in self-reported delinquency. Institutionalized & noninstitutionalized girls showed only chance differences in terms of the quality of their home life. 3 Tables, 44 References. Modified AA

88T2999

Hazani, Moshe (Dept Criminology Bar Ilan U, Ramat-Gan 52100 Israel). Prevention of Delinquency through Repentance. An Ethnographic Study in a Jerusalem Slum. ♦ Small Group Behavior, 1987, 18, 1, Feb, 82-98.

¶ Data obtained via participant observation & interviews (N not given) are used to describe a group of boys in an Israeli slum, focusing on their transition from delinquent to nondelinquent behavior. The boys were attracted by a local charismatic rabbi & formed a cohesive study group around him. The influence of this group on the boys' behavior was stronger than that of the local older delinquents, with whom the boys had associated prior to joining the group. The phenomenon is discussed in terms of reference group theory. Investigation of the relative attractiveness of the group, i.e., its attractiveness vis-a-vis the delinquent groupings, reveals that warmth & caring, together with order & discipline, were the major attracting factors. Possible implications for delinquency prevention are discussed. 22 References. Modified HA

88T3000

Khateeb, M. (U Bath, Claverton Down BA2 7AY England). A Study of Self-Esteem, Neuroticism, and Extroversion of Delinquent Boys in Custody and Awaiting-Trial Boys in Khartoum Province in the Sudan. * Dissertation Abstracts International: C. European Abstracts, 1987, 48, 1, spring, 60.

Unavailable from UMI; reference copy at U of Bath Library.

88T3001

Murakami, Yoshihiro (Dept Educational Psychology Toyama U, 9 Japan). Title in Japanese. (The Mentality Differences between Delinquent and Nondelinquent Boys). Kyoiku Shinrigaku Kenkyu To Japanese Journal of Psychology, 1986, 57, 1, Apr, 1-7. (JPN)

¶ Questionnaire data from delinquent boys in a reformatory ($N = 41$) high school boys ($N = 86$) are compared to explore the mentality differences between delinquents & nondelinquents in Japan. Analyses of sociability, self-esteem, & will power are compared for the two groups. The delinquent group is characterized by problem behavior & timidity; there are few structural similarities between the two groups. Modified HA

88T3002

Pena, Dante Ricardo (Sam Houston State U, Huntsville 77341). Learning Disabilities and Juvenile Delinquency: An Exploration of Causal Processes. * Dissertation Abstracts International: A. The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 47, 11, May, 4197-A. Available from UMI, Ann Arbor MI. Order No. DA8705024.

88T3003

Seydlitz, Ruth Ann (Washington U, Saint Louis MO 63130). The Effects of Sex and Age on the Relationship between Hirschi's Parent Attachment and Delinquency. * Dissertation Abstracts International: A. The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 47, 12(1), Ju 4514-A.

Available from UMI, Ann Arbor MI. Order No. DA8708380.

2200 sociology of knowledge

33 sociology of knowledge

88T3006

Buhl, Walter L. (U Munich, D-8000 22 Federal Republic Germany). Für eine Revision der Wissenssoziologie/Per una revisione della sociologia della conoscenza (Toward a Revision of a Sociology of Knowledge). Annali di Sociologia/Soziologisches Jahrbuch, 1986, 2(II), 119-138, 139-156 (MUL)

Translated by Silvano Montel.

¶ Focusing on the sociology of knowledge, an attempt is made to describe & evaluate the current state of that field. In the process, both ontologism & constructivism are criticized & a behavioral & systems-theory approach is advocated. The error of ontologism lies in its a priori assumption of the unity of knowledge, & of knowledge as a process of social reflection. Processes of knowing can be structured in many different ways, & many knowledge-outcomes are incompatible with each other. The mistake of constructivism lies in the assumption that knowledge is socially constructed & that there exists no "relative semantic autonomy" of knowledge. Especially weak is the "strong program," which not only denies the relative semantic autonomy of different forms of knowledge, but also limits its focus to knowledge formation in group & laboratory situations, neglecting context & the transnational organization of knowledge. Here, knowledge is presented as a multilevel system in which human-ethological factors combine with institutional & social-organizational factors, & where innovations occur especially at those points where a breaking away from certain cultural traditions is underway. The priority of the SoK should be the opening up & improvement of the ongoing knowledge process itself. Modified AA

88T3007

Evan, William (Dept Sociology U Pennsylvania, Philadelphia 19104-6299). Knowledge for Whom?, Social Epistemology, 1987, 1, 2, Apr-June, 155-162

¶ The positivist conception of scientific knowledge is challenged, & two critiques of it are restated. E. A. Singer's (In Search of a Way of Life, New York: Columbia U Press, 1948) & Robert S. Lynd's (Knowledge for What?, Princeton, NJ: Princeton U Press, 1948). A current problem for philosophers of science is how to make science truly international, realizing the internationalist ideals on which it is already based. Some organizational innovations that might aid this development are suggested. 34 References. W. H. Stoddard

88T3008

Fromm, Eberhard (Institut Marxistische-leninistische Philosophie Akademie Gesellschaftswissenschaften, Johannes-Dieckmann-Str 19/23 1086 Berlin Federal Republic Germany). Zwischen Utopie und Utopismus (Between Utopia and Utopianism), Deutsche Zeitschrift für Philosophie, 1987, 35, 2, 116-124 (GER)

¶ The integration of utopias into bourgeois ideology & philosophy is discussed. It is suggested that utopias have an important task in bourgeois ideology & are therefore different from the socialist utopianism criticized by Karl Marx, Friedrich Engels, & V. I. Lenin. Utopias are said to have arisen in the past primarily in times of heightened contradictions & class conflict. The origin of serious discussion about the philosophical significance of the utopian is credited to Ernst Bloch. Several cases of alternative political movements whose leading ideas may be considered utopian are noted, & the importance of utopias as a motivating force for social action is examined. The various ways in which utopias refer to the future or criticize the present are considered. J. Anderson

88T3009

Glassberg, David (Dept History U Massachusetts, Amherst 01003). History and the Public: Legacies of the Progressive Era, WM The Journal of American History, 1987, 73, 4, Mar, 957-980

¶ The distance between the general public & historians in the twentieth century is examined & related to the same relationship in the Progressive Era. Public speakers on holidays & at local events routinely referred to episodes of local & national history during that period. During the years prior to WWI, new ways of presenting historical material became available, which reflected the wish for a more aesthetic & hierarchical society & for education of children in progressive democratic values. The public historical pageant reflected these goals, taking alternating realistic & symbolic forms but gradually giving increased emphasis to the gulf between past & present. History gradually came to be used to promote social agendas. 4 Illustrations. W. H. Stoddard

88T3010

Hekman, Susan (Dept Political Science U Texas, Arlington 76019). Antifoundational Thought and the Sociology of Knowledge: The Case of Karl Mannheim, Human Studies, 1987, 10, 3-4, Oct, 333-356

¶ It is argued that the project of contemporary antifoundational philosophers such as Richard Rorty, Hans Gadamer, Jacques Derrida, & Ludwig Wittgenstein has much in common with an established tradition in the social sciences: the SoK. In order to substantiate this thesis the work of Karl Mannheim is analyzed. Mannheim's work shows striking similarity to the antifoundational approach of Gadamer. Both attempt to uncover the social & historical character of knowledge without appealing to absolutes. Both attack the Enlightenment conception of knowledge as abstract & ahistorical. But Mannheim's work, unlike that of Gadamer, offers an explicit method by which an antifoundational SoK might be adopted. Mannheim's conception of knowledge provides a way of approaching some of the perennial issues in social scientific methodology: objectivity, truth, & relativism. Mannheim's position, although occasionally contradictory, offers an approach to the SoK & social science in general that is compatible with the antifoundational thrust of contemporary philosophy. 18 References. AA

88T3011

Kalberg, Stephen (Center European Studies Harvard U, Cambridge MA 02138). The Origin and Expansion of Kulturpessimismus: The Relationship between Public and Private Spheres in Early Twentieth Century Germany, Sociological Theory, 1987, 5, 2, fall, 150-164

¶ A radical critique of modernity crystallized in the German Bildungsbürgertum at the end of the nineteenth century. A broad cross-section of this stratum equated "mass democracy" with anarchy, foresaw a future populated only by "atomized modern men," & disdained the "vulgarity" of industrial capitalism. The origin & expansion of the intense & persistent configuration of cultural values that constitute German Kulturpessimismus (cultural pessimism) deserves exploratory theoretical examination. A sociology of knowledge analysis based on a Weberian framework is suggested that examines the cultural values indigenous to several sectors of the public sphere in preindustrial & nineteenth-century Germany & the particular dynamic of interaction between these values & those indigenous to the private sphere in early twentieth-century Germany. Comparisons to the US public sphere & its relationship to the US private sphere are noted. This case study offers an illustration of the manner in which heterogeneous cultural values may persist over extended periods of time despite fundamental structural transformation. 113 References. HA

88T3012

Laermans, Rudi (Dept Sociologie Katholiek U Leuven, B-3000 Belgium). Ideologie en sociale werkelijkheid: bouwstenen voor een sociologische ideologietheorie (Ideology and Social Reality. Building Blocks for a Sociological Theory of Ideology), Tijdschrift voor Sociologie, 1987, 8, 1, 55-82 (DUT)

¶ The concept of ideology does not have a uniform meaning in the social scientific literature. An approach is suggested in which the concept of ideology is connected to a theory of legitimation, referring to anonymous organizational discourses in which arguments are given either for the maintenance or transformation of a given order of domination. Ideologies differ from traditional & religious worldviews in being strictly rationally constructed. The ideas of Jürgen Habermas illuminate this difference between traditional & modern legitimations of power. The possible methodological merits of a discourse-analytic approach to ideology are pointed out & examples are furnished. 85 References. Modified HA

Judicature

THE JOURNAL OF THE AMERICAN JUDICATURE SOCIETY

A forum for fact and opinion relating to all aspects of the administration of justice and its improvement.

Published six times each year. Each issue contains refereed feature articles, book reviews and news about the courts. Recent issues have included these articles:

- An examination of the victim's role at sentencing: results of a survey of probation administrators, by Maureen McLeod
- Child victims in court: the limits of innovation, by Debra Whitcomb
- Resolving libel cases out of court, by Roselle L. Wissler, et al
- Judicial supervision of the guilty plea process, by William F. McDonald
- Documenting gender bias in the courts: the task force approach, by Lynn Hecht Schafran
- Is there a reasonable alternative to the death penalty?, by Sidney C. Snellenburg
- Judging the Jury, by Valerie P. Hans and Neil Vidmar (book review)
- News Cameras in the Courtroom: A Free Press—Fair Trial Debate, by Susanna Barber (book review)

To order your one year subscription, send a check or money order for $24 to:

American Judicature Society
25 East Washington, Suite 1600
Chicago, IL 60602
Attn: Publications Dept

Judicature welcomes papers for publication consideration. Manuscripts should be double-spaced, with the footnotes (legal citation style preferred) at the end. Three copies are requested. Judicature notifies authors of its decision within 45 days; most accepted manuscripts are published within six months. Send manuscripts to the editor at the address above.

AMERICAN JUDICATURE SOCIETY to promote the effective administration of justice

88T3022

Shiner, Larry (Sangamon State U., Springfield IL 62708). Semiotics and Psychohistory: Thematic Codes in Tocqueville's Recollections. ♦ The Psychohistory Review, 1985-86, 14, 2, winter, 7-21

* Too often psychological analysis of a historical figure is attempted without first paying careful attention to the semantic & rhetorical features of the texts used as sources. The usefulness of a semiotic analysis as a tool for revealing both cognitive & affective aspects of the author's personality is shown through a study of the thematic code underlying Alexis de Tocqueville's Recollections of the 1848 Revolution (Lawrence, George [Tr.], Garden City, NY: Doubleday, 1970). The constraining effects of a series of binary oppositions that control the text's discourse is demonstrated & certain countercurrents that tend to "deconstruct" the code in so far as it concerns workers & women are explored. AA

88T3023

Tikhvinsky, S. L., Yanvarskiy (1987 g.) plenum TsK KPSS i istoricheskaya nauka (The January 1987 Plenary Meeting of the CC (PSU and the Science of History), Voprosy istorii, 1987, 62, 6, June, 3-13 (RUS))

* A discussion of how current reforms in the USSR can be applied to the science of history. The accumulation of negative & stagnation phenomena during the 1970s & 1980s is described. The need is asserted to study the experience of socialist construction, deepen the theoretical & methodological foundations & the historiographic aspects of research, widen the sources used, & improve methodology. Improved training for young historians is also necessary. Modified HA

88T3024

Zigo, Milan (Katedra filozofie FFUK, Bratislava Czechoslovakia), Prirodne vedy a kultura (Natural Sciences and Culture), Filozofia, 1983, 38, 1, 46-57 (CZE)

* Bourgeois thought is characterized by the separation of natural science from other spheres of culture, especially the arts & the humanities. The detrimental effects of this opposition may be overcome philosophically only by applying dialectical materialist rationality to the problem, starting from Karl Marx's idea of "one science." This gives emphasis to the culture-formative significance of the natural sciences, as realized by (1) the changing scientific picture of the world, (2) the changing style of scientific thinking, & (3) the impact of science on practical activity. 8 Refs. Modified HA

88T3025

---, Agendas for Radical History. ♦ Radical History Review, 1986, 36, Sept., 26-42
Comment, 42-45

* In Introduction, Margaret C. Jacob & Ira Katznelson introduce the text of a symposium on "The Agenda for Radical History" held 20 Oct

1985 on the occasion of the dedication of the undergraduate Eugene Lang Coll at the New School for Social Research in NY. Some issues currently debated among radical historians are discussed, which are suggested to represent an attempt to integrate cultural historical & history of science perspectives to arrive at social models & economic paradigms. Eric Hobsbawm provides an overview of the achievements of radical history in the past generation, & reemphasizes its chief purpose to explain the complex, uneven, & interlacing path of global human development through a variety of forms of social organization, using the past to understand the present & create an agenda for the future. Christopher Hill offers a British perspective, & emphasizes the need for radical historians to see history as a whole. Perry Anderson suggests that the extensive development of historiographical themes is now approaching a point of saturation, thus, there are fewer new fields to open up for a radical agenda. Further expansion must be geographical rather than topical, combine new subareas, or involve practitioners working in atypical areas, eg. Ms doing women's studies. Edward P. Thompson favors the term historical materialism over Marxism in discussing radical history's orientation. He cautions that radical history must seek active experience in addition to academic pursuits, & be aware of the political/ideological/institutional pressures that can constrain its work. In Comment, Joan Wallach Scott summarizes several commonalities between the panelists. Radical history must strive to protect the ground it has won in the face of growing conservatism, refine its analytical tools, expand its interpretive methods, & abandon simple monocausal models. K. Hyatt

88T3026

---, Past and Present, Past and Present, 1983, 100, Aug., 3-28

* In Origins and Early Years, Christopher Hill, R. H. Hilton, & E. J. Hobsbawm recount the founding of the journal Past & Present in the early 1950s by a group of young Marxist historians in GB, led by John Morris. Its project was to unite Marxists & non-Marxists who shared a common approach to history. Its early years were marked by consistent organizational inefficiency & recurring crises, which reflected the habits of its founder & from which he repeatedly rescued it. The journal was remarkably successful, however, in avoiding ideological conflict between Marxists & non-Marxists, it also succeeded in attracting many & varied foreign contributors. Its essential character survived a major reorganization in 1958. In Later History, Jacques Le Goff (École hautes études en sciences sociales, Paris, France) does not see any radical break in the history of Past & Present in 1958. The history of Past & Present can usefully be examined through a comparison with that of the French journal Annales. The major concern of its contributors focus on the sixteenth through the nineteenth centuries, & secondarily on the Middle Ages, & on the British Isles & Western Europe. Other central tendencies include the desire to emphasize historical problems rather than periods, the frequency of debates based on published articles, & the emphasis on social history, history from below, & culture & education. W. H. Stoddard

88T3013

Morrison, Ken (Dept Sociology York U, North York Ontario M3J 1P3). Stabilizing the Text: The Institutionalization of Knowledge in Historical and Philosophic Forms of Argument. ♦ Canadian Journal of Sociology/Cahiers canadiens de sociologie 1987, 12, 3, fall, 242-274

¶ Concepts of literacy prevalent in the social sciences have tended to overlook the social & historical changes in the text that led to stability in Western traditions of knowledge & learning. The purpose here is to examine the institutionalization of knowledge in scholarly argument brought about by increasing rational changes in the structure of the text form. The emergence of patterns of textual organization utilized to create stability in bodies of knowledge & to create a procedure for verification in historical, philosophic & scientific forms of argument is explored. The textual inheritance from classical antiquity is examined in light of innovations that came to be applied to the structure of the text only at a much later date. These are shown to have been fundamental to the modern conception of knowledge as bodies of thought capable of factual description, empirical argument, & theoretical reasoning. A distinction is drawn between a concept of literacy based on language & one derived from considering the social organization of Western textual tradition. 93 References. HA

88T3014

Reid, William J. (School Social Welfare State U New York, Albany 12203). Mapping the Knowledge Base of Social Work. ♦ Social Work 1987, 26, 2, Mar, 124-132

¶ A scheme for the classification of knowledge for social work practice is outlined, & suggestions are made regarding how classifying knowledge is related to defining the profession's knowledge base. 1 Table. HA

88T3015

Scott, Alan (Nuffield Coll, Oxford OX1 1NF England). Politics and Method in Mannheim's 'Ideology and Utopia'. ♦ Sociology 1987, 21, 1, Feb, 41-54

¶ Various previous interpretations of Karl Mannheim, eg, as a relativist, a cofounder of the SoK, or a hermeneuticist fail to identify one of his basic goals: the defense of Enlightenment concepts such as "reason" against what he identifies as the disorienting effects of modernity. A detailed reading of his Ideology and Utopia (Wirth, L., & Shils, E. [Eds], London: Routledge & Kegan Paul, 1936) shows that relativism is not the conclusion of his sociology but its starting point. His goal was to save the project of epistemology: the construction of a unifying world order after historical developments made an absolute solution no longer feasible. His solution was essentially methodological. Its political/sociological implications include elevating the sociologist to the role of cultural arbitrator & reducing differences of interest & value to questions of planning. 2. References. Modified HA

88T3016

Sebeok, Thomas A. (Research Center Language & Semiotic Studies, Indiana U, Bloomington 47401). On the Goals of Semiotics. Semiotica 1986, 61, 3-4, 369-388

¶ A report on results of a 1986 mail questionnaire completed by 34 of 91 selected international semioticians. Their recommendations & goals for semiotics during the final years of the twentieth century, & the feasibility of achieving such, are examined. K Hyatt

88T3017

Thompson, John B. (U Cambridge, CB1 2JQ England). Language and Ideology: A Framework for Analysis. ♦ The Sociological Review 1987, 35, 3, Aug, 516-536

¶ A re-examination of the concept of ideology & the relations between language, ideology, & power. Two basic concepts of ideology are distinguished: a 'neutral' conception & a 'critical' conception & the latter conception is developed & defended. To study ideology, it is proposed, is to study the ways in which meaning serves to sustain relations of domination. The analysis of language is thus central to the study of ideology since language is one of the principal mediums through which meaning is mobilized in the social world. This reorientation of the study of ideology allows the critique of certain misleading assumptions & provides a basis for the consideration of problems of interpretation, justification, & critique. 19 References. HA

88T3018

Zea, Leopoldo (Dept Filosofia y Letras No 34 Col Copilco U, 04360 Mexico DF). Philosophy as an Instrument of Interamerican Understanding. Social Epistemology 1987, 1, 2, Apr-June, 123-130

Translated by Rene Trujillo, Jr.

¶ During the plenary sessions of the Eleventh Interamerican Congress of Philosophy, an examination of the diverse viewpoints of US, Canadian, & Latin American philosophers suggests that their philosophies could serve as vehicles of interamerican understanding. A dialogue has begun between the logicism of the US & the pluralism of Canada & Latin America. The conceptual basis of this dialogue is explored, & linked to a critique of the totalitarian logos. W H Stoddard

52 history of ideas

88T3019

Alford, C. Fred (U Maryland, College Park 20742). Habermas, Post-Freudian Psychoanalysis, and the End of the Individual. ♦ Theory, Culture & Society 1987, 4, 1, Feb, 1-29

¶ Critics of Jurgen Habermas's approach to psychoanalysis have typically argued that Habermas's interpretation of psychoanalysis as depth hermeneutics violates the intent of Sigmund Freud's work, & thus confuses philosophical reflection with psychoanalysis. Here an alternative critique is proposed, focused on Habermas's view of the individual, which is argued to lead to an abstract & shadowy view of the individual. An alternative view of psychoanalysis, drive theory, provides the basis for a correction of Habermas's view. Object relations theory also suggests that political theory must seriously examine the role of the family to overcome the diminution of the individual. Object relations theory also provides a critical perspective on the work of postmodern psychoanalytic theorists, eg, Jacques Lacan, which illuminates Habermas's relation to modernism. 54 References. Modified HA

88T3020

McCalman, Iain (U Melbourne, Parkville Victoria 3052 Australia). Unrespectable Radicalism: Infidels and Pornography in Early Nineteenth-Century London, Past and Present. 1984, 104, Aug, 74-110

¶ A number of booksellers in early nineteenth-century England were prosecuted on charges of obscene publication. Many such booksellers were also political radicals, & provided a major contrast to the supposed respectability of radicals. In fact, plebeian culture kept alive many of the bawdy traditions of England before the Victorian period. Obscenity & anti-establishment values frequently occurred together in publications of the time. Adherence to philosophies of libertinism derived from Epicurean & skeptical beliefs & from the classics also influenced this subculture as did French & native English traditions of libertinism. Infidel & libertine literature were also akin in that both were persecuted. Though repudiated by other radicals, these publishers significantly influenced later English culture. 7 References. W H Stoddard

88T3021

O'Grady, T. J. (Midland Nerve Hospital, Birmingham B15 2N England). Bile, Magnetism, and Dopamine: Simple Answers to Difficult Problems. ♦ Perspectives in Biology and Medicine 1987, 30, 2, winter, 201-214

¶ A common theme can be found in systems of medical practice in widely disparate societies. These obey a "monistic" paradigm, based on an imbalance of a small number of basic body components, & allowing an infinity of possible therapies. Such a system owes its usefulness to a market economy in therapy where client dominance requires fashion in practice & competition between practitioners. Customers demand an oversimplified, face-valid rationale for therapy consistent with cultural values. The humoral system persisted until the scientific revolution of the last century made necessary the invention of humoral metaphors. In psychiatry, mental components or neurotransmitter systems have made ideal monistic bases for practice. The advent of socialized psychiatry has seen the evolution of new monistic therapies in the field of "alternative medicine." These provide a large & growing range of marketable therapies based on simplistic monosystem pathophysiology. Such trends can only subvert the popular conception of true science. 24 References. AA

2300 community development

17 sociology of communities & regions

88T3027

Andre, Robert (Centre demographique Institut sociologie U Libre Bruxelles B-1050 Belgium), La Population de la region Mons-Borinage 1831-2031 (The Population of the Mons-Borinage Region 1831-2031), ♦ Reseaux 1985, 46-49, 107-159 (FRE)

- * The population size of the Mons-Borinage region of Belgium is projected up to the year 2031, based on its demographic history since 1831 (according to statistics culled by the Demographic Center of the Free U of Brussels & reported in Analyse de la population de la Wallonie et perspectives a l'horizon 2031 ([Analysis of the Population of Walloon and Projection to the Year 2031], a five-volume analysis published in 1984), with death, & migration rates, & hypothetical demographic trends. The hypothetical cases consider the various permutations of (1) maintained & lowered death rates, (2) maintained, increased, or decreased birthrates, & (3) the absence, maintenance, or increase of migration rates. It is considered probable that the mortality rate will decline, due to increased life expectancy & technological advances, the birthrate will continue to decrease, as it has since 1964, & migration will be maintained, with slightly more people leaving than entering the region. The results indicate that the 1981 population of Mons-Borinage (N = 253,503) will decrease to no more than 225,000. The age structure will then be heavily weighted in the group aged 25-55, with the 19 & under group less populated than the 60+ sector. The conclusion drawn is that this region faces a demographic crisis, wherein the population is steadily diminishing, with the hope of replacing itself unless immigration & an increase in birthrates are actively encouraged. 18 Tables, 19 Figures. D. Graves

88T3028

Calhoun, Craig (U North Carolina, Chapel Hill 27514), Computer Technology, Large-Scale Social Integration, and the Local Community, ♦ Urban Affairs Quarterly, 1986, 22, 2, Dec, 329-349

- * While computers & new communication technologies are widely expected to contribute to decentralization of society, they also offer major increases in capacity for centralized control & coordination of social action by facilitating development of large-scale bureaucratic organizations &, thus, potential economic & political centralization. The existence of such large-scale forms of social integration is not incompatible with face-to-face community life, but requires a balance between indirect (organizationally & technologically mediated) social relationships & direct primary & secondary ones. A conceptual framework that elucidates the roles of both direct & indirect social relationships, & does not presuppose the exclusive virtue or eventual complete predominance of either, is outlined briefly & illustrated through discussion of possible social consequences of widespread telecommuting. 60 References. Modified HA

88T3029

Chimbo, Peter D. (Brescia Coll, London Ontario N6G 1H2), The Changing Organization of Greek Canadian Communities, ♦ International Journal of Comparative Sociology, 1986, 27, 3-4, Sept-Dec, 208-216

- * An examination of the historical development & changing organization of Greek Canadian communities since the early 1900s. Trends toward more independence from the parish community model & the establishment of recent secular community structures are seen as inevitable sequences of post-WWII social & demographic changes within these communities. The reluctance of the Greek Orthodox Church to adapt to changes within the Greek community & the larger society has become an important source of intraethnic conflict. 7 References. HA

88T3030

Emmons, David Frank (U Chicago, IL 60637), Community Organizing and Urban Policy: Saul Alinsky and Chicago's Citizens Action Program, ♦ Dissertation Abstracts International, A The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 47, 11, May, 4194-A

Unavailable from UMI; contact the degree-granting university.

88T3031

Hall, Peter, Flight to the Green, ♦ New Society, 1987, 79, 1254, 9

Jan, 9-11

- * Throughout Europe & North America, a movement of population from the cities to rural areas has emerged. This is distinctly different from earlier trends to suburbanization, though the same places large & old cities often experience both at once. The ultimate problem is the erosion of industry & industrial employment in these cities. An analysis of previously published data indicates that causes for this include movement of traditional manufacturing into smaller towns, the formation of a new type of manufacturing based on advanced technology, which also favors smaller towns, the growth of services industries, & increased retirement & tourism. This trend represents the end of the population pattern shaped by the Industrial Revolution & of the traditional West & its politics. 4 Tables, 1 Illustration. W. H. Stoddard

88T3032

Hewitt, Judith Ann (Carleton U, Ottawa Ontario K1S 5B6), Living-In Gillam and Looking-to-State Contradictions: Structuration in a Single-Industry Town, ♦ Dissertation Abstracts International, A The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 47, 11, May, 4205-A

Unavailable from UMI; contact the degree-granting university.

88T3033

Mattson, Gary A. & Solano, Paul L. (Division Social & Policy Science U Texas, San Antonio 78285), New Federalism and Small Towns: Do Planning-Management Skills Matter for Access Funding and Benefits?, ♦ Journal of Architectural and Planning Research, 1986, 3, 2, May, 133-147

- * Data from 42 small towns in Del are used to evaluate the performance of the federal Community Development Block Grant (CDBG) program within a nonmetropolitan setting. Four aspects of CDBG are investigated: (1) participation through an application, (2) the funding decision by the Dept of Housing & Ur Development, (3) types of projects applied for, & (4) type of projects funded. The role of SE need & the availability of planning skills in CDBG activities are also assessed. Results indicate that different forces influence the program objectives: need & planning skills, in particular, are important determinants of participation & the types of projects requested & funded. 4 Tables, 43 References. Modified HA

88T3034

Onai, Toru (Hokkaido U Education, Kita-ku Sapporo 060 Japan), Title appears in Japanese (Changes in Types of Local Communities with the Development of Capitalism in Japan), ♦ Shakaigaku Hyoron/ Japanese Sociological Review, 1987, 38, 1(149), June, 10-25. (JPN)

- * An empirical study of social change in local communities that resulted from the rapid economic development in Japan accompanying the growth of capitalism. Contrasts are drawn between the macrostructures of precapitalist villages & postcapitalist cities. Three indices differentiating local communities are employed: (1) degree of independence, (2) characteristics of economic productive forces, & (3) industrial structure. Changes in the types of local communities are analyzed utilizing these criteria, & the unequal structures of villages & cities are discussed. 4 Tables. Modified HA

88T3035

Pilarzyk, Thomas James (U Wisconsin, Milwaukee 53201), Seeking Help in the Metropolis: A Study of Coping Strategies in Cosmopolitan Neighborhoods, ♦ Dissertation Abstracts International, A The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 48, 1, July, 228-A

Available from UMI, Ann Arbor, MI. Order No. DA8708857.

88T3036

Rubin, Herbert J. (Center Governmental Studies Northern Illinois U, DeKalb 60115), Local Economic Development Organizations and the Activities of Small Cities in Encouraging Economic Growth, ♦ The Policy Studies Journal, 1986, 14, 3, Mar, 363-388.

- * A description is provided of the effect of local economic development

Journal of communication inquiry

now in print

11:2 Thomas Guback and Ronald Betting summer Translating the Manifesto into English; Nineteenth Century Communication, Twentieth Century Confusion

Elizabeth Seaton
Profaned Bodies and Purloined Looks:
The Prisoner's Tattoo and the Researcher's Gaze

Susan Kray
Deconstructive Laughter: Romance Author as Subject,
The Pleasure of Writing the Text

Ideology around the dial

Celeste Michelle Condit
TV Articulates Abortion in America:
Competition and the Production of a Cultural Repertoire

Henry Jenkins III
Reading Popular History: The Atlanta Child Murders

Peter Bruck and Stuart Allan
The Commodification of Social Relations:
News Indices and Social Intervention

Danae Clark
The State vs. Asner or the Killing of Lou Grant

Subscribe: The journal is published semi-annually, summer and winter.
Rates: $10/year standard, students $7, institutions $24 (circle category)

Name _____

Address _____

(Institution) _____

State and Zip _____

$ _____ enclosed for _____ years subscription

MAIL TO:

JCI Subscriptions
205 Communications Co
University of Iowa
Iowa City, IA 52242

2400 policy, planning, forecasting

54 planning & forecasting

88T3039

Bestuzhev-Lada, I. V. (Instit Sociological Research, ul Krzhizhanovskogo 24/35 korpus 5 117259 Moscow USSR), Predvidenie optimal'nykh o normativnykh sytuatsii (Prevision of Optimum and Normative Situations), Sotsiologicheskie Issledovaniya, 1987, 14, 2, Mar-Apr, 34-40 (RUS)

The key problem in the research methodology of normative forecasting is to select an optimum criterion, which for sociology is the solution of social problems under minimal terms & expenses. This requires a congruence with social norms. On the basis of the optimum, a tree of goals is constructed, from which possible variants of goals achievement are determined. Three research methods are proposed: advanced groups as prototypes of the future, social limits as borders where quantitative growth develops into new qualities, & balancing. Modified AA

88T3040

Botez, Mihai C. & Celac, Mariann (31 Alex Donici St, R-70238 Bucharest Romania), Undesirable versus Desirable Societies, U Technological Forecasting and Social Change, 1986, 30, 3, Nov, 261-299

The problem of devising an image of a future society is examined. The general problem of desirable vs undesirable societies is sketched out, & a critical analysis offered of some current societal projects that are considered desirable. The shifting foundations of individual vs group images of future societies are briefly introduced, focusing on some specific group images on SC, national, & global levels. Emphasized is the need for considering two different issues when the desirability of a particular image is explored: the structure of the desired society & the desired rules of negotiation of what is or is not desirable in both the present & future. A special type of resonance: desirability resonance is introduced as a framework for understanding societal dynamics. The problem of assessing the roads leading to the desirable societies is explored, with emphasis on the difficulties of idealized long-term planning, a new type of critical long-term planning that focuses especially on what is to be avoided as undesirable is proposed. 1 Figure, 68 References. Modified HA

88T3041

Čumakov, A. N., Ďurčák, V. & Veverka, L. J. (Faculty Philosophy Moscow M. V. Lomonosov State U, 119808 USSR), Rímský klub-prehľad a výsledky činnosti (The Club of Rome: Survey and Results of Its Activity), Filozofia, 1983, 38, 4, 486-490 (SLO)

The Club of Rome began in 1968 as a leading thinktank of bourgeois economists, sociologists, & political scientists. Following a general liberal line of thought, the Club has focused primarily on predicting future economic performance through complex multivariable models. Analysis of The Limits to Growth (Meadows, D., et al, New York/London, 1972) & other works reveals the inability of bourgeois theoreticians to deal with the crisis of contemporary capitalism. Socialism offers a viable alternative to the cautious, pessimistic course suggested by the Club of Rome. 4 References. G. Prostavov

88T3042

Davies, Celia (8 Gladsmuir Rd, London N19 3JX England), Viewpoint: Things to Come: The NHS in the Next Decade, Sociology of Health and Illness, 1987, 9, 3, Sept, 302-317

An examination of current developments in GB's National Health Service suggests that a major transformation is under way. Rudolf Klein's position in "The Politics of Ideology vs the Reality of Politics. The Case of Britain's NHS in the 1980s," (Milbank Memorial Fund Quarterly/Health & Society, 1984, 62) is summarized, & his views on structural change & the relevance of the private sector are challenged. Welfare pluralism is posited as the most plausible future for health care, a phenomenon not well understood in GB's health care sector. 2 Figures, 34 References. Modified HA

88T3043

Detz, Thomas (Dept Sociology & Anthropology George Mason U, Fairfax VA 22030), Methods for Analyzing Data from Delphi Panels:

Some Evidence from a Forecasting Study, U Technological Forecasting and Social Change, 1987, 31, 1, Mar, 79-85

¶ Delphi & other methods of using expert opinion to generate forecasts can be useful tools for planning, impact assessment, & policy analysis, unfortunately, little is known about the accuracy of forecasts produced using these methods. Based on the logic of the Delphi method, it is suggested that: (1) forecast accuracy should increase across rounds of a Delphi iteration, (2) there is a positive r between a panelist's uncertainty about a forecast & his or her shift in forecast from round to round, (3) forecasts weighted by self-reported confidence will be more accurate than unweighted forecasts, & (4) the use of robust estimates of location as summaries of expert opinion yield better forecasts than nonrobust measures. A Delphi experiment involving U student predictions of the 1980 Calif general elections provides little support for any of these hypotheses, suggesting that traditional assumptions about the proper methods for analyzing a Delphi study may be inappropriate. 2 Tables, 6 References. Modified HA

88T3044

Kolaja, Jiri & Sedley, Dorothy (Dept Sociology & Anthropology West Virginia U, Morgantown 26506), Planning in the Third World as a Sociological Problem, Guru Nanak Journal of Sociology, 1986, 7, 2, Oct, 103-108

¶ Planning as a concept implies an imaginative leap both into the future & into the past. Space & time allocation according to a plan increases integration. In addition to requiring an understanding of the role of others, planning allows the development of the ability to interact with processes that extend over time. Once developed, the plan takes on a reality of its own that merits systematic investigation. Modified HA

88T3045

Lim, Gill-Chin & Albrecht, Johann (U Illinois, Urbana 61801), A Search for an Alternative Planning Theory: Use of Phenomenology, Journal of Architectural and Planning Research, 1987, 4, 1, Mar, 14-30

¶ An exploration of the applicability of phenomenological analysis to planning. Logical positivism is discussed & the problems & limitations of positivism doctrine are summarized. Fundamental epistemological issues in scientific approaches to planning are examined with particular emphasis on the relevance of phenomenology of action & environment to planning. Suggestions for a research agenda & methodological frameworks are presented. 49 References. Modified HA

88T3046

Lindquist, John H. (Trinity U, San Antonio TX 78284), Prognosis for the Future: Looking at the Past, Journal of Religion & Aging, 1986, 3, 1-2, fall-winter, 107-119

¶ The future of the "baby boom" generation in the US is discussed. This huge cohort, which will begin to reach age 65 in 2011, represents both strength & a challenge to secular & religious institutions. Some "boomers" will be affluent; many will be self-supporting, but a large number will be in need. A majority of the boomers are entering their prime earning years on a schedule that is behind that of their parents. Churches & care-giving institutions have thirty years to prepare to meet the needs of the boomers as they enter old age. Modified HA

88T3047

Sule, Ota (Instit Philosophy & Sociology Czechoslovak Academy Sciences, CS-110 00 Prague 1 Jilská 1), Integration of Scientific Forecasts: Methodology for Integration of Scientific Forecasts in the Process of National Science Policy Making, U Technological Forecasting and Social Change, 1986, 30, 3, Nov, 251-260

¶ A systematic procedure of confrontation & integration of scientific forecasts is explained on the basis of practical experience of science policy making at the Czechoslovak Academy of Sciences. A science forecasting field has been developed that serves as a methodological & structural framework for the identification, analysis, & synthesis of heterogeneous scientific forecasts produced by the world scientific community. The organizations on the number of incentives that cities provide to attract businesses based on a 1984 survey of 111 cities ($N = 156$) including attitudinal measures obtained through interviews with local developmental officials (N not given), questionnaires mailed to Chamber of Commerce directors, & US census data & state taxation reports. The effect is measured over & above that explained by background economic & social factors. Suggestions are made about the mechanisms through which economic development organizations encourage public officials to work to promote development. 9 Tables, 1 Diagram, 54 References. Modified AA

88T3037

Ruey-Tyng, Tai. Title appears in Chinese. (Community Consciousness of Public Housing Communities in Taipei). Kuo Li Tai-wan Tu Hsueh She Hui Hsueh K'an/National Taiwan University Journal of Sociology, 1986, 18, Nov, 63-79. (CHI)

† An investigation of community consciousness among the residents of public housing communities in Taipei, Taiwan. A score of community consciousness is defined through factor analysis, & the effects of five independent variables are examined. SS when residents registered into their houses, ownership, residence duration, education, & residents' recognition of the autonomous organization of their communities. Results reveal that all except residence duration have significant effects on community consciousness. Higher levels of participation generate increase in community consciousness, especially for more educated residents. Government can stimulate a sense of responsibility by giving respect to requests from citizens. 5 Tables, 2 Figures, 15 References. Modified H

88T3038

Wierzbicki, Zbigniew (Nicholas Copernicus U. Torun, PL-87-110 Poland). Community Development in the Sociological Perspective. (The Polish Sociological Bulletin, 1983, 1-4(61-64), 103-116.

† The term "community development" (CD) used in US sociology is enriched via the ideas of H. Radlińska ("Postawa wychowawcza wobec środowiska społecznego," [The Attitudes of Educators to the Social Environment] in Pedagogika społeczna, Wrocław, 1961, 22), as well as from an action & research experiment conducted in the region of Now Sącz, Poland, in the late 1960s. The traditional term CD is enlarged to the concept of "activation" stressing the cooperation of community members as a necessary condition of this activity or social movement. A verbal/graphic model of CD is presented outlining the theory of roles & network interaction, taking into consideration two continua: decentralization-centralization, & homogeneous village-heterogeneous city. Stages, processes of activities & types of roles are also outlined. Two subtypes of the model are distinguished for relatively decentralized & relatively centralized macrosystems, using the US & Poland as examples. Graphs. Modified AA

SUBSCRIPTIONS, MANUSCRIPTS: Editor, FREE INQUIRY IN CREATIVE SOCIOLOGY, Sociology Dept, Univ of Oklahoma, Norman OK 73019. Manuscript fee of $20 includes 1 year subscription. Annual $10 subscription charge is same to individuals and libraries. References: use ASR guidelines. Internationally refereed and distributed.

free Inquiry in creative sociology

ABSTRACTED IN SOCIOLOGICAL ABSTRACTS
Published May & November by Oklahoma
Sociological Consortium. Mission:
To provide innovative articles in all fields and viewpoints of sociology; 20 articles of 2000-5000 words per issue.

Common problems often lead to divergent responses. Policy response to these is found to be orderly & complex, not merely a function of costs & benefits. It is suggested that roles played by individuals & groups in the policy-making process need to be assessed. 49 References. J. Peterson

LSE QUARTERLY

Edited by ROB FARR, RAY RICHARDSON and BASIL YAMEY

'If the social sciences are to be practically useful then there is clearly a pressing need for a journal like this to disseminate developments in theory and research to those outside the academy. . . It undoubtedly fills an important gap in the periodical literature.' Gregory Smith, British Book News

LSE Quarterly is multi-disciplinary, presenting the complete range of subjects taught at the LSE, and is aimed at an international readership. The contributors to the journal are associated with the School—past or present members of staff, alumni, governors, honorary fellows, visiting professors or guest lecturers

CONTENTS

Among the articles published in Volume 1 were Collective security after 50 years

DENIS HEALEY

The Chaos Phenomenon: A Nightmare for Forecasters

WILLIAM J. BAUMOL

Brahmins Don't Eat Mushrooms: Participant Observation and the New Religions

EILEEN BARKER

The Uses and Abuses of Business History

D. C. COLEMAN

Suez, the Americans and the Overthrow of Anthony Eden

W. SCOTT LUCAS

Politics as Information Processing

HERBERT A. SIMON

✕

LSE Quarterly

Published in March, June, September and December for the London School of Economics

Subscription Rates Volume 2, 1988

Individuals: £17.50 (UK) £20.00 (overseas) US$30.00 (N. America)

Institutions: £35.00 (UK) £40.00 (overseas) US$60.00 (N. America)

☐ Please enter my subscription to LSE Quarterly/send me a sample copy

☐ I enclose cheque/money order made payable to Basil Blackwell

☐ Please charge my Access/American Express/Barclaycard/Diners Club/Mastercard/Visa account number:

..... Signature

Card expiry date

☐ For payments via the National Giro Bank, the Basil Blackwell account number is 236 6053

Name

Address

If address registered with card company differs from above, please give details.
Please return this form together with your payment if applicable to:

Basil Blackwell • Journals Subscription Dept.,
108 Cowley Road, Oxford OX4 1JF, UK or Journals Dept., Box 1320,
Murray Hill Station, NY 10156, USA.

methodology is based on the hypothesis that the traditional dichotomy between internal & external driving forces of the progress in scientific knowledge can be overcome through the confrontation & integration of outcomes of two systems of forecasting the societal utilization of science: the demand side & the supply side. The framework links these different sorts of scientific forecasts & integrates their interrelationships into science policy decision situations at the strategic, tactical/programming, operational/planning/management levels. 1 Table, 3 Figures, 6 References. Modified HA

60 social indicators

88T3048

Brennelt, K. D. & Kposowa, Augustine J. (Dept Sociology U Cincinnati, OH 45221). Explaining Divorce in the United States: A Study of 3,111 Counties, 1980. ♦ Journal of Marriage and the Family, 1987, 49, 1 Aug, 549-558.

† Three indicators of social integration: church membership, population change, & urbanity are tested with a group of SE variables & median population age on rates of divorce using 1980 US Census data for 3,111 counties. Findings of previous studies that have shown comparatively strong effects of social integration & weak SE effects on divorce are replicated. Urbanity was found to be most strongly related to divorce, with church membership & population change equally 50% as strong. Weak correlates of divorce, in order of importance, are: median family income, median age, rate of unemployment, & % Hispanic. Percentage employed in professions, % high school graduates, & % black were found to be related to divorce. A hypothesized relationship between urbanity & social integration is discussed. 3 Tables, 48 References. HA

62 policy sciences

88T3049

Bihari, Mihaly. A politika elemlete es szociologianja. (Reflexiók Jerzy J. Wiatr: A politikai viszonyok szociológiája című könyvének kapcsán) (Theory and Sociology of Policy). Szociologia, 1982, 1, 121-133. (HUN)

† A review essay on Jerzy J. Wiatr's A politikai viszonyok szociológiája [(Sociology of Political Relations)], Bp. Kossuth Könyvtudó, 1980 (see listing in IRIS No. 41). Abstract not currently available.

88T3050

Connerly, Charles F. (Dept Ur. & Regional Planning Florida State U, Tallahassee 32306). Growth Management Concern: The Impact of Its Definition on Support for Local Growth Controls. UW Environment and Behavior, 1986, 18, 6, Nov, 707-732.

† Research reported by K. D. Van Liere & R. F. Dunlap (see SA 31 2/88T0313) is extended by analyzing the degree to which support for controlling local population growth is affected by how growth controls are defined. Specifically, growth management concern is distinguished by general & specific definitions, with the latter including support for specific growth policies & support for growth controls in the face of explicit costs. How these definitions of growth management concern relate to each other, to a measure of support for environmental protection, & to various R characteristics, including SS & political ideology, is examined via an analysis of telephone survey data collected from Fla residents in 1985 (N = 983). Results show that how growth management is measured does make a difference, in some cases, when individual responses are classified by SS or ideology. 20 References. Modified HA

88T3051

Hegtvedt, Karen A. (Dept Sociology Emory U, Atlanta GA 30322). When Rewards Are Scarce: Equal or Equitable Distributions?. ♦ UW Social Forces, 1987, 66, 1, Sept, 183-207.

† An examination of the influence of reward scarcity on individual allocation preferences in performance-differentiated three-person groups, based on a 3 x 3 factorial experiment with U students (N = 90). It is argued that the nondyadic context alters the zero-sum nature of the distribution, enhancing concern for the group, especially when rewards are insufficient to fulfill pay expectations. Thus, when rewards are scarce, actors are less likely to make self-interested distributions. Results focusing on low & high performers' preferences indicate that under conditions of reward scarcity, performance level is positively related to a preference for equality & negatively related to a preference for equity, as expected. Self-interested preference trends emerge when rewards are sufficient. The preferences of the average actors, however, deviated unexpectedly from the predicted linear trends. 4 Tables, 42 References. HA

88T3052

Pouris, Anastassios & Dutkiewicz, R. K. (Energy Research Instit U Cape Town, Rosebank 7700 Republic South Africa). The Social Costs of Energy in South Africa. ♦ Suid-Afrikaanse Tydskrif vir Sosiologie/The South African Journal of Sociology, 1987, 18, 4, Nov,

129-132

† An assessment of the environmental & social costs of energy production in South Africa, with focus on coal extraction & conversion into electrical power. Data from the 1982 annual reports of the Chambers of Mines of South Africa & a survey of relevant US literature (eg, Comas, C. & Sagan, L. A., "Health Effects of Energy Production and Conversion in Ruedisili, I. G. [Ed], Perspectives on Energy (Oxford: Oxford Press, 1978)) are used to compare occupational injuries, deaths, & pollution-related diseases associated with the operation of 1,000-megawatt electric power plants. Potential benefits & costs of nuclear power compared to those of coal, & future dangers of the present policy of privatization are examined. Some solutions are offered, & suggestions proposed for future research. 1 Table, 10 References. Modified HA

88T3053

Rein, Martin (Massachusetts Instit. Technology, Cambridge 02139). Frame-Reflective Policy Discourse. Osterreichische Zeitschrift für Soziologie, 1987, 12, 2, 27-45.

† A discussion of stubborn policy controversies (eg, disputes over nuclear arms, welfare, or the status of women) that tend to be enduring, resistant to resolution by reference to evidence, & seldom finally resolved. The careers of these controversies are not to be understood in terms of the familiar separation of questions of value from questions of fact; rather, the participants in them construct these problematic policy situations through frames in which facts, values, theories, & interests are interrelated. Such policy controversies pose the following epistemological problem: what can provide a basis for resolving conflicts of frames when the frames themselves determine what counts as evidence & how evidence is to be interpreted? Here, an empirical epistemology is proposed that resents an inquiry into the knowing-in-practice by which policy controversies are handled in the absence of an agreed-on basis for resolution. The term "policy discourse" is used to refer to the interactive individuals, interest groups, social movements, & institutions through which problematic situations are converted to policy problems, agendas are set, decisions are made, & actions are taken. Policy analysis is viewed as a form of intellectual activity that may function as cause or sequence of movements within the processes of a larger policy discourse. Focus is on the conditions under which policy discourse may be frame-reflective. 28 References. Modified AA

88T3054

Schwartz, Mildred A. (Dept Sociology U Illinois, Chicago 60607). Comparing United States and Canadian Public Policy: A Review of Strategies. ♦ The Policy Studies Journal, 1986, 14, 4, 566-579.

† The physical proximity, common culture, & degree of economic change between the US & Canada account for a high degree of convergence. However, incidences of divergence may result from Canada's need to distance itself from the political & economic dominance of the US. Research by sociologists, students of international relations, & political scientists is drawn on to gain insight into comparisons & interactions between the two countries. Studies in welfare reform illustrate

2500 radical sociology

55 radical sociology

88T3055

——, Port Huron: Agenda for a Generation, ♦ US Socialist Review, 1987, 17, 3-4(93-94), May-Aug, 105-166

An edited version of the "Port Huron Statement," introduced by Hene Philipson, followed by recent comments from four of the original participants in the founding of Students for a Democratic Society (SDS). The statement proposes an agenda for a generation that includes basic values, the economy, the individual in the warfare state, deterrence policy, the colonial revolution, anticommunism, foreign policy, industrialization of the world, democratization of the US, & changes in the US. In Port Huron: Twenty-Five Years After, Richard Flacks emphasizes three themes reformulation of vision, transcending the cold war, & the US & social change. In What's Left: The Port Huron Statement, Jim Hawley views the statement from the perspective of having been a communist when it was formulated, seeing the statement as having reopened long-suppressed issues within the Communist Party. In Between Generations, Michael Harrington notes the novelty of the statement as a document reflecting a generational politics & as a document written in American rather than translated German terminology, & inquires as to the reasons for SDS's demise. In A Manifesto of Hope, Barbara Haber describes the emergence of SDS from the civil rights movement & notes that, despite the exclusion of feminist concerns, the statement prefigured early feminist thinking in many ways. W. H. Stoddard

80 critical sociology

88T3056

Albrecht, Johann & Lim, Gill-Chin (c/o Lim Woodrow Wilson School Princeton U, NJ 08544), A Search for Alternative Planning Theory: Use of Critical Theory, Journal of Architectural and Planning Research, 1986, 3, 2, May, 117-131

A discussion of critical theory as a means for resolving conflicts in planning theory & practice. Epistemological problems in planning are addressed, with reference to Jurgen Habermas's knowledge theory. Historical roots of the present conflicts in planning are reinterpreted, & the nature of critical theory is examined. 1 Table, 61 References. Modified HA

Canadian Review of Studies in Nationalism

- The only scholarly journal devoted to nationalism
- Up-to-date research and book reviews
- A yearly annotated bibliography (selections currently being re-issued by Garland Publishing of New York)
- Path-breaking articles by Boyd C. Shafer, Louis Snyder, Joshua Fishman, and many others
- Covers the First, Second, and Third Worlds
- Manuscripts welcome in French, English, and German

Is nationalism your field? Does your field even touch on nationalism? If so, CRSN is vital for you.

Yes, I would like to subscribe to CRSN/RCEN.

- ☐ 1 year, $9.00
- ☐ 2 years, $14.00
- ☐ Student rate, $5.00 1 year

- ☐ I wish to purchase CRSN/RCEN for my Library as a gift. $5.00 additional.
- ☐ I have enclosed my cheque
- ☐ Please bill me

Mail to:
CRSN/RCEN, University of Prince Edward Island,
Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island, Canada C1A 4P3

Name _____

Address _____

DIGLOSSOLOGIA

Quadrimestrale di insegnamento/apprendimento delle lingue straniere nella scuola primaria e secondaria

PIOVAN EDITORE

2600 environmental interactions

56 environmental interactions

88T3057

Arcury, Thomas A., Scollay, Susan J. & Johnson, Timothy P. (1 Kentucky, Lexington 40506). Sex Differences in Environmental Concern and Knowledge: The Case of Acid Rain, Sex Roles, 1987, 16, 9-10 May, 463-472

* After summarizing past research which argues that differences between M's & F's attitudes toward the environment are due to differences in sex-role socialization, gender differences in concern & knowledge regarding one environmental issue acid rain are investigated using data from a 1984 telephone survey of 516 Ky adults. Multiple regression analysis reveals little difference in concern over acid rain, though M's tend to be more knowledgeable. Factors other than gender appear to be of more importance in predicting environmental attitudes, eg, family income, education, & (negatively) watching TV news programs. Results challenge previous sex-role socialization theories, suggestions are offered for further research. 2 Tables, 23 References. K. Hyatt

88T3058

Bogard, William C. (Colorado State U, Fort Collins 80521). Hazards Theory and the Bhopal Tragedy, * Dissertation Abstracts International, 4, The Humanities and Social Sciences, 1987, 47, 11, May, 4203-A

Available from UMI, Ann Arbor MI. Order No. DA8705441.

88T3059

Cambrezy, Luc, Environnement et densites de population: le recours a l'histoire (Environment and Population Density: Resorting to History), Cahiers d'Etudes Africaines, 1986, 26, 1-2(101-102), 63-73 (FR)

* An investigation of demographic density in Rwanda based on evidence from previous studies. Rwanda forms a densely populated pocket in the underpopulated continent of Africa. Within the territory of Rwanda, the population is very unevenly distributed. It is shown that historical analysis, though necessary, cannot alone account for these characteristics, locational data must be taken into account & environment must be considered as a global whole. To understand complex systems, the concept of place must be used by researchers other than geographers. 1 Figure. 10 References. Modified HA

88T3060

Cove, Molly Joel (School Medicine U California, San Francisco 94143). The Health Effects of Agricultural Production: II. The Health of the Community, Journal of Public Health Policy, 1986, 7, 3, autumn, 340-354

* Reference information not provided for Part I. US agricultural production practices have created a plenitude of foodstuffs with sufficient calories, protein, vitamins, & minerals on a per capita basis to make possible adequate nutrition for the entire population. These practices have created a series of potential health hazards related to the widespread use of antibiotics & pesticides. A critical review of the procedures for establishing tolerances for pesticide residues in foodstuffs, for the monitoring of residues, & for the enforcement of tolerances suggests that there are significant gaps & contradictions in these systems. Community exposures to pesticides & their residues or metabolites include food & drinking water contamination, drift from agricultural applications, & leakage from waste sites. Biological sampling of nonoccupationally exposed populations provides evidence that past & current practices result in widespread exposure, the health effects of these exposures are largely unassessed, & will be difficult to ascertain in epidemiologic studies. 16 References. HA

88T3061

Fischer-Kowalski, Marina, Natur passé? Über die Berührungsschwierigkeiten von Sozialwissenschaft und Ökologie (Is Nature Passé? Problems of Contact of the Social Sciences and Ecology), Österreichische Zeitschrift für Soziologie, 1987, 12, 2, 93-99 (GER)

* A review essay on (1) Niklas Luhmann, Ökologische

Kommunikation ([Ecological Communication], Opladen: Westdeutscher Verlag, 1986), (2) Environmental Awareness (International Social Science Journal [ISSJ], 1986, 109, Sept), (3) Das schmutzige Paradies. Psychoanalytische Beiträge zur ökologischen Bewegung ([The Dirty Paradise: Psychoanalytical Contributions to the Ecological Movements], Pritz, Alfred [Ed], Vienna-Cologne-Graz: Bohlau, 1986), & (4) Zwischen Natur und Kultur. Zur Kritik biologischer Ansätze ([Between Nature and Culture: Critique of Biological Approaches], Ehalt, Hubert [Ed], Vienna-Cologne-Graz: Bohlau, 1985 [see listings in IRPS No. 41]). These works deal with the ecological threat posed by modern man's industrialized way of life. Luhmann's attitude is basically pessimistic, & is supported by a consistent argument. The other three collections of essays are examined here in light of Luhmann's diagnosis. They approach the ecological problem from the viewpoints of different disciplines: sociology, law, & economics in the ISSJ issue, psychoanalysis in Pritz, & history & philosophy in Ehalt. Many of the individual contributions are outlined & briefly discussed. It is concluded that there is a need for a more productive collaboration between sociology & biology, to achieve this, there must be greater openness to new ideas in both the social & the natural sciences. C. Waters

88T3062

Holland, Graham E. (Dept Architecture U Sydney, New South Wales 2006 Australia), Planning and Building Regulations and Alternative Lifestyles Conflict and Its Resolution in New South Wales, Australia, Journal of Architectural and Planning Research, 1986, 3, 1, Feb, 65-77

* Over the last ten years, thousands of new settlers have sought alternative lifestyles in rural areas of New South Wales, Australia. The new-style settlers usually have been from cities, & are M's & well-educated, but they have chosen to live on very low incomes. They have built unconventional houses cheaply, frequently without council permits & in contravention of the building regulations. In response to this "alternative" construction, demolition orders were issued by the Lismore City Council, the local government authority in one of the regions most favored by the new settlers. The state government intervened & set up a technical assistance group which, after investigations, produced a document giving guidance in interpreting the regulations & illustrating good building practice. HA

88T3063

Hsiao, Hsin-Huang Michael (Inst Ethnology Chinese Academy Sciences, Nankang Taipei), Title appears in Chinese (New Environmental Paradigm and Social Change: An Analysis of Environmental Values in Taiwan), Kuo Li Tai-wan Ta Hsueh She Hui Hsueh K'an/National Taiwan University Journal of Sociology, 1986, 18, Nov, 81-134 (CHI)

* A presentation of findings from a survey on environmental beliefs & values conducted in 1983 with a stratified random sample of residents of Taiwan. Emphasis is given to two basic paradigms: the human exceptionalism paradigm which emphasizes economic growth & industry, & the new environmental paradigm which emphasizes environmental quality. The people of Taiwan have gradually recognized the conflict between these two values but are optimistic about technology's ability to resolve it. The need for an active role for the state in environmental protection is emphasized by Rs. People favor future social change toward planning, public interest, participation, & cooperation, & wish environment to be given as much weight as growth. Thus, a major shift of attitudes toward environmentalism is evident. 34 Tables, 11 References. Modified HA

88T3064

Kwa, Chunglin (Dept Science Dynamics U Amsterdam, NL-1012 WX Netherlands), Representations of Nature Mediating between Ecology and Science Policy: The Case of the International Biological Programme, Social Studies of Science, 1987, 17, 3, Aug, 413-442

* Aspects of the early history of the US contribution to the International Biological Programme (IBP), ecology's only venture into "big science," are considered. It is argued that US ecologists were successful in obtaining generous funding for the IBP from Congress, thanks to a shared understanding of the way in which controlling nature was to be accom-

"...indispensable..."

--Dr. Richard L. Rubenstein, Director
The Washington Institute for Values In Public Policy

"...sorely needed..."

--Dr. Stephen A. Garrett
Monterey Institute of International Studies

"...extremely impressive..."

--Dr. Harald Niemeyer
Educator, Author, Editor, West Germany

The International Journal on World Peace offers you the insights of some of the world's most respected thinkers and in-depth analyses of the world's crucial problems

The International Journal on World Peace is not your usual news magazine. It's a forum where scholars can contribute new and innovative ideas to the public debate on the world's pressing social problems.

Herbert London on academic freedom

As is well known, the social sciences have become so politicized, so ideologized that it seems impossible for many scholars in these disciplines to deal with today's issues dispassionately. Herbert London, of New York University and editor of Academic Questions has written recently:

"The consensus which once supported academic freedom for all has been gradually supplanted by an orthodoxy which discourages, or even intimidates those with views differing from current ideological fashion."

The International Journal on World Peace is devoted to challenging the ideological cant of the left or right that is obstructing the pursuit of truth in today's social sciences.

Serious analysis in a dangerous world

In the International Journal on World Peace you won't find glib and superficial commentary by cynical social critics. What you will find is serious scholarship dealing with serious issues. Recent articles include:

- The Political Significance of Latin American Liberation Theology
by Richard L. Rubenstein
- The Role of Philosophy and Values in the Right Model of Peace
by Henryk Skolimowski

- The Contribution of Religion to the Conflict in Northern Ireland by Paul Badham

- South Africa: Constitutional Change or Violent Revolution?
by Lewis C. A. Rayapen

In the best tradition of academic freedom, articles are accompanied by vigorous debate, comment, and rejoinders, thus creating an environment of intellectual enthusiasm and excitement.

Read what scholars have to say about the journal

"The International Journal on World Peace is an indispensable source of informed discussion on the moral, social, and political problems besetting contemporary society...lively, intelligent, and challenging, and always interesting."

Dr. Richard L. Rubenstein
Robert Lawton Distinguished Professor of Religion
Florida State University

"The International Journal on World Peace provides welcome insight on a host of urgent international problems. Its contents are well researched, timely, and ably written. The journal shows every sign of becoming a leading outlet for analysis that is on the cutting edge of our days' most important issues."

Dr. John K. Roth
Russell K. Pitzer Professor of Philosophy
Claremont McKenna College
Claremont, California

"The International Journal on World Peace is the most professionally balanced academic magazine published in the field of peace studies."

Dr. Alexander Shtromas
Professor of Politics and Contemporary History
University of Salford England

Intellectual rejuvenation

The International Journal on World Peace offers to take you behind the scenes, to the realities that are all too often neglected by the regular media.

If you have the enthusiasm to undertake this intellectual pursuit, you will be rewarded with insight, understanding and compassion.

Free Trial Offer

Why not discover for yourself the comparable pleasure of examining today's most critical issues with today's most articulate and influential scholars? Especially now, when you can do so without risk.

To obtain a FREE copy of the International Journal on World Peace, fill in the coupon below.

Send no money. We will send you a free issue along with an invoice for a year subscription at $15.00. (4 issues). Even if you decide not to order the subscription, the sample copy is yours to keep.

Order toll free

To get your free issue right away, call this toll free number:

1 (800) 634-7661

The International Journal on World Peace
G.P.O. Box 1311 Dept. 120
New York, N.Y., 10116

YES please send me the current issue of the International Journal on World Peace and enter my name as a trial subscriber

Name _____
Address _____
City/State/Zip _____

SA-2/8

82 social geography

88T3072

Garling, Tommy, Böök, Anders & Lindberg, Erik (Environmental Psychology Research Unit Umeå, S-001 87 Sweden), Spatial Orientation and Wayfinding in the Designed Environment: A Conceptual Analysis and Some Suggestions for Postoccupancy Evaluation, Journal of Architectural and Planning Research, 1986, 3, 1, Feb, 55-64

A psychological, information-processing model of spatial orientation in a designed environment is proposed. The model identifies a number of task cognitive processes, such as recognition of parts of an environment (e.g., landmarks), localization of reference points & recall, & selection & sequencing of destinations (choices, decisions, & planning). On the basis of the model, a system for classifying environments is suggested for examining spatial orientation problems. Some specific & general methodological suggestions for postoccupancy evaluation are offered. 2 Figures, 1 References. HA

88T3073

Hansen, Jens Christian (U Bergen, N-5014 Norway), Regional ubalanse-teori, metode og ideologi (Regional Imbalance-Theories, Methods and Ideologies), Tidsskrift for samfunnsforskning, 1987, 28, 1, 3-32 (NOR)

A critical overview of recent Norwegian social science research on spatial imbalances in the economy & geography of Norway, utilizing a spatial interaction matrix to illustrate a theoretical approach to regional disequilibrium. Most studies of spatial imbalances deal with interactions between two or three of the six interaction levels indicated in the matrix. Data availability & methodological problems in such analysis are considered. The practice of using qualitative interpretation in place of empirical analysis is discussed. 1 Figure, 69 References. Modified HA

88T3074

Jones, Richard C. & Murray, William Breen (U Texas, San Antonio 78284), Occupational and Spatial Mobility of Temporary Mexican

Migrants to the U.S.: A Comparative Analysis, ♦ International Migration Review, 1986, 20, 4, winter, 973-985

1 US job & spatial mobility are compared, on the basis of interview data, for recent returnee migrants from 2 Mexican areas: Rio Grande, Zacatecas, in the interior (N = 73), & Nueva Rosita-Muzquiz, Coahuila, near the US border (N = 111). Results suggest that the interior migrants fit a hierarchical migrant model: they move up the Ur hierarchy from US Ru areas to towns & cities, experiencing substantial job mobility at first, but little after reaching the Ur sector. Border migrants fit a shuttle migrant model: they return to the same job & place year after year, experiencing little or no spatial & occupational mobility, although they tend to hold somewhat higher status jobs. 3 Tables, 19 References. Modified HA

88T3075

Susman, Paul (Dept Geography Bucknell U, Lewisburg PA 17837), Spatial Equality in Cuba, International Journal of Urban and Regional Research, 1987, 11, 2, June, 218-242

1 Efforts to promote socialist development in Cuba since 1959 are examined in the context of government spatial policies. Particular attention is paid to socialist goals of equality in consumption, production, & political spheres, & government programs to (1) deemphasize the primate city of Havana, (2) diminish Ur-Ru differences, & (3) develop each province in some proportionality to its resource base & size. One way to interpret Cuban government programs is that they are intended, in the long run, to create a landscape of socialist integration, linking in an equal & necessarily democratic manner the entire population, its production & consumption activity, & political participation. Official data on service delivery, income, & other consumption sphere activities reveal a significant increase in equality over both the population & space; less of an increase in production sphere equality over the population & space is evident, although there are indicators that it may be increasing further. Political participation is increasing across the population & space, suggesting increased equality, but there remain questions about its actual significance in decision making about fundamental policies & national priorities. Thus, movement toward a goal of socialist equality over both the population & space is evident. 3 Tables, 52 References. Modified AA plished, expressed in the metaphor of the "cybernetic machine." To support this argument, a literary analysis is performed of Congressional documents, scientific & popular books & papers by ecologists, & writings of the environmental movement. How a dominant representation of nature or mentalite, is brought about, & its political effects, are explored. 1 Table. 11A.

88T3065

Marchetti, Cesare (International Instit Applied Systems Analysis, A-2361 Laxenburg Austria), Environmental Problems and Technological Opportunities, in Technological Forecasting and Social Change, 1986, 30, 1, Aug, 1-4.

¶ It is argued that environmental problems are a direct consequence of the Christian philosophy of life of Western societies. Fairly simple technological solutions exist for the large ecological problems generated by the intrusion of humanity in the ecosphere, including at the extreme an almost complete withdrawal. Because cultural changes have long time constants, there is no hope of short-term application of the solutions. Ecologists have to learn to think in the long term & recognize that perseverance is more important than argument. 11A.

88T3066

Pecen, Jan (Instit Philosophie und Soziologie Ceskoslovenska Akademie Ved, Jihka 1 110 00 Prague (Czechoslovakia), Die Wissenschaft und die globalen Probleme der Gegenwart (Science and the Global Problems of Today), Deutsche Zeitschrift für Philosophie, 1986, 34, 11, 971-979. (GER)

¶ The role of science in the creation & solution of global problems is addressed. The scientific technical revolution permits the conscious mastery of the development of both society & nature, but at the same time makes possible the development of powerful forces that could become unmanageable. Non Marxist theory tries to analyze global problems without regard for their social & class dimension, & thus fails to see that they arise from the inherent contradictions of capitalism. Socialist society provides the only opportunity for the development of a new science with the goal of general human development. The militarism of the US reforms the humanistic essence of science & creates for the first time a universal interest of humanity in survival. 1 Anderson.

88T3067

Ray, John J. (School Sociology U New South Wales, Kensington 2033 Australia), A Participant Observation Study of Social Class among Environmentalists, Journal of Social Psychology, 1987, 127, 1, Feb, 99-100.

¶ There is ample evidence to show both that environmental activists tend to be Mc & that there is broad support for the environmentalist movement in the population as a whole. To test the hypothesis that people attending environmentalist meetings might really be less Mc than has crally been supposed, participant observation was used to determine SC of all those in attendance at a variety of meetings in Sydney, Australia. It was found that although participants did tend to be Mc, this was not distinguishable from that observed in the Sydney population as a whole. 2 References. Modified AA.

88T3068

Sell, James L. & Zube, Ervin H. (School Renewable Natural Resources U Arizona, Tucson 85721), Perception of and Response to Environmental Change, Journal of Architectural and Planning Research, 1986, 3, 1, Feb, 33-54.

¶ A review of research literature in the areas of perception of & response to environmental change. Drawn from journals & reports representing broad array of disciplines, the literature is organized in two sections: change & Ru change. The Ur section includes literature on growth, renewal, historic preservation, gentrification & neighborhood conversion, & mobility & location. The Ru section includes literature on rural & recreational environments, agriculture, Ru development, & energy production & development. The relevance of environmental-change research to designers & planners is discussed, areas & issues meriting increased research attention are identified, & significant elements of process of perceiving & responding to environmental change are outlined. 1 Figure, 98 References. 11A.

88T3069

Trainer, F. E. (School Education U New South Wales, Kensington Australia 2033), A Critical Examination of The Ultimate Resource and The Resourceful Earth, in Technological Forecasting and Social Change, 1986, 30, 1, Aug, 19-37.

¶ A review article on J. I. Simon's The Ultimate Resource (Martin Robertson Oxford, 1981) & J. I. Simon's & Kahn's The Resourceful Earth (London: Blackwell 1984 (see listings in IRPS No. 41)). Both have had considerable influence as statements contradicting the general "limits to growth" view & have to date met with little critical analysis. Their basic concern is to lay doubts about prevailing commitments to affluent living standards & economic growth. They regard the earth & people as being sufficiently resourceful to continue sustaining the present trends. It is argued that neither book supports its essential claim, & most of the areas considered the problems are growing more acute. A major flaw in the analysis is to have assessed resource scarcity solely in terms of price trends. Apart from the fact that these now seem to have reversed their long-term falls, such an index fails to attend either to factors that have to do with the geochemistry of resource distribution or to the reasons why future changes in these factors are likely. A number of other specific criticisms are detailed, especially the failure to consider implications for future relations between rich & poor countries & the plausibility of generalizing present affluent country living standards to all people. 2 Figures, 81 References. 11A.

81 disaster studies

88T3070

Oliva, Terence A., Desarbo, Wayne S., Day, Diana L. & Jedidi, Kamel (Dept Marketing Wharton School U Pennsylvania, Philadelphia 19104), GE-MCAT: A General Multivariate Methodology for Estimating Catastrophe Models, in Behavioral Science, 1987, 32, 2, Apr, 121-137.

¶ A methodology for empirically estimating any specified univariate or multivariate catastrophe theory model is presented. The lack of such flexible estimation procedures has limited the potential application of catastrophe modeling in the social & behavioral sciences. A methodology called GE-MCAT is presented that uses the cusp model for expositional convenience, which allows the traditional canonical catastrophe model variables to be described as latent constructs of univariate or multivariate observable variable sets. A Monte Carlo analysis is presented demonstrating the performance of the method under various conditions. 8 Tables, 2 Figures, 41 References. Modified AA.

88T3071

Shahabuddin, Quazi & Mestelman, Stuart, Uncertainty and Disaster Avoidance Behaviour in Peasant Farming: Evidence from Bangladesh, The Journal of Development Studies, 1986, 22, 4, 740-752.

¶ Questionnaire data collected during a 1979 field survey of 465 holding farm households in the Pabna region of Bangladesh are used to test predictions of two models of farmer behavior regarding disaster avoidance decision making: a safety-first model, & a profit maximization model. While the degree to which the former model outperforms the latter is not great, it is important to note that when the major inputs (land & human labor) & the major outputs (rice & jute) are focused on the safety-first model performs much better than the profit maximization model. Policy implications are discussed along with suggestions for using the models in other areas. 2 Tables, 14 References. Modified

2700 studies in poverty

57 studies in poverty

88T3076

Abramowitz, Mimi (School Social Work Hunter Coll City U New York, NY 10021), The Family Ethic and the Female Pauper: A New Perspective on Public Aid and Social Security Programs, ♦ Journal of Social Work Education, 1985, 21, 2, spring-summer, 15-26

† Reflecting historical concerns about providing public aid to the able-bodied M pauper & the impact of relief on the work ethic, social welfare literature has focused on M recipients & generalized these findings to women. As a result, the story of the F pauper remains largely untold. It is suggested that the relationship between women & the US welfare state is shaped by a family ethic that in many ways parallels the work ethic known to shape the relationship between the welfare state & men. The family ethic is defined & discussed with respect to various public assistance programs throughout history from colonial days to the present. Focus is on two major income maintenance programs: public aid & social security. Foci for change are suggested. Modified HA

88T3077

AuClaire, Philip Arthur (School Social Work U Minnesota, Minneapolis 55455), Public Attitudes toward Social Welfare Expenditures, ♦ Social Work, 1984, 29, 2, Mar-Apr, 139-144

† Survey data ($\Sigma N = 6,005$ Rs) are used to analyze public attitudes toward social welfare spending in the US between 1976 & 1982. Results indicate that, although opposition to social welfare spending has lessened, there is a limit to the public's willingness to be taxed for social welfare. This appears to be particularly true when there is a perceived competition between military spending & social welfare spending & when social welfare spending is seen as benefiting minorities. 4 Tables. Modified HA

88T3078

Bradbury, Bruce, Rossiter, Chris & Vipond, Joan (Social Welfare Research Centre U New South Wales, Kensington 2033 Australia), Housing and Poverty in Australia, Urban Studies, 1987, 24, 2, Apr, 95-102

† In Australia, poverty is usually measured in two different ways: the number of people who have incomes below a poverty line, & the number who are in poverty after they have paid for their housing. Both measures are calculated based on government survey data for 1981/82, & the changes that have occurred since the early 1970s are analyzed. Poverty measured after housing has increased, while poverty measured according to income alone is approximately the same. Reasons for the change are explored. 3 Tables, 17 References. HA

88T3079

Brown, J. Larry (School Public Health Harvard U, Cambridge MA 02138), Hunger in the U.S., ♦ Scientific American, 1987, 256, 2, Feb, 37-41

† An examination of why hunger has reoccurred in the US in the 1980s, after having been virtually eliminated during the 1960s & 1970s. Hunger—the state of being chronically short of nutrients essential to growth & good health—currently plagues 12 million children & 8 million adults in the US, or about 9% of the population. President Reagan's reductions of supplemental school food plans & food stamp programs are determined to be directly responsible. Those populations at particular risk for experiencing hunger include the elderly, pregnant Fs, infants, & children, the health effects of malnutrition on these groups are examined in detail. International health statistics comparing the US with other industrialized countries reveal that it ranks eighteenth in child mortality. However, analysis of rates for various subpopulations within the US reveals that nonwhite infants are at a much higher risk, other SE differences are explored, & low income emerges as the most salient factor affecting hunger, rather than lack of knowledge about proper nutrition. Continuing federal budget cuts will only worsen the situation. 5 Figures, 2 Photographs. K. Hyatt

88T3080

Brunner, Ronald D. (Center Public Policy Research U Colorado, Boulder 80309), Case-Wise Policy Information Systems: Redefining Poverty, Policy Sciences, 1986, 19, 2, Sept, 201-223

† An analysis of the case-wise policy information systems approach in social welfare policy development, focusing on the measurement & definition of poverty. Principles of simplification are discussed, & their application to policy analysis is described. Recommended steps toward a case-wise information system for social welfare policy as a complement to existing variable-wise systems are offered. 56 References. Modified HA

88T3081

Dickson, Lynda (U Colorado, Colorado Springs 80933-7150), The Feminization of Poverty: Public Needs vs Private Solutions, ♦ Free Inquiry in Creative Sociology, 1987, 15, 2, Nov, 163-166

† Survey data obtained in 1984 from 33 publicly & privately funded community service agencies in Colorado Springs, Colo, were used to determine the characteristics of the agencies, types of services provided, characteristics of those seeking assistance, types of service sought, & the effectiveness of the agencies in meeting the needs of their clients. Analysis reveals that those most likely to seek assistance were unemployed or low wage women under 40 with dependent children. Also, privately funded agencies appeared to be more effective in serving their clients than did public agencies. 13 References. Modified AA

88T3082

Kennedy, John M. (U Hartford, West Hartford CT 06117), Public Support for Residential Energy Assistance, ♦ U Sociology and Social Research, 1987, 71, 4, July, 308-311

† An examination of the extent of public support for several forms of residential energy assistance. Telephone survey data collected from Conn residents in 1985/86 ($N = 1,040$) indicate that public concern for the impact of energy costs & access to needed residential energy for the poor & elderly is strong. It is argued that the energy crisis altered public thinking so that access to residential energy is now considered a societal rather than an individual responsibility. 2 Tables, 9 References. HA

88T3083

McLachlan, Hugh (Glasgow Coll Technology, G4 0BA Scotland), Concepts of Poverty and Deprivation, ♦ U Journal of Social Policy, 1986, 15, 4, Oct, 499-501.

† J. H. Vent-Wilson's explanation (see SA 35 5/86R1058) of Hugh McLachlan's views on the definition of poverty (see SA 33 5/85Q2680) is critiqued. The position being discussed is actually that, given several well-defined concepts, there is little benefit to be gained from arguing over which of these is the correct definition of poverty or in claiming that only one definition of poverty can be correct. It might indeed be more useful to abandon the term "poverty" & instead discuss various forms of deprivation. 3 References. W. H. Stoddard

88T3084

Mead, Lawrence M. (New York U, NY 10003), Author's Response to Reviewer, ♦ The Social Service Review, 1987, 61, 2, June, 373-377.

Reply, 377-379.

† A reply to an unfavorable review by Michael R. Sosin (see IRPSPPD No. 15/87b09861) of Beyond Entitlement: The Social Obligations of Citizenship (Mead, Lawrence, New York: Free Press, 1986). Sosin misrepresented the book in his claims that it blames nonwork among the dependent on the existence of welfare. Rather, it asserts that the poor want to work but are prevented from doing so by behavior problems. The recommendation of enforcing work requirements in entitlement programs is aimed at improving the functioning of recipients, not at punitively denying aid. In Reviewer's Reply, Michael R. Sosin (U of Wisconsin, Madison) argues that Mead cites evidence to support his primary concern that welfare discourages working & ignores evidence of structural barriers on employment. At the policy level, work requirements & philosophies similar to Mead's have historically been linked to restrictive rules & a view of recipients that decreases rather than increases benefit levels. 1 Reference. K. Carande

Esperanto in the Modern World
Studies and articles on language problems, the Right to Communicate, and the International Language. 1959-1982.

"For the first time in English, here is a book which documents the recent progress of the international language. 'Esperanto in the Modern World' meets the need of individuals, schools, and colleges for a reference work on the language problem and on the status of Esperanto. It should be on the reference shelves of every library."

Bruce Arne Sherwood

(Assistant Director, Computer-based Education Research Laboratory, and Professor, Department of Physics and Department of Linguistics, University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign)

The book contains articles about

- The origin of Esperanto and its author.
- Esperanto as a medium for literary translations.
- The educational value of Esperanto study.
- The official situation of Esperanto instruction in the world.
- The psychological resistance to the International Language.
- Language problems in different fields, in international relations and organizations, in Canada, Africa, and in the Third World.
- Today's practical use of Esperanto in tourism, religion, science and postal services.

And reprints which give an idea of the nature of Esperanto books and periodicals.

The studies were written by prominent Esperantists from Australia, Belgium, Canada, England, India, Poland, Switzerland, USA and Yugoslavia. Some studies are in English only, but others have the Esperanto original on facing pages to provide the reader with ample opportunity to experience first hand the logical structure and easy readability of Esperanto. To offer a challenge there are also reprints of especially interesting articles from Esperanto periodicals without English translation. A summary of Esperanto grammar is provided in addition to an Esperanto-English vocabulary. With these aids the reader will be able to understand much of the Esperanto text.

ISBN 0-919186-18-1. 600 pp., 20.5 x 14 cm,
110 illustrations, library binding
..... Can$30.00 US$25.00

From 'Esperanto in the Modern World' are the following reprints available.

The sounds of the Esperanto alphabet explained to speakers of English. (D.K. Jordan) 8pp. .. $0.20
The educational value of Esperanto study.
(B.A. Sherwood) 8pp. $0.20
The psychological resistance to the International Language (C. Piron) 12pp. $0.30
A fair bilingualism for Canada (V.S. Eichholz) $0.80

ESPERANTO - the solution to our language problems

This book, published in 1981, is the first edition of 'Esperanto in the Modern World'. It contains most articles of the second edition but no index.
ISBN 0-919186-16-5. 470 pp, 14 x 20.5 cm,
paper Can$18.00, US$14.50

English Phrases and Expressions in Esperanto (Felix Woolf)

"The book covers not only idioms, but also metaphorical expressions, and even single words, which have an additional meaning. The Esperanto translations are spiced here and there with proverbs. The book contains more than 5000 articles and is a valuable addition to our dictionaries." "The British Esperantist"

ISBN 0-919186-05-X. 120pp., 21.5 x 14 cm,
paper Can$3.50, US$2.80

En novan mondon (V.S. Eichholz)

A new course for 10-14 year-old children that teaches Esperanto through games, songs and a wide variety of plays and stories. It is not a text to be learned page after page, but serves to fix in memory the words and grammatical points the teacher has presented in the course. It teaches not only the language but also the self-understanding, self-actualisation, social responsibility and cooperation so desperately needed in a world divided into hostile blocs. The course is written entirely in Esperanto. Vocabulary booklets listing all words in order of appearance and with an alphabetical index are available either with translations into English or without translations, so that teacher or student can add translations into any desired language.

(All books have laminated covers, 14 x 20.5 cm)
Vol. 1 + 2, ISBN 0-919186-17-3, 128 pp. .. US$5.00
